Although the country's financial authorities have not yet officially defined the nation's renegotiation strategy, Planning Minister Gonzalo Sanchez de Lozada and Central Bank President Xavier Nogales have agreed that the basic requirement must be opening new lines of credit for Bolivia. Foreign bankers closed the financial channels when Bolivia declared a moratorium on the payment of interest in May 1984. At that time, the 128 creditor banks gave the La Paz government 90 days to reconsider its position. Since the bankers failed to request legal measures to embargo Bolivian accounts and exports, the 90 days expired, and the ultimatum became ineffective. Now, 2 years later, a new democratic regime will reinitiate formal talks with the Bolivian Creditor Banks Committee.

The government of Hernan Siles Zuazo (1982-1985) favored a multilateral solution to the problem as opposed to the bilateral solution that was proposed by Victor Paz Estenssoro during his electoral campaign. This March, the government of Paz Estenssoro signed a memorandum of economic understanding with the IMF, after having established the basis for it through a "new economic policy" liberalizing the statist model that had been in effect since 1952. Later, in July, Paz Estenssoro gave instructions for the renegotiation of $645.5 million with countries of the so-called Paris Club. The La Paz government has taken all the preliminary steps necessary to negotiate with the commercial bankers, to whom it owes nearly $1 billion.

A report from the Finance Ministry indicates that up to 31 December 1985, the total debt contracted by Bolivia amounted to $5,214,020,000, of which $3,349,900,000 has been disbursed and is actually owed. Of this latter sum, 26.1 percent is owed to multilateral creditors (IMF, IDB, Andean Development Corporation, etc) and 37.4 percent to bilateral creditors (represented by governments), adding up to 63.4 percent (26.1 plus 37.4 percent) the actual debt to official creditors. The remaining 34.2 is owed to private creditors.

Translating this 34.2 percent of the actual debt of $3,349,900,000 into a figure, the debt to private creditors amounts to $1,146,461,000, almost $200 million above the amount estimated yesterday by Planning Minister Gonzalo Sanchez de Lozada.

Had Bolivia not concluded agreements with the IMF and the Paris Club, it would have needed almost $1.6 billion to honor the service on its foreign debt in 1986. This would have been impossible, because Bolivia's export earnings will not surpass $400 million by the end of this year. Paradoxically, according to Bolivian Central Bank President Xavier Nogales, fewer than 100,000 Bolivians have deposited more than $2 billion with foreign banks. This flight of capital, which began in 1976 and diverted a good portion of the loans Bolivia obtained in a decade, represents nearly 40 percent of the national foreign debt contracted up to 31 December 1985 ($5,214,028,000).

With the announced trip of Planning Minister Gonzalo Sanchez de Lozado and Finance Minister Juan Cariaga to Washington, the Bolivian Government expects to gain a new lease on its economic life, following negotiations that are scheduled to start on 18 August. In addition to keeping the Bolivian Government from having to make considerable disbursements for foreign debt payments in the near future, these negotiations should open new financial possibilities for it to consolidate its anti-inflationary program.

Sachs Opposes Debt Payment

PY121455 Paris AFP in Spanish 1338 GMT 11 Aug 86

[Text] La Paz, 11 August (AFP) -- In a statement issued to the press today in La Paz, an economic adviser to the government of Victor Paz Estenssoro, U.S. citizen Jeffrey Sachs, advised the country not to make any payments on its foreign debt this year.

Sachs, author of the neoliberal plan of 19 August 1985, which decreed the floating of the peso in relation to the dollar, the free hiring of workers, the drastic increase in the price of gasoline, and the decentralization of state-owned companies, said that this decision will be understood by the creditors, because no one wants hyperinflation to start all over again.

In 1986, Bolivia should pay $678 million in services on its foreign debt, which totals $5.2 billion, besides an additional $170 million in back payments, while its exports hardly reach $400 million.

Sachs also revealed that he was initially contracted to draw up the economic program for the conservative Nationalist Democratic Action (ADN) headed by General Hugo Banzer Syarez, but since this party was not elected in 1985, he was transferred to serve the new head of state, Paz Estenssoro.

COB TERMS PRESENCE OF U.S. TROOPS 'INVASION'

[Text] La Paz, 8 Aug (EFE) -- The Bolivian Labor Confederation (COB), the top labor organization in Bolivia, has expressed its support of the opposition initiative in Congress to question four ministers and one ambassador over the presence of U.S. troops in the country and proposed that the questioning should also include President Victor Paz Estenssoro. Opposition congressmen have requested that Foreign Minister Guillermo Bedregal, Defense Minister Fernando Valle, Interior Minister Fernando Barthelemy, Planning Minister Gonzalo Sanchez, and Bolivian Ambassador to Washington Fernando Illanes be questioned.

In a document sent to Congress, the COB says that the president is the main promoter of the U.S. troops' admission into Bolivia. The document says that "the invasion of our territory by foreign troops, in an act that violates our sovereignty, is a humiliating affront to all Bolivian citizens." The document adds that "Bolivia is the first state in this part of the American continent to suffer an invasion of its territory by U.S. troops, who are constantly endangering peace around the world."

"Bolivia has an Army capable of facing drug trafficking by itself," states the COB, "and the fact that its capacity is put in doubt shows the humiliating treatment the North gives to all institutions of our country because of the prostration ordered by the government of the MNR-ADN (Nationalist Revolutionary Movement and Nationalist Democratic Action) alliance." "This servile posture," it adds, "should not compromise the sound position of the Bolivian people, who have always preached their devotion to liberty, and so we congratulate the oppostiion for their initiative."

The COB concludes by saying that "we believe that the main promoter of the admission of the Yankee troops should not be left out of such questioning, and for that reason we ask that President Paz Estenssoro also be included in it."

RADIO STATION'S EQUIPMENT WRECKED BY BOMB

[Text] La Paz, 12 Aug (AFP) -- Police sources in this capital have reported that a bomb explosion today caused serious damage to the transmitting equipment of Radio Indoamerica in Potosi, 570 km southeast of La Paz.

The dynamite explosion, which caused no casualties, occurred after midnight. Something similar occurred to Radio Aclo of Tarija in June 1986. Tarija is also located south of here near the border with Argentina.

No one has claimed responsibility for the attacks.

TARIFF-FREE GOODS TO BE IMPORTED FROM URUGUAY

PY121915 Brasilia Radio Nacional da Amazonia in Portuguese 1000 GMT 12 Aug 86

[Text] The customs tariff exemption agreed on by Presidents Sarney and Sanguinetti will apply to 1,100 products which can henceforth be imported or exported freely. For President Sarney, this means that the Latin American common market is now in operation, since an identical agreement was very recently signed with Argentina.

Yesterday Brazil contracted to import nearly 200,000 tons of rice -- more than half the Uruguayan rice crop -- and 70,000 tons of Uruguayan meat, which will begin to enter Brazil on 1 October. The announcement was made by President Jose Sarney, who emphasized that Latin America is one of his government's foreign policy priorities.

[Begin Sarney recording] When I came to power, my foreign policy directive was to give priority to Latin America, and we can see now that this directive is taking hold. After signing agreements with Argentina, we are signing important documents with Uruguay. Consequently, we are going to import nearly 200,000 tons of rice, which is more than half the Uruguayan rice crop, and 70,000 tons of meat. which is a substantial part of that country's production. [end recording]

President Sarney said that the agreements being signed with the Uruguayan Government are similar to those that were recently signed with Argentina. In this way, he added, the Latin American common market could be considered to be operational.

[Begin Sarney recording] Through the signing of these agreements with Uruguay, which are most identical to those we signed with Argentina recently, I believe the Latin American Common Market has been set in motion. This is an important step not only for Brazil, but for other countries as well, as we can verify by the response to the developing government policies. The relationship among governments, the political will of presidents, and the restoration of democracy, which has made it possible for the people to support these policies, have contributed to the onset of this market. [end recording]

The bilateral agreements between Brazil and Uruguay will be signed by Presidents Sarney and Sanguinetti at Planalto Palace tomorrow morning.

NUCLEAR PROGRAM BUDGET REDUCED BY $2 BILLION

PY130018 Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 9 Aug 86 p 26

[Text] Rio de Janeiro -- The main consequences of the presidential decree that restructured Nuclebras and its subsidiaries will be a budget reduction of over $2 billion, caused by cuts in the programs of the uranium enrichment and reprocessing plants, and the renegotiation of the diplomatic and commercial agreements signed with the FRG.

Nuclebras officials have said that the decree has practically ended both the nuclear program and the company itself. The decree shocked everyone in the company.

Nuclebras directors could not be found in Rio de Janeiro to give an explanation to company employees, who are concerned about their future. Even though the issue has long been debated and analyzed, the Nuclebras board of directors was expecting another solution.

With the support of the National Security Council and the Mines and Energy Ministry, President Jose Sarney decided to redesign the nuclear program following the recommendations of the committee that studied it. The closure of Nuclep [Nuclebras Heavy Equipment, Inc.] Nuclei, [Nuclebras Isotope Enrichment, Inc.], Nustep [an FRG centrifugal jet process development company], and Nuclam [Nuclebras Uranium Prospecting, Inc.], and the transfer of Nuclen [Nuclebras Engineering, Inc.] to Eletrobras [Brazilian Electric Power Comapnies, Inc.] imply a renegotiation with the FRG, because FRG companies own stock in these subsidiaries. Thus, it is necessary to negotiate the closing of the companies or to modify their bylaws. Voest-Alpine, GHH, and KWU are Nuclep minority stockholders. The FRG firm UG owns 49 percent of Nuclem (uranium prospecting firm) stocks. The firm Steag owns 50 percent of Nustep, while Interatom and Steag owns 16.4 and 8.6 percent of Nuclei stocks, respectively. KWU owns 25 percent of the stock of Nuclen, which will become an Eletrobras section.

Thus, Nuclebras will remain in charge of the fuel cycle only. As Mines and Energy Minister Aureliano Chaves put it, Nuclebras can be placed under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Science and Technology, which is in charge of research departments. According to its financial department, Nuclebras has some 6,200 employees and its monthly payroll amounts to nearly $5 million.

Nuclep has some 800 employees; Nuclen, 900; Nuclei, 450, and Nuclam only 4. Except for Nuclen, all these subsidiaries have managerial structures with several directors, accounting, personnel, and finance departments, storehouses, and so forth. Many people will be dismissed when these companies are dissolved.

There was a general atmosphere of pessimism at Nuclebras because its employees know that the only activity they have left is the fuel cycle, which is still a great mystery. The technological process on which the uranium enrichment plant construction is based is controversial. This process has even been rejected by South Africa, another country to which the inventor of the method, German professor Erwin Backer, tried to sell this process. When the Germans said that they would not be able to transfer to Brazil the technology of the ultracentrifuge process because of U.S. pressure exerted through a diplomatic agreement, Brazil had no option but to invest in a new uranium-enrichment method which has only been laboratory tested. The ultracentrifuge method, which is a fully developed and effective method, is not available. Instead we have been offered another method that requires going through several industrial stages which have not yet been fully mastered. Washington did not raise any objections to this method.

Even with the budget reduction the Brazilian nuclear program has already spent $4.24 billion in investment plus $3 billion more in interest and has contracted debts with German banks. In order to finish the Angra II and III power plants, the program needs $2.78 billion, and if the jet-nozzle [proceding word in English] uranium enrichment process demonstration plant is included, it will need $1 billion more.

Brazil has already spent more than $7 billion and it will have to spend $10 billion to construct only two nuclear power plants at the record price of $5 billion each and a construction time average of 16 years. No nuclear plant in the world has taken so long to be built, and this fact is considered dangerous by the builders themselves, who fear for the security and integrity of materials. This reduction in the ambitious Brazilian Nuclear program means that Brazil will not hurry to invest $1.7 billion in a uranium-enrichment plant and nearly $300 million in a reprocessing plant because the National Commission of Nuclear Energy [CNEN] is investing money in the ultracentrifuge enrichment process, which has been mastered by several other countries but which they do not wish to transfer. This ultracentrifuge method is considered three times more expensive to operate than the jet-nozzle method and it consumes much more electric energy.

EMFA CHIEF DISCUSSES STATUS OF SPACE PROGRAM

PY121850 Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 9 Aug 86 p 18

[Text] Admiral Jose Maria do Maral Oliveira, chief of the Armed Forces General Staff (EMFA), yesterday said in Sao Paulo that no potential customer has yet expressed interest in using the rocket-launching base being built in Alcantara, Maranhao State, under the Brazilian Comprehensive Space Mission (MECB) [Missao Espacial Completa Brasileira]. This base is located near the equator, where the great centrifugal force from the earth's rotation will result in large fuel savings. Adm Oliveira believes, however, that Brazil will find customers and that it could make profits from this project, thus recovering part of its investment.

Adm Oliveira confirmed that good progress has been made in the Brazilian space program and that the launching of an experimental remote sensoring satellite by a Brazilian-made rocket, the Satellite Launching Vehicle (VSL), is slated for 1989. The satellite is being built by the National Institute of Space Research (INPE) and the VLS by the Aerospace Technology (CTA). Both INPE and CTA are located in Sao Jose dos Campos, in the Paraiba Valley.

According to Adm Oliveira, the Brazilian space program is based on the French model, which is less expensive and less sophisticated than the U.S. model. In his opinion, the Alcantara Base will be more attractive to international customers than the French base located at Kourou in French Guiana. Brazil also expects to sell its services and even remote sensoring satellites to Third World customers, "because our technology is better suited to Third World countries than to developed countries."

The EMFA chief said that, as is common in countries involved in space operations, the Brazilian space program has also brought a number of services of daily use that represent a form of technological spin-off.

Adm Oliveira said that the problems involving farmers residing in the vicinity of the Alcanatara Base will soon be solved. A few days ago he attended a ceremony at which land deeds were presented to farmers who are moving to other areas. Personnel from several ministries, such as that of Agrarian Reform, Culture, and Health, are working in the area "to guarantee coexistence without risks in Alcantara, a city that retains the look of the 17th century."

CNI REPORTS MORE ARRESTS IN ARMS CACHE CASE

[Text] Security personnel seized a Chilean fishing ship in Coquimbo as part of the investigations carried out after the discovery of an arms cache in northern Chile. It was reported that several people were arrested in these new operations, increasing the number of arrests to 20.

The fishing ship Astrid-Sue was raided because it was said to be transporting weapons to the Carrival Bajo area. The National Intelligence Center [CNI] reported that between February and March 1986 Andres Pascal Allende traveled to Nicaragua to obtain guerrilla warfare training for 250 members of the Revolutionary Left [MIR] in the region of Chinandega. Once finished with their training, many of these persons traveled to Panama from which they planned to enter Chile, the CNI said. It is thought that at least 15 of them installed themselves in the Carrizal Bajo area.

It was officially reported that the cache found there was meant to be transferred to Santiago, Concepcion, and Temuco. The CNI said that the weapons and equipment were supposed to be transported on the afternoon of 14 August, taking advantage of the long weekend. Meanwhile, it was reported that new investigations have led to the arrest of several people, who, when added to the 6 already arrested and reported on in a press conference at the CNI headquarters yesterday, total 20. All the suspects are at the disposal of the Interior Ministry and remain at CNI quarters.

MIR SPOKESMEN ANNOUNCE OFFENSIVE TO START 15 AUGUST

[Text] Buenos Aires, 12 Aug (NA) -- Two self-styled "officers" of Chile's Movement of the Revolutionary Left (MIR) have announced here that on 15 August the MIR will begin a "political-military offensive" that will include bombings and attacks against barracks, seeking to "accelerate the downfall of the Pinochet regime."

Speaking with an unmistakable Chilean accent, the two spokesmen identified themselves as officers Gilberto and Vania and gave NOTICIAS ARGENTINAS employees six pictures of presumed guerrilla training camps in Chile. They explained that the offensive will begin on 15 August "to mark the 21st anniversary of the creation of the MIR."

"The MIR is also getting ready to neutralize any military attempt to replace Pinochet with a more moderate Chilean general, " they added. They said that "there must be a revolutionary change" and that "even though the MIR agrees to a possible transition toward democracy, it will continue to struggle for the total independence of Chile."

They added that the offensive will include "a psychological campaign conducted at rank-and-file level to generate a favorable opinion of the armed struggle as a method to oust Pinochet." It will also include dynamite attacks against high tension lines, attacks against Carabineros barracks, and seizures in several Chilean regions. The spokesmen, two mid-level officers of the armed branch of the MIR, said that "the military training schools 'Ana Luisa Penailillo' and '21st Anniversario';" which are located "somewhere in the Chilean jungle," continue to "train the people's militias."

In a statement released in Buenos Aires, the first stop in a tour of Latin American countries that Gilberto and Vania will visit to publicize MIR activities, the two officers confirmed that the "Salvador Allende militias" have engaged in "self-defense actions" in Valparaiso and Vina del Mar.

The Chilean MIR, which is headed by Secretary General Andres Pascal Allende -- a nephew of former President Salvador Allende -- is carrying out negotiations for the creation of a guerrilla front with the Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front and other leftist groups "that support an armed struggle," the sources stated.

"The creation of a guerrilla front," they added, "forms a part of the overall struggle by the Chilean people for the overthrow of the dictatorial regime headed by General Augusto Pinochet."

They stressed that "the alternative of an armed struggle is valid, because the regime is implementing a bloody repression against the popular sectors, and this repression is increasing."

Moreover, they admitted that "the struggle must also be carried out in the political sector, and so the MIR supports the negotiations of the Democratic Alliance," which includes center-left and leftist parties.

Officers Gilberto and Vania handed out photographs that depict alleged training exercises of the popular militias in the "Ana Luisa Penaillillo" and "21st Aniversario" schools, which they said were taken by the RESISTANCE NEWS AGENCY [AGENCIA INFORMATIVA de RESISTENCIA].

They also stressed that "the MIR is preparing to prevent [words indistinct] with the intention of exchanging Pinochet for a more moderate general of the Chilean Armed Forces." They stated that "the change must be a revolutionary one," and that "even though the MIR will accept an eventual transition to democracy, it will continue to fight for Chile's independence."

APSI ARTICLE SAYS BURNED YOUTHS ACCUSE SOLDIERS

[Text] Santiago, 11 Aug (AFP) -- The magazine APSI which hit the streets of Santiago today, reported in its latest edition that the two young Chileans who were burned alive during demonstrations against the military regime of President Augusto Pinochet expressly charged the soldiers who captured them. One of the victims, photographer Rodrigo Rojas Denegri, 19 died after 4 days of agony while the other, student Carmen Quintana, 18, remains in critical condition, with burns covering more than 60 percent of her body.

According to APSI, the two youths were questioned in the hospital by Patricio Villaroel, the civilian judge who began the investigations, a few hours after the incident. APSI includes a copy of the minutes issued by the judge and the text of the photographer's remarks states: The uniformed soldiers had their faces painted, and after brutally beating me, they poured gasoline on me and set me on fire.

Rojas reported that he did not faint while he was burning, and that the soldiers, after putting out the fire with blankets, left him abandoned in a remote place, together with Carmen Gloria Quintana, who had been detained at the same time.

The young girl also told the judge that she was captured while she was escaping from a place where other boys had built a barricade on the street. She said: I was caught by the soldiers who threw me against the wall, pushed me back and forth, and pushed a rifle barrel in my rectum. They said I was helping build the barricades, and I told them that that was not true. Then two civilians arrived...and they took pictures of me and interrogated me. I was in the middle of the questioning when one of the soldiers, who was wearing a uniform, sprayed me with gasoline or some kind of fuel and set me on fire. I began to catch fire and screamed with pain...and since the fire did not go out, they wrapped me with a blanket...and I fainted, the student added.

APSI adds that, inexplicably this testimony has been minimized by Alberto Echavarria, the special judge designated later to continue with the investigations replacing Judge Villaroel. Echavarria also failed to question more than 10 people who witnessed the detention of the two victims, and finally accepted the official version that cleared the uniformed soldiers, the magazine reported.

Judge Echavarria claimed that the burning was accidental, and by the end of July transferred the case to the military court, after charging the platoon commander with certain criminal negligence in the treatment of the two youths.

CHARGES CHANGED IN TORCHING COURT MARTIAL

PY122226 Santiago Domestic Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 12 Aug 86

[Text] The court martial has changed the indictment against Army Lieutenant Pedro Fernandez. Originally he had been indicted by Judge Alberto Echavarria for involuntary manslaughter of Rodrigo Rojas Denegri and involuntary infliction of serious injuries against Carmen Gloria Quintana.

The court martial has partially upheld an appeal submitted by lawyers representing the families of the burned youths and changed the indictment to unnecessary violence resulting in serious injuries. The court martial adopted this decision by a vote of 4 to 1. The dissident vote was cast by Army representative Fernando Torres Silva.

The court martial ruling adds that the prosecutor in charge of the case will begin an investigation to determine whether crimes were committed in violation of the weapons control law on the occasion of the events that are being investigated. As is known, this case is in the hands of Judge Advocate Alberto Marquez Allison.

HOY: PINOCHET SEEKS TO BOOST OWN CANDIDACY

PY121716 Santiago HOY in Spanish 4-10 Aug 86 pp 6, 7

[By Ascanio Cavallo]

[Excerpts] Since honest admissions seem to be in fashion, some such admission was expected on 30 July. President Pinochet was scheduled to speak before some 3,000 women volunteer social workers at the Diego Portales Building. An admission was made about violence:

"I cannot take stronger measures," Pinochet said, "because I am inhibited by international problems created by the politicians who are severely slandering the country abroad." [passage omitted]

The speech delivered on 30 July has revealed the government's difficult situation, to the point that it has had to temporarily suspend some tactical domestic moves.

At the beginning of last week, it seems that Pinochet, in an apparent electoral strategy, would make some changes in the ministerial cabinet in order to abandon the current "administrative" stage to adopt a more offensive position.

At the Army Promotions Board meeting which began on Monday, it was taken for granted that a major general who has held civilian posts before would be given one of the key ministerial posts. This idea has apparently been postponed for a few days, or weeks, according to the time the government needs to assess the remarks made by U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for Latin American Affairs Elliott Abrams, remarks that sounded all the alarms at La Moneda Palace.

Abrams said loudly what other officials of the Reagan administration had said to the government privately: The deadline ends in October. Of course, Abrams used different words: "Apparently our decision on the vote (in favor of our IDB and World Bank credits) will depend to a great extent on how we view the human rights situation in Chile."

The decisions on the credits will be made in September and October. The Foreign Ministry's preliminary analysis indicates that Abrams' remarks refer less to specific human rights cases than to a general climate of "opening" or "progress in the transition period."

Abrams himself hinted that that was the exact meaning of his comments when he said that "we have a few carrots and few sticks available" and that "a flexible policy must be continued" to "encourage change."

The fact that the threat came from a government official close to Reagan, and not from Congress, was what caused more alarm at La Moneda Palace. (Although no one seems to dare talk to Pinochet about it), everyone in government circles is commenting on the fact that Pinochet's announcement of a campaign for 1989 has had devastating effects on relations with the United States.

Nevertheless, planning is continuing for the campaign.

One of the centers of that campaign is the General Secretariat of Government. Minister Francisco Javier Cuadra has publicly recognized that changes are being made, but only the actual changes in the Civilian Organizations Directorate clearly reflect the real purpose behind these changes.

Changes in all the secretariats (Dinacos [Government Social Communications Network], Youth Secretariat, Women's Secretariat, Cultural Relations Secretariat, and Unions Secretariat) have pushed the independent Democratic Union (UDI) out of an important position of power.

The quiet battle for control of some of these posts (such as the Youth Secretariat from which Ignacio Fernandez was removed, despite his efforts to retain it) have reached an unprecedented level and practically implied an "attack" against the UDI. What is known about this "attack" indicates that Pinochet himself ordered the operation (some find a relationship between this and the reference to "requitted love" made 2 weeks ago), yet taking care to preserve his friendship with the UDI with the dispensation of new mayoralties and invitations to lunch.

He made his moves out of the conviction that a team of people close to nationalism and Catholic integralism would be a guarantee of loyalty and work looking toward 1989. Instructions are precise: The secretariats will lead, along with the women volunteers, the efforts to obtain support and to organize a demonstration in support of Pinochet. To prepare that demonstration, discreet meetings with chiefs of public services began last week in order to guarantee a massive turnout for the demonstration that will be held on 10 September.

Some mayors were also called in for the same purpose after the Secretariat General of Government conducted a preliminary screening based on a questionnaire given to the mayors in a meeting 2 weeks ago.

At the same time a propaganda campaign aimed at extending the terms of the regime is being outlined. It has been learned that this outline is being prepared by TVN [not further identified] Director Manfredo Mayol and that it will be launced in two successive phases: The first focusing on government accomplishments and the second on enhancing the figure of Pinochet as the irreplaceable leader of the process. However, the most substantial part of the campaign is now centered on the "mass demonstration" on 10 September. Logistical services (transportation, schedule accommodation, permissions) have been offered to the most important public offices in Santiago.

What would be the purpose of the demonstration? Certainly, it would not be to convince the opposition, or the world, although it may help to prop up a little the untenable position of the Chilean ambassadors abroad. Thus, only the Armed Forces remain as the target. More precisely still, the target will be the Government Junta and some Army officers who share the Junta's apprehensions.

This is, in fact, the sector that heard the most urgent message sent from the United States. The message was delivered personally by the assistant to Elliott Abrams, Robert Gelbard, who also told it to a small group of Army generals with whom he met. [passage omitted]

POLITICIANS REACT TO SENATOR HELMS' SPEECH

PY121520 [Editorial Report] Santiago Radio Chilena in Spanish in its 1700 GMT newscast on 11 August carries reactions by three Chilean politicians to the speech that U.S. Senator Jesse Helms delivered to the U.S. Senate on 7 August. Social Democracy President Rene Abeliuk said: "I believe that excessive attention is being paid here to a man who is laughed at in the United States and who represents the most reactionary sectors of that country. Helms believes that those who do not follow his line are communists and leftists."

He added: "This man has supported Somoza, the apartheid system, and Mr Garcia Meza, who is an associate of cocaine traffickers in Bolivia. What else can be said of Helms? We must not waste more of our time. I must, however, add that if Mr Helms is the defender of the Chilean people, well we will apply the saying; tell me who are your friends and I'll tell you who you are. I think that the worst thing that this government could do is to openly make believe that, or show that, it has a great friend in Mr Helms, because with a friend like him, who needs enemies."

Radical Party President Enrique Silva Cima stated that Senator Helms proposes the denial of democracy. Helms' ideas are simply a repetition of the permanently sustained concepts of President Pinochet when he accuses all those who oppose his government of being Marxists or Leninists.

Christian Democracy [DC] Vice President Juan Hamilton said that Helms had defended the worst Latin American dictatorships, "among which are those of the Somoza family in Nicaragua and President Stroessner in Paraguay. Helms is proud of being a personal friend and public defender of Colonel D'Aubuisson, who created the death squads in El Salvador. He repeatedly expresses his support for the apartheid regime in South Africa, and he has supported the military dictatorships in Bolivia, Brazil, and Argentina, even during the Malvinas war against the United Kingdom. Such a background demonstrates that Helms belongs to the extreme right, an unusual product of the U.S. community, but one which is at the same time the result of an open, nonexclusive, and pluralist democracy in which people like Mr Helms have the right to express themselves and occupy a public post. It is not strange that with such a background Mr Helms is defending Pinochet's government before the U.S. public."

Hamilton added that there is a relationship between Helms' former causes and long-time friendships, and his defense of Pinochet's regime. In order to defend Pinochet's regime, Helms must necessarily distort the Chilean reality just as he does. The DC leader added that through their representatives, the American people are in favor of a peaceful and rapid transition to a real democracy. Helms has contributed to making Chileans understand better the position of the U.S. Congress regarding Helms' defense of Pinochet's regime.

UDI CALLS FOR END TO EXILE, EXCEPTION LAWS

[Text] Santiago, 11 Aug (EFE) -- The right-wing Independent Democratic Union (UDI) feels that the progress made by the process of institutional normalization in Chile "has made exile meaningless." This is stated in a communique released by the UDI. After analyzing the situation in Chile, its background and prospects, this political group submitted 24 proposals dealing with economy, politics, and social and cultural affairs.

According to the latest official figures there are 3,717 Chileans who cannot return to their country. Among other things the UDI calls for "a prompt and total end to exile." According to the UDI the exile that was applied after [11 September] 1973 "was a painful but inevitable consequence of the virtual civil war into which the Marxist government deliberately plunged Chile between 1970 and 1973." The 11 September 1973 a coup d'etat overthrew the constitutional government of socialist President Salvador Allende and allowed the current military regime, headed by General Augusto Pinochet, to take over power.

However, the UDI believes that the Chilean Constitution proposed by the military government and approved in a plebiscite 6 years ago, does not deny the exiles "the right to live in their own fatherland," and has asked for the end to exile. The UDI communique states that "this will help heal the wounds and be a visible sign of progress toward full democracy, which is obviously incompatible with the maintenance of exile."

The other proposals of the right-wing group have to do with the need for a firm movement toward full democracy in keeping with the guidelines of the 1980 Constitution, the streamlining of procedures aimed at amending the Constitution for the period beginning in 1989, and the strengthening of political pluralism. The UDI also proposed putting an end to the indefinite extension of exceptional laws and enhancing the role of the Armed Forces in Chile's future democracy.

NEWLY APPOINTED CABINET LISTS WORK AGENDA

[Text] Bogota, 11 Aug (AFP) -- The ministers who will serve in the Cabinet of the newly installed Colombian president, Liberal Virgilio Barco Vargas, tonight previewed the program for the country in an interview which was broadcast nationwide over radio and television and was organized by the CARACOL Radio Network and its chief news editor, Yamid Amat.

Government (interior) minister Fernando Cepeda explained that the chief of state is preparing a message to Congress which will set the groundrules which apply to the government-opposition system following the refusal of the Conservative Party to collaborate with his administration.

The decision forced Barco to appoint an all-Liberal cabinet, breaking a 30-year tradition which is embedded in the Constitution and mandates that equitable participation be given in the administration to the party that wins second place in the presidential elections.

For his part, National Defense Minister General Rafael Samudio reasserted that Colombia's pacification requires political-military handling, which calls for offering the hand to those who have abided by the truce agreement and for fighting with the full rigor of the law those who refuse to return to normal life.

After categorically rejecting the likelihood of accepting foreign military assistance to bolster peace, Gen Samudio hinted that an Armed Forces representative may be present in the peace talks with the subversives, contrary to what occurred during the previous administration.

New Foreign Minister Colonel Julio Londono, retired, announced that President Barco will travel to New York and Washington in September to address the United Nations and act as Latin America's spokesman before the IMF and World Bank. The deliberations in Washington will be chaired by Colombia.

It is quite likely that President Barco will meet with U.S. President Ronald Reagan, he added.

The quest to protect the security of the community, judges, and magistrates will be the centerpiece of Justice Minister Eduardo Suescun's efforts. Suescun stressed that "the dignity of justice must be restored" because "the judiciary seems to have ceased functioning as a government branch during the last 30 years."

He added that during the initial phase of his tenure, he will not take up matters already dealt with by his predecessors, such as the reforms to the current extradition treaty with the United States, because he feels that it is more urgent to establish real justice in Colombia.

Regarding the economic woes, Finance Minister Cesar Giviria emphatically asserted that the chief problem is the exorbitant growth in interest rates.

To resolve it, he said, measures will be enacted to curb the currency expansion in order to keep inflation from skyrocketing. Costly programs are not to be expected in the public works area because there are no resources, said Public Works Minister Luis Fernando Jaramillo, who intends to give priority to the railroads and the state-run Colombian Ports Enterprise.

Public works programs will focus mainly on the underprivileged sectors of the population in order to eradicate destitution, he added.

For his part, Agriculture Minister Jose Fernando Botero will strive for a speedy and adequate marketing of agricultural-livestock products to prevent increases in the cost of living.

The struggle against unemployment will be Labor Minister Jose Name Teran's main task. He is already considering some initiatives, such as establishing a collectors system in the mass transit system in big cities, which will provide jobs to some 100,000 people and will ensure better treatment for users.

Regarding education, Minister Marina Uribe de Euse, the only woman in the Barco cabinet, said her main concern will be to pay the teacher's salaries promptly.

Therefore, she will immediately try to conclude an arrangement with the Finance Ministry and the National Treasury "to make sure that never again will there be delays in the payment of the teachers' salaries." Such delays have been the source of many conflicts and strikes in the past.

Guillermo Perry, the new mines and energy minister, stressed that he will attach priority to increasing oil prospecting and announced that he is considering a policy of association with foreign companies.

"Although it is true that the prices of Colombia's two leading export items other than coffee, oil, and coal, have dropped during the last few months, it is to be hoped the situation will improve," he noted.

Finally, Communications Minister Edmundo Lopez said that he will undertake a sweeping review of [the system for] handling radio and television programming, which is rented to private citizens under contract. He asserted, however, that this communications media will not be used for political retaliation.

The other two ministers, Economic Development Minister Miguel Alfonso Merino and Health Minister Cesar Esmeral, did not participate in the interview because they had been appointed only 24 hours before.

BARCO NAMES OSSA ESCOBAR PEACE PROCESS ADVISER

[Text] Although there is a new government, the intention to consolidate the peace process remains irreversible. President Barco has appointed an adviser on these matters. General Rafael Samudio, minister of national defense, does not rule out the possibility of a member of the military becoming directly involved in the dialogues or some other form of rapprochment with the subversives. More on this by Alvaro Osorio:

[Begin recording] [Osorio] There will be no further references to the Peace Commission. The person who will take charge of continuing this process is Carlos Ossa Escobar, adviser for reconciliation and rehabilitation. Ossa Escobar's office will be at the presidential Palace. He asserts that he will not be starting from scratch; many of the Peace Commission's experiences will be taken into account. The intention is to discard much of the dialogue and move to concrete action.

The mission of the adviser on reconciliation will be to help the government implement development plans in the violence-ridden areas. Ossa feels that the progress made during the past administration was very important: investments must be made now in the areas of guerrilla influence.

The adviser will assume office this week and plans to travel to Casa Verde to brief the FARC general staff on the new dynamics of the process. What will happen with the guerrilla groups that did not sign the peace agreement?

[Ossa] (?I have already said) that the government will not promote dialogue with them so long as they continue assaulting people, blowing up police stations or barracks, using terrorist tactics. They must realize that they are more isolated every day. I would ask them to please stop and realize that bloodshed is illogical; that the government is committed to making reforms; that they should heed this call. If they wish we can engage in dialogue, but after they have muzzled their rifles. [end recording]

The Peace Commission is now a thing of the past, and an adviser has emerged. In the violence-ridden areas the government plans to make large investments and reforms, subject to approval and enactment by the Congress of the republic.

FOREIGN MINISTER QUALIFIES CONTADORA PARTICIPATION

[Text] Bogota, 11 Aug (DPA) -- Colombia will continue to be part of the Contadora Group "so long as the Central American countries recognize the political value of its mediation efforts," Foreign Minister Julio Londono Paredes has said.

The Contadora and Central American foreign ministers will soon meet to discuss the situation and decide whether there is sufficient interest in continuing Contadora's efforts to prevent a generalized conflict.

"If the countries involved in the conflict do not make the decision, it will make no sense for Colombia to insist on participating," the foreign minister said in an interview with the CARACOL Radio Network.

SOVIET OFFICIAL COMMENTS ON BARCO MEETING

[Text] Bogota, 12 Aug (EFE) -- Aleksandr Mokanu, deputy chairman of the Presidium of the USSR [title as received], who met today with Colombian President Virgilio Barco, announced that the two countries will increase their relations.

Mokanu, who represented his government during Barco's inauguration on 7 August, said at the end of his 7-day visit to Bogota that the two countries will increase their commercial, cultural, technological, and athletic relations.

Mokanu talked today with President Barco at the Narino Palace, the presidential house, for more than 1 hour and 30 minutes, accompanied by Leonid Romanov, USSR ambassador to Colombia, and other high-ranking Soviet officials. During the meeting, they discussed matters related to world peace and disarmament. They also analyzed the Contadora Group, a spokesman said.

They talked about the foreign debt in developing countries and the normalization and institutionalization process that Colombia will implement in some regions to achieve national reconciliation.

After his meeting with President Barco, Mokanu said that the meeting was "an honest and friendly dialogue."

FRG'S WARNKE VIEWS TIES WITH COLOMBIA, L.A.

[Text] Bogota, 10 Aug (DPA) -- FRG Economic Cooperation Minister Juergen Warnke said in Bogota that his country favors repeal of the statute on capital (or Decision 24 of the Andean Group), "a clause that curbs foreign capital investments in agricultural industries and tourism."

Warnke, who is also a World Bank governor and vice president of the Committee on European and International Cooperation, represented his country at the inauguration of Colombian President Virgilio Barco.

Warnke told DPA that "for the FRG, Colombia is one of its most important partners in economic relations. We support and encourage investments in this country and are prepared to increase them." He recalled that the FRG is the top buyer of Colombian coffee. Warnke noted that in 1985 the FRG purchased more than half the coffee beans Colombia exported, and in 1986 "we have already pruchased more than one-third of the coffee exports due to the drop in Brazilian coffee."

"So long as the Andean Pact decree remains in effect, our greatest contribution is maintaining an open market for Colombian imports. For that reason, the FRG's purchases from Colombia last year exceeded $275 million," Warnke remarked.

In addition to attending the Barco Vargas inauguration, Warnke signed an agreement with the Colombian Government on FRG aid following the Armero tragedy, the village buried by the 13 November 1985 eruption of the Arenas volcano on Nevado del Ruiz mountain. This agreement for DM 4 million is in addition to the DM 20 million already donated.

Regarding the stability of the Contadora Group, which received international attention during the installation of the new Colombian Government, Warnke said that "this gathering in Colombia has reaffirmed the Contadora process, which was imperiled."

"The FRG has always stated its interest in closer ties between the European Community and Latin America and with the peace process in Central America," Warnke said. "Therefore, we view Spain and Portugal's entry in the EEC as something positive, helping establish a direct relationship with Latin America," he said.

FEBRES CORDERO ADDRESSES REPRESENTATIVES

PA110446 Quito Domestic Service in Spanish 2330 GMT 10 Aug 86

[Annual address by President Leon Febres Cordero to the Chamber of Representatives -- live]

[Text] Mr Vice President of the Republic; Mr President of the Congress [shouts]; Mr President of the Supreme Court; Messrs Ministers of State; Papal Nuncio, dean of the diplomatic corps; Your Excellencies Ambassadors and heads of missions of friendly nations and international organizations; Mr President of the Court of Constitutional Guarantees; [shouts] Mr President of the Supreme Electoral Tribunal; Mr President of the Tax Court; Messrs Commander Generals of the Armed Forces and the National Police; high government officials; Archbishop of Quito; Messrs national and provincial deputies; civilian, military police, and church officials; distinguished ladies; gentlemen; Ecuadoran people [shouts]:

After a year of drama and paradoxes, in fulfillment of my constitutional duties, I come before you and my fellow countrymen to report on developments in the Republic which have by now become part of that collective memory that is history. This year must lead to guided reflection and most of all must reinforce our faith in the country's virtues, increase our commitment to work, and reaffirm our trust in the lofty ideals to which Ecuador and our people are called. [shouts] As the world is heading... [interrupted by crowd] towards the end of this contradictory 20th century, it has recorded [words indistinct] on the entire surface of the planet. The almost cosmic chess game of the superpowers continues to be played, and the gap continues to close between technology's prodigious progress -- which carries within it the seeds and nuclear warheads of its own destruction -- and the secret anguish of each individual who ponders in the deepness of his inner self the same questions which summarize the fathomless enigma of human nature.

The American setting, always vital and vibrant, was marked by two basic issues: the tempestuous windstorm of the economic crisis, in which the problems of the foreign debt and the injustice of the trade exchange terms stood out sharply, and the undefeated desire for democracy was manifested during the realization of the legitimate electoral process, in the multiform struggle against terrorist and drug trafficking, and with the blow of unjustifiable coup attempts at a time when the nation [applause] was convinced of the irreversibility of its constitutional process. With this background, Ecuador has enriched its institutional experience during the year I am describing.

The obvious successes as well as the conflicts and controversies have meant [words indistinct] of authentic democracy, of what democracy is, what it implies, and the reasons for which even supreme sacrifices are justified to preserve it and perfect it. [shouts]

Economically, the first half of the exercise has confirmed the country's possibility of achieving an authentic and dynamic development when it is guided in a realistic manner, with good faith and efficiency. The latter part of the exercise has demonstrated that not even the worst problems that have emerged from factors over which Ecuador has no control are enough to bend the endurance of the alliance between a government whose pulse is not altered when it confronts a storm and when it decrees essential adjustment measures, and a patriotic and intuitive people, irrevocably determined to overcome any adversity. [shouts, applause]

It is impossible to understand and effectively analyze the period this report is referring to if we forget the two phases I just mentioned. The hinge around which the circumstance swung was the violent drop in the international oil prices between the end of January and the first half of February 1986. Due to the difficult situation in which I found the country in August 1984 [as heard], 1 year ago, I and all of the Ecuadoran people can attest to the fact that a healthy recovery was taking place. This process was strengthened during the following months. Within close circles, the notable success of the signing of the documents to renegotiate our debt with the foreign private banks was unanimously acknowledged, because in terms of interest payments alone it meant a savings of $200 million and [applause, chants] specific agreements with the governments of the countries that form the so-called Paris Club.

The notable seriousness of the Ecuadoran people regarding their commitments, the discerning handling of the country's economic policy, and the people's cohesive effort were weighed by the international financial community, which placed the country in a situation that it would be improper to describe as privileged, but which undoubtedly was encouraging. By the end of 1985, production had increased by 3.8 percent, a figure which not only surpassed population growth, but, by some 50 percent, the level predicted by previous analyses.

The agricultural sector showed new strength; manufacturing changed its previous trend towards a depression; we began looking for oil in the Amazon area and in our territorial waters; mining activities resumed; construction progressed, and infrastructure projects could be seen in all the provinces of the country. The public sector's consolidated credits were not only balanced but showed a surplus equivalent to 1.5 percent of gross internal product, the first time this has happened here. Exports increased and the balance of payments showed a positive credit of $25 million.

The collapse in oil prices was a harsh blow. Various errors coupled with insufficient attention given to one of the fundamental tasks for our country, the diversification of exports, have created almost suffocating dependence on foreign sales of hydrocarbons. Ecuador obtained $2 of every $3 dollars and almost half of its fiscal revenues from foreign sales.

In only 3 weeks, prices plummeted from $27 to $10 a barrel. Since that time, prices have varied but have not gone above the $18 mark. During the last week, prices dropped below $9. This is the lowest figure in 13 years. The reduction in foreign currency will exceed $1.1 billion and the reduction in fiscal revenues some 55 billion sucres. In other words, this is a problem which because of its actual and relative proportion, is unprecedented in Ecuador's 156 years. It is not similar to any event of the past century because of the weak ties that existed in that era with international markets. It is not even similar to the collapse of cacao production during the 2d decade of this century, to the depression of the thirties, or even to recent weather changes often mentioned as part of a vain effort to hide blameworthy omissions during this decade.

Therefore, the move to reduce our production growth target as part of the realistic and adaptable planning efforts conducted quietly by the National Development Council should not dismay anyone. It is unfair to protest the severe austerity measures imposed on government spending, to place inordinate demands on the system, and to demand that projects totally out of tune with reality be executed. Fairness is acknowledging that although the people have had to live with the effects of the problem I have outlined, its impact has been milder than expected and than certain obstinately sectarian sectors, more interested in seeing the government fail than the nation fare well, were ostensibly awaiting.

This was possible thanks to two factors: first, the economic recovery which our efforts since August 1984 made possible; and second, the enlightened and realistic way in which the executive managed the crisis since it began. Adequate judgment helped alleviate the effects of diminished foreign exchange and fiscal revenues. [applause] This administration has handled the flow of foreign monies intelligently, expedited paperwork for the disbursement of funds in already concluded soft loans, obtained a loan from the Andean Reserves Fund to boost our balance of payments situation, negotiated and virtually secured release of an advance on our oil export fund from the international commercial banks, obtained running, stand-by [preceding word in English] credits, and an up-front, crossover, short-term loan the U.S. Government granted Ecuador in a commendable, tangible recognition of our efforts in confronting such dramatic crises. [applause]

The most recent and continuing drop in oil prices necessarily aggravates the crisis, imposing on all Ecuadorans, particularly those in leading positions in government, the need for concerted, responsible, and generous work. The harm that this emergency may inflict upon our society will not simply be blamed on an international economic system against which epithets can be hurled. The people will save for government leaders the sharpest criticism concerning their blunders or the sins of omission that failing to cooperate actively and fully to reach the best possible solutions entail. [applause]

Messrs legislators, without disregarding the burden of the duties which are assumed by the president of the republic and his closest aides, you cannot evade your own responsibility to legislate seriously, judge things objectively, and analyze with a constructive mind the suggestions presented by the executive branch at any given moment with the intention of alleviating the grave problems which affect the Ecuadoran people. [shouts, chanting]

I would not be wholly fulfilling my duties if I simply reviewed the conflict which the international oil crisis has provoked in our country: and pointed out the measures adopted by the government with the intention of solving this grave problem. It is necessary to mention -- at least briefly -- what the situation we face represents at the world level. Following a lengthy period of low and virtually fixed prices, oil prices began to rise in 1973. The movement was led by the OPEC member-countries, which then controlled two-thirds of the market.

This policy provoked a strong crisis in many states and promoted the development of alternate energy sources as well as increased production by non-OPEC member-countries. Eventually, this organization was left in control of less than half the world market. This situation was used by various forces and nations interested in provoking a decrease in oil prices. OPEC member-countries, particulary Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, and the Arab Emirates, then decided to flood the crude oil market and meet increasing demands -- given the magnitude of their reserves and low production costs -- hoping that a bottoming in proces would eliminate non-OPEC producers whose costs are significantly higher.

Whatever the goals and reasons for this modification in the market, some facts are clear: The oil-producing countries are suffering gigantic damages; those located in the Latin American area report overwhelming losses. We have already described what is happening in Ecuador; in Venezuela, the drop in revenue is calculated at $5 billion; Mexico's loss is estimated at $11-12 billion. Likewise, overall losses among OPEC-members have risen to $40 billion. The most relevant historical fact is that the largest percentage of resources are being transferred from developing countries which export oil to industrialized countries, whereas only 6-8 percent of the overall losses incurred by the former reaches poor nations which import oil. [sentence as heard]

Thus, the main phenomenon in the sixties was a transfer of resources from industrialized and developing states which consumed crude oil to countries which exported crude oil; our current phenomenon is exactly the opposite. [applause, shouts, chanting]

The Latin American debt is close to $400 billion and is one of the heaviest burdens in our history. Ecuador managed to renegotiate its debt prior to the drop in oil prices; the payment deadline was extended 12 years, a 3-year grace period was obtained, and the payments were scheduled so that they would not be more than 30 percent of overall volume of our exports -- based on 1985 figures. This was the least onerous renegotiation result ever achieved in this hemisphere. [applause] However, however [repeats himself] what happend with the crude oil and the subsequent reduction in revenue income -- for an amount equal to or even slightly larger than the payment of our credit obligations abroad -- has noticeably altered the picture, because these phenomena virtually represent a return to the renegotiation terms signed by the previous government, by which two-thirds of the revenues obtained from exports were consumed by the foreign debt payments.

Although the reduction in the price of oil aggravates the foreign debt problem, the financial effect remains the same: Ecuador can no longer continue living on only one-third of the foreign exchange acquired through its exports.

The Ecuadoran Government has frankly and clearly presented these realities to the credit banks, creditor-countries, and to the international financial community in general. Obviously, if during 1986 the oil prices do not return to levels which, even though they may not reach the stable price of $25 per barrel, at least surpass the current low average, we will have to make the necessary adjustments so that our country may be able to maintain its rate of growth, modest as it may be, and simultaneously meet its foreign credit commitments. [shouts, chanting]

We do not advocate formulas which imply ignoring the debt we have acquired. However, I also state that it is physically impossible to subject a nation to the [word indistinct] of living and working exclusively to pay an international financial obligation without respite, hope, and the promise of a tangible development. [applause] Consequently, new alternatives have been analyzed and will continue to be sought: [word indistinct] of renegotiation, new credits, and others that may be even more drastic and dramatic to implement the alternative that most effectively protects the highest interests of the Ecuadoran people and their future. [applause, shouts]

As I have said on many occasions, and both the foreign and finance ministers have reiterated, the foreign debt problem is not an exclusively financial problem. Now more than ever we must warn that the survival of Latin America depends on the solution of this problem. It is necessary for the international community to realize with utmost clarity that there is no more time to lose. If the foreign debt problem is solved satisfactorily, Latin America will have a chance to enjoy full democracy, progress, and harmony. If (?on the contrary) an adequate solution is not found, each one of the governments and their respective peoples will find other ways to survive, even though those paths pull the countries in the region away from many mechanisms for trade and cooperation.

One could say that the foreign debt drama is the drama of continuous proletarianization and sinking of all of Latin America. The international community -- particularly the developed countries that are undoubtedly benefiting from the transfer of resources from the oil-producing countries -- must accept their serious historical and equitable responsibility by assuming part of the necessary and urgent efforts so that 300 million Latin Americans can find formulas for progress and healthy cooperation. [applause, shouts, chanting]

If the solutions to the problem are postponed, it is believed that the problem can be solved by financial experts sent by the international banks, month by month Latin America will increasingly become a continent of great frustrations.

Perhaps no other country in America as Ecuador, or any Latin American president as Leon Febres Cordero can speak with such authority, [shouts] ... because no country as Ecuador, and no president as Leon Febres Cordero has so systematically sought methods of solution that are healthy, viable, practical, honorable and stable.

It is not too late. The international community must commit itself to a rapid, just, and effective solution. The Latin American governments must correct the mistaken policies that led to a crushing indebtedness, that exhausted the productive systems, that increased the bureaucratic expenditures to unnecessary levels, and scared away the venture capital. If there is no coordination of our mutual responsibilities our formulas may not be formulas for a solution, but they will unquestionably be elements of hope for the anguished people to which they and their governments will cling regardless of the diversity of their political leanings. [applause]

Our work has been unceasing. Within the economic picture that I have described, the government has carried out a year's labor demonstrated in projects incomparable in our history, in number, scope, and economic, social, and cultural importance.

The administrative apparatus has a strict obligation to be efficient and honest, and to offer dynamic service to the citizens who finance and support it. These are the objectives of the debureaucratization plan and other initiatives of administrative and general development. Specifically, the constitutional reports of the ministers and officials of the various government institutions point out the achievements, current projects and initiatives that are being implemented with fervor and patriotism throughout Ecuador.

This is why I will limit myself to pointing out the master guidelines for the work of the executive branch, mentioning some finished projects that exemplify and demonstrate them. The first is the abiding humanitarian commitment aimed at meeting in such a [word indistinct] way the basic needs of the Ecuadoran man, beginning with his physical sustenance, material needs and health so that in a peaceful environment he will be an appropriate agent for the development of his family, his country and himself.

That is the reason for the fervor of those noble and exciting national campaigns that, headed by the first lady, drew the unanimous support [chants] of thousands of Ecuadoreans who, moving through the neighborhoods and countryside of the coast, the Andean highlands, and the Amazon region to the Galapagos Archipelago, defended our main resource, our children, from the most common diseases through mass vaccination. [applause, chanting]

That is also the reason for the tenacious work for free medicine for the children of poor families. I have been proposing such a program ever since I held a congressional seat. Insults and demagoguery prevented the establishment of such a program at that time, but having received the highest civic office from my fellow countrymen, the least I could do was work to implement such a program. The financing requires a system closely linked to social justice, supported by taxes paid by the wealthy when they consume luxury or nonessential goods. Complex and precise studies were carried out to determine the operational structure, the regulations, and the technical characteristics of the program. The program is definitely underway, signifying the planting of a seed whose best fruit will be harvested through the strength and potential of future Ecuadoran generations.

At the same time, the products for the people's generic medicine program are arriving in the country. Distribution will start in September and it will generate a significant drop in prices. This represents one of the most important social achievements for our people.

The human being is shaped through the educational process and manifested through expressions of culture. One of the basic goals of my government is the complete development of technical education, an antidote against many deplorable failures which should be blamed on a traditional and decrepit system. Technical education is a resource which will improve the possibility of employment for thousands of Ecuadoran youths, offering the country capable and creative mid-level professionals, efficient protagonists for the many tasks required for the productive development of the nation. In its first stage the program included 15 agricultural and industrial schools strategically located throughout the country. The second stage will be directed toward 41 additional schools [shouts] and encompass new efforts essential for the total success of this initiative.

At the same time, the government has promoted sports because of the high individual and social values involved. Last year it invested 1.72 billion sucres in infrastructure and culture. It completed the preparation of a basic tool in the proposed book bill, now subject to your analysis, members of the legislature. In addition, the necessary modifications have been implemented so that the national fund of culture may start to operate.

The most needy sectors of the population have been the subject of much concern. Many tasks are part of an unavoidable effort to assist the people from the Guayaquil suburbs. The paving of 400 blocks and 80 km of urban roads is just one among the many other tangible examples of the magnitude of the task we have started. At the same time, we are implementing emergency improvements to provide essential public services for Quito's surburban areas. In the same direction, new standards and services to promote crafts have been included with maximum emphasis.

The establishment of obligatory agriculture insurance -- which by providing benefits to a large number of our brother peasants triples the amount of all those who are currently members -- makes possible the exercise of authentic human rights and gives meaning to the constitutional principle of equal rights in the relentless struggle against inflation. [crowd shouts slogans] In addition to other pernicious consequences, the worst damage caused by uncontrollable inflation is that it worsens the injustice regarding the distribution of wealth. It makes the rich richer and the poor poorer. Therefore, based on my solid commitment to the people and the prevalence of social justice, I have not surrendered nor will I surrender to inflationary pressures. From the spiraling rise in prices when I was sworn in, we have been able to reduce inflation to 28 percent in 1985. Moreover, the research and technical studies show that by 31 July 1986 inflation has been reduced to 18.9 percent. This is an undeniable sign of the discipline on the credit, the ordered and coherent management of the fiscal and monetary policies, and the noticeable agricultural recovery.

The agricultural recovery is another one of the leading indicators of the government's efforts. What has been accomplished represents one of the most meaningful transformations of this century. By changing an absurd trend, Ecuador is again what it has really always been: a farming country. [shouts] This has been a tireless effort which encompassed wise planning, guarantees of private property complying with social responsibility, credit, technical assistance, innovations in marketing and irrigation, and which has resulted in an increase in production. Now that domestic consumption needs have been satisfied after many years, we have surpluses of rice, hard corn, and beans, and the sale of these products to other countries will be encouraged by the fact that the dollars coming from such operations can be freely negotiated in the currency market. [applause]

I do not hide the legitimate pride I have in my government for being the first to seriously try technically and creatively to overcome a grave inequity which has burdened Ecuadoran progress: that is the enormous and unjustified distance beween the producer and the consumer. Thanks to the produce market [bolsa de productos] and to the related measures that were adopted, the double standard and profound injustice have been eliminated. In these, the peasants received low prices in exchange for their work and sacrifice, and which proved detrimental to their productive effort: the consumer ended up paying excessive prices for necessities. At the same time, the forest plan [plan bosque] has financed the reforestation of more than 20,000 hectares which helps to increase jobs, and allows more goods to be available. This will protect the environment; the common stock of all Ecuadoreans, present and future generations. Meanwhile, efficient methods of farming research [cheers] will increase performance, make it possible to compete in international markets, diversify our exports, and free us from the choking dependence on oil. [cheers]

In view of the country's condition, simply the improvement in farming means a gigantic step forward and the strict adherence to another of the government's fundamental goals: The harmony and balance in the development of the different geographic areas and the various economic sectors. With the same intention much more has been accomplished. Unquestionable proof is the special and sectorial course taken by the Ecuadoran Development Bank whose loans increased by 69 percent. The work of regional organizations and the roadbuilding effort which is close to 4,822 km, with special emphasis on access roads, not only permits produce to be transported to the consumer centers, but becoming real tendons of Ecuadoran integration. An integration, that removes us from confrontations and becomes strong and positive collaboration, by overcoming antagonisms and mistrusts, and basing itself on justice and the most strict and severe obedience of the law, brings together in tangible solidarity the heads of production, workers, businessmen, administrators, and researchers -- united together with a love for the fatherland and an invincible desire for progress. This is briefly the basis of our labor policy. This is why salaries were raised 1 January 1986 in a way that would compensate for inflation but that could be really afforded, without causing fiscal bankruptcy or the bankruptcy of private business, which in the end means unemployment for Ecuadoreans. [cheers, applause] This is why more than 100 minimum wage commissions have been created. The formation of labor organizations has been stimulated, dozens have received approval. Collective labor bargaining has been boosted, resulting in fewer labor conflicts, despite the generally difficult conditions of the first half of the year. Due to its increasing domestic integration Ecuador has managed to project itself internationally. It is well known that our policy on this subject rests on solid principles of justice and law. Ecuador seeks frank and friendly relations with all the countries of the world without exception. It takes great care to observe extreme consistency in what we think, say, and do. It discovers international relations as a method of common and dynamic development. During the time which this report covers, I made three important trips outside Ecuador. I visited Venezuela, the Dominican Republic, and Puerto Rico at the end of 1985, thus intensifying economic relations, technical cooperation, and trade, and especially in the case of Venezuela, some pending problems were finally solved. The most significant points were the deep analyses made with President Jaime Lusinchi and President Salvador Jorge Blanco on the problems of Latin America, the foreign debt, peace in Central America. The fight against terrorism and drug trafficking were discussed in depth with noticeable agreements. In January 1986 I made an official visit to the United States. I spoke openly and frankly with President Ronald Reagan, and received special treatment in consideration of the Ecuadoran people and for the way our country is facing its economic and political problems. [applause, cheers]

That opportunity also served to reopen the path of the development credit organizations that had been practically closed to Ecuador for several years. Soft loan agreements were signed with the IDB, the World Bank, and AID amounting to over $300 million. I had the opportunity of presenting our country to a meeting of very important journalists at the National Press Club where, in reply to a long question period, I explained the achievements and purposes of our government. That visit also allowed us to promote productive investments, particularly in the mining field, and gave us the opportunity to have open, sincere, and very positive exchange of ideas with U.S. union leaders.

In May I attended the presidential inauguration in Costa Rica. I accepted a very cordial invitation by the now former Presdient Dr Luis Alberto Monge. This was also an opportunity to get acquainted with the young and recently-elected president, Dr Oscar Arias. [applause and cheers] Costa Rica, a democratic country by tradition and conviction, gave an additional example of that political awareness during the inaugural ceremonies. It was a pleasure for me to be a witness of that Costa Rican civic activity. I then went to Honduras, invited by President Jose Azcona Hoyo and viewed the honesty and objectiveness with which he analyzes the Central American conflict. I also visited the El Zamorano Agricultural School, with which we have an agreement for training 130 young fellow countrymen, who will be the future forces driving Ecuadoran agricultural development. We also signed agreements with Honduras that will assure an exchange of technical experiences and adequate cultural contacts.

Legislators: I hereby reiterate that what I have stated is merely a brief outline that grants unity and coordination to the [words indistinct], and of course, the basic framework [words indistinct] for the austere atmosphere of work and specific duties of the Armed Forces that zealously defend our national territory and provide services for the Ecuadoran community. This also has an influence on the new 42,000 housing units that were promoted by the public sector last year. [shouts, cheers] The [words indistinct] built 28,441 housing units, that showed a 25.7 percent increase as compared to the first year of my administration, when it was necessary to define the general characteristics of the system and solve the terrible problems that had been left pending. Therefore, in keeping with the [word indistinct] rate, which will be kept rising, as I offered during the electoral campaign, but it will increase and will make true the promise to build 120,000 low-cost housing units during my 4-year term. Also, there are new mechanisms to develop the manufacturing industry, particularly the one based on national raw materials, that opens new jobs; the small enterprise that equally distributes the benefits of progress among all Ecuadoran regions; the growing [words indistinct] of petroleum, that seeks to obtain reforms that will compensate and increase the quantity that is being drilled by three new contracts of [words indistinct] in the Amazona area, the coastal area, and territorial seas; helping the minority by issuing appropriate solutions to the problems of [words indistinct], increasing the exploration of oil deposits, formalizing contracts to incorporate foreign capital and technology that will strengthen our production; generating and saving on foreign currency; and opening thousands of new jobs for the new generations of Ecuadoran workers. [applause and cheers] If the administrative aspect is a conglomeration of various activities that are guided and marching through many paths and sectors, the political aspect is the work done by a general effort toward reaching a common goal which is the overall improvement of the individual and society.

During the period on which I am now reporting, relations between Congress and the Executive -- which in the previous period had been definitely abnormal -- became normal.

The initial insistence on unconstitutionally maintaining, from parliament, a parallel government, began to yield to an attitude that was much more in line with the letter and spirit of the Constitution.

As soon as my presidential term began, daily charges about alleged authoritarianism on the part of the chief of state and of the government as a whole, were made, a tactic similar to those attempted during the 1984 election campaign. The critics, for unjustifiable distortion purposes, failed to say how some elements in congress as well as some entities were acting maliciously and questioning the constitutional work of the Executive Branch [shouts], while everyday they looked for failures that would not have been my failures, Ecuadoran people, but yours because you elected me as your constitutional president. [shouts]

Unfortunately there is no constitutional rule politically protecting the Executive Branch in the face of, but implicitly political decisions of collegial organizations, and it has not been possible to point out violations of the constitution, violations that are committed collectively but that are still that: violations.

Because of these violations, the president of the Republic found himself forced to defend his authority and legal order in compliance with his precise constitutional duties and to safeguard his own personal dignity. [shouts]

This is why evidence that as of August 1985, congressional leadership gained awareness that it is institutionally necessary to live without violence and continuous provocations, was seen by all the citizens with satisfaction and as positive for democracy and as a resource for facing very delicate moments. [shouts]

Perhaps we cannot say that there has been full harmony or a completely constructive relationship with congress, which is the ambition of any person who truly loves the fatherland, but I must publicly admit that there has been no malicious intentions to destabilize the government, or to obstruct, at any cost, the work of the Executive Branch in favor of the Ecuadoran people. [shouts]

People must realize that the political groups that support the government have never been a majority in the Ecuadoran congress. What happened is that some blocs of legislators adopted a very patriotic and responsible attitude aware of the fact that relative national harmony should win over the intolerance, sectarianism, and radicalism of other opposition sectors. This attitude, undoubtedly, deserves the gratitude of the Ecuadoran people.

Despite the efforts that certain opposition sectors made in Ecuador and abroad -- efforts which are unjustifiable and proof of the excess to which sordid, negative passions can lead men -- to discredit my government by claiming that the holding of elections was overdue, I, unperturbed, decided when to hold elections. Various parliamentary sectors, including several unmistakably aligned with the opposition, fought tenaciously to eliminate legislative elections, and even municipal elections, which by law must be held between presidential elections. The former heads of the Supreme Electoral Tribunal, whose ill-will against the National Reconstruction Front coalition was no secret, failed to clear legal problems standing in the way of the elections. Moreover, they did not take precautions against the problem of expired voter registration cards. The president of the Republic took resolute steps to ensure that the elections would be held. Resorting to an executive decree, the length of validity of voter registration cards was extended. And that is how, prior to boarding the plane that took me to the United States for an official visit, I announced the holding of elections, defeating all efforts challenging this. [chants] My decision was based on my firm beliefs on the need to alternate power. This alternation includes the renewal of congressional and municipal authorities.

In addition, I personally believe that it is not good to have a unicameral parliament. One-party rule and unicameral legislature encumber the executive's handling of relations with the Congress. Periodic changes are not altogether inappropriate. This calls on other institutions to redress their postures with a clear constitutionalist spirit and objective insight obtained from our country's past experiences.

In January I called a plebiscite to allow Ecuadoreans to say whether they wanted independents to have the right to opt for elected offices. I did not do this to rally support for this administration or to boost the position of those parties supporting the government. Those were false accusations launched by the opposition. My motives were clear and honest: Perfect Ecuadoran democracy; break the ridiculous discriminatory and antihuman policies unfortunately sanctioned by the Constitution approved in the 1978 referendum; yield to demands by which the individual, not the political parties, is the depository of political rights, and defend a principle that it took years of republican life to secure and which was abruptly suppressed through dictatorial, manipulative procedures. However, the opposition managed the publicity and propaganda adroitly. It advised the citizens to vote no, voicing their discontent regarding the government, the high cost of living, and against a string of age-old problems that cannot be immediately remedied and against which no other administration has struggled harder than mine. Principles were betrayed, ethics were violated, and the Ecuadoran people became victims by being instructed to vote no to an honestly conceived question, when the legal consequence of the vote in fact sanctioned a long-standing injustice.

This plesbiscite and the cowards who perpetrated it will go down in history as one of the most blatant and harmful manipulations of the Ecuadoran people in the history of our republic [chants]. I am certain that in the short run -- if in fact they have not already done it -- the Ecuadoran people will fully realize the extent of the damage. I am certain they will see that despite the landslide no vote, the government's firm determination to continue serving the people was not shaken. [applause]

However, they fomented the mutilation of their own rights, and the abdication of their political decisions on behalf of partisan groups that claim for themselves the natural right of men to be elected and to freely elect their representatives from the broad spectrum that includes all citizens, and not from a limited selection of party members.

I must admit that in addition to those who voted no because they were strongly convinced that the system of electoral freedom was not advisable for them as it would eliminate the possibilities for partisan manipulation, there were others who accepted the invitation from the opposition to freely express their discontent to the government.

I did not heed the advice of those who in good faith advised me to suspend the referendum when the transposition of concepts and the terrible fundamental falsity that obsessed politicians in the opposition had introduced into the electoral publicity became obvious. I chose to carry the process to the end and, showing a republican and democratic spirit, even face the climate adverse to the government that influenced the negative vote. I am aware of the political consequences of the results of the referendum. However, I am less concerned about that than I am about the very grave historical consequences that will continue harboring injustice, and about the absurdity in Ecuadoran constitutional law which will continue mutilating electoral freedom in our country. This would be going against history's vital course, burying a principle and a right achieved through a decades-long struggle which would later be eliminated by the skillful drafting of the constitution.

But the reestablishment of the right to free elections continues to be a categoric imperative. The government maintains the position that it has an ethical obligation to reach a totally and truly democratic system in which the political rights of Ecuadoreans will be faithfully expressed by the Constitution. I propose this tonight in a specific, emphatic, and unequivocal manner to you Messrs legislators. [shouts]

It is essential that we proceed in this direction because if the curtailment of electoral freedom years ago led to oligarchic regimes devoid of popular ideas and support stemming from small party minorities, the same phenomenon will occur in the future as the result of the evolution of the current regulations. This oppressive extreme must be avoided. It is time to find a lucid way out on the basis of the majority's rights, without subterfuge, murkiness, or snares, and to immediately and realistically address this extremely serious problem. [shouts]

I respect human rights. The meticulous mechanism commonly called disinformation has been set into motion agaisnt the Ecuadoran Government. It consists of manipulating events, of distorting or mutilating objective data, of instilling into the public mind apparent truths that contradict actual truth. Sometimes the goal of misinformation is to obtain the public's support for ideas that patently run counter to the community's interests. Other times it is to make the most decisive developments take on adverse and disparaging nuances, and still on other occasions it is to disrupt the sound objectives or right actions by persons and groups.

At various times and under different circumstances, attempts have been made to disinform with regard to the country's political, economic, and social situation, inside and outside the country. Several mechanisms handled by political transnationals were incorporated into this objective. Certain personalities who are more or less active in Ecuador's politics have clearly played the role of agents of misinformation and agents of political internationals that have no regard for country, homeland, boundaries, peoples, or national communities and only seek universal power regardless of the suffering, contradictions, or conflicts peoples or nations may endure. Through disinformation mechanisms, it has been hinted that respect for human rights is beginning to be neglected in Ecuador. Insinuations in this regard have been made by more than one media, in more than one political speech, or in more than one statement by one or more international spokesman or spokesmen, for which sufficient propaganda mechanisms have been made available.

I must stress what the international community and what the friendly governments know in detail through their diplomatic representatives and the diverse mechanisms that adhere to the truth. The Ecuadoran Government zealously respects and promotes the right of persons, the right to life, the right to personal freedom, the right to a good name, the right to economic initiative, the right to have a livelihood, the right to freely educate children, the right to free expression, and the right to have access to the mechanisms of justice. [shouts]

It cannot be otherwise. The logical ideological inspiration of my government is based on the human being. It serves him and justifies itself on him. It denies the dogmatic and totalitarian assertion that the state or society in abstract must prevail over the right of a person because a person embodies moral values that come before and prevail over the powers man himself has created in the groups and societies. A human being has a purpose that is the product of his own essence, that is the result of his own conscience, and is not the effect of a whimsical concession granted by the administrator of a specific society. [shouts]

The basic right of Ecuadoran men and women exists so that on the basis of their freedom and potential and within respect for the law, they can feasibly achieve their own fulfillment. Nothing that hinders this fundamental right of human beings will be accepted or tolerated by the government. That is the reason for the persistent and all out struggle against those savage and merciless attacks on the right of persons. [shouts]

That is the reason for the persistent and all out manly struggle against those savage and merciless attacks on the right of persons that are aggressively launched by terrorism, drug trafficking, guerrillas, and other phenomena of collective deprivation. [shouts]

For this reason, I am fully aware that the attempts to create misinformation about the Ecuadoran Government and human rights are specifically aimed at curbing the actions of the government which I preside over, particularly the national police's systematic and self-sacrificing work against terrorism and drug trafficking. One or the other would take hold of the society if the government let itself be intimidated by this disinforming and cowardly propaganda. [shouts] If the government showed some weakness in the fight against these scourges of humankind, our country would face the imminent danger of being destroyed as unfortunately occurs to more than one state now. If fear led us to cowardice, the nation can be sure that in a short time it would have fallen under one of the two following tyrannies: That of the organization of vice or that of a master that manipulates the state forces to impose primitive radicalisms.

Let the misinformers, let the drug traffickers, and let the terrorists know [shouts], let the misinformers, let the drug traffickers, and let the terrorists know that the great Ecuadoran society's support for the struggle of the government will make it continue with identical and even greater energy in the fight against the scourges of our century. [shouts] Providence will make the elements of destruction, which are so skillful in carrying out disinformation, become more obviously identified in a society that clearly sees which are the goals of the false prophets. [shouts]

As soon as it was known the price of oil on the world market was dropping and Ecuador's economy would be facing problems, a coup attempt came. It was led by the commander of the Air Force at that time. I hope that investigations on this matter will clear-up the ties that existed between him and civilian politicians then. In any case, it was evident -- and there are testimonies pointing in that direction -- that some sectors that claim to be democratic clearly and cowardly encouraged the subversion. [shouts] As a military venture, the coup attempt had little significance, but it had an erosive impact on domestic policies because it served as a basis for charges that were slanderous, vague, and unprecise but that still harmed the government's image.

The worst effect on the Ecuadoran people was at the international level. The government has implemented a completely serious international relations effort in compliance with commitments. National honor, friendly and open relations with all countries of the world, financial behavior with no inferiority complex inspired by domestic laws but not by petty caudillism, clear and simple principles being honestly applied, congruence among ideas, statements, and action, all this had given shape to a respected national image. [shouts]

That image represented benefits for the country because honesty bears fruit even if that is not the objective. This image suffered from the coup attempt, which created -- although only circumstantially -- mistaken images about infantile dreams, irrational hatred, and blind excitement. And there were, obviously, moments of doubt among investors who had found an oasis of peace in Latin America, in foreign statesmen who had thought of Ecuador as a land that served as a healthy home for people who enjoyed harmonious coexistence, in newsmen used to finding in Ecuador news characteristic of serious countries. All of a sudden they found themselves faced with a tragedy and a comedy not coherent with the dignity the Ecuadoran state had been demonstrating.

Those who conspired, those who inspired, and those who carried out the March events may or may not have estimated the damage that they would be inflicting on their fellow countrymen. Anyhow, they acted without hesitation. Either hatred, frustration, and the desire to destroy was most important for them, or they did not have the moral awareness that places the permanent values of the nation above personal passion and petty political ambitions. Although no importance has been given to those people with a negative spirit, they damaged a national effort that was not the property of the government but the property of all the Ecuadoran people who found in that effort a positive tool for finding resources, assets, and services because they had neat credentials in the international community and had historic encouragement that provide hopes and moral strength. Perhaps posterity and history will be able to provide an exact report on the seriousness of the damage done to the entire country and point to those responsible for it.

Those days were dramatically tense, but not entirely negative. The people's reiteration of their democratic will was tremendously positive. The people spontaneously stated their adherence to constitutionality. And the noble, firm, careful, and efficient position of the Armed Forces was most positive. I, as democratic president on behalf of all Ecuador, pay tribute to the Armed Forces and regret the death of those who fell fulfilling their duty becuase of the unjustifiable coupist adventure.

An amnesty bill has been proposed and comes from a local politician. It is being made following this and other crimes aimed at hurting the undefeated prestige of our Armed Forces. The proposal has been presented as a political initiative. The Armed Forces have stated categorically that amnesty can be granted only in cases of political crimes and if there is a national importance for granting it.

Those who would benefit from this amnesty are guilty of common crimes. The national government fully agrees with the Armed Forces' views because they are based [shouts] on the solid foundations of the Constitution, logic, dignity, and evidence. Amnesty does not and cannot shelter those who misappropriate public funds, slander the institutions that form the backbone of the homeland, or incur insubordination that is detrimental to the discipline and prestige of the armed institution with serious consequences abroad.

I will take the opportunity to clarify another, truly important matter. Amnesty is unacceptable in the case of common crime or crimes against mankind, thus defined by the international community and the Ecuadoran state. It would not be at all difficult, after trying to apply amnesty to common crime, that some would later try to apply amnesty to crimes against mankind. The misrepresentation of legal terms can lead to attributing political motives to those who murder, kidnap, threaten others with genocide, terrorize entire communities, or endanger the lives of children and old people to quench their hatred.

It might happen that those who are guilty of terrorism and drug trafficking could argue a supposed political posture in order to obtain their release and justify their behavior. The government does not allow loopholes in the concepts and practice of Ecuadoran law. If murder, genocide, extortion, kidnapping -- the most brutal crimes -- are involved, it is irrelevant for he who commits such crimes to argue supposedly political intentions. These will always constitute crimes against mankind and attacks against civilization and must be dealt with as such in the severe context of law.

I want to close this part of my speech with a categorical statement: The government will not permit the curtailing of our public forces' operating ability by using illegal mechanisms, such as undue amnesty or presumed pardon. Just as with human rights, the very noble sense of which is frequently laid aside and turned into a politicking move seeking the impunity of vice and extremism, this matter of amnesty cannot lend itself to misrepresentation or political nonsense. [applause and shouts]

The national government has contributed and will continue to contribute, as far as possible, to the fulfillment of the public force's very important duties. The public force has no right to resort to excesses in the use of recourses and instruments that society has put in its hands. At the same time, the public force must use all of the proper means for Ecuadoreans to be able to live in peace and check the progress of crime, both here and abroad. [shouts]

Once the electoral process concluded with an overall result that did not differ substantially from the 1984 congress, I made an appeal for the reunification of all Ecuadoreans for the good of the country and in the context of the struggle against the problem of the oil price drop, as well as for the preservation of the effort toward development. By itself, the initiative was not new. The purpose that I have mentioned has inspired my political activities. I felt, however, that it was necessary to stress because Ecuador faces a historically important crossroads. The country either progresses toward its own goals of good for all in a formidable and mass gesture of solidarity, or gets entangled in a broken course that will only bring grief for our people, whose improvement must be the sole obsession that we cannot refuse.

I hereby reiterate that nobody was asked or is being asked to give up his own convictions. No one has been asked to renounce his rights. It is proposed to everybody here, recognizing the ties of the Ecuadoran citizenship and a common duty toward the country. Let us work with fervor and in earnest for perfecting democracy, respect for the Constitution, and the progressive achievement of genuine development in liberty and justice.

My proposal has received several replies. I am sure that a large majority of citizens did it with patriotism, intuition, and nobility. Outstanding journalists, respectable statesmen, and some political leaders have given it their support. However, there have been other political leaders who interpreted it as a weakness and their replies were rude and harsh. They thought the time was right to start criticizing and to cast doubts on the way some state funds had been handled.

Every government has the duty to honestly handle funds that the taxpayers have contributed with great effort and sacrifice. Neither government officials nor workers should use one single cent for their own benefit. The present regime has a serious commitment because one of the main reasons why my fellow citizens honored me with the presidency of the Republic was my endless struggle in Congress -- and now from the Presidency -- against corruption, with arguments and evidence which were never refuted, with tangible proof that was never denied, in defense of the Ecuadoran people's interests and the community's ethical principles.

Unfortunately, it would be utopic to think that we can eliminate all crime and criminals. Therefore, the ethical principle of a regime cannot be measured by the fact that the hundreds of thousands of state workers are not committing one single irregularity. It can be measured by the fact that once an irregularity is reported, it is brought to the attention of the corresponding authorities, instead of keeping an accomplice silent, once it has been confirmed. However, I will insist on one thing, once the irregularity is confirmed: We cannot tamper with the honor of the people. Although, I feel that a person who steals money is immoral, I also think that a person who takes advantage of his fellow men's good will is more immoral. He should be prosecuted and punished according to the law. This is what I believe and this is how I will act. I think that as president of the Republic it is my duty to stress before you congressmen and to my fellow citizens, that whoever makes bad use of public funds, will be punished with all the weight of the law. Crimes that go unpunished are always subject to criticism, more so if it is a crime against the country's economic development.

The principle of functional division is part of the essence of Western democracy. It means independence and not confrontation. On the contrary, these functions are common in a sovereign government supported by the people, representing a state and seeking the community's welfare. The highest ideal is to have in a republican state an environment of respect and obedience of the law and for the citizens to comply with their specific duties. A state patriotically and efficiently doing its duties is a nation's highest progress.

It is the objective of the Executive Branch to obtain this cooperation under conditions already mentioned. This I sincerely express. Perhaps as never before, the very important task of legislating is very significant to try to remedy the difficult economic situation and not only overcome the most immediate problems the government is facing, but also those created by the world's economic policies. It is fundamental that we set aside partisan interests and face the situation with a pragmatic and realistic attitude and implement the suitable measures established by the constitution. If Congress complies with its indisputable right and duty of overseeing things, I wish it would do it with the utmost respect of the Constitution. Congress does not have the right to criticize because of discrepancies or because a majority has a different ideological view than the government official whose actions are being examined. Criticism cannot be done without full evidence that a government official has violated the law and that his action has affected the community by setting a bad example for society. If we just apply this simple rule of coexistence the situation throughout the country will be more positive and functional.

Legislators, you must be aware of the fact that the people are demanding what is commonly known as detente. The position that the government has deliberately adopted after much thought is not a temperamental or selfish act. It has been inspired by the people. The government has understood the message the people have sent to us; we know that the people are of a conciliatory mind and desire less confrontations and more understanding and cooperation.

After this report was written, the county was violently shaken by the revelation of certain negotiations that were being carried out unknown to the people, regarding national and local policies. I condemn, one and a thousand times, the interception of telephone conversations. I condemn, one and a thousand times, that peoples' privacy was invaded. However, these circumstances are of top importance and cannot hide another circumstance related to the deplorable level to which some citizens are trying to drag the political activity that -- in keeping with the science and art of the well-being of all -- should be the most noble of all human efforts.

It is legitimate, one and a thousand times legitimate, to aspire to the fulfillment of government tasks, as the highest opportunity the fatherland offers for us to serve it, and to serve the people's best causes. However, we must fulfill our difficult and even painful official duties in a clean, gentlemanly manner, by adhering to the rules of the democratic process. We cannot fulfill our duties by using foolish short cuts, or turning decisions that should bear the brilliance of patience and honesty into elements of negotiation, because these decisions should be just.

This date is the most important date on Ecuador's vital calendar. This date made Quito the inextinguishable light of America and should inspire and strengthen us. I am not ignorant of the singular drama of the moment but I am not frightened. Just as with individuals, peoples cannot be measured by their desire for comfort, luxury, or their love of the good life. They are measured and exalted by the thunder of the storm, the demand for sacrifice, the tremendous risk of challenge, the mortal war against all the enemies of the fatherland, their use of every honest means suggested by their bravery and wisdom to achieve victory. These are not the words of Leon Febres Cordero. These are the words and commitments our fellow patriots in Quito stamped on the document signed on 10 August 1809. But I feel them in an extraordinarily strong way because my own ancestors fought, suffered, and shed their blood so that the emancipation effort initiated in this very free city could be fully realized.

I know now that the fatherland's enemies are poverty, malnutrition, lies, and delinquency. I know well that we must achieve a new liberty: We must free ourselves of sickness, illiteracy, and the lack of communication. However, I am even more certain that with God's help, a patriotic cooperation with state duties, and my people, the Ecuadoran people's work, no obstacle whatsoever, no matter how threatening, will be capable of stopping our formidable motivation to achieve integral development and justice, gentlemen legislators.

PENAHERRA: NATION MAY FACE LARGEST DEPRESSION

[Text] In a report to Andres Vallejo, president of the National Congress, Vice President Blasco Penaherrera has stated that if there is not a worthy and lasting increase of petroleum revenues, the economic situation of the country will require the implementation of severe measures.

Regarding the implementation of the national plan for development between 10 August 1985 and 10 August 1986, Penaherrera said the enforcement of such measures will be impossible and will not have positive effects if the executive power does not have the support or the assent of the public power bodies, particularly the national congress.

Penaherrera warned that Ecuador is not only facing the possibility of the biggest economic depression in its history, but one that may not be merely incidental, but also long lasting.

CENTURION EXPLAINS EXCHANGE RATE INCREASE

PY122152 Asuncion HOY in Spanish 12 Aug 86 p 9

[Text] Pursuant to an agreement reached by our government with the IBRD (International Bank for Reconstruction and Development), there will be a 100-percent increase in the dollar exchange rate for disbursements of IBRD loans covering nearly 10 projects that are already under way. Hence, the exchange rate for local expenditures of these IBRD loans will be 320 guaranies per dollar. However, the Central Bank will disburse only 240 guaranies per dollar, and the Paraguayan Government will have to draw on its reserves to cover the 80-guarani difference.

Industry and Commerce Minister Delfin Ugarte Centurion yesterday made these remarks upon briefing the Economic Coordination Council on the agreement reached with the IBRD to resume loan disbursements that have been suspended since August 1985. The agreement reached with the IBRD will be in force until the end of this year, when the issue will again be studied. Thsi is a major increase over the previous rate of 160 guaranies per dollar.

Upon leaving Government Palace, Ugarte made the following remarks to newsmen accredited to the Presidency: "We have informed the president and the Economic Coordination Council of the agreement we reached with the IBRD that the exchange rate will be 240 guaranies per dollar and that disbursements for local expenditures will be based on the rate of 320 guaranies per dollar. Ths agreement will apply exclusively to those IBRD-financed projects that are now under way." Ugarte added: "This procedure will also be applied to IDB (Inter-American Development Bank)-financed projects that are under way. Thus, you may infer that our monetary exchange rate has not changed; it has remained unchanged, as I said earlier. We have also commented on the great interest expressed by Washington organizations in the economic reactivation project that is being studied by the appropriate government organizations."

Asked about the exchange rate that will be applied to future loans, Ugarte said: "For future loans, they will have to take into account our position. These negotiations were primarily designed to resume disbursements of those discontinued projects. Effective today, officials of these financial organizations will have to impart the appropriate instructions to make these disbursements so as not to jeopardize the timetable of our projects." Ugarte added that the agreement will be implemented immediately. "It has been agreed that they will have to take steps to update all disbursements for the implementation of projects under way in the country. As you know, these projects include roadbuilding, colonization, livestock, projects, etc."

This agreement has provided a temporary solution because the exchange rate has gone from 160 to 320 guaranies per dollar but it has not yet reached the 500 guaranies per dollar rate requested by the IBRD.

PLRA WANTS END TO EXILE, RESTORATION OF FREEDOMS

PY121433 Asuncion HOY in Spanish 10 Aug 86 p 4

[Document released by the Paraguayan Authentic Radical Liberal Party, PLRA, at the conclusion of a political rally held on 9 August in Horqueta, Concepcion Department]

[Text] At the end of the rally in Horqueta, a document was released that requests "that a definite date be set to end the unconditional participation of the Liberal and Radical Liberal Parties in the democratic process."

The document demands "the return of all exiles; the lifting of the state of siege; freedom of the press; the right to free assembly; the depoliticization of the Armed Forces, the police, and the public administration; the end of the compulsive contributions of public servants to the ruling party treasury; the approval of a new electoral law that gives broad guarantees for all political ideologies, and that all Paraguayan liberals refuse to participate in the 1988 elections if the incumbent's reelection is sought." The document was signed by 20 PLRA committees from throughout Paraguay.

NANDUTI OWNER ON ABC COLOR ANNIVERSARY

PY100128 Buenos Aires Domestic Service in Spanish 0200 GMT 9 Aug 86

[Relay from Asuncion Radio Nanduti by owner Humberto Rubin; date not given]

[Excerpt] This is a report for Buenos Aires Radio Nacional from Asuncion Radio Nanduti. Humberto Rubin is speaking.

Problems have marred another anniversary of the newspaper ABC COLOR. I say problems because it has been a rough day -- with telegrams that were not being sent because ANTELCO [National Administration of Telecommunications] refused to transmit them and with floral wreaths undelivered. With a mass at 1000 at the Metropolitan Cathedral, the 19th anniversary of the newspaper ABC COLOR was celebrated. That important independent newspaper was closed down just over 2 years ago.

Radio Nanduti read the headlines of the 16 issues that were published, the others... and as is already known, it has been closed down since 22 March 1984. [sentence as heard]

And I repeat, it has been a rough day, a tense day because politicians and friends who wanted to enter the newspaper's premises were stopped by police. At this time, Radio Nanduti is not suffering any type of interference, thanks I believe to the presence of Robert Gelbard, of the U.S. State Department. Nanduti is now able to prepare and offer its programs in an almost normal manner. There are not transmissions from abroad because I can only receive telephone calls. I cannot make telephone calls. [passage omitted]

FOREIGN MINISTRY EXPLAINS RECALL OF ENVOY TO GDR

[Text] Lima, 12 Aug (AFP) — It was officially reported tonight that the Peruvian Government has recalled its ambassador to the GDR and conveyed to the East German ambassador its strong protest for not having received the explanation it had requested about a cargo of smuggled arms from the GDR apparently intended for Callao, a Peruvian port.

The cargo in question was loaded in Rostock, GDR, on 5 May this year and was claimed to be trucks and spare parts for the trucks. However, when the Danish ship Pia Vesta that was carrying this cargo was intercepted in Balboa, Panama, on 14 June this year, the cargo was found to be 1,500 Kalashnikov rifles made in the Soviet Union, 1,500 RPG bazookas, ammunition, and trucks that could be put to military use.

The Peruvian Government, warned about the true contents of the cargo, alerted its Navy and ordered it to capture the ship. But the ship got only as far as the port of Salaverry, 550 km north of Lima. On 8 June it received orders to take to the high seas and set a course for Balboa.

In Panama, President Eric Delvalle, advised by his Peruvian counterpart Alan Garcia, stopped the Pia Vesta. The Panamanian authorities checked the smuggled cargo and seized the arms.

The Peruvian Government asked the GDR for information on this contraband and on 24 July, sent to the GDR Government a note asking for complete and detailed information on the shipment. The note stated that this operation, conducted by illegal arms traffickers, could affect Peruvian security. Therefore, the Peruvian Government looked forward to the indispensable cooperation and to maintain the cordial relationship between the two governments.

The Foreign Ministry stated that the response, which was received on 11 August, refers to the Pia Vesta's cargo, stating that it has to do with a commercial transaction between a foreign trade company in the GDR and a Swiss enterprise, and that it has been investigated to the extent that the state authorities can find out about commercial relations between enterprises.

In the note delivered to the GDR ambassador, the Peruvian Foreign Ministry states that this response is unacceptable because a GDR state-owned enterprise is involved and because of the irregular status of the documents covering the shipment.

The message, signed by Foreign Minister Alan Wagner, states: the GDR Government has the duty to answer our request and I must express the firm protest of the Peruvian Government because it has not received, despite all requests, the evidence and information that will allow it to find out whether GDR state companies are connected with this case of illegal weapons traffic, endangering Peruvian safety.

The message concludes by saying that it is the wish of the Peruvian Government to preserve the good and friendly relations that have always prevailed between our two countries, but it considers that this friendship demands a satisfactory reply by the GDR.

Meanwhile, a Peruvian Foreign Ministry official communique states that this case has been investigated by the Peruvian diplomatic missions in Panama, Denmark, France, Switzerland, and Uruguay, which made it possible to verify that some of the documents had been forged and that the companies involved do not exist.

This information so far obtained has been passed to the national prosecutor's office in order to punish those responsible for the crime, while the Foreign Ministry continues investigating through diplomatic channels to clear up the case and to find out if those responsible for it can be judged by international law, in order to take the appropriate measures, the communique states.

ECONOMY MINISTER: COUNTRY WILL NOT LEAVE IMF

[Excerpts] Lima, 11 Aug (EFE) -- Even if the IMF declares Peru "ineligible" to receive new loans, Alan Garcia's administration will not leave this international organization "because it is better to be in it than out of it."

This, in sum, is the position outlined by Prime and Economy Minister Luis Alva Castro, in the course of an interview that the weekly CARETAS published today. In this interview Alva Castro also stated that the IMF will receive only $35 million instead of the $180 million it was scheduled to receive. [passage omitted]

Alva Castro said that nevertheless Peru will continue as a member of the IMF "because it is better to work from the inside to make our position understood and make the organization think about it."

Alva insisted that the APRA [American Popular Revolutionary Alliance] is clearly willing to pay. "We are paying, but only as much as the country can afford. Furthermore, we are not even arguing the interest rates, we have accepted the ones that the IMF set for us."

The prime minister went on to say that the label "ineligible" would deprive Peru of new IMF loans, but it would have no effect on other loans that have been arranged with the World Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank for $800 and $600 million respectively.

On the recent agreement between the IMF and Mexico, Alva Castro stated that "it involves an explicit acceptance of a given economic policy" and reiterated that Peru has chosen a path that is "free and independent from any foreign directives."

FURTHER REPORT ON 'CONDOR' DRUG OPERATION

[Excerpts] Lima, 10 Aug (AFP) -- During a raid ordered by President Alan Garcia, some 300 military men and two squadrons of A-37 fighter-bombers and helicopters fitted with bombs and rockets destroyed two cocaine processing complexes and their airstrips in the heart of the Amazon, on the Colombian and Brazilian borders. Civic Guard Colonel Juan Zarate, who led the raid, today announced in Iquitos, the capital of the Loreto Department, where the operations base is located, that the "Condor IV" [as received] operation will continue against another 18 airstrips, 5 of which were being reconditioned by drug traffickers.

Col Zarate stated that in this true war against drug trafficking, a war that began successfully on 7 August with the detection of three airstrips -- two of which had to be destroyed by bombs yesterday because of the strong resistance offered by the criminals -- and their respective laboratories. Airborne troops took over the air strips and the laboratories, seizing 350 kg of cocaine base paste, chemicals, crushing equipment and other equipment.

The Air Force units were unable to bomb a third complex of Colombian and Peruvian drug traffickers because it is located near the Indian town of Ticuna, 8 km from Puerto Alegre, where 200 inhabitants mostly children, are settled. [passage omitted]

Col Zarate announced that this new phase of the "Condor" operations, which started shortly after the installation of the new government with the destruction of a dozen airstrips, modern laboratories, and the seizing of sophisticated weapons, will continue with the cooperation of Colombian authorities, until this scourge is eradicated from the region.

Zarate said that so far the operation has been highly successful. Despite a number of risks, the strong opposition of the drug traffickers, and the dangers of an inaccessible and swampy forest, barely 2 days of action sufficed to destroy those drug processing centers.

Thus far 18 clandestine airports have been discovered in the Amazonic trapezium where scarce police surveillance made large-scale drug activities possible. The area is inaccessible, inhospitable, full of animals, and lacking in resources necessary to get or stay there.

Zarate said that some 30 laboratories with their respective crushing pits were also discovered in the area and that out of 180,000 hectares of coca planations in the country, at least 70 percent are in the hands of the drug traffickers.

Given the shattering military attack, the drug traffickers chose to flee, abandoning some 25 indians who were hired as security guards. Large quantities of cocaine, ether bottles, generators, washing machines, drying machines, chemicals, arms and ammunition were seized.

At this moment there is an ongoing legal dispute to determine whether a civil or a military court will try Gen Rabanal. Nevertheless, while the Supreme Court deliberates which court will hear the case, the general was scheduled to appear before the judge, Supreme Court President Hector Beltran has stated. Gen Rabanal filed a petition with Judge Hernan Saturno stating that at the time of his summons he had to testify before the Supreme Council of Military Justice, which has also indicted him. For his part, Attorney General Cesar Elejalde's personal opinion is that the case involving the general is to be handled by the military courts. [passage omitted]

SHINING PATH KILLS 7 IN TINGO MARIA DISCOTEQUE

[Text] Tingo Maria, Peru, 9 Aug (AFP) -- Seven people were executed at a discoteque by alleged members of Shining Path and their remains thrown into the Huallaga River and a drain in the Aucayacu jungle area, located at 650 km east of Lima, according to the Peruvian police. According to the same source the killings, which took place on 6 and 7 August, were carried out by Maoist Shining Path hit squads. They took place in the heart of the virgin jungle area where the guerrilla organization has stepped up its activities after a short truce. The source noted that the people who were executed were four homosexuals, two drug addicts, and a prostitute.

On 6 August two drug addicts known as Sicar and Travolta were machine-gunned, and the next night four homosexuals and a prostitute were also killed. The remains of the two victims were placed in a mailbox and with a sign which read: This is how drug addicts and drug traffickers, who damage the minds of youths, die. The bodies of the other victims, whose identities were not disclosed, were thrown into the Huallaga River.

Police and Army troops, who have noted that the number of victims may be higher, have undertaken an operation to find the subversives, who are constantly perpetrating crimes in the region because of a lack of proper police protection, according to a settler in the region.

EDITORIAL: U.S. CANAL ARGUMENTS LOSING GROUND

[Editorial: "The Balloon Deflated"]

[Text] In the wake of sensational publications by the White House, State Department, Department of Defense, CIA, and DEA charging that General Manuel Antonio Noriega and his close friends are involved in, among other things, drug trafficking, money laundering, carrying out double espionage, selling arms, helping guerrillas, and assisting in the assassination of Dr Hugo Spadafora, certain groups have begun a campaign over Panamanian radio, press, and television. The campaign is hoped to convince the people that such publications stemmed from a well-orchestrated propaganda launched by Washington to prevent the return of the Canal to the Panamanians in the year 2000. This attempt had a false nationalistic mechanism and tried to locally minimize the impact of the charges presented by U.S. officials in publications abroad.

Senator Jesse Helms, president of the Senate Commission for Latin American Affairs [title as published], pointed out that he will oppose the transfer of the inter-oceanic Canal to a government dominated by a Mafia of drug traffickers.

First of all, there is no Panamanian, we repeat, no Panamanian who opposes the transfer of the Canal to the Republic of Panama in the year 2000. Several generations of Panamanians and many illustrious Panamanians have struggled to achieve that objective.

Second, to unmask the campaign unleashed by regime officials, the U.S. Government itself deflated their balloon. Last week President Ronald Reagan himself firmly and categorically said that the U.S. Government would transfer the Canal to the Republic of Panama on 1 January 2000 in keeping with commitments acquired with Panama. Meanwhile, Secretary of State George Shultz made a similar statement in Bogota.

The balloon was deflated -- what will they come up with now?

EL SALVADOR

INTERVIEW WITH FDR'S UNGO ON TALKS WITH GOVERNMENT

PA122250 San Salvador Radio Cadena Sonora in Spanish 1700 GMT 12 Aug 86

[Telephone interview with FDR President Guillermo Manuel Ungo in Panama by unidentified reporter -- live]

[Text] [Reporter] Good morning, Doctor. Cadena Sonora's microphones are at your disposal.

[Ungo] Good morning, [words indistinct]. I am pleased to address the Salvadorans by way of your broadcast. I am willing to answer any questions you may ask.

[Reporter] What are your views of the turn the third dialogue, or rather the preliminary talks in Mexico, is taking? The political parties here have different views. Some of them no longer believe in the dialogue, and others have different ideas and are suggesting methods for the realization of the meeting in Mexico. What do you think of the suggestions by various political parties, since they do not all agree?

[Ungo] There is the possibility of a preparatory meeting prior to the dialogue that is to be continued in El Salvador, and this preparatory meeting may take place in Mexican territory. There are strong indications that the Salvadoran Government is willing to continue the dialogue it interrupted for more than 20 months, more than 1 and 1/2 years. Only ultraright-wing parties such as ARENA [Nationalist Republican Alliance] have consistently rejected a dialogue as a way to resolve the country's basic need, which is the achievement of peace. In general terms, the rest of the political parties have been in favor of the dialogue and have even demanded a certain degree of participation, at least to be present during the development of the dialogue. I am referring to right-wing and center right-wing parties. Most of all, however, I would say that it is civilian society, Salvadoran society in general, through its labor, social, (?municipal), cultural, and religious organizations, that has insisted and has increasingly expressed itself in favor of the resumption of the dialogue, and it has also participated in the dialogue.

To [word indistinct] things at this time, I feel that in principle we have arrived at an agreement about holding a meeting in Mexican territory. The FDR proposed a concrete date to avoid treading on ambiguous ground regarding the terms established by Engineer Duarte, who proposed a date between 19 and 26 August. We have publicly proposed that the preparatory meeting begin on Wednesday, 20 August. Although it is assumed that the government agrees with this, the proposal has not yet been officially answered by the government through the mediators. Our proposal was made on 7 August, and to date we have not received a formal, favorable answer from the Salvadoran Government. We hope the answer will be favorable, because it will be difficult for the government to renege on its own words, promises, and offers. The government proposed the preparatory meeting in Mexico, which coincided with the position our fronts had expressed to the archbishop at the meeting in Perquin. Therefore, the two sides concur on this point, which allows us to foresee an agreement. I repeat, the government seems to make these proposals in the hope that we will reject them, and when we accept them it becomes befuddled and seeks ways to evade its own proposals.

Despite this, however, we feel that the preliminary meeting will be a positive step, but we will have to discuss the terms on which a meeting should take place in order for it to be a serious, fruitful dialogue, not a dialogue that will turn into a game of false appearances.

[Reporter] Suppose the government says yes, Dr Ungo, and the preliminary talks in Mexico take place. Who will represent you in Mexico?

[Ungo] We have not yet officially and publicly designated the people who will represent us. You must not forget that these preparatory meetings are private. This does not mean that they must take place behind the people's backs, but that once the agreement is made the people will be informed. The preliminary meetings will be to prepare the third meeting, so they will not involve substantial issues related to the problems, causes, and points that would lead to a political solution.

I believe our delegation will be of a level high enough to discuss procedural issues. The government has not yet announced the members of its delegation. It is clear that for the third meeting in El Salvador our delegation will be of the highest level in regard to the two fronts, that is, it will be formed by the commanders of the General Command, Commanders Leonel Gonzalez and Joaquin Villalobos, and the president and vice president of the FDR, who are yours truly and Companero Ruben Zamora. Duarte himself has said that he will be present, although he has not said who will accompany him.

Regarding the preparatory meeting, we are still awaiting a positive answer from the government before officially forming our delegation. But, I repeat, it will be formed by people known to all Salvadorans.

[Reporter] Doctor, if the preliminary meeting in Mexico succeeds, would you be willing to meet in San Miguel or San Francisco Gotera as the government would like?

[Ungo] We have been forced to discuss publicly some issues such as confirming that there may be an agreement regarding the preparatory meeting in Mexico. We feel that the mechanics that should be followed -- and we have fulfilled this during the time since the dialogue began in La Palma -- is that these issues should be discussed privately with the mediator, and once an agreement is reached it should be announced to the people, because if we do not do it this way it will seem as if we want to make the dialogue another instrument of guerrilla politics, an instrument of propaganda. This is what the government has done. For more than 2 years it has been talking about a dialogue that has not taken place. This is why we do not feel that it would be advantageous to inform the public of these issues until they have been finally decided. Once decided, we can clearly establish our position and the government's.

We published a communique in response to the propagandist and manipulatory campaign carried out by the presidential spokesman because we felt obliged to inform the people of the situation. In the communique we said that we made our own proposal, and we made important objections to Engineer Duarte's proposal, which at that time referred only to San Miguel and San Francisco Gotera and did not include Berlin. We objected for security reasons. We cannot be naive when not only our delegation's security but the security and feasibility of the dialogue are at stake; that is, the search for a political solution is at stake. It is very clear that in those areas the military commanders have not respected the agreements that the Salvadoran Government has made on various occasions.

Recently, when the archbishop visited Morazan, it was very clear that there was military (?action), although the archbishop had requested that the High Command refrain from military activity.

During the Christmas truce it was also evident that the commanders in the eastern part of the country not only did not comply with the truce, but publicly rejected the agreement. The commitments [words indistinct] the commander in chief of the Armed Forces, Engineer Duarte. There was military action and a lack of respect for the Christmas truce. When the trading of prisoners and wounded troops took place there were military actions in several areas, especially in the zones in question, which endangered the adequate fulfillment of the operation. Therefore, we cannot trust a president who everyone, not only in the country but abroad, knows is subordinated and limited. The president may have good intentions, because he is not the leading factor of power.

[Reporter] In one word, he does not have absolute power?

[Ungo] Exactly. He has very limited power, very little space, as he himself has said when he [words indistinct] postponed or rejected the possibility of resuming the dialogue. Therefore, we must look at the situation with a constructive spirit. At the meeting we will measure the government delegation's willingness to hold the dialogue within the country in accordance with the speech Engineer Duarte made on 1 June, and which has already been denied by the [words indistinct] because he said the dialogue could take place between the end of July and the beginning of August, but he never established a date.

[Reporter] Dr Ungo, precisely because of these disagreements and contradictions, those who phone this radio station sound discouraged. Every time I speak to you or Dr Zamora, I keep repeating the same questions posed by listeners from all social sectors. These people say they no longer believe in dialogue because of the many contradictions. Now, Doctor, it is no secret to anyone that it is the United States that manipulates the Central American policy. I think -- a listener, a professional told me this -- that if you, the people who represent the rebels, do not get in touch with the Americans, this is going to fail, because if the Americans do not want this to succeed, it will not, unless you consult the Americans. What can you tell us about this?

[Ungo] Well, this is a relative, not an absolute, truth. We really mistrust the government's posture and offers, yet we cannot reject them because of this. We must make all possible efforts to resume the dialogue. This is why we have proposed a meeting in Perquin. Now we expect to agree with the government on this preliminary meeting to discuss pratical aspects that sometimes prove to be an obstacle to the dialogue. We would discuss them in Mexico with an open, flexible, and constructive spirit, yet also free from any naivete. Regarding this, I feel the best way to give dialogue a better chance is the presence of and participation through the news media of the various social sectors, particularly those that are organized, such as those in institutions and professional, trade union, peasant, religious, and cultural associations, etc. The participation that they have been demanding was agreed upon in a joint communique issued at La Palma, when we said that it was the responsibility of the two sides to seek the mechanisms, methods, and ways for the various social sectors to participate in the search for a political solution. We feel that this would be the best contribution for the dialogue to be serious and consistent and not become a tactic by the parties.

Now, regarding the United States, as you would surely remember, since the beginning, in 1981, I said something in this regard. I said it was necessary to talk to the owners of the circus. We still feel that way. Unfortunately, the strategy of the U.S. Administration headed by Reagan opposes dialogue.

[Reporter] You people have not yet talked to the circus owners?

[Ungo] Not yet, because they do not want to. They seek all possible ways to increase tension in the region, and they know perfectly well that dialogue would cause detente. This is why they reject dialogue, although they speak in favor of it. This is why we have seen the dialogue with Nicaragua interrupted at Manzanillo and their permanent sabotage through their special envoys, such as Stone, Shlaudeman, and Habib, in the area, precisely to sabotage the Contadora dialogue. They are not really interested in dialogue in El Salvador, but in a military solution.

We must keep insisting on looking for ways to talk, as that professional said, with the U.S. Government. We continue to be open to talks. Once in a while we have been able to talk to some leaders in some countries. But it is not their policy to find out exactly what we think and which common points we have and where we disagree. Now we can only speculate, a very ideological speculation, and in disagreement with reality. There is still another way to talk with the Reagan government: through the Salvadoran social sectors. This is to say, the people are more and more aware that it is the main factor of power in our national life, an external factor that unfortunately has intervened in the country. This could generate a feeling of powerlessness, but also a greater awareness so that this foreign power understands that local power, social factors, and the society at large want a national solution of their own. This is the only thing that could change the U.S. policy.

Let us keep in mind that this is what happened in the Philippines and Haiti. Americans gladly dealt with dictators Marcos and Duvalier, had much business with them, supported them, and felt this was a great way to defend their interests -- security, national, and hegemonic. Nevertheless, when the Haitian and Philippine peoples stood up, the U.S. Government headed by Reagan understood that it could not swim against the tide. It had to accept this reality and try not to be affected negatively by such a new reality. It had to adjust to this new reality and even try to influence this new reality. This is why we can make Reagan see that, to the extent that his policy is completely unpopular in all social, economic, and political sectors, the U.S. Administration will defeat its own objectives and will have to adjust to a new policy.

[Ungo] No, I did not attend Prsident Virgilio Barco's inauguration, so I was not in Bogota and, consequently, did not meet with Duarte.

[Reporter] Do you contact him by telephone?

[Ungo] No. He speaks much about dialogue but keeps avoiding it.

[Reporter] Thank you, Dr Ungo, for this interview for Cadena Sonora.

[Ungo] Roberto, I thank you and this radio station for this opportunity to address the Salvadoran people, because the Duarte government does not offer too many opportunities for such a dialogue and necessary and basic political contact, one of the fundamental liberties of the Salvadoran people. This opportunity has helped us clarify our position and address the positive and negative sides of the resumption of dialogue.

NICARAGUANS ACCUSED OF 'MANIPULATING' OPINION

[Text] Tegucigalpa, 11 Aug (AFP) -- The Honduran Armed Forces today asserted that several "terrorists who are paid by communists" are working as journalists in this country. The Honduran Foreign Secretariat has said that the Nicaraguan Embassy in Tegucigalpa "manipulates" Honduran opinion sectors.

In a publication called MILITARY PROJECTIONS, the Armed Forces' Public Relations Directorate -- without citing evidence or names -- has said that some "terrorist" journalists are graduates of the Honduran Autonomous University and are "trained by the communist cadres established by leftists."

The publication continues: "We must add to this the multiplying effect that results from the commercial fodder that certain communists and leftist leaders offer to the journalists who are not ideologically theirs" but whom they buy.

The publication asserts: Thousands of guerrillas specialized in subversion, including "terrorist journalists who have succeeded in attaining leading posts in the country's most important news media," are graduates of the Patriceo Lumumba Soviet university.

To this accusation, another by the Foreign Secretariat was added today, saying that the Nicaraguan Embassy "manipulates Honduran public opinion sectors" to improve its country's standing in the issue against Honduras presented at The Hague. Honduras is being accused of permitting the operations of anti-Sandinist counterrevolutionaries.

According to a communique disseminated today, the accusation is based on "reliable information" received by the Foreign Secretariat that "a diplomatic mission with direct interest in the matter" is currently promoting Hondurans taking a position favorable to the demand.

The Foreign Secretariat added that the "manipulations take place in the shelter of the unrestricted freedom of the press that the Honduran Government guarantees." The communique also asserted that "agents of the interested mission have been manipulating Honduran public opinion against the approval of the maritime delimitation treaty signed with Colombia last week. [quotation marks as received]

Through this treaty, Colombia ratifies its sovereignty over the San Andres and Providencia Islands, claimed by the Sandinist government since 1979.

Several deputies, politicians, and labor leaders have opposed the treaty, claiming it violates the Constitution because it cedes to Colombia three-fourths of Serranilla Cay, historically claimed by Honduras. The Congress has not yet ratified the treaty.

D'ESCOTO CALLS U.S. 'BANDIT' ON ICJ RULING

PA120337 Managua Sistema Sandinista Television Network in Spanish 0200 GMT 11 Aug 86

[Text] Foreign Minister Father Miguel D'Escoto Brockman today described the United States as a bandit for not abiding by the ruling fo the International Court of Justice, which called for an end to U.S. aid to mercenary groups attacking Nicaragua.

Father D'Escoto told a national newscast that the international community must insist that the United States respect and fulfill its international commitments.

He also said that the Contadora Group continues to carry out the most noble effort in Latin America in the name of the principle of nonintervention. D'Escoto said in conclusion that the United States is pressuring Central American countries not to sign the peace document presented by that group.

PSD CRITICIZES ORTEGA'S 'CHICAGO PROPOSAL'

[Text] Managua, 11 Aug (DPA) -- The opposition Social Democratic Party (PSD) today issued a statement criticizing the "Chicago Proposal" made by President Daniel Ortega, saying that it is not enough to achieve a political solution to the "serious crisis that is burdening" Nicaragua.

The PSD said that the "Chicago Proposal," proposes talks with the U.S. Government, which is supporting the anti-Sandinist forces who are trying to topple the Sandinist regime in Managua, and because of this the internal forces in Nicaragua do not agree with the proposal.

The statement adds that the Sandinist proposal, which was presented to the White House a few days ago by the Nicaraguan ambassador in Washington, "deliberately omits a national dialogue, which has so often been demanded by the Nicaraguans," making the Sandinist initiative somewhat "sterile and demagogic."

The statement, said that a "national dialogue," which "would achieve Nicaragua's internal democratization, would automatically lead to peace and reconciliation among the Central American peoples and governments. [quotation marks as received]

PLI CONGRESS MEETS, REELECTS GODOY PRESIDENT

PA122259 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1930 GMT 11 Aug 86

[Excerpts] Virgilio Godoy has been reelected president of the Independent Liberal Party [PLI]. However, the party congress did not approve the idea of a maximum leader.

This statement was made to this radio station by Eduardo Coronado, a candidate for the presidency of the PLI. Coronado, a candidate who opposed Godoy, said that during yesterday's meeting very serious decision were made regarding the party's strategy, and the national leaders were chosen. However, Coronado said that some of the main issues, like the one regarding the constitutional debates, were not discussed. This means that the party's position expressed in October 1985, which calls for the party to refrain from attending the debates, remains valid. The PLI has stated that it will refrain from attending the debate so long as the state of emergency is not abolished. [passage omitted]

[Begin recording] [Coronado] The elections were held democratically. Candidates were presented, and the vote of the majority decides the winner. Yesterday's election was very important. We chose our authorities. I was the candidate running against Godoy, but his ticket was the winner. We must respect the decision of the majority, because we are a democratic party, and continue in the struggle to democratize Nicaragua and in the search for peace and ways to unite the Nicaraguan people. [passage omitted]

[Reporter] Now that the situation has changed, now that the United States had declared war on Nicaragua -- through the U.S. Congress' approval of the $100 million in aid to the contras -- will you change your position and admit that the state of emergency is necessary?

[Coronado] I believe we should attend the debates, but this attendence should be conditioned to some minimum requirements. Perhaps this attendance could help create some laws that will soften restraining measures and allow the political parties to develop more suitably. Currently the political parties are being restrained by a strait jacket because of the approval of the $100 million, which means an increase in the actions of the counterrevolution. It is quite normal that measures should be adopted to counteract this action, but these should not be restraining measures, especially for political parties. [passage omitted] [end recording]

CUBA TO ATTEND PAN-AMERICAN GAMES IN INDIANAPOLIS

[Text] Cuba will ask to be the site of the Pan-American games in 1991 and will send a delegation to the games to be held in 1987 in Indianapolis. This was reported here by Conrado Martinez Corona, president of the National Institute of Sports.

Cuba's decision to host the games in 1991 and to attend the 1987 games is in keeping with the proposals put forth by ODEPA, the Pan-American Sports Organization, in a message to Manuel Gonzalez Guerra, president of the Cuban Olympic Committee.

The document asserts that when granting the site of the 1987 games to the United States, ODEPA never intended to offend Cuba's sports entities or its athletes and officials. It behooved Chile to organize these continental games, but it declined to host them, as did Ecuador, which was the alternate.

The president of OPEDA, Mexican (Mario Vasquez Rana), had promised that they would be ceded to Cuba but, in a surprise move, the 1987 Pan-American Games were assigned to the United States in November 1984.

In its message to Gonzalez Guerra, ODEPA asserts that it would be pleased to see Cuba host the games in 1991 and attend the 1987 games. The Cuban sports system has responded in the affirmative to these requests.

COMMENTARY: GATT MEETING FAILURE 'SEEMS CERTAIN'

["Viewpoint" commentary, read by Angel Hernandez]

[Text] Ever since the capitalist system rose from the ashes of feudal aristocracy, commerical contradictions have underpinned relations among the so-called free enterprise countries. The development of the system and its change into imperialism, far from lessening commerical conflicts, has deepened and expanded them. If, initially, contradictions among capitalists were seen only in several products, at present, and practically in all areas, bargaining, tariff give and take, and disputes over markets, state subsidies, and hundreds of schemes and ruses prevail. However, the interrelationship of the economy in today's world is such that the exchange of blows among the imperialistic potentates has negative repercussions on the underdeveloped nations, which, in addition, are the victims of the transnational companies' shameless search for profits.

Protectionism, high tariffs, reduction of import quotas in the large capitalist markets, the low prices for the raw materials the Third World exports, interest rates, and the foreign debt constitute fundamental factors in the increase of poverty and growing deterioration of the crisis in poor countries. These topics are once again news on the occasion of the meeting which GATT members will hold in Uruguay in September. According to forecasts by distinguished experts, this meeting will be more than a new round of clashes among the United States, Western Europe, and Japan, because if the meeting fails it will cause an international trade war.

According to Uruguayan Foreign Minister Enrique Iglesias, the meeting's major problem will be agricultural production and its exchange. In addition to the regions already mentioned, great producers from other continents are involved. The major aspects of this topic will involve protectionism and agricultural subsidies, practices which have become the norm in the United States and Western Europe. For example, sugar, wheat, and rice are the object of these practices, which greatly affect the Third World.

The failure of the meeting seems certain, if we consider that amid new threats by Washington and the so-called EEC to mutually harm each other regarding a high number of agricultural products, Argentine Ambassador to the GATT (Leopoldo Setamanti) accused the major powers of having caused the failure of the preparatory committee meeting held on Thursday in Geneva. No truly important document was approved then. Before the GATT meeting, there will be a meeting at the ministerial level among the agricultural producers of the Southern Hemisphere to draft a joint stance vis-a-vis the EEC and the United States. (Leopoldo Setamanti) could not have been clearer when he told a French news agency a few days ago that if the GATT does not reach any agreement during the Uruguay conference in September, it would have signed its death sentence.

HOYTE MAKES CHANGES IN TIES WITH U.S., USSR

[Text] Georgetown, 9 Aug (AFP) -- Guyana's relations with the United States and the USSR have seen a substantial change in the last few months as a result of the foreign policy of Desmond Hoyte, Forbes Burham's successor.

Among the first results are the importation of 28,000 tons of wheat flour from the United States at a cost of $3 million, a U.S. offer of $1.7 million to develop agricultural programs, and the establishment of a Soviet commercial office in this capital instead of just a commercial attache.

After signing the flour agreement, the U.S. Embassy emphasized the benefits "of President Hoyte's measures, which have produced a better balance in foreign policy and an end to anti-American rhetoric. The measures have also allowed the public sector to be more efficient, and they have allowed for an increase in public and private investments as well as for the development of relations with the United States and its neighbors in the Caribbean and Latin America." U.S. economic aid was suspended in September 1982 during Burnham's government.

Moreover, the Soviet Embassy in this capital said that with regard to the establishment of a commmercial office, the Guyanese Government could do the same in Moscow.

ALFONSIN TO VISIT U.S., CANADA, SOVIET UNION

PY132141 Buenos Aires TELAM in Spanish 1107 GMT 13 Aug 86

[Text] Buenos Aires, 13 Aug (TELAM) -- LA NACION today reported that according to government sources President Raul Alfonsin will visit the United States again next November on an official tour that will also include a 3-day visit to Canada.

The daily did not give the dates of the visits, but the sources indicated that the visit to the United States will be made reportedly to visit five or six U.S. cities in answer to invitations from several U.S. universities.

The report also indicates that there is the possibility that President Alfonsin may contact high-level Washington officials, including President Ronald Reagan.

According to the newspaper this trip would be justified in the face of the U.S. subsidies for its grain exports to the Soviet Union and the PRC and the funds approved to help the contras in Nicaragua, which is heating up the situation in Central America.

LA NACION reports that Alfonsin will visit Montreal and Ottawa, where he will meet with Prime Minister Brian Mulroney.

LA NACION also added that Alfonsin will visit the Soviet Union from 12 to 19 October and that the sources also indicated the possibility that during this tour Alfonsin could make a brief stop in Poland and perhaps Sweden after the Moscow visit.

PRESIDENT TO ATTEND ZIMBABWE NONALIGNED MEETING

PY132335 Buenos Aires DYN in Spanish 1237 GMT 12 Aug 86

[Text] Buenos Aires, 12 Aug (DYN) -- Reliable sources have noted that President Raul Alfonsin will attend on 30 August the meeting of the Nonaligned Movement in Harare, Zimbabwe, because the government is interested in actively participating in the Nonaligned Movement.

In principle Alfonsin is scheduled to visit only Zimbabwe where he will stay for "a couple of days," and where he will deliver a speech. After this he will return to Buenos Aires, but he might visit another country.

According to the same sources, Alfonsin has been offered the presidency of the Nonaligned Movement. The offer was made by Yugoslavia and Brazil because the term of the present president, India's Rajiv Gandhi, ends this year.

It was also noted that President Alfonsin rejected the offer mainly because of what he believes is the "precarious condition" of the Argentine foreign service.

The same sources added that if Alfonsin presides over the Nonaligned Movement, the Foreign Ministry would have to virtually double its work abroad because about 100 Argentine embassies would automatically become the headquarters of the Nonaligned Movement and would have to look after its operations in the various member-countries and to set up a structure, which, because of the present budget cuts, cannot be established.

The sources noted that despite Alfonsin's refusal, Argentina's interest in the movement remains intact and that the recent statements and positions upheld by Alfonsin in the Group of Six meeting and regarding the Central American situation shows that the Radical Civic Union [UCR] administration has not undergone a change in favor of the United States. It is still striving to maintain a distance from the two superpowers, despite the fact that it identifies itself with the Western nations.

FOREIGN MINISTRY DENIES ARMS SALES TO S. AFRICA

[Text] Buenos Aires, 13 Aug (NA) -- The Argentine Foreign Ministry today rejected reports that Argentina is planning to sell arms to South Africa. According to the ministry, these reports "are totally groundless" and designed to "sow discord" among countries opposing the Pretoria regime's policy of racial discrimination.

The Foreign Ministry released a communique this afternoon rejecting an article published in the Brazilian newspaper FOLHA DE SAO PAULO on Sunday, 10 August. This report, which had been picked up by Argentine news media, stated that the Argentine Government is planning to sell 27 Mirage fighter planes to South Africa. The text of the communique follows:

The Argentine Foreign Ministry wishes to make it clear that the remarks about the military materiel which the Argentine Government is planning to sell to South Africa included in an article by Roberto Lopez entitled "Sale of 27 Mirages to South Africa" and which appeared in the newspaper FOLHA DE SAO PAULO on Sunday, 10 August, are totally groundless.

Thus, the reports that various national and foreign news media carried on the article, are hereby denied.

Argentina severed diplomatic relations with South Africa on 22 May and has been strictly complying with the arms embargo established by the UN Security Council.

The disseminated reports have no other explanation than the existence of sectors which seek to sow discord among countries that, like Argentina, actively oppose racial discrimination and support the struggle of the African people against apartheid.

LAW GRANTS LAND FOR NEW FEDERAL DISTRICT

[Text] Buenos Aires, 12 Aug (TELAM) -- Rio Negro Province Governor Osvaldo Alvarez Guerrero tonight handed over to President Raul Alfonsin a copy of Law 2086, according to which a 300,000-hectare tract of land is granted to the nation, to found the new federal district.

This announcement was made by Alvarez Guerrero at the conclusion of a meeting in which Alfonsin expressed his gratitude for the enactment of the law, which will pave the way for the solution expected by all of us.

The Rio Negro governor described this as a historical event, an important starting point from the legal viewpoint for all Argentines.

SODRE ON INFORMATICS; SALMORIA WARNS U.S.

PY131724 Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 12 Aug 86 p 24

[Text] Brasilia -- Foreign Minister Abreu Sodre yesterday again caused concern among the defenders of the reserved informatics market. In a report broadcast over Radio Nacional, he said that "Presidents Jose Sarney and Ronald Reagan will sign a cooperation treaty in September on informatics." Sodre made this statement on 9 August in Terezina but contradicted himself yesterday afternoon after realizing the concern that he had caused at Planalto Palace and at the Science and technology Ministry. According to diplomatic sources, the foreign minister has confused the act, which is normally signed at the end of all talks, with a treaty.

Correcting himself, Sodre stated Sarney and Reagan will talk about informatics only if the subject has already been completed at the round of technical talks held in Geneva, Caracas, and Paris by delegations of the two countries. He expects that 20 percent of the still-to-be-discussed issues will be settled at the Paris meeting.

"I am optimistic about the final result. I believe that after the doubts raised by the United States, the number of controversial subjects have been reduced considerably, with the possibility of reaching a satisfactory result," Sodre stated. However, he added that in case he is mistaken, there will be a third round of talks at the technical level preceding President Sarney's visit to the United States on 10 September.

In a speech delivered in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday, Deputy Odilson Salmoria [PMDB, Santa Catarina State] warned the U.S. Administration that an "authoritarian" U.S. action toward the Brazilian informatics law could cause the resurgence in Brazil of "an anti-American feeling that would have very bad consequences, not only in trade relations but also in political relations between the two countries." The deputy, who is one of the main defenders in the Chamber of Deputies of the reserve market, referred in his speech to the round of talks that began yesterday in Paris between Brazilian and U.S. representatives on this matter.

GOVERNMENT CONDEMNS SOUTH AFRICAN ATTACK

[Text] In an official note released by Itamaraty, the Brazilian Government today condemned the military attack launched last weekend by South Africa against an Angolan military base in the Cuito Cuanavale region. The Brazilian Government repudiates this repeated aggressive action and expresses its solidarity with the Angolan Government and with all the victims of the South African aggressions.

PRESS PROHIBITED ON MILITARY TESTING GROUND

PY132114 Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 12 Aug 86 p 5

[Text] Ruben Bayma Denys, chief of the military household, yesterday said in Brasilia that there is no chance that the press will be allowed to enter the Serra do Cachimbo testing ground.

He added: "That is a military base, it will not be opened." Presidential Spokesman Fernando Cesar Mesquita said that "the Planalto Palace is not commenting on this issue."

Therefore, the PT [Workers Party] is going to submit a request to the Armed Forces General Staff (EMFA) for a special congressional inspection of the military base in Serra do Cachimbo. PT leader Deputy Luis Dulci (Minas Gerais) stated that the PT only wants the opinion of a group of nuclear physicists regarding the information published by FOLHA, which stated that the underground installations may be used for nuclear testing.

Deputy Amaral Netto (Rio de Janeiro), leader of the PDS [Social Democratic Party] stated that he supports any congressional initiative to clarify the real objectives of the installations built in Serra do Cachimbo. However, he is not going to ask for a visit or summon the ministers for explanations because he does not expect the request to be approved by the Chamber of Deputies. He added: "Ulysses (Chamber President Ulysses Guimaraes) would not approve it."

PT Deputy Irma Passoni (Sao Paulo) on 8 August announced that she is going to summon Mines and Energy Minister Aureliano Chaves and EMFA Chief Admiral Maria do Amaral. PT Deputy Jose Genoino (Sao Paulo) also plans to summon Science and Technology Minister Renato Archer.

Rio de Janeiro Prefect Saturnino Braga of the PDT [Democratic Worker's Party] said yesterday in Rio de Janeiro that "if the Serra do Cachimbo military installations are intended for nuclear testing, the society as a whole must make the final decision, because experiments with nuclear energy involve serious risks for the population."

Organizations linked to ecology and organizations such as the Lions and Rotary Clubs have called for a meeting at 0900 on 13 August in a hall of the Mato Grosso Legislative Assembly in Cuiaba to discuss the information published by FOLHA.

URUGUAYAN PRESIDENT DISCUSSES POLITICAL ISSUES

PY130328 Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 11 Aug 86 p 3

[By Antonio Jorge Moura and Linalva Maria]

[Text] Salvador -- Uruguayan President Julio Sanguinetti, who today will start the official part of his visit to Brazil, supports President Jose Sarney's proposal to establish a demilitarized peace zone in the South Atlantic. Brazil will submit this proposal at the United Nations in September.

President Julio Sanguinetti revealed his country's position yesterday during an exclusive interview granted to O GLOBO and to the program "Good Morning Bahia," broadcast by Aratu TV station. According to Julio Sanguinetti; President Sarney and Argentine President Raul Alfonsin discussed this proposal in Buenos Aires.

I totally support the idea, and I look upon the South Atlantic issue from two points of view. The first is Brazil's political and military proposal to create a demilitarized zone. The second is fishing, the Uruguayan president said.

President Sanguinetti added that Sarney's proposal "is very important, but it poses a very serious poblem that has to be resolved, namely South Africa."

He said: This problem, however, does not preclude further development of the idea.

Sanguinetti went on to say that the fishing problem is a consequence of the Malvinas war. "There is a chaotic situation in the South Atlantic. Fishing resources are being plundered, and small and large world fishing powers, like Japan, Korea, and the Soviet Union, are carrying out indiscriminate fishing."

Sanguinetti said that he will not change his agenda in Brazil. Two events scheduled to take place in Montevideo today at the same time but in different places, are drawing public attention in his country. They are the special meeting of the Military Club to confirm the position of the Uruguayan Armed Forces against trials for crimes committed during the previous regime, and the "banging of pots" organized by the left wing Broad Front demanding punishment for those guilty of these very same crimes.

The Uruguayan president downplayed both events and added that in his country there are going to be many other simultaneous gatherings "prompted by marriages, soccer games, meetings of neighborhood associations and so forth." However, members of the president's entourage indicated that Sanguinetti is being kept constantly informed of what is happening, particularly in the military area. The call for a special meeting of the Military Club prompted the Uruguayan defense minister to order the arrest of two Army colonels.

Sanguinetti talked about the situation in Brazil, Argentina, and Uruguay, three countries on the road to democracy after long periods of military rule. In his opinion, these three countries of the South Atlantic region emerged from dictatorships at almost the same time, although the circumstances prevailing in each case were different.

Sanguinetti noted that "Argentina got rid of the dictatorship through the suicide of the military regime, which involved itself in the Malvinas war. Brazil got rid of the dictatorship by achieving a solution within the regulations of the military system. Uruguay got rid of the dictatorship through an agreement between the political and the military forces to call direct presidential elections."

In Sanguinetti's opinion, Brazil thus far has an unstable political party situation. "Nevertheless, I believe that the parties will become stable in the course of time. In Uruguay, both the Colorado Party and the Blanco Party are historic parties and for that very reason they are flexible and not dogmatic. Both parties act in a center position with sectors of the left and of the right. The prevalence of the center permits stability," Sanguinetti said.

Sanguinetti also expressed his concern over the Central American issue. Uruguay, along with Brazil, supports the Contadora Group efforts to achieve a political -- not military -- way out of the Central American conflict. Nevertheless, Sanguinetti emphasized this is difficult and sometimes frustrating because final peace has not been achieved yet.

He added: "It is time to think of an alternative because if the Contadora Group fails then Central America would no doubt face a war with great losses."

Concerning the resumption of diplomatic ties between Brazil and Cuba, which is also the case with Uruguay, Sanguinetti said: "We respect the people's self-determination principle and we demand that our right to self-determination be respected. We respect the nonintervention principle. We maintain relations with right-wing and left-wing regimes. We praise peaceful coexistence."

The wise tone that President Julio Sanguinetti gave to his statements on politics and economics gave rise to a comment during the 15-minute interview held yesterday shortly before the Uruguayan presidential entourage left the hotel where it was staying, on Itapua Beach, to visit the Model Market.

A journalist of the TV Aratu television station noted: "Sir, you have proven that you are a wise man."

President Sanguinetti replied: "He who is not patient cannot be a politician."

[Excerpt] Dr Juan Giaconi Galdolfi was installed this afternoon as the new health minister, replacing Winston Chinchon. The ceremony which was held in La Moneda Palace lasted approximately 20 minutes and was conducted by President Augusto Pinochet. All ministers and government officials attended the ceremony.

After installing the new minister, President Pinochet thanked the outgoing minister for his performance and referred to his achievements in the health sector, calling on Chileans to appreciate these achievements. He also urged Chileans not to let themselves be dragged by malicious criticism into deepening conflicts that favor political chicanery.

[Begin Pinochet recording] We have witnessed an infamous campaign aimed at distorting our real situation. Those who talk about bad health services in Chile do so because they do not see the difference between the health of the population and medical attention. [passage indistinct] and restrictions imposed by the harsh economic situation have created obstacles and have not allowed the government to reach its goals in the area of medical attention. MORE ARMS FOUND; SOVIET IMPERIALISM BLAMED

[Relay by Rosa Sanchez, from La Moneda Palace]

[Text] Eighteen people are under arrest at the CNI [National Intelligence Center] facilities in connection with the discovery of a huge arsenal near Vallenar, in the 3d Region. This information is included in a communique that National Social Communications Directorate head Marcelo Venegas has just released here at La Moneda Palace.

The communique states: In connection with the terrorist facilities discovered a few days ago in Carrizal Bajo in the 3d Region, the security personnel who are conducting the investigation into this subversive activity have discovered another arms cache in the area. The newly found cache contained 56 U.S.-made automatic M-16 rifles. The security personnel are continuing their investigations in the area. The possibility of finding more arms and equipment has not yet been ruled out.

Eighteen people are under arrest at the CNI facilities in connection with investigations into this crime. Six of the detainees are being held in Santiago, and the remaining 12 in La Serena.

Venegas also released the list of the 18 arrested persons: Enrique Ayala Alvarez; Carolina Diaz Jantzen; Malva Medina Hernandez; Hector Manuel Miranda Cuevas; Mabel Roberto Rivera; Patricio Stange Espinola; Nelson Ascensio Pardo; Alex Castro (Cadi); Jorge Concha Gonzalez; Pablo Flores Castillo; (Doris Cartes Barrios); Mauricio Gomez (Roger); Carlos Manzano (Biolgo): Alfredo (Malbrith Baltra); Juan de Dios Marques Miranda; Italo (Moya Escanilla); Rafael Pascual Arias; and (Mardoceo Saavedra Silva). This list includes the six persons who were arrested near Vallenar when the first arsenal was discovered.

Minister Secretary General of Government Francisco Javier Cuadra then told journalists that the government is planning to report the discovery of the huge arsenal near Vallenar to international organizations. Cuadra explained that Chile will not only officially denounce the action, but it will also ask the rest of the world to assess this intervention by Soviet imperialism, which is trying to undermine the foundations of Chilean society. He added that the main agenda items at this morning's cabinet meeting, which was presided over by President Pinochet, were the discovery of the arsenal and its implications.

Further Details on Arrests

[Excerpts] Santiago, 12 Aug (EFE) -- Six people were arrested early this morning by the Chilean political police for their alleged connection with the arsenal of the armed opposition Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front (FPMR) group. [passage omitted] The people arrested today in Santiago for alleged links with the arms case have been identified as Dr Patricia Stange Espinola, Carolina Diaz Jantzen, Victor Manuel Miranda Cuevas, Malva Medina Hernandez, Mabel Roberto Rivera, and Carolina Duran Ramirez.

The Vicariate of Solidarity of the Santiago Archbishopric today submitted a request for an injunction on behalf of the people arrested in this case, in addition to six people whose houses were raided but who were not found. [passage omitted]

Admiral Merino today said during a press conference that the arms, most of them U.S.-made and second-hand (as in the case of the M-16 rifles), were probably "taken by the Vietnamese during the Vietnam war and then taken to the Soviet Union, and from there distributed through Libya and Cuba."

According to reports released by the CNI, the arsenal discovered in Carrizal Bajo had as its final destination the FPMR groups in Santiago, Concepcion, and Temuco. Concepcion and Temuco are located 500 and 700 km south of Santiago, respectively. The CNI also reported that a connection could be established between the Movement of the Revolutionary Left (MIR) and the FPMR. The MIR overseas organization reportedly is conducting a campaign to obtain funds and weapons for the use of the FPMR in Chile.

6 Suspects Released

PY150257 Santiago Radio Chilena in Spanish 2300 GMT 13 Aug 86

[Text] The Government Social Communications Agency [Dinacos] has just reported that six of the people who had been arrested in Santiago in connection with the arms cache found in the Carrizal Bajo area in the 3d Region were released today at noon. Their names are Dr Patricia Estange Espinola, Enrique Ayala Alvarez, Carolina Diaz Jansen, Malva Medina Hernandez, Victor Miranda Cuevas, and Mabel Roberts Riveras. They had all been arrested by CNI agents between the night of 11 August and the morning of 12 August and remained under arrest in the CNI headquarters on (Gorgogno) Street.

Cuadra Comments on Cache

[Excerpts] The government will denounce in international forums the action of Soviet imperialism in our country. This action was discovered when a subversive arms cache was found in the 3d Region. The government has likewise adopted several confidential, preventive measures to preserve the safety of institutional order, citizens, and private property in view of this terrorist threat. This information was provided by Minister Secretary General of Government Francisco Cuadra, who held a press conference after the cabinet change today. He spoke to reporters about the cabinet meeting the president had held in La Moneda Palace. [passage omitted]

Minister Cuadra said that the main subject discussed at the meeting was the characteristics and consequences of the arms cache found by CNI in the 3d Region.

[Begin recording] From the political point of view, it is important to note the amount, quality, and the technological state of the seized arms and communications equipment. This proves what has been said repeatedly by the government, that terrorist groups acting in the country receive financial and administrative support, as well as military training, from other groups operating abroad. These groups have their instruction centers in the Soviet Union and in the socialist orbit countries which have defended terrorist actions in the West as a form of political expression.

Regarding this case, it is important to understand that there is enough evidence to prove that there is a connection between this highly [word indistinct] arms cache and the operations undertaken by Soviet agents and by agents trained in Cuba and Nicaragua.

In fact, some of the arrested individuals have received training in Cuba. [end recording] [passage omitted]

Generals React to Find

PY130302 [Editorial Report] Santiago Domestic Service in Spanish during its 2300 GMT newscast on 12 August carries reactions of some generals on the arms cache discovered near Carrizal Bajo in the 3d Region, in northern Chile.

Chilean Investigations Police Chief General Fernando Paredes has said that the arms cache found in the 3d Region is similar to the one found in La Larada beach, in southern Peru near the border with Chile. That cache was meant for the Shining Path terrorist group, he said.

He added that this demonstrates that the Soviets are trying to infiltrate our government and that of other countries because that is their doctrine, regardless of whether people are harmed as long as Marxism is introduced. The Soviets help Peruvian terrorist groups like the Tupac Amaru and the Shining Path, and Chilean groups like the MIR [Movement of the Revolutionary Left] and its armed branch, the FPMR.

In the same newscast, it is reported that Lieutenant General Julio Canessa was briefly interviewed after participating in a government junta meeting in the Diego Portales building. He said that the cache found in the Ballenar area is evidence of foreign intervention in Chilean domestic matters, in this case the intervention was in support of terrorism, threatening innocent Chilean people's human rights, and our progress toward full democracy according to the 1980 Constitution. Asked if the terrorists would be able to exercise their human rights, he replied that Chile is a country that respects the law. Despite that, terrorists are granted too much protection, justice must be done, which is a healthy thing.

Meanwhile, Santiago Radio Chilena in Spanish in its 2300 GMT newscast on 23 August carries a recording of Admiral Jose Toribio Merino, who was interviewed after presiding over a Government Junta meeting in the Diego Portales Building.

Merino said: Chile has 10,000 km of coastline and no more than 10 ships to patrol it. It is therefore impossible to know where to find someone. He added, "It is impossible to know where a small ship may have come ashore because of the entire coast cannot be guarded." Merino acknowledged the possibility that such a landing might occur again. Questioned about the Chilean people's doubts about the arms cache find he answered: How can the public not believe it if it is a reality, a fact? The things happened as we reported. A ship arrived from Cuba, passing through Panama, heading toward Coquimbo, but before arriving it stopped on the high seas near Chanaral or Huasco, somewhere around there, and a fishing ship approached it to transfer its cargo because the sea is calm there, and then it headed toward shore to unload the weapons. He added: The people must inform the authorities or Carabineros any time they know of something or see something unusual so that the appropriate measures can be taken. We must all remain alert, because we are at war, as we were in the times of the Huscar [Peruvian gunboat that raided the Chilean coast] during the Pacific War, when enemy ships approached the Chilean coast wherever they wanted to bombard us. When asked if we are at war he replied: We are at war against the Soviets.

Lima Embassy Accusations

[Text] Lima, 12 Aug (AFP) -- The Chilean Embassy in Peru tonight accused the Soviet fishing fleet that has been operating in Peruvian waters of giving logistical support and of being the link for the delivery of arms to the Chilean opposition with the aim of subverting order in Chile.

A 6-minute Chilean television documentary carried by Peruvian stations throughout the country shows pictures and film clips of Soviet fishing trawlers, which are regarded as part of an alleged Soviet military strategy against Chile.

The documentary states that the Soviet fleet consists of 58 ships that are fitted for electronic war and are prepared to provide the support required by Chilean subversives. The narrator of the documentary charges that most of these Soviet ships operate in Peruvian waters and are the backbone of both Soviet naval power and expansioninst ambitions in the region. He also charges that the heavy traffic of the Soviet airline Aeroflot through Jorge Chavez Airport has kept the Soviet military experts quite busy.

The documentary charges that the smuggled arms discovered recently in Chile are connected to the activities of the Soviet fishing fleet but did not expand on the connection.

The Soviet fishing fleet and Aeroflot are operating in Peru through agreements signed by the Peruvian Government and the USSR. The Peruvian Government has not yet commented on this charge by the Chilean Embassy.

After sailing for a certain period in Peruvian waters, Soviet seamen usually return home via Aeroflot.. Until now, the Peruvian authorities have not confirmed the alleged entry into the country of senior Soviet officers disguised as fishermen.

Since the resumption of diplomatic relations with the USSR in 1970, right-wing Peruvian sectors have contended that the various agreements signed with the USSR are not in the best interests of the country and that they could generate espionage activities.

Yet the governments of Juan Velasco, Francisco Morales Bermudez, Fernando Belaunde, and incumbent President Alan Garcia -- under which commercial agreements with the USSR have been in force -- have never commented on these activities.

Cuban, Libyan Training Charged

[Excerpts] The extreme leftist organization members arrested in the past few days following the discovery in the third Region of one of the largest arsenals found in our country since 1973 were planning large-scale subversive actions.

The magnitude of the terrorist plan is not yet known. The investigation being conducted by security personnel a few hours ago led to the seizure of the fishing ship Astrid-Sue, which was anchored at the Coquimbo Port. Aboard the ship the security agents found evidence that the Astrid-Sue served as a link between the Soviet ships that brought weapons and explosives to Chilean waters and the three landing craft the terrorists had in Caleta Corrales. After the discovery of the terrorist beachhead, it was learned that the arsenal was to be taken to the central and southern regions of our country over the next weekend.

A CNI report released a few hours ago gave some details of the terrorist plan. The report states: Between February and March 1986, [Secretary General of the MIR] Andres Pascal Allende visited Nicaragua, where, among other things, he asked for guerilla training for 250 men in the Chinandega area under Cuban and Libyan military advisers. These extremists traveled to Panama and then sneaked into Chile. It is believed that at least 15 of them -- all of them military advisers -- went to the Carrizal Bajo area following a comprehensive plan.

The final destination of the arsenal was Santiago, Concepcion, and Temuco. Weapons may have already been sent to these cities before the discovery of the arms cache. The seized arsenal was scheduled to have been transferred starting on the afternoon of 14 August, over the long weekend.

The CNI report states that MIR spokesmen abroad have been raising funds to provide arms and equipment to Marxist groups like the Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front.

Early on 12 August, the fishing ship Astrid-Sue, which was anchored in Coquimbo port, was raided because of information that the ship might have been used to transport arms and explosives to Carrizal Bajo. Crew members are being thoroughly interrogated to learn more details of the vast terrorist plan. [passage omitted]

SANTIAGO BLACKOUT CAUSED BY TECHNICAL FAILURE

[Text] Santiago, 13 Aug (AFP) -- The 1-hour electric power outage today that upset the supply in five northern, central, and southern regions of Chile on the 1,000-km-long power line was caused by a technical failure. The power outage started at 0832 and affected the area from Chanaral to San Fernando, an area in which half of Chile's 12 million inhabitants live.

In Santiago the outage paralyzed the metropolitan railway and the traffic light system during the rush hour when most children are heading for school and employees for their jobs. The police have reported that there were no serious problems in hospitals or with other essential services.

The cut in electricity affected the cities of Valparaiso, Vina del Mar, Rancagua, Los Andes, La Serena, and Copiapo, among other important cities. The National Electricity Enterprise has reported that the failure that caused the blackout occurred in a distributing station located close to San Fernando, south of Santiago.

Many of the previous blackouts in Santiago and Chile's largest cities have been caused by acts of sabotage, with the Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front claiming responsibility for them. This group promotes armed struggle against President Augusto Pinochet's military regime.

ARSONOUS ATTACKS REPORTED IN SANTIAGO, VALPARAISO

[Text] Santiago, 13 Aug (AFP) -- Carabineros reported today that several arsonous attacks on a large commercial facility and two buses took place tonight in Santiago and Valparaiso without causing any casualties.

The sources reported that unknown persons set up several bombs inside various shops of the post Parqua Arauco shopping mall and then detonated these bombs by remote control when the shopping mall closed down.

Several squads of firemen worked until midnight to put out the fire that caused alarm among the residents of the wealthy Las Condes suburb in eastern Santiago. Almost simultaneously, a bus was set afire in the Maipu district by several persons who then escaped.

Police sources have stated that another bus was destroyed by a Molotov cocktail thrown by unidentified individuals. No organization claimed responsiblity for the attacks, although similar attacks were recently attributed to the clandestine Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front (FPMR).

Cable reports datelined Buenos Aires have stated that on 15 August the Movement of the Revolutionary Left (MIR) will launch a political-military offensive against the government of General Augusto Pinochet, who on 13 September will celebrate 13 years in power. On 13 September, the MIR will celebrate its 21st anniversary. The MIR was founded at the University of Concepcion, 520 km south of Santiago.

The student leaders also blamed the current military regime for the atmosphere of uncertainty and threats felt by the student leaders and the university community. They said that the Santiago University rector should adopt some position regarding the deaths of student Oscar Feuntes, Julio Santibanez, and Mario Martinez.

Confech leader Rodrigo Paz explained the timetable of mobilizations to start at 1200 on 12 August in Santiago and other cities.

[Begin Paz recording] We call on all students to hold a national student vigil on 12 August. We particularly request teachers and university workers to join in our vigil which will take place in main building of the Catholic University, where we expect to see the whole student movement. Our great vigil will also be held in each province and will be organized by each regional federation.

On 13 August, we call on the students to join in our great national demonstration in defense of the youth. We call on all the Santiago population to fly the flag at half mast with a black ribbon. [end recording]

A minute of silence is scheduled for 1200 and a march to the various courts of justice in the whole country at 1200.

POLICE UNIT WATCHES CONFECH LEADER'S FUNERAL

[Excerpt] Santiago, 9 Aug (AFP) -- About 2,000 people today participated in the funeral of opposition student leader Mario Martinez Rodriguez, who was found dead under strange circumstances on a beach in the central region after he disappeared on 2 August.

The people were carrying placards of the Christian Democratic Party (PDC) which bore slogans demanding justice. They marched toward the general cemetery after attending a religious service that was celebrated by several priests at the church of the Dominican Convent.

Those attending the funeral followed the mass with deep sorrow and in silence while dozens of flower wreaths covered the coffin of the Santiago University student federation leader and Confech [Chilean Student Confederation] finance secretary.

A vicar of the university pastoral group requested that the mass be a song to life. He said it is not atime of anger.

A strong police contingent observed the mourners from a distance when they marched toward the cemetery carrying a placard that read: Comrade Mario Martinez, the seed of freedom, your death, shall be the last one.

Once at the cemetery, PDC President Gabriel Valdes praised the successful union work of the late youth and noted that we have the moral right to believe that he is a new victim of the struggle to restore democracy, freedom, and peace in Chile. [passage omitted]

[Text] Santiago, 11 Aug (EFE) -- Special Judge Alberto Novoa today granted student leader Gonzalo Rovira freedom on bail, subject to confirmation by the Chilean Appellate Court. Rovira, a communist and vice president of the Student Federation of Chile [FECh], has been under arrest since 30 June 1986, when the Carabineros (the Chilean militarized police) evicted students who were occupying the central building of the University of Chile. Later, on 19 July, Gonzalo Rovira was put on trial by request of the Interior Ministry, which had accused him of violating the State Security Law, charging him with promoting the disruption of public order and the overthrow of the government, in addition to provoking disorder and disrupting public tranquility.

Gonzalo Rovira, who will have to pay a bail of 10,000 pesos ($50) will be set free if the Apellate Court confirms the special judge's ruling.

FARC COMMANDER ON TALKS WITH BARCO'S GOVERNMENT

[Report by Ricardo Canon]

[Excerpts] We are standing beside a coca plant grown in the Caguan area in Caqueta Department. However, as part of the government's rehabilitation and pacification plans with the population in this province, the coca plants are being substituted by rubber, corn, rice, and sugarcane crops. Within the same pacification process, the community is now demanding more effective help to substitute coca with other products that may not be as profitable to improve their economic situation due to the land's low productivity, but which could help them improve their living conditions. [passage omitted]

However, technical assistance is not enough to improve the conditions of the communities in this area. They require more government attention through credits, roads, health programs, and the continuation of the peace process, as Commander Jorge of the FARC's 14th Front has stated.

[Begin recording] [Jorge] We are willing to extend the truce, and we have already made a proposal to the government in that regard.

[Canon] Would you be willing to hold direct talks with President Virgilio Barco through the secretary general?

[Jorge] Of course we would. Nevertheless, more important would be the creation of a peace commission, a broad commission capable of demanding compliance with the agreements reached with [former President] Belisario Betancur. [end recording]

However, while President Virgilio Barco Vargas has said as agrarian reform is inevitable, he also said that for the rebels to reincorporate into the country's institutional life, consolidate what has been accomplished, and advance, an institution will be created which will be directly under the president of the Republic.

ECONOMY MINISTER REPORTS ON DEFICIT, TAXES

[Text] Lima, 12 Aug (AFP) -- Luis Alva Castro, prime minister and economy minister, today affirmed that the state's financial administration is the best since 1981 and that the fiscal deficit for the first half of this year has been reduced to 0.5 percent of the GDP.

He recalled that under the previous administration of President Fernando Belaunde, the fiscal deficit was 2.9 percent of the GDP. He said that the fiscal deficit during the first half of this year totaled $32.3 million.

In a report to Congress on the implementation of the fiscal budget, Alva Castro said that the taxation system has changed by decreasing indirect taxes, increasing direct taxes, and lowering taxes on fuels.

The minister reported that the state's revenues during the first half of 1986 totaled $1.308 billion, which represents 21 percent more than expected. He explained that this increase resulted from the better collection of corporate taxes. One of the main taxpayers was the U.S. Occidental Oil Company, which paid $36.5 million in taxes.

Alva Castro said that the level of government expenditures surpassed the budget amount by 17.5 percent, mainly because of salary increases for civil servants, who were granted a 28.8-percent cumulative raise over a 1-year period.

[By Hugo Levano]

[Excerpts] Lima, 12 Aug (AFP) -- About 300 Ticuna Indians have moved a modern clandestine cocaine laboratory through the Amazon Jungle from Irene, Peru, to La Concha, Colombia, to prevent its destruction. This was reported today by some of the Indians who participated in the operation.

The trip was made through the jungle's humid and suffocating heat, sometimes in boats and canoes. But the cargo was mostly carried by the natives on their shoulders through the jungle. They opened their path with machetes and crossed the many Amazon rivers and streams.

It took 4 days to move the cocaine laboratory, which had been installed by the drug traffickers in Irene, and the operation ended 48 hours before the Peruvian antidrug police squad arrived at the site on 10 August.

The Indians received $90 a day for their work. [passage omitted]

It is still not known if the drug traffickers were tipped off or if they moved as a precautionary measure. The fact is that 300 Ticuna Indians were hired to do the job. [passage omitted]

Traces indicated that a large cocaine-processing plant with its own power and air-conditioning equipment had been operating there. It was without any doubt the most important and modern plant in the area.

About 150 armed mercenaries were guarding the area, and when they escaped they raised a white flag on a 7-meter pole.

The Indians carried everything, including the cocaine base that the laboratory chemists had received from such distant places as Uchiza, Pucallpa, and Apurimac in the center and southeast of Peru, about 1,000 and 1,500 km south of Irene, respectively.

According to some of the 80 people arrested at the site, most of whom were Indians, the laboratory in Irene operated under the command of Colombian Homero Bugablia, alias La Bala, who is the deputy of the powerful Colombian drug trafficker Evaristo Porras, alias Papa Doc.

None of the important drug traffickers was arrested by the police. [passage omitted]

VAN BOMB EXPLODES; MRTA CLAIMS OTHER ATTACK

[Text] Lima, 11 Aug (AFP) -- The police today reported in Lima that a Peruvian Air Force van that was used as a car bomb exploded yesterday one block from the cathedral in Arequipa, 1,000 km south of Lima. The explosion destroyed the vehicle and damaged some neighboring houses, but caused no injuries.

The shock waves, which disturbed an otherwise peaceful Sunday in the second largest city of Peru, damaged doors and windows of houses adjoining a parking lot where the van was blown up, the source said. Security forces are pursuing a presumed Shining Path commando group that left 10 kg of dynamite in the van.

The attack, the third of this type perpetrated in Arequipa in recent months, has provoked concern among the local authorities, who fear that similar attacks might occur before 15 August, when President Alan Garcia is due to attend the Arequipa anniversary celebrations.

Meanwhile, 11 people, including a woman, were brought yesterday from Cerro de Pasco, 310 km southeast of Lima, on charges of having murdered government officials and perpetrated attacks.

The Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement (MRTA) last night claimed responsibility for an attack on the Government Palace on the night of 8 August. The MRTA communique says that the attack was launched after bypassing the security system of the American Popular Revolutionary Alliance (APRA) government around the Plaza de Armas. The rocket-type grenade fired against Government House did not explode.

COURTS ACQUIT ABIMAEL GUZMAN IN ABSENTIA

[Text] Lima, 12 Aug (AFP) -- Court sources today stated that Abimael Guzman, the elusive leader of the Maoist Shining Path guerrillas, has been acquitted of the crimes of terrorism by a Lima court that also tried five alleged subversives for more than 100 attacks against public and private buildings. Judges of the 12th court section of the Supreme Court of Justice decided that Guzman, the man most-wanted by Peruvian authorities, could not be sentenced in this trial as long as he is not arrested.

A judge explained that for the time being, Guzman has been acquitted of the crimes of terrorism, but the courts will retain the indictments until he is arrested. Among the five people being tried for terrorism, the court handed down 4- to 6-year sentences for Manuel Guispirroca, Carlos Cerron, and Francisco Cayo, who shouted slogans for the armed struggle as the sentence was passed. Rosa Quintana and Delia Limaco, two young girls whom the police accused of being accomplices of the terrorists involved in the trials, were acquitted for lack of evidence.

Meanwhile, the police today at noon confirmed that commandos of the Shining Path guerrilla annihilation squad yesterday killed Republican Guard Corporal Aurelio Da Cruz del Aquila. This was reported by some suspects who were arrested after the attack perpetrated yesterday in the suburban district of Chaclacayo, 24 km east of Lima.

NATIONAL UNION PARTY LEADER GRANTS INTERVIEW

PY121753 Lima Panamericana Television Network in Spanish 0200 GMT 11 Aug 86

[Interview with National Union Party, PUN, leader Carlos Malpica (member of United Left, IU, coalition) By Fernando Vazquez broadcast on the weekly program "Panorama" conducted by Rossana Canedo; no date or place given -- recorded]

[Excerpts] [Canedo] A lot has been said about the current split within the IU, just before the holding of municipal elections. Senator Carlos Malpica expresses his views on this:

[Fernando Vazquez] Good evening Senator Malpica.

[Malpica] Good Evening.

[Vazquez] When did the IU cease to be united?

[Malpica] The IU has always been united. The problem is that this is a coalition of parties that differ on certain issues...

[Vazquez, interrupting] Are these differences important?

[Malpica] There are important disagreements on some issues, but what unites a coalition is a common platform.

[Vazquez] Does the IU have an established platform?

[Malpica] Yes it has a platform that was approved last year before the holding of general elections.

[Vazquez] On what issues are there disagreements then?

[Malpica] There are some disagreements because some people have either not read the platform or have misinterpreted it.

[Vazquez] Who for example?

[Malpica] Like [Lima Mayor] Alfonso Barrantes.

[Vazquez] But Alfonso Barrantes is the IU president.

[Malpica] Yes, he is, but I believe that he has either not read the platform or that he is distorting it.

[Vazquez] Is this why the PUN, your party, does not support Barrantes' reelection campaign?

[Malpica] Yes, this is one of the reasons why the PUN is not enthusiastic about Barrantes' candidacy and why it prefers (?Henry Price), who has a more unitarian attitude. I believe that we disagree not only about the interpretation of IU's platform, but that we also disagree with Barrantes' political behavior. [passage omitted]

[Malpica] Barrantes has also supported the government's erroneous decision to order the Armed Forces to intervene in the penal institutions.

[Vazquez] But did he indeed support the government in this?

[Malpica] Yes, he did. On 18 July he expressed support for the government's decision.

[Vazquez] But during a televised speech broadcast on 26 July, Barrantes precisely expressed the points over which the IU disagrees with the government.

[Malpica] That is true, but on 19 July [as heard] Barrantes categorically supported Alan Garcia's decision.

[Vazquez] Senator Malpica, in what aspects has Barrantes not fulfilled the IU platform?

[Malpica] In many ways, and it would be very difficult to list them all. I believe he has campaigned in favor of the APRA [American Popular Revolutionary Alliance] and I believe that his attitude in the past year has been wrong.

[Vazquez] Do you agree with those who say that Barrantes does not have majority support within IU? That he has not been a true spokesman of the opposition?

[Malpica] I would say Barrantes exercises (?questionable) leadership within the IU...

[Vazquez, interrupting] Questioned basically by you?

[Malpica] Not only by me, but by also very important IU factions. [passage omitted]

[Vazquez] What did you expect from Alfonso Barrantes? Did you expect him to be a tough opponent of the government?

[Malpica] Not necessarily a tough opponent, just an opponent. The head of the group that opposes the APRA government. But this has not been the case to my knowledge.

The role of the IU in Peru is to be the opposition. In Peru it is bad policy for opposition parties to cooperate with the government because these parties have never succeeded in subsequent elections. [passage omitted]

[Vazquez] Do you believe Barrantes will be the IU candidate in the municipal elections?

[Malpica] It looks that way.

[Vazquez] What will be your position in this regard?

[Malpica] None at all, because I do not vote in Lima, I vote in Cajamarca.

[Vazquez] Yes, but you are an IU member and you should support this candidacy in a disciplined manner.

[Malpica] But I will carry out the election campaign in Cajamarca.

[Vazquez] If Barrantes is the IU candidate for the Lima mayor's office, what will be your position in this regard?

[Malpica] As I said before, I do not vote in Lima, I vote in Cajamarca.

[Vazquez] To be more specific, are you going to campaign against Barrantes?

[Malpica] No, I have not campaigned against him and no one has said that we will campaign against him. But since there is discontent among the masses, there is a danger of a spontaneous reaction, and a refusal to campaign and vote for Barrantes. This may happen.

[Vazquez] According to Senator Enrique Bernales, some IU parties do not want to support Barrantes, but they want him to be the candidate so that he will lose the campaign. Once he loses the campaign, Barrantes will also lose the IU leadership. Do you head this position? [30-minute break in video transmission; 1-minute break in audio transmission]

[Vazquez] Do you believe that (Henry Price) is a good alternative to Barrantes?

[Malpica] Yes, I would say that he would be a better candidate than Barrantes because (Price) is not the same type of opposition leader as Barrantes. [passage omitted]

[Vazquez] If Barrantes is the IU candidate in the November municipal elections, will the IU win the elections?

[Malpica] Probably, I believe that the fight will be with the Popular Christian Party [PPC] candidate, Bedoya Reyes. I think that the APRA candidate has no chance of winning these elections.

[Vazquez] Senator Malpica thank you very much for your presence in Panorama.

[Malpica] Thank you very much and good evening.

PROTEST STAGED AGAINST AMNESTY FOR OFFICERS

[By Alberto Pepe Leira]

[Text] Montevideo, 12 Aug (EFE) -- The first popular reaction in support of democracy and against the people who are "nostalgic for military power" was a noisy protest that included the banging of pans on the night of 11 August. A petition was submitted requesting "truth and justice" in the cases of human rights violation committed during the "de facto" regime (1973-1985) and rejecting amnesty for the military men involved in the repression. The banging on kitchen utensils and other instruments was heard in poor districts as well as downtown. Protest demonstrations were also organized in front of union headquarters and political organizations, but especially in the rank-and-file committees of the leftist Broad Front coalition.

The protest coincided with a "high-level" meeting Army Chief Lieutenant General Hugo Medina held with four former commanders during the military regime and two retired generals, who are considered "hardliners." During the private meeting held in the Army Headquarters, Gen Medina tried to have a "meeting in defense of the Armed Forces' honor" called off. The meeting was proposed by the Military Club, which is made up of active-duty and retired Armed Forces officers, who have become the sector which has criticized the administration of the 17 months of democratic government in Uruguay. The "high-level" meeting was attended by former Commanders Luis Queirolo, Boscan Hontou, Jose Luis Vadora, and Pedro Arando and the last two presidents of the Military Club, General Esteban Cristi, who was chief of the 1st Army Division during the 27 June 1973 military coup, and General Ivan Pualos, retired, the former chief of intelligence.

EFE has been able to learn from reliable sources that Medina, one of the most important men in the Uruguayan democratization process, and the former commanders discussed the problem of an eventual review of the "de facto" government period and the possible trial of those who violated human rights. They also discussed the arrest of retired Colonels Domingo Pugliese and Agustin Andres ordered by Medina when they were collecting signatures to call for the meeting in defense of the Armed Forces' honor.

The Military Club has opposed any kind of review and has conveyed its "concern" over the failure of the government's efforts to gen an amnesty so as "not to irritate the Armed Forces." The position of the Military Club is different from that of General Medina, who after reaching an agreement for democratization with the political leaders in 1984 stated the Armed Forces will not permit "revenge" but that justice be done. When Medina promised to respect the election results and the elected democratic government, he said that trials against those who acted inhonestly during the military regime will be accepted. Gen Medina has clearly defined the role of active-duty officers in the face of a review which has created concern among the commanders under the military regime.

The governing Colorado Party did not support last night's protest against those who are "nostalgic for military power," and Interior Minister Antonio Marchesano himself said before leaving for Brazil to join Uruguayan President Julio Maria Sanguinetti that the "banging on pans" is "out of place."

However, this does not mean that the government is not concerned about the actions of the Military Club and its current leaders, headed by Paulo. Defense Minister Juan Vicente Chiarino himself has criticized the offiical publications of the Military Club, describing them as "deplorable."

The officers who were thrown out by the 1973 military coup are also accusing the members of the Military Club of committing "sedition." Captain Oscar Lebel, who was arrested in 1973 for opposing the military coup, has said the officers who make public statements as if they were "a party of the Armed Forces" are "committing sedition." An accusation published in the Christian Democratic weekly AQUI reflects the feelings among the retired officers of the Armed Forces. [sentence as received].

JUSTICE ORDERS ARREST OF U.S. REPORTER

[Text] Caracas, 13 Aug (AFP) -- A judge today ordered the arrest of John Sweeney, a U.S. journalist who is director of Caracas' monthly magazine VEN-ECONOMIA and correspondent for NEWSWEEK. He has been charged with having defamed the directors of an insurance company and of Caracas' subway.

The 33-year-old journalist has been living in Venezuela for the past 10 years. He works with VEN-ECONOMIA magazine, whose editor is Joseph Mann, a correspondent for THE NEW YORK TIMES. He is also a correspondent for six publications, including NEWSWEEK, BUSINESS WEEK, METALSWEEK, and for McGraw-Hill publications.

In VEN-ECONOMIA, Sweeney published reports about the alleged corruption of the president of the firm Latinoamericana de Seguros, Orlando Castro, who according to the reports bribed directors of Caracas' subway to secure advantageous contracts with that suburban state transport enterprise.

Justice Pedro Rendron Oropeza today ordered Sweeney arrested on defamation charges. VEN-ECONOMIA sources have told AFP that Sweeney is currently in the country's interior doing journalistic work. He is the second journalist to be arrested in Venezuela in less than a month for the same reason. The director of DIARIO DE CARACAS, Rodolfo Schmidt, has been in jail for 2 weeks. A former policeman accused him of defamation.

'TEXT OF DECLARATION' OF MEXICO ISSUED 7 AUGUST

PA132052 Mexico City EL NACIONAL in Spanish 8 Aug 86 p 3

["Declaration of Mexico" issued by the Group of Six in Ixtapa, Zihuatenejo, on 7 August]

[Text] We have gathered today to proclaim humanity's right to peace and to reiterate our commitment to protect this right to make the survival of the human race possible.

Exactly 41 years ago, death and horror befell Hiroshima. The most terrible war in history came to an end, and the world's nuclear nightmare started. Since then, we have been living on borrowed time. All that is valuable and beautiful, all that civilization has aspired to and has been able to achieve might be turned into radioactive dust in a very short time.

During 4 decades the states that have nuclear weapons have had the almost exclusive responsibility to put an end to nuclear weapons while the rest of the world has been forced to remain on the sidelines. The nuclear arms race has continued and has increased. In view of the resulting danger of mutual annihilation, the distinction between the powerful and the weak makes ~~no sense.~~ Consequently, we are determined that countries like ours which have no nuclear arsenals will actively participate in all the aspects of disarmament. The protection of this planet concerns all people who live here, we cannot accept that a few countries decide the fate of the entire world.

The tragic accidents that recently occurred at the Chernobyl nuclear-electric plant and the launching of the space shuttle Challenger have shown once more how fragile is a security that is based only on complex technology. When an accident that occurred at a peaceful nuclear plant causes such important international reprecussions we can very clearly see the terrible consequences that may result from the use of even a small part of the nuclear weapons existing in the world. To avoid repeating the Hiroshima incident on a global level, we not only need to have more knowledge of new technology, but more wisdom. We call for an international agreement banning any use of nuclear weapons.

In January 1985, the Group of Six met in New Delhi to discuss the dangerous increase in the nuclear arms race. We then called for an immediate suspension of nuclear tests as a preliminary measure prior to the drafting of a treaty to completely ban such tests and to suspend the production and deployment of all nuclear weapons and their launchers, as well as to ban the testing, production, and deployment of space weapons. In addition we expressed our hope that the United States and the Soviet Union make rapid progress in their bilateral negotiations to abolish all nuclear weapons. Later, we were pleased about the declaration issued by President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev in November 1985 stating that "a nuclear war must never be waged." The moment has come to guarantee that such a war will never start. For this reason, we are deeply worried; until now, there has been no evident progress in such negotiations.

We are aware that recently these two powers have taken steps that could help overcome certain obstacles and serve as a new framework to reach agreements. We are convinced that no greater security can be achieved by increasing the destructive capacity through the accumulation of weapons; on the contrary, a true security can only be reached by reducing the weapons. Nuclear disarmament and, as a final request, the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are absolute priorities. However, within this context, we must also give due attention to the problem of a balanced reduction of conventional weapons.

We are convinced that there is nothing more pressing and crucial right now than to put an end to all nuclear tests. The qualitative and quantitative development of nuclear weapons exacerbates the arms race; the total prohibition of these tests would prevent its progress. In addition, it is obvious that the continuous improvement of nuclear weapons hinders the effort to discourage others from obtaining them. We must admit that just as it is impossible to cure a drug addict by injecting him with increasing higher dosages, it is also impossible to save from war a world that has fallen into the habit of weapons by accumulating larger arsenals. The time has come to end this.

In October 1985 and February 1986, and then again in April of this year, we exchanged letters with President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev. We urged them to implement a fully verifiable suspension of nuclear tests at least until their next summit meeting. We also proposed that such a suspension would be immediately followed by negotiations to sign a treaty on the complete prohibition of nuclear testing. We offered them our assistance to guarantee a proper verification of this nuclear tests suspension.

We feel encouraged by the consideration they have given our proposals and the international attention the nuclear testing issue has drawn. We reiterate the call so the unilateral moratorium on the part of one of the two nuclear powers will become, at least, a bilateral moratorium.

To arrange for the immediate halt of nuclear testing, we are presenting a separate document that offers specific help to establish the adequate mechanisms of verification. We are willing to cooperate with the United States and the USSR to establish temporary measures. These measures could greatly strengthen the trust in a moratorium of the United States and the USSR and would constitute a very important step in establishing an adequate system of verification for a treaty banning nuclear testings. Such measures might include the establishment of temporary surveillance stations in the existing test areas, arrangements for using the existing stations in the United States and the USSR with the purpose of observing their territories away from the test areas, as well as inspecting large chemical explosions. We are pleased that the United States and the USSR recently began bilateral talks on issues concerning nuclear testing. We have decided to propose to the U.S. and USSR presidents that experts of our six countries meet with Soviet and U.S. experts. The purpose of this would be to explain our proposals in detail, examine the means for putting them into practice, and analyze other feasible means whereby our six countries could arrange for the verification of a nuclear test ban. We will be strengthening our mutual cooperation to check the current tests and report this effect. Our six countries will also consider measures so that the states that have no nuclear weapons will be able to cooperate in the international mechanisms of verification related to future agreements on nuclear disarmament.

We reiterate our demand that an arms race in outer space be prevented. Space belongs to all mankind, and as beneficiaries of that common heritage of all men, we are opposed to the use of outer space for destructive purposes. We urge that there be a halt to improving antisatellite weapons, that might endanger the space activities of many countries for peaceful purposes. Likewise, we urge the U.S. and USSR leaders to agree on ending any new testing of antisatellite weapons to arrange for an international treaty banning these weapons. In New Delhi, we warned that improving antisatellite weapons might endanger a series of agreements limiting armaments and disarmament. We now see that this warning was justified. We emphasize that the existing treaties that safeguard the use of outer space for peaceful purposes, as well as the 1972 treaty limiting the systems of antiballistic projectiles must be fully respected, strengthened, and broadened as necessary, bearing in mind the recent technological advances.

Recently respect for international law has unfortunately reached its lowest level. The rights of the weaker nations are trampled upon, and this is left unpunished. Treaties are violated to suit the countries, particularly the stronger countries. To make progress in the efforts in favor of nuclear disarmament, it is imperative to strengthen the United Nations organization and charter, as well as the treaties pertaining to disarmament, that must be observed in both the letter and spirit.

The limited resources of the world are squandered in sharp contrast to the permanent malnutrition of millions of persons who are constantly threatened and left to a life with poverty and premature death. Poverty and economic despair are also a threat to international peace and security. This threat is worsened in many developing countries where the foreign debt problem reduces even further their capacity to assign insufficient resources to satisfy the urgent and basic needs of their people. Transferring resources from military expenses to economic and social development is, therefore, a basic need of our times.

In our message from Mexico, we urge the U.S. and USSR leaders to continue with and strengthen the dialogue they began last year, and to set a date for meeting again with an attitude of mutual understanding and conciliation to make sure this dialogue will yield practical results in the area of disarmament. Both parties have the capacity to destroy the world several times over. There is no room for thinking that one or the other would be showing weakness if it showed a willingness for conciliation. It is necessary to reactivate and strengthen the spirit of Geneva. We reiterate our determination to contribute to an agreement between the states that have nuclear weapons, and join efforts with them, as well as with the other countries, for the sake of the security of mankind and peace.

Once again we urge the peoples, parliaments, and governments throughout the world to actively support our call. All individuals have a right to peace and are obligated to make efforts to achieve peace. Neither together nor separate can the peoples of the world ever erase the memory of the horror of Hiroshima and Nagasaki; together we can and should erase from our future that horror is threatening us.

DE LA MADRID COMMENTS ON MEETING WITH REAGAN

PA132344 Mexico City Red Nacional 13 Imevision Television in Spanish 1955 GMT 13 Aug 86

[Excerpt] Today, Mexico City and the United States agreed to make a special effort to improve the atmosphere of the two countries' bilateral relations and to facilitate and broaden bilateral cooperation for the two nations' mutual benefit.

After Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid and U.S. President Ronald Reagan's meeting ended, the presidents noted that relations between Mexico and the United States are based upon respect and mutual cooperation. Here is Humberto Mares Navarro, our special correspondent in Washington, with a report.

[Begin recording] [Mares] At the end of the talks between Presidents Miguel de la Madrid and Ronald Reagan, the presidents described the working visit as fruitful for an understanding between the two nations.

After talking for little over 2 hours, each of the presidents made brief speeches in front of the White House diplomatic door. Among the achievements noted were the lifting of the tuna embargo on Mexico and the governments' plans to make a special effort to improve the atmosphere of relations. President de la Madrid said it was also agreed that instructions would immediately be given to establish talks between government officials to achieve a broadened bilateral trade agreement. The Mexican president said that it is his government's intention to have Mexico achieve sustained and sufficient economic growth, which is essential to the restructuring and modernization of Mexico's economy.

[De la Madrid] In the first place, we discussed in-depth various aspects of our trade and financial relations, and the recent negotiations by the Mexican Government with the international financial organizations, especially the IMF, which have been successful as they have allowed new, realistic, and flexible solutions for the foreign debt problem. I admit that the U.S. Government, in a joint and highly valuable effort, played a constructive role in these negotiations, which Mexico greatly appreciates.

It is my intention to have Mexico achieve sustained and sufficient economic growth, which is essential for the restructuring and modernization of its economy, maintaining the social progress which has been the leading factor in the country's political stability for so many years, and increasing the country's ability to pay its international financial debts.

[Mares] President de la Madrid also said that this fruitful meeting is a demonstration of the firm and cordial friendship that unites the two countries. We can gain a great deal, he said, from a dignified and mutually beneficial friendship. [passage omitted] [end recording]

President Speaks at White House

FL132140 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 2037 GMT 13 Aug 86

[by Roberto Gonzalez Perez, special correspondent]

[Text] Washington, 13 Aug (NOTIMEX) -- Great progress has been made regarding Mexico-U.S. relations, said President Miguel de la Madrid during a speech delivered at the White House. We have sincerely and thoroughly discussed various topics that will bring positive results, he added.

The Mexican president said that the governments of the two countries will make extra effort to improve the atmosphere of our relations. He also said Mexican Government negotiations with international financial organizations have been successful inasmuch as they allow more reasonable and flexible terms in dealing with the foreign debt problem.

De la Madrid acknowledged that the U.S. Government -- with its valuable efforts -- played a useful role in the negotiations, which we appreciate very much. Referring to trade ties between the two countries, he indicated that they should take place within a framework of equality, taking into consideration the differences between the degrees of development of the two economies as well as total conditions of non-discrimination and absolute non-reciprocity, which should be the foundation of better trade relations.

He also told President Reagan that migratory flows from Mexico to the United States will decrease as the Mexican economy improves.

De la Madrid noted that international cooperation is needed to deal efficiently with the serious drug smuggling problem which needs to be solved.

SENATOR ON SUPPORT OF L.A. PARLIAMENT TREATY

FL131648 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 0321 GMT 13 Aug 86

Senator Patrocinio Gonzalez Blanco, Mexican representative to the Latin American Parliament, said no country can confront a new crisis if it acts autonomously and disregards integration efforts.

The Latin American Parliament has become the principal political forum in the hemisphere and seeks to fill the gap in matters of integration because the organizations created for this purpose have not achieved their goals due to a lack of political vigilance.

Gonzalez Blanco, President of the Political Commission of the Latin American Parliament representing 19 countries and 168 political parties, said the parliament's goal is to encourage area countries to defend democracy.

DELVALLE DELIVERS SOVEREIGNTY SPEECH AT RALLY

[Text] General Manuel Antonio Noriega, Panamanian people:

This huge popular demonstration represents the Panamaian people's strength and determination to defend their homeland, rising above political differences and personal ambitions. We want to show the world that we Panamanians have and always will have a religion that unites us: the defense of the Panama Canal and of our sovereignty. [applause]

This is why we are here, standing and alert, at this great event to show our loyalty for our homeland. We are meeting here today in a great, tight, fraternal embrace to reaffirm our strong determination to achieve the fulfillment of the main national objectives. From here, without strident expressions, but with conviction and firmness, we say we are committed to strengthen our national independence, we are going to reinforce Panama's personality, we are going to work so that all Panamanians can enjoy well-being and peace, and we are going to continue struggling with determination and firmness to ensure respect for our legitimate rights and sovereignty.

I wish to reiterate my inevitable commitment of making sure that the spirit and the letter of the Torrijos-Carter Treaties are fulfilled, as these treaties have cost so much effort and sacrifice from generations of patriots. The fulfillment of these treaties is a [word indistinct] step to consolidating our sovereignty before all nations of the world and all international organizations.

No campaign against the Panamanian state's most sacred interests will overpower our determination to struggle in defense of the unity noticeable here and everywhere in the country today, to struggle to strengthen and show our absolute determination, and to ensure respect for the Republic's integrity and the right of all citizens to a prosperous and independent life. [shouts] The strong ties between the people, government, and Defense Forces that this event conveys is an eloquent reply to the attempts to divide us made by those who want to weaken us to distract us from our firm determination to consolidate national democracy. They will never achieve that goal? [applause] The soldiers of our homeland that this multitudinous mass of people will see marching today are not alone because they are our brothers in uniform, and because all Panamanians must consider ourselves soldiers of our homeland when our homeland requires it and demands it.

The campaign unleashed against the Defense Forces, and particularly against it commander in chief, is not only to harm him as a person, but also is a veiled attempt to prevent the Canal from becoming ours in the year 2000 as provided for in the Torrijos-Carter Treaties. This has been disclosed by one of the most conspicuous instigators. That is why we are here, and that is why we will always say "present" whenver we must defend the sacred national interests. [shouts]

Today is another anniversary of General Manuel Antonio Noriega's assumption as commander in chief of our Defense Forces. Hence, I consider it appropriate to express as president and friend my respect and appreciation for the great efforts he has undertaken and continues to promote to adequately prepare the members of the Defense Forces under his command, so they can thoroughly fulfill the difficult tasks they have at the present time and in the future of defending the country's territorial integrity and preserving the Panamanian family's tranquillity and peace.

This occasion is also an opportunity to congratulate all the members of the 2000 Battalion who are celebrating their 2nd anniversary today. We congratulate them for their devotion, ability, and determination in fulfilling the tasks assigned to them, as the vanguard of their institution in the defense of the Republic's important and sensitive interests when the Canal and its installations revert to the nation.

On mentioning the year 2000 -- a scant 14 years away -- and in view of the future, it is essential that all Panamanians understand the challenge it will be to assume control and operation of the Panama Canal -- one of the most important routes in the world -- responsibly. It truly would not be possible to meet -- as a nation -- the great and serious responsibility I just mentioned unless all Panamanians, regardless of their ideology or party affiliation and over and above any circumstance, understand that we must preserve the peaceful coexistence we are all accustomed. However, it is also essential to expand national education at all levels so that we can properly train future generations to meet future challenges successfully.

It is essential to secure and protect the property of Panamanians so they can take full advantage of their abilities and contribute to their own development and the country's greatness. It is essential to continue stimulating all sectors of our economy, such as the development of commerce and industry, so that they can continue to create new job opportunities. It is also essential to strengthen agricultural production so that the country's interior can duly participate in the nation's development. This is a good opportunity to guarantee the producers of my country that we will never permit the entry of a single grain of subsidized rice to the detriment of the rural workers. [applause]

It is essential to intensify the programs which supply all Panamanians with comfortable and decent housing. It is essential to give the right solution to the complex problem of urban transportation.

There is a huge and difficult task ahead of us. We must tackle it with boldness, intelligence, and creativity in order to truly take advantage of all our resources. Although I have not mentioned it yet, the most important aspect of this task is the struggle we must carry out to modify Law 96-70, which jeopardizes the spirit and intention of the Torrijos-Carter Treaties. [applause]

Our unity becomes stronger and is consolidated with the active participation of all the men and women of our country; with the uninterrupted implementation of democracy; with the consensus born of intelligence and strengthened by the heart and constructive criticism; but above all, with a respect for the rights of others in a climate where there is no slander, insults, or excesses but a responsible use and enjoyment of public liberties so the law will not be considered an object of repression, an object of defiance, nor a mockery. [shouts from crowd]

I firmly believe in freedom of expression, but also in the need to respect the name and honor of all citizens.

Fellow members of UNADE [Democratic National Union], on 10 October 1985, in this same square, I said that I was committed to the preservation and strengthening of this powerful political alliance; of all the UNADE member parties. I have kept my word. Today, I reiterate to you this commitment. Members of the PRD [Democratic Revolutionary Party], PALA [Labor Party, Panamenist Party], Frampo [Popular Broad Front Party], and Republican Party: You who support my administration and are here today [changes thought]...and members of the Liberal Party: You who support my administration and are here today in monolithic unity to manifest your support for this president and for my friend and collaborator, Noriega, share with us the grave responsibility and patriotic duty of working together to accomplish the great and difficult tasks we have discussed. History shall not remember us for our omissions or negligence. We acknowledge that we are not infallible. However, no Panamanian will be able to say we failed to make the maximum effort that our country rightfully demands of us. Thank you very much. [applause]

Noriega on Sovereignty, Canal

PA121912 Panama City Domestic Service in Spanish 1518 GMT 12 Aug 86

[Speech by General Manuel Antonio Noriega, commander in chief of the Panamanian Defense Forces, during a Sovereignty rally at the Cinco de Mayo Plaza -- live]

[Text] Mr President, brothers: Today I wish to begin this conversation with the spiritual guide of the psalmist, who says: They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth forever. For the rod of the wicked shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous. God [words indistinct] our pride and we will always thank you.

Here, in this historic plaza, a sanctuary for our nation, a military leader and ruler said during the struggle of another generation: Neither millions nor alms, we want justice. [applause] Those are the words of [the late] General Jose Antonio Remon Cantera, the general of 1953. Here, during the critical period of this struggle, another military leader judged colonialism by asking: Governor of what? [applause and chants of "Omar is present"]

We give a special welcome to the friendly delegation from Villa Neilly, Coto Brus, and Las Mellizas, from Costa Rica, who made a special trip to attend this rally. Welcome to all the men, women, farmers, and trade unionists from the mountains of Ocu. Welcome to the people of Chiriqui, Canazas, Santiago, La Arena, Quebro, Sona; the people from Los Santos province, who travelled from Las Tablas and Tonosi; the people from Herrera who are participating in great numbers; the people from Cocle; from western Panama, La Chorrera; the people from Darien, the Indians from Kuna Yala, from Choco; the Guaymi Indians; and the masses from San Miguelito, Rio Abajo, Parque Lefebre, Pedregal, Pacora, Curundu, Calidonia, Santa Ana, Ancon, El Chorrillo, and Chepo. [applause and chants "Gen Noriega, the people are present"]

Panamanian brothers, this Cinco de Mayo Plaza is today the cemetery of traitors. [applause] It is the cemetery of stateless persons.

It is the cemetery of those who flee abroad, persecuted by the shadow of their own infamy, and seek to take shelter, persecuted by the shadow of their own infamy, under the skirts of Miss Liberty [preceding two words in English] [chants]

Here is the convincing answer to those who seek to undermine the currents of the isthmian fatherland. This nation will not accept any more Bunau-Varillas or John Hays. We will not accept the reincarnation of the Monroes of the past century, or of the Panamanians who speak in Spanish but think and feel in English. We warn those who assimilate everything that we have turned our military cadres into soldiers who are aware of the dignified and exemplary history of Jose Domingo Espinar, Justo Arosemena, Tomas Martin Feuillet, Pedro Prestan, Victoriano Lorenzo, Guillermo Andreve, Mateo Iturralde; of the martyrs of the 1925 tenants movement, those who rejected the Filos-Hines agreement, those of the 1958 student movement, of the January 1964 martyrs, and of Omar Torrijos Herrera with the Canal Treaty. [chants of "Omar is present"]

The people who are here are our democracy. We, the Panamanian military men, believe in democracy, and we will insist on strengthening it, promoting it, and supporting it. However, this will be a democracy in the image of the Renacimiento farmers, of the men in the Chorrillo streets, Curundu, or the indians from Sambu. It cannot be a democracy imposed, demanded, or claimed by telex. It cannot be a class-structured democracy of the traumatized ones who pay northern lobbyists and want to return to the power that [words indistinct] where votes and candidates followed plans and owners. These people do not want to return, and will not return to a restricted democracy where the popular masses were a [word indistinct] guests at the electoral banquet.

For a long time, it was planned that the National Guard, the National Police of that time, would restrict themselves to taking care of drunks and dances, to persecuting ideologists, and to truncating rebellions and the hopes of workers and students. The Armed Forces were confined to their garrisons, where they were out of touch with the people's needs and hopes. On 16 December 1969 military doctrine changed. It became nationalistic, populist, and prodevelopment. Torrijos said: Never again will the Panamanian soldiers' bayonets point at the chests of students, workers, and women engaged in struggles or demanding respect for rights which are lawfully theirs. This principle, which has evolved, been polished, and adapted to the present, lies at the foundation of today's Panamanian Defense Forces.

The minority opposition sectors attack the Defense Forces because they are staffed by the children of lottery vendors and common people, because they no longer serve minority groups, as they did before 1968. Our helicopters and planes transport doctors, engineers, and teachers. They bring the people and government closer to each other. There are no bullets. There is no blood, sorrow, or death. We will not stray from the course we set for ourselves on 11 October: democracy with social justice.

We have [word indistinct] repeated that Panama is different from the countries of Central, South, and North America and the Caribbean. We know which way we are heading. We know how we will use our natural resources and geographical situation and how we will direct our foreign policy. That is why we are concerned about the path that will lead us into the year 2000.

We cannot allow nor would it be responsible to allow frustrations to accumulate as necessary personnel changes take place. This would lead to the collapse of the Canal at the beginning of the next century.

The Torrijos-Carter Treaties became a means to peacefully resolve the differences between Panama and the United States. The Panamanian people and the Defense Forces will see to it that those treaties are kept to the letter. In the continuous struggle for sovereignty, we want to be free to choose our own path and to live in peace and with respect. We are asking for no more, and we will not accept any less. [applause]

That is why we are concerned with the mystery of apportionments in the Canal Commission accounting records that speak of depriving Panama of 60 million [currency not specified]. This is a national security concern of ours. Another national security of ours regards Law 96-70 and the reappearance of a Canal area governor who is camouflaged as chief engineer. That is why we are concerned about the dual interpretation [of the treaties] on key security and sovereignty matters that subordinate spokesmen make. It worries us to see the Canal issue become a political issue in the November [U.S.] congressional elections. We are worried about the plan for a dirty war of slander as the prelude to conspiracy.

Regarding the defense of the Canal, General Galvin said that 10,000 men posted along the banks [of the Canal] will not be enough to defend it. I say that 10,000, 100,000 or 1 million men will not be enough. The defense of the Canal is not limited to having the latest military invention or technical advance. The Panama Canal will be safe only if those who live along its banks have the satisfaction of benefiting from the wealth it produces and so long as ships from all nations may transit it in line with the pro mundi beneficio principle. Following the people's mandate, the Defense Forces champion the banner of peace as the only possible alternative.

[Text] Our community has no room for hatred. It has no room for useless fights which stop production. The Panamanian people want peace, to find solutions for the big economic problems and overcome the IMF. The Panamanian people want unity to create work programs and peace to lower the cost of living. They want peace for education, to live well, and to have an honest labor code. [chants]

Traditionally, we have been and are friends of the U.S. people. However, we will not let colonialist leaders, defenders of apartheid and racism, together with the Panamanian Bunau-Varillas blemish our conquests in exchange for money.

It is easier to serve a group of privileged individuals than to serve the people. It is easier to bow down and yield than to stand firm and serve the homeland. It is easier to go to another country and spend a lot of money spreading lies against ones own nation than to come to a plaza, like the Cinco de Mayo Plaza, and see whether it is true that the people support them or believe in them.

I want to stress, as a guideline for work and as a slogan, that the nationalist success of the year 2000 does not lie in the distant goal of having that year approach as such, but on the daily work, our day to day work, to remain alert, united with loyalty and brotherhood, avoiding machinations, plots, and capitulations. [chants]

President Eric Arturo Delvalle, my brother, is pressured and questioned because members of the Armed Forces are directing the railroad and Renare [Department of Renewable Natural Resources]. However, who were the former administrators of the railroad? U.S. military men. Who delivered that piece of junk [mamotreto] to us? U.S. military men. Who took the nails off the railroad ties to give them away as souvenirs? The administrators. However, now they question the fact that the railroad's administrator is a Panamanian military man.

Regarding Renare, do you remember the Chilibre and Gatuncillo incidents in which the zonian police from Balboa surrounded the ranches, set them on fire, and kicked the people out of the area? That was done by uniformed men, and now they are criticizing the fact that Renare is run by a military man.

We tell foreign correspondents that the only exiles from Panama are backwardness, violence, illiteracy, and social injustice. There are no jails with political prisoners here. There is respect for foreign minorities here. There are no ghettos or racism here. We have human rights here, but not those understood as supply and demand to receive or deny loans. [sentence as heard]

To foreign correspondents we say that this nation is not Haiti or the Philippines. [applause] These armed forces do not have any Duvaliers, Ferdinand Marcos' or Tonton Macoutes. This nation has a name, and its name is Panama [interrupted by applause] and this commander does not give in or surrender. [applause, sporadic shouts: "Viva General Noriega]

COLUMNIST QUESTIONS PUBLIC SUPPORT FOR RALLY

PA122031 Panama City LA PRENSA in Spanish 12 Aug 86 p 1-A

["As of Today" column]

[Text] Today all the resources of the state will be used to satisfy the fancy and vanity of the general of the moment as yet more evidence -- as if more were needed -- that little has changed in Panama in the past 16 years. The apparent purpose of today's public rally is the nationalist affirmation of the Panamanian desires regarding the Canal, allegedly in danger due to the plots, conspiracies, and other similar nonsense that are the product of the imagination of those who lack arguments to face the accusers. The reality is quite different. The rally intends to show that General [Manuel Antonio] Noreiga and the president -- in this order -- have the support and trust of the majority of the people. This is a useless venture. Those who participate know very well that the reasons they have for attending have nothing to do with the national interest or the citizens' values, and, therefore, regardless of how well attended the rally is, it will not be interpreted as a spontaneous expression of support for Noriega and Delvalle. Most of those who will not attend that rally are fully aware of how a public rally of this nature is organized and financed, and they will not be tricked, either. The same happens abroad to those who are interested in what is happening in Panama. However, those who unfairly exploit power will be satisfied because they believe that someone will be tricked by the appearance of the people's support, bought with public resources. The only thing that the public rally will show is that today, as yesterday, the state is at the service of the armed forces, and in particular of whatever the general of the moment decides.

ECONOMY MINISTERS TO DISCUSS CACM 19-20 AUGUST

[Text] The presidents of the Central Banks and the economy ministers of Central America will meet on 19 and 20 August in Managua to approve mechanisms that will reactivate the CACM, according to Nicaraguan Foreign Trade Minister Alejandro Martinez Cuenca. During this meeting, to be held at the Cesar Augusto Silva Convention Center in Managua, Guatemalan, Salvadoran, Honduran, Costa Rican, and Nicaraguan proposals will be presented for the approval of the Central American Imports Rights System, DICA.

The DICA seeks to promote trade in the Central American area, which has been in decline the past few years. From trade that exceeded $1 billion, it decreased to a level of $560 million in 1985. This decrease is due in part to the international crisis affecting these countries' impoverished economies with high import costs for their finished internal consumption products and products for trade within the isthmus. The decrease in trade has resulted in the collection of little foreign exchange to promote industrial production with a view to exporting within the area.

Nevertheless, the DICA is trying to make each of these countries pay their imports in their local currency. The DICA project will be like a large-scale exchange to save the CACM, which must be accompanied by the political willingness of each of the countries which -- despite the deterioration of the prices of their products on the international market and the political problems troubling the area -- are trying to maintain economic unity, which constitutes part of their political willingness.

Simultaneously with this forum of Central Bank presidents and economy ministers, the president of the Guatemalan Central Bank and his economy minister will hold additional meetings with their Nicaraguan counterparts to negotiate the foreign debt and promote bilateral trade between the two nations. Similar meetings will be held with the president of Costa Rica's Central Bank and the economy minister to negotiate the foreign debt and conclude negotiations to bring Nicaragua's payment to Costa Rica to a level in keeping with the country's war economy.

COSTA RICA

HAGUE EMBASSY PLANNED TO HANDLE MANAGUA SUIT

PA131601 San Jose Radio Reloj in Spanish 1200 GMT 13 Aug 86

[Text] Foreign Minister Rodrigo Madrigal has said that Costa Rica will open an embassy in The Hague to handle the Sandinist suit. This step is necessary to attend to the accusation made by the Sandinist regime and presented against Costa Rica at the International Court of Justice [ICJ]. The country will have to assign a large amount of resources to defend Costa Rican honor at the international level, and consequently it will even hire a group of foreign attorneys.

Former Deputy Edgar Ugalde Alvarez, a lawyer who specializes in international law and who has vast experience in juridical matters, will be hired as the judicial representative at the ICJ. A commission of local attorneys has been created to coordinate actions with the foreign attorneys who will be hired to conduct Costa Rica's defense at the ICJ.

Former Foreign Ministers Fernando Volio of the National Liberation Party and Gonzalo J. Facio of the Social Christian Unity Party, as well as former Supreme Court President Ulises Odio Santos. [sentence as heard] Madrigal said that this commission will coordinate all the work for the defense of Costa Rica and will include the participation of representatives of the various political parties.

GOVERNMENT, REBELS VIEW UPCOMING TALKS IN MEXICO

Viera Speaks

[Interview with Deputy Communications Minister Roberto Viera by Rene Hurtado on 13 August in San Salvador — recorded]

[Text] [Hurtado] The Salvadoran Government today delivered a proposal to Msgr Arturo Rivera y Damas, who is acting as the mediator in the dialogue, accepting the preparatory talks with the FMLN-FDR in Mexico City. Roberto Viera, deputy communications minister and the government's official spokesman on matters related to the dialogue, reported that the Salvadoran ambassador in Mexico has received instructions to report to the Mexican Government the Salvadoran Government's decision to hold preparatory talks at the Salvadoran Embassy in Mexico City.

Meanwhile, according to Radio Venceremos, the FMLN-FDR insisted that the dialogue be held in San Salvador, for reasons of facilities and accessibility to all parties involved, and has ruled out the eastern zone, particularly Berlin, San Francisco Gotera, and San Miguel, alleging that these are militarized zones which offer no guarantees to the FMLN-FDR or the people who will participate in the dialogue.

In relation to these aspects, I will interview Deputy Communications Minister Roberto Viera. What can you tell us about the government's proposal to the FMLN-FDR regarding the meeting scheduled for 20 August?

[Viera] This is the government's position: The government has agreed to hold preparatory talks with the FMLN-FDR in Mexico City from 19 to 26 August. The FMLN-FDR has announced that the meeting will begin on 20 August. The government has agreed to this. The government is going to appoint a three-member commission which will discuss the mechanisms to be implemented during the third dialogue. The government has reported to Msgr Rivera y Damas its decision to participate in the preparatory talks in Mexico. We have also asked our ambassador in Mexico to let the Mexican Government know of our decision.

[Hurtado] About the government's commission, it has been said that Julio Adolfo Rey Prendes, you, and a military chief are the members of the commission. Is that true?

[Viera] Nothing has been decided yet about the members of the commission. Before leaving for the Dominican Republic, President Duarte is going to appoint the commission. Meanwhile, the National Dialogue Commission is analyzing and considering the objectives and probable results of the third dialogue.

[Hurtado] Has the government assumed a new position in its new proposal? Has it submitted new conditions for the preparatory talks?

[Viera] The government's new proposal simply reaffirms the position it has maintained and the desire to hold the third dialogue as soon as possible. It also insists on holding the dialogue in the eastern zone. We feel that because it is the zone most affected by the constant state of war, holding the dialogue there could help build some faith and hope. In the eastern zone the guerrilla commanders could see for themselves how the people feel about the war. We also think it is more practical, because the zone is more accessible to the guerrilla commanders. Commander Villalobos could travel to the zone without any problem. As you recall, Commander Villalobos did not attend the first meeting in La Palma, nor the second in Ayagualo, because he could not make it for some reason or another. If we hold the third dialogue in the eastern zone, I am sure that he will make it. The Red Cross and the diplomatic corps accredited in our country will see that he is given all guarantees so that he can participate in the third dialogue. These are some of things we are going to talk about during the preparatory meeting in Mexico. We are going to discuss the mechanisms and procedures to be used during the third dialogue.

[Hurtado] According to Radio Venceremos, the guerrillas have accused the government of trying to postpone the dialogue. The guerrillas want to hold the third dialogue in San Salvador, so that all sectors can participate, as well as the local and international news media. The guerrillas have complained that San Francisco Gotera, San Miguel, and Berlin are virtual military fortresses. They said that on an average there is 1 soldier for every 20 civilians in San Miguel. According to the FMLN, the Atonal Battalion has its operations base in Berlin. In San Francisco Gotera, the Treasury Police and the National Guard are all over the place, the FMLN reported. What do you have to say?

[Viera] Let me tell you a couple of things. First, the Salvadoran Armed Forces is an institution with duties in San Miguel, San Salvador, Santa Ana, and in every corner of the country. The Armed Forces carries out the orders imparted by the government, and when the government gives guarantees the Armed Forces complies with them. The arguments used by the guerrillas are absolutely false. The Armed Forces were in charge of the security in Ayagualo. The Atonal Battalion and the 1st Brigade were in charge of public order in the zone. The FMLN-FDR representatives came to El Salvador and went to Ayagualo. No one interferred with their movements. Do you remember the demonstrations held there? The Mothers Committee and all the political groups that sympathized with the FMLN-FDR were present. The Armed Forces were there and did not interfere with anyone. The Armed Forces proved that it is a professional institution. The truth is they are only trying to delay the dialogue and make changes to cause more problems.

As far as establishing a date for the dialogue, they criticized the government for not wanting a dialogue, for not setting a date or place for the dialogue; now we give them a date, time, place and everything else, and they react negatively. Now they want the commission to meet until 20 September. The Salvadoran people should understand what the government's position is and believe that the government is serious and sincere in its dialogue proposal, to help us find peace.

In fact, the FMLN-FDR has proven with its arguments that it is more interested in creating obstacles with dilatory arguments than in setting a date and place for the third dialogue.

Duarte on Rebel Demands

PA140008 San Salvador Radio Cadena YSU in Spanish 1800 GMT 13 Aug 86

[By Carlos Mario Marquez]

[Text] President Jose Napoleon Duarte will appoint the commission tomorrow that will represent the government at the preparatory meeting for the third round of talks on 20 August in Mexico. The president talked this morning with the news media about the commission which he will send to Mexico.

[Begin Duarte recording] My government presented a proposal to the bishop for a preparatory meeting at the Salvadoran Embassy in Mexico City. Thus, it will be held on Salvadoran territory, from 19 to 26 August and [words indistinct] the meeting -- probably more than one -- so we have already ordered the delegation that will represent us to depart on 19 August. I imagine they will begin the meetings on 20 August. I will probably decide who will comprise the commission on 14 August, during the afternoon meeting; I have not decided yet. [end recording]

When the president was asked about the fronts' refusal to meet at the Salvadoran Embassy in Mexico City, President Duarte explained:

[Begin recording] [Duarte] Well, this shows you how stubborn they are, but it is not important. They obviously wanted it to be held in Salvadoran territory; that is why I offered them the Salvadoran Embassy in Mexico City, because it is Salvadoran territory. Now it turns out that they do not accept this, either. Theirs is an attitude of permanent hostility concerning minor details, things without importance, and mechanisms. They only want to be in the news; all they want is to maintain a permanent confrontation about minor things.

I am not worried about minor things; I want to discuss fundamental things. All I want to discuss is: Are they willing to join the democratic process? Are they willing to give up violence as the way to attain power? I want them to say if they are willing to understand that the democratic process implies that power is attained through the people's will; likewise, the person in power should know when to assume the post and when to step down.

Consequently, no one should form schemes to impose external governments on the people -- like that of Fidel Castro or Ortega, who no longer talks about elections, who does not want to give the people the opportunity to choose their own destiny. That is what I want to talk about, that is the topic I am interested in. I am not interested in whether it will be held on 19, 21, or 20 August; or whether it will be held here or there. These are the topics that they are using to create unnecessary confrontations.

[Marquez] What about the place? Have you agreed on a place?

[Duarte] Well, I have offered all the cities in the eastern side [laughs] so that they may choose. They insist... [changes thought] I do not know if you are aware of the document that they have presented. The document says: First of all, it should be held in San Salvador; second, it should last a long time. They want to be here 4 to 5 days, meet with every sector, hold forums, and get permanent publicity.

They also want to hold a meeting with the government and all the sectors, but they also want a big audience. You can imagine what it would be like to discuss our people's peace, shouting at each other, insulting each other, and you photographers taking lots of pictures. What possibility would we have of reaching an understanding? Furthermore, and this is more grave, they say that the city of San Salvador should be demilitarized, and they will come with their armed guerrilla fighters to San Salvador. You can imagine what this will mean. This would create an atmosphere of violence; it would lead to an overall confrontation -- and this does not contribute to creating a peaceful atmosphere.

Thus, I said: No, gentlemen, this cannot be. We must find a place where we can meet -- let the journalists come, let the people come -- but it should not be a concentration...[corrects himself] a confrontation, because if a group brings 20,000 followers, the other group will bring 50,000; and if those meet on a street, it would take only a single shot for all our peace efforts to be rendered null and void. Consequently, I have proposed that we go to a place where the people are suffering the direct effects of all this. [end recording]

When the president was told that the rebel leaders have stated that the dialogue cannot be held in any of the three eastern zone cities which were proposed because the military commanders do not obey the president the Salvadoran president said:

[Begin Duarte recording] First of all, I would like to tell you that this is completely false. The argument that there are some commanders who refuse to obey orders is completely false. I personally sent Commander Ochoa Perez to La Palma to meet with the people and tell them that the troops would leave La Palma and would not return during the 3 days that the zone would remain demilitarized. Nevertheless, the guerrillas -- and there are witnesses who can assert this; you are probably among these witnesses -- came armed and had La Palma completely surrounded. They set up armed posts on all the roads to the city; I came unarmed, without protection. Thus, I adopted the decision to talk precisely about this.

During the second meeting, at Ayagualo... [changes thought] I think you all know that there was a triple protection plan. First, we had the National Police; second, the 1st Infantry Brigade; and third, the Atlacatl Battalion. You could see that everyone was allowed through; the women, university students, everyone passed without problem. So, it is absolutely false... [change thought] Furthermore, I guarantee with my life the protection of those who are appointed delegates to attend the dialogue. I think that the president's life is enough guarantee for anyone. [end recording]

[Telephone interview with FDR leader Hector Oqueli Colindres in Mexico City, by Carolo Mario Marquez in San Salvador on 13 August -- recorded]

[Text] [Marquez] FDR leader Hector Oqueli Colindres has contacted us from Mexico City to give us his opinon regarding the preparatory meeting at the Salvadoran Embassy in Mexico City.

[Oqueli] I want to report to the Salvadoran people that a preparatory meeting has been scheduled for 20 August.

What we have to decide now is the exact place where we are going to meet. So far, we have agreed on the country, we have agreed on Mexico. However, we were somewhat surprised to learn that the Salvadoran Government still has not officially notified the Mexican Government about it. It is like going to a stranger's home without letting him know. The main reason for the preparatory meeting is to decide on the place, date, and security measures for the third round of talks. These are the points we are going to discuss. We have already appointed our delegation, which is comprised of companeros of both fronts. In due time, we will release their names.

[Marquez] This morning President Duarte said that the Salvadoran delegation will be appointed on 14 August and will leave on 19 August for Mexico. He did not say where you are going to meet, but he has offered the Salvadoran Embassy. Would you accept this proposal from President Duarte?

[Oqueli] It is our opinion that whether we meet at the Embassy or at the ambassador's home, we would not have the privacy we need to decide on the date, place, and security measures. If we meet there, we would have a lot of people trying to get us to make statements and give details about the meeting.

AZCONA ON MARITIME TREATY, ALLEGED GAG LAWS

PA140307 Tegucigalpa Voz de Honduras Network in Spanish 1130 GMT 12 Aug 86

[Jose Domingo Flores report on "exclusive" telephone interview with President Jose Azcona Hoyo in Tegucigalpa; date not given -- recorded]

[Excerpts] [Flores] President Jose Azcona Hoyo has discussed with our press department the results of his meeting with General Humberto Regalado Hernandez, Honduran Armed Forces commander in chief:

[Azcona] Well, he briefed me on the problem of Deputy Roberto Zelaya, the problem at INA [Natioanl Agrarian Institute], the visit that was paid him by members of the FUTH, the United Federation of Honduran Workers, and other topics we have to deal with every day and more so since my return from Colombia on 9 August. [passage omitted]

[Flores] The agreement signed with former Colombian President Belisario Betancur has given rise to strong criticism against you. In addition, it is said it will [words indistinct] the National Congress. What do you think about this, Mr President?

[Azcona] I don't see any reason for the criticism, because I think that the settlement reached through this treaty is good for Honduras, (?that is to say), the treaty was signed by the two foreign ministers, but of course this was done with the blessing and approval of the presidents. I have already given quite a few explanations about this. Before reaching the decision to sign the agreement and to authorize the foreign minister to sign it, we held several sessions at which Armed Forces and Foreign Ministry advisers were present. We reached the conclusion that it was best for Honduras to sign the agreement, that is, the treaty delimiting this part of our territorial waters.

The important thing is that the beneficiaries of this treaty, who are fishermen of our Islas Department, fully support it because they know that Honduras' sovereignty could not be effectively exercised over those shoals. Now that this treaty exists, at least the Rosalinda Cay and part of the Serranilla Cay are part of Honduras' territorial waters, and they will no longer face the danger of being captured [words indistinct] Colombia, as was the case previously. [passage omitted]

[Flores] This agreement must be approved by the National Congress. Have you issued any instructions personally to the deputies?

[Azcona] No, I will not talk to any deputy or anyone else about its approval. I have clearly said so. The foreign minister has the pertinent instructions, and he has already given the required explanations. It is an exclusive function of those who exercise the sovereign representation of the Honduran people to ratify that treaty. If they do not ratify it, I think we will miss an opportunity to delimit a very important part of our maritime boundaries. If it is ratified, all right, and if it is not, I will not make any efforts before any deputies to obtain this ratification. [passage omitted]

[Flores] Did you meet at any time with the Nicaraguan vice president during your visit to Colombia?

[Azcona] No, I did not meet with Dr Sergio Ramirez anywhere. [passage omitted] I did not have an opportunity to exchange even a few words with the Nicaraguan vice president, because we did not meet anywhere.

[Flores] Regarding freedom of speech and the attack on journalist Rodrigo Wong Arevalo, the president said:

[Azcona] We have talked with the Armed Forces commander, and he has informed me that they are conducting investigations of both cases as well as the case of Deputy Rodolfo Zelaya. I think that the case of journalist Wong Arevalo was regrettable, and it is under investigation.

[Flores] [Words indistinct] gag law in our country. What is your opinion about this, Mr President?

[Azcona] [laughs] How can there be a law to gag newsmen in our country when you have called the presidential office and I am answering you by telephone? [passage indistinct] There is full freedom of the press here, and I am demonstrating this fact at this moment. These dispatches and reports by radio stations are full of nonsense. Anyone who reads the newspapers and listens to the Honduran stations [laughs] can never imagine that a gag law can exist here. The exact opposite is true. Maybe the gag law is for us, not for the newsmen. There is no sense in this. The things that happen are regrettable. However, the government respects freedom of expression absolutely, like nowhere else in the world, I think. [passage omitted]

[Flores] (?Have you asked for) an investigation into the controversy between the FUSEP [Public Security Force] commander and the chief of military intelligence?

[Azcona] Yes. It has been requested. As I said, even without requesting it the Armed Forces is conducting an investigation. I do not want to make any advance reports, but pertinent investigations are indeed being conducted. [passage omitted]

NICARAGUA

NUNEZ LINKS U.S., CONSTITUTIONAL DEBATE ISSUE

PA131925 Managua Sandino in Spanish 1930 GMT 12 Aug 86

[Text] Commander Carlos Nunez, president of the Legislative Assembly, said today that the Constitution will be drafted with or without the Liberals and Conservatives. Commander Nunez rejected any kind of political blackmail by the opposition parties, which are trying to set conditions for their participation in the drafting of the constitution.

Commander Nunez made this statement upon declaring open the new stage of the constitutional debate, which consists of drawing up an opinion on the constitution that will be presented to the Assembly plenum in September for discussion and approval. In this context, the revolutionary leader asserted that there is incontestable evidence that the absence of certain parties from the contitutional debates forms part of an overall sabotage plan by the U.S. Administration.

Nunez also said it is regrettable that Virgilio Godoy, president of the Independent Liberal Party [PLI], has taken the wrong path and is lending himself to the dirty game of the Reagan administration.

Regarding the position of the Conservatives, Commander Nunez asserted that the FSLN and he, as president of the Legislative Assembly, are prepared to engage in fraternal dialogue with the parties represented in the Assembly to iron out differences. However, he clearly stated that he will not yield to any type of blackmail. Commander Nunez reasserted that the only political dialogue in Nicaragua is the one that takes place at the Assembly, and therefore neither the FSLN nor the revolutionary government regard the abstentionist parties that comprise the Ramiro Sacasa Coordinating Board as valid interlocutors. By this he referred to a proposal that was recently submitted by the Social Christian Party.

[Begin Nunez recording] The U.S. Administration is not just promoting a policy of division. Through its officials, the U.S. Administration is promoting an overall plan aimed at getting the maximum number of parties represented at the Legislative Assembly to completely withdraw from the work on the constitution. To achieve this, they have not hesitated in attempting to convince the leaders of various political parties or in inviting them to the embassy, while at party headquarters officials identify those individuals who interest them. We are witnessing the beginning of a new struggle, which will not only include threats but will be undertaken every day, as attempts are made to convince legislators or patriotic political leaders who disagree with the FSLN not to lend themselves to that kind of maneuver.

I have said this before: The U.S. Government is advancing an overall strategy intent on fostering simultaneous offensives on the military, international, and domestic levels, while trying to establish an internal front. All this is aimed at isolating Nicaragua from the rest of Central America; from a broader perspective, from Latin America; and on an international level, from Europe.

It does not frighten us that the PLI is not here. However, it must be said that this is part of an overall strategy. [end recording]

LIMA DAILY INTERVIEWS INTERIOR MINISTER BORGE

PY122318 Lima EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 30 Jul 86 pp 19-21, 23-26

[Interview with Interior Minister Tomas Borge by Rodolfo Mattarollo, "after Holy Week," place not given]

[Excerpts] [Mattarollo] At this crucial moment that Nicaragua and Central America are experiencing, international solidarity has perhaps not yet developed sufficiently, although the awakening of a movement of solidarity has been observed recently in the United States.

[Borge] The Nicaraguan revolution has often been accused of being a new Cuban revolution. The truth, though, is that the revolution in Nicaragua is for a new Nicaragua, but it could also become a new Vietnam. This certainly worries the U.S. people, who experienced a serious trauma in the war against the Vietnamese people. That war could be repeated here if the U.S. Government should decide to intervene and recreate the Vietnamese trauma. The last speech by President Reagan was unreasonable and instinctive. We were accused of being drug traffickers. The center -- I don't really know its name -- of drugs in the United States affirmed that it is absolutely untrue that we are drug traffickers. For the second time this agency affirmed that Nicaragua is not a link in the chain of drug trafficking. Reagan's accusation that we set a synagogue on fire was denied by Jews themselves.

Then came the accusation that we had sent arms to Brazil and other Latin American countries, which was also denied by the Brazilian Government and other South American governments. The charges that we have supplied arms to the Salvadoran revolutionaries have never been substantiated. In sum, a slew of imprudent and unrestrained charges made by Reagan have backfired, because the bold lies, although they had an immediate effect on the U.S. public, can be easily refuted by facts. This partly explains the defeat of the Reagan policy in the House of Representatives in a vote on $100 million in aid to the contras. It is obvious that Reagan has little regard for the public opinion of Latin America, the world, or to some degree, of the United States, since the majority of the American people do not favor either direct or indirect aggression against our country. The U.S. majority is not in favor of direct intervention or intervention by proxy through the counterrevolutionaries. Nevertheless, we do not consider the defeat of the Reagan policy in Congress a victory for Nicaragua.

[Mattarollo] For 5 years the Nicaraguan people have been suffering the armed aggression of the contras and the United States. Mention has been made of weariness in the social sectors, which is visible in the difficulties encountered by the Patriotic Military Service. [SMP].

[Borge] I believe that the real problems in the military service have been exaggerated because the Sandinist Popular Army has qualitatively improved its ranks with personnel from the SMP. Logically, there have been minority sectors that indeed avoided the SMP. It has been resisted by some parents because this is not a John Wayne war, but a real war, and they were concerned that their sons might die. This unjust war has already cost us lives. There are also many youths who, because of their nature, are afraid of the war. There are also some who, because of their political position, do not want to defend the revolution. Many who avoided the SMP joined the ranks of the counterrevolution and died there. The great majority of Nicaraguan youths, however, have participated. We can even speak of an obligatory military service that is in fact a voluntary service. Nearly all the youths who joined the SMP did so under the provisions of an obligatory law, but also by their own free will.

Another phenomenon occurred. The requirements of the war were increasingly demanding, and the military training of the youth was relatively insufficient. Only with time was the level of military training of the youths who joined improved, and consequently the number of casualties in clashes with the counterrevolutionaries declined. This improved the morale of the fighters, and this has also been a reason youths were more strongly attracted to an obviously winning army. [passage omitted]

[Mattarollo] On one occasion you promised the enemy you would rather forgive than resort to revenge. However, in the face of attacks how are you going to prevent a spiral of violence, keep your humane feelings, and resist the madness of horror?

[Borge] There is a sentence that summarizes our concept in relation to the contradictions of the enemy. It is as old as the FSLN and it is in full agreement with the teachings of Carlos Fonseca: "Implacable in combat and generous in victory." I believe that generosity is part of the essence of the revolution and I am convinced that no attack, as act of violence, or brutality will weaken our historic decision to be generous.

[Mattarollo] The need for a new people's identity in Central American society has been discussed. The original element of this identity is the fusion of Christianity and Marxism, which is forging a new cultural and psychological identity among the Nicaraguan people.

[Borge] I believe that historic experience is part of every revolution. There may be talk of something new which is actually the result of a historic experience in which the people's identity, if we talk about people, has obtained a new dimension. If we study the revolutionary changes throughout history, we can see that independent of the social class that headed the revolution, the great masses have played an active part in it and no revolution could be possible without them. In Nicaragua the people's participation had particular characteristics which created the basis for a new historic experience. The people's participation was very significant because the revolution's victory was achieved through an insurrection comprising a wide range of forces. However, the main participants in this revolution were the poor people of this country. [passage omitted]

[Mattarollo] Is the relationship between Christian ethics and revolutionary ethics seen more easily in practice?

[Borge] We believe that revolutionary ethics is not at odds with traditional ethics although revolutionary ethics has higher standards. According to our own historic experience some Christian principles are quite valid in the revolutionary society. It has been preached to "clothe the naked." This was said at a theology congress in Madrid, but we believe that "clothe the naked" means develop the textile industry and not distribute second-hand skirts to local jails on weekends. "To feed the hungry" means to develop a land reform program to produce more so that people can eat. To be consistent with the mercy of justice means to develop a modern and highly humanitarian penitentiary system. Thus, one is consistent with the principles that have been traditionally regarded as Christian. In Latin America we must transfer these principles to a new level and implement them in accordance with a real situation arising from a revolutionary transformation, as in the Nicaraguan case. "Love one another," states the rule. However, to rescue the exploiting classes, so they cease being exploiting classes, is a greater expression of love. I believe that to be able to actually love the bourgeoisie, we must suppress them as bourgeoisie. Suppress the bourgeoisie as a social class in historical terms. Do not interpret me as saying that we have already decided to suppress the bourgeoisie in Nicaragua! For the time being we are trying to civilize the bourgeoisie. However, in the end, I believe that some day the exploiting classes will disappear from human history, and men will truly become brothers to each other. [passage omitted]

[Mattarollo] The Nicaraguan revolution is usually examined in the light of political pluralism by the West. In the face of aggression, however, it is not easy to maintain a pluralist democracy; the temptation of authoritarianism can gain strength.

[Borge] The authoritarian temptation can be automatically blocked when real democracy exists. The fundamental condition for the existence of real democracy is national independence. Dependency generates the need for internal repression. There are no people who can be resigned to dependency, because dependency creates discontent. Dependency not only injures the dignity of a country but it also entails exploitation. To keep people who are not resigned to being dependent under the yoke of dependency, an antidemocratic mechanism must be created. The lack of democracy is tantamount to dependency. Independence begets democracy and an independent country does not need to suppress democracy. In a democracy, repression is limited to the enemies of independence and democracy. The law-enforcement agencies of the state are exclusively intended to deal with those minority sectors that are enemies of democracy and independence, which because they are minority sectors are easy to control. In Nicaragua, the "state of emergency" is nothing but the state's law-enforcement tool to deal with the enemies of democracy and national independence.

[Mattarollo] In "Face the People" the weekly television program in which the government reports to the people, a Miskito woman recently forcefully demanded the right of criticism, distinguishing criticism of government officials from criticism of the revolution. She also spoke against the tendency to discourage dissent.

[Borge] I do not have the slightest doubt that there are some who oppose criticism under the pretext that criticism is directed at the revolution. I believe that the main critic of the revolution should be the revolution itself, and that the revolutionary leaders should be the main critics. Bureaucracy begets corruption. Surely some bureaucrats will be hostile to criticism. Bureaucracy is therefore the worst enemy of the revolution, after imperialism. By the way, that program you referred to is a program in which criticism is not only possible but necessary. Criticism is a necessary tool not only within the Sandinist Front, but for the masses also. It is an indispensable mechanism of vigilance, which should be encouraged, without allowing radical criticism, criticism for the sake of criticism, but allowing constructive criticism.

CENTRAL BANK, GOVERNMENT,COMPLY WITH IBRD

[Excerpts] The government will draw from reserves of more than 20 billion guaranies set aside in the national budget to service its foreign debt. This is to comply with an agreement reached with the IBRD [International Bank for Reconstruction and Development]. These reserves will provide funds to cover the difference between what the Central Bank will pay out for every dollar received through IBRD credits and what the IBRD requires the Central Bank to pay out. This means that to comply with the IBRD requirement each dollar granted in credit be converted into 320 guranies going into the internal market, the Central Bank will put up 240 guaranies, and the government will put up 80 guaranies. [Passage omitted]

Law 1166, which approved the nation's general budget for the present fiscal year, apportions 50.331 billion guaranies to this year's foreign debt payments. This sum is higher than is needed to meet this year's $185-million foreign obligations, because at the current rate of exchange of 160 guaranies per dollar for this operation, 29.6 billion guaranies will be sufficient. Therefore, the remaining 20.731 billion guaranies in the government's reserve fund will be used to cover the 80-guarani difference between the 240 guaranies per dollar exchange rate -- which the Central Bank will negotiate for the IBRD-supplied dollars -- and the 320-guarani per dollar exchange rate at which the government has agreed to negotiate. LEADERS REACT TO U.S. SENATE CONTRA AID VOTE

Panamanian Foreign Minister's Remarks

[Text] Panama City, 14 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- The U.S. Senate's approval of $100 million in aid for the contras "is a decision which does not help the Contadora peace process," Panamanian Foriegn Minister Jorge Abadia Arias stated today.

Abadia added that, nevertheless, "the peace process is not helped by closing the news media in Nicaragua and the explusion of clergymen from that country."

"The aid to any irregular force in the area, regardless of its ideology, hinders the Contadora Group's peace efforts and makes our task even more difficult," Abadia told ACAN-EFE.

The Panamanian representative to the Contadora Group, which includes Venezuela, Mexico, and Colombia, did not reject the possibility that the peace organization might reply to a Nicaraguan appeal to study the matter, if the country requests that.

New Colombian President Virgilio Barco stated his interest, during his inauguration, "in reactivating the Contadora Group's efforts." "There is a possibility that a new meeting" might be discussed during Joaquin Balaguer's inauguration this weekend in the Dominican Republic," Abadia said.

Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega said today in Managua, shortly before departing for Santo Domingo, that he would discuss the current situation in this country with the Contadora Group, as well as "the danger of an aggression."

According to Ortega, the United States has violated international law by directly intervening in the internal affairs of a sovereign state and helping rebel forces oppose a legally established government.

"We respect the decisions of all the presidents who are our friends, without exception, because we want them to respect our own president's decision," Abadia said.

Uruguayan Senators' Condemnation

PY141938 Montevideo Radio El Espectador Network in Spanish 1600 GMT 14 Aug 86

[Text] All Uruguayan political sectors today criticized the U.S. Senate decision to approve the $100-million aid package for the Nicaraguan contras, because this step could delay the democratization of Latin American.

El Espectador this morning talked with Senators Eduardo Paz Aguirre, of the Colorado Party, Guillermo Garcia Costa, of the Blanco Party, and Enrique Martinez Moreno, of the Broad Front.

Senator Paz Aguirre said the U.S. Senate decision shows disregard for Latin American feelings and violates the law.

[Begin Paz Aguirre recording] I want to reiterate what I have already said. The U.S. Government and Congress have made a serious mistake. The House of Representatives had already approved the $100 million in aid for the contras, and now the Senate approved it, narrowly, in a 53 to 47 vote. This allows the U.S. Government to provide the aid to the Nicaraguan contras.

I believe this is a serious mistake, because it clearly violates international law. No country is entitled to meddle in the domestic affairs of another country in such an improper manner. Even further, no country is entitled to openly provide financial support, as the United States is doing now, to military troops that will operate from third countries, like Honduras, which are not entitled to serve as a beachhead or as a spring board for an armed offensive against a neighboring country.

This U.S. decision to finance and support revolutionary movements against an established government, no matter the origin of that government, has further complicated and aggravated the problems and conflicts that have long affected Central America. [end recording]

For his part, Blanco Party Senator Guillermo Garcia Costa said that the Uruguayan Senate and Government are likely to issue a statement reflecting our opposition to the U.S. Senate decision.

[Begin Garcia Costa recording, in progress] ...and I obviously expect that all Uruguayans and Latin Americans will agree. This attitude on the part of this great power has caused great displeasure and disappointment. With impunity, the United States has violated international treaties and the rules of international coexistence. This attitude will create new conflicts, which will emerge in the future, and will inflict very serious wounds that will be very hard to heal. This makes it very difficult for Latin American countries to maintain the kind of relations they have always wanted to have with the United States, which has turned this effort into a very difficult task.

One clearly realizes that this type of action can lead to chaos. Despite all this, the step has already been taken. Well, may God keep the situation from worsening to the point we fear, that is, to a situation of new conflicts that will add fuel to the flames. [end recording]

In turn, Broad Front Senator Enrique Martinez Moreno, of the 99 list, said the situation which the U.S. aid can cause in Central America could spark a world crisis. He believes that the $100 million will not be enough, because the contras will not know how to spend it.

[Begin Martinez Moreno recording] Well, the U.S. Senate decision to support Reagan was predictable, bacause in the Senate the Republican Party holds a majority that it does not have in the House. Therefore, I am not surprised that Reagan succeeded by seven or eight votes in his plan to obtain a large amount of money, over $100 million, to destabilize the Nicaraguan Government. This is the objective of this second Theodore Roosevelt. He once again wants to use the big stick policy as his preferred weapon in his Caribbean backyard, as they call it. This is an old policy which does not surprise us at all, especially since it comes from Republican Party leaders, who are the most faithful representatives of U.S. imperialism in that region. [end recording]

ADMIRAL AROSA COMMENTS ON DEFENSE, AWACS DEAL

[Text] Buenos Aires, 14 Aug (NA) -- Navy Chief of Staff Vice Admiral Ramon Arosa today stated that his force prefers the title of "commander" for the senior Naval officer who heads the Navy. He explained that the title should contain just one word, "commander" because there is only one commander in chief, who, according to the Constitution, is the president of the Republic.

Arosa made this statement at a meeting of the Senate Defense Committee, where he was invited to express the Navy's opinion on the defense bill which has been approved by the Chamber of Deputies and is now under study by the Senate.

Arosa, who was welcomed by Senator Antonio Berhongarary, president of the Defense Committee, indicated that "on matters of defense the Navy wants legislation to be as complete as possible, something that could last for centuries."

The Navy chief said that the Armed Forces intelligence services should not get involved in domestic operations "if it involves watching over other sectors of the national community." He indicated, however, that "intelligence operations inside the country are also necessary for national defense in the face of a foreign enemy."

When asked about a press report on the possibility that the Navy may exchange two missile frigates with Saudi Arabia as partial payment for two AWACS airplanes equipped with sophisticated equipment for detecting enemy forces, Arosa said, "I am not aware of this."

About the eventual destination of the airplanes if the exchange does take place, Arosa said, "if the airplanes are equipped for submarine detection they should be for the Navy, but if they are equipped for other operations they should go to the Air Force."

The meeting was held in the Rosado Hall of the Senate and was also attended by Senators Adolfo Gass, Juan Trilla, Carlos Gomez Centurion, and Felix Bravo Herrea.

NICARAGUAN MISSION ON ICJ RULING VISITS

[Text] Buenos Aires, 14 Aug (DYN) -- Nicaraguan diplomats here today concluded a mission aimed at thoroughly reporting on a ruling by the International Court of Justice [ICJ] in the Hague, condemning the U.S. military intervention in Nicaragua, that small Central American country.

The informative mission was headed by Carlos Arguello, a Nicaraguan lawyer who held meetings with Raul Alconada Sempe, the Latin American affairs under secretary of the Foreign Ministry; Adolfo Gass, the chairman of the Senate's Foreign Relations Committee; the Radical Civic Union [UCR], Peronist Renewal faction and Intransigent Party leaders.

Arguello, who is the Nicaraguan ambassador to the Netherlands and the head of the mission of Nicaraguan lawyers to the ICJ, was accompanied during the meetings by Nicaraguan ambassador to Argentina Fernando Guzman Cuadra.

Incidentally, the Nicaraguan ambassador to Argentina praised the government led by Raul Alfonsin for "its active negotiations for world peace" and especially for the support given to the Contadora Group to peacefully solve the Central American conflict.

Before returning to the Netherlands, and after completing a 1-week visit to Brazil and Argentina, Arguello held a press conference, giving an account of the 12-to-1 ruling handed down by the court on 27 June, condemning the U.S. military intervention in Nicaragua and asking the Reagan administration to indemnify the small Central American country.

COMMUNIQUE ON FISHING PACT WITH USSR, U.K. RESPONSE

[Text] Buenos Aires, 14 Aug (TELAM) -- The Foreign Ministry has said that the fishing agreement signed between Argentina and the Soviet Union refers to the Argentine exclusive economic zone and adjacent zones in full compliance with the principles and regulations of international law and especially with the UN Law of the Sea. The Foreign Ministry made this statement in connection with the Foreign Office (the British Foreign Ministry) declaration invalidating the agreement.

In a communique released tonight, the Argentine Foreign Ministry says that as an international agreement between two sovereign states, without British participation, the statements contained in the declaration are surprising.

The Argentine Foreign Ministry adds that the agreement's purpose is bilateral cooperation, the reactivation of the Argentine fishing sector, and the protection and use of fishing resources.

A British Foreign Office spokesman yesterday stated that the Argentine-Soviet agreement would have no basis in international law because British sovereignty over the Malvinas gives London the right to exercise fisheries jurisdiction over these waters.

The protection zone set up by Great Britain after the 1982 war over the Malvinas extends to 150 miles around the islands.

RADIOACTIVE LEAK REPORTED AT B.A. PLANT

PY141941 Buenos Aires DYN in Spanish 1830 GMT 14 Aug 86

[Text] Buenos Aires, 14 Aug (DYN) -- A leak of highly toxic radioactive material, although in small amounts, occurred on 11 August at the Constituyentes Atomic Center, which is located on Constituyentes Avenue near General Paz Avenue in Buenos Aires Province, it was reported today by responsible sources.

The leak of the highly toxic "Ameriso" radioisotope occurred at noon on Monday, 11 August, at the "fuels" building fo the atomic center when several workers and technicians were at work, the sources added.

These people, whose number has not been specified, may have been contaminated by the leak. Because this radioactive material is very hard to detect, the officials of the National Nuclear Energy Commission [CNEA] did not learn about the leak until Tuesday, 12 August.

Only then were the appropriate security measures taken. Yet, the sources said that this leak does not seriously endanger the lives of the workers and technicians who were exposed to it.

Although no official statement has been released, CNEA sources have noted that the leak does not pose a threat to anyone.

ATTACK ON TANDIL TV REPEATER STATION REPORTED

[Text] Mar del Plata, 5 Aug (NA) -- Officials of Tandil Television Channel 10 today reported that a group of unidentified individuals had attacked their repeater station. The repeater was seriously damaged, and its transmissions were temporarily interrupted. The attack occurred last weekend, but it was only reported yesterday.

The officials at Channel 10 said that the unidentified assailants used stones and metal instruments to break open the entrance door of the concrete and plaster building, which is located on the highest point of the Tandil Range. After breaking into the building, the attackers shot at walls, doors, and windows, destroying light bulbs and other objects. Then they broke open a second metal door secured by a security lock, and threw a heavy roll of wire against electronic equipment and lamps, causing serious damage.

They also interrupted the transmissions by pulling out the coaxial cable. This made the technicians aware that something was wrong, but thanks to their efforts the transmission was almost resumed immediately, although the work to restore the rest of the station is still continuing.

A judge in Dolores is investigating the case, which he has described as an "attack on the communications media with damage and theft."

RELEASE OF USSR FLEET DOCUMENTARY DENIED

[Text] Santiago, 14 Aug (AFP) -- The Chilean Foreign Ministry has denied having delivered to Peruvian television stations a documentary on alleged espionage activities by Soviet fishing trawlers in the Pacific Ocean. A 6-minute documentary that was recently broadcast by Lima television stations explains that the Soviet ships are equipped for electronic war.

The film clips broadcast coincided with the Chilean Government's charges that Soviet agents helped to unload the arsenal discovered a week ago in northern Chile. The Foreign Ministry's department for bilateral policy has said that the Chilean authorities have not supplied any documentary on the Soviet fishing boats to Peruvian television stations.

In a report published by the newspaper ULTIMAS NOTICIAS, a senior Foreign Ministry official said that every week the Social Communications Directorate (Dinacos) sends selected audiovisual material to Chilean Embassies. However, he said no special material had been sent to Peru for dissemination.

PINOCHET SAYS GOVERNMENT WILL STRONGER THAN EVER

[Text] President Pinochet today said the government's will is stronger than ever. We will not give up, the chief of state said, the right to seek a future for a regime born from the heart and support of the people. President Pinochet spoke at the end of a luncheon, which a group of former under secretaries of the administration hosted at the Union Club. In his speech, Pinochet said that some sectors seek only the failure of the government.

[Begin Pinochet recording] Much has been said lately about the regime's future. What is happening gentlemen? The only thing they want is the failure of the government. They cannot accept the consolidation of the Constitution. That is why I say they are wrong. These gentlemen must know our will is stronger than ever. Those who are doubtful or fearful must listen well: We will not give up the legitimate right and responsibility of seeking a future for a regime born from the heart and support of the people. [end recording]

The chief of state added that Chile and its future are more important than party interests. He urged the former under secretaries to favor the unity of all sectors to ensure the effective validity of freedom in Chile. He insisted that in order to consolidate past accomplishments, decisiveness and patriotic spirit are needed.

[Begin recording] The place one works or the post from which one contributes to our task is irrelevant. What is really important is to be aware that we are the ones who must assume a vanguard position in order not to give way to those responsible for the class struggle, politization, and poverty. When the men in whom the nation has entrusted its present and future are not willing to make sacrifices, use their talent, experience, and energy for the sake of progress, then the force and inspiration necessary for progress is lost. [end recording]

In conclusion, Gen Pinochet said giving up the future planned by the government would mean abandoning the commitment and principles of the current regime's ideology.

'MIR' Attack Injures Driver

The incident occurred at 0910 as a delivery wagon, was passing by, driven by Luis Alberto Perez. The boxes were placed in the middle of the eastern lane of Santa Rosa Avenue. Perez was taken to the Barros Luco emergency room where he was treated. A little after 1100, a Carabineros officer from the Carabineros South precinct told reporters that Perez was in guarded condition, with a contusion on his head.

The officer also noted that Perez was suffering from a temporary loss of hearing but added this was gradually dissipating and his injuries were not believed to be too serious.

DEMOCRATIC ALLIANCE ANNOUNCES POLITICAL PROPOSAL

The Democratic Alliance [AD] this afternoon issued a political proposal to the Armed Forces, the citizenry, and all political organizations, except for the Movement of the Revolutionary Left [MIR].

The document was made public by AD leader Enrique Silva Cimma. The AD proposes that, given our country's serious anguish and crisis which is being worsened by an escalation of violence and horrible crimes connected to the regime, the application of peaceful social pressure by the Chilean people is the only way to attain a fast and peaceful solution.

This solution must be negotiated jointly with the Armed Forces and the Carabineros. The AD considers that the only way by which we will attain this objective is by expressing our national sovereignty as proposed by the National Accord and the National Civic Assembly [ANC]

The AD proposes to immediately put into practice the urgent measures proposed by the National Accord for the Transition to Full Democracy. The citizenry, the Armed Forces, and the Carabineros must agree the real transition toward democracy will require the exercising of popular sovereignty, that is, the right to cast a universal, direct, personal, free, secret, and informed vote to elect the president of the republic and members of Congress who will have constituent, legislative, and auditing responsibility, together with the municipal authorities.

[Begin Silva Cimma recording, in progress]... and in order to comply with these objectives, a plebiscite must be held according to the measures explained in the National Accord. Therefore, in order to hold an honest plebiscite, the electoral procedures must be guaranteed. Once the plebiscite has been held and the proposals are approved, the transition process to democracy must start. To attain this, the Armed Forces, the Carabineros, and the citizenry must agree on the measures and on the people or peoples that will guarantee the implementation of this process so as to comply with the objectives proposed within a pre-established time table as soon as possible. [end recording]

Silva Cimma said that the AD has already sent this proposal to all the national political sectors except for the MIR.

MDP Accepts Some Aspects

PY141640 Santiago Radio Chilena in Spanish 2300 GMT 13 Aug 86

[Text] The Popular Democratic Movement [MDP] this afternoon announced it has accepted parts of the political proposal released by the Democratic Alliance. During a press conference MDP leader German Correa indicated important agreements to find a solution to the crisis affecting the country have been reached by the opposition political forces.

[Begin Correa recording] The Chilean opposition agrees:

A. There can be no democratic solution so long as Pinochet remains in power, because he is the main obstacle preventing the return of democracy to the country.

B. The process for the transition to democracy must be headed by a widely accepted individual offering guarantees and he must have the support of the civilian and military democratic sectors.

C. The transition process must be based on the holding of general elections as soon as possible so the people can elect their leaders and a new institutionality to govern the country. [end recording]

In answer to a question that the agreements contradict the attitude of the MIR [Movement of the Revolutionary Left] expressed by Pascal Allende, German Correa indicated that every party or movement of the MDP is autonomous.

Abeliuk on Response

[Text] Social Democratic Party President Rene Abeliuk has noted that the MDP answer to the Democratic Alliance [AD] proposals has some positive points. However, he said he is concerned over the fact that MDP lacks a clear and specific position regarding violence.

It must be noted that yesterday the AD submitted a political proposal aimed at overcoming the serious crisis the country is experiencing. This proposal calls for the enforcement of the immediate measures included in the National Accord for the transition to full democracy. Later, during a press conference, the MDP accepted this proposal.

Asked about the MDP's answer, Rene Abeliuk noted that it has some positive points.

[Begin Abeliuk recording] Obviously, we do not hold the same position, but there is a certain rapprochement which is undoubtedly something positive.

What I am really concerned about regarding the MDP -- as we have already noted in our answer to their letter -- is that beyond the support of a proposal, we have to resolve the strategy issue, which is far more important than the proposal itself. We can have many proposals, but the interesting thing is to establish the formula through which this proposal can be implemented. [end recording]

Abeliuk added that in all this there is a fundamental strategic difference that must be resolved. He noted that we believe that violence is condemnable not only for what it represents, but because it serves the regime's plans.

[Begin Abeliuk recording] The way the government is taking advantage of what happened in the North and regarding the MIR statement shows us how the MDP, which does not have a definitive position regarding violence, plays into the government's hands.

We are asking the MDP -- and this is something it should do if it truly wants to contribute to the return of democracy in Chile -- to uphold a clear and categorical position against violence and to repudiate it because, in addition to what we have already noted, it is quite useful for the regime's intentions. [end recording]

Rene Abeliuk reasserted that he hopes the MDP will define its position regarding the violence issue.

SOCIALIST CONDEMNS 'MILITARY STRUGGLE'

PY150127 Madrid EFE in Spanish 2155 GMT 13 Aug 86

[Text] Santiago, 13 Aug (EFE) -- Manuel Almeyda, secretary general of the "orthodox" Socialist Party who is currently underground, today condemned the "military struggle" seeking to bring down the regime of General Augusto Pinochet.

In a statement to EFE, Almeyda, who went underground late in 1984 after being sentenced to 200 days of imprisonment for participating in antigovernment demonstrations, said that his party "does not support the idea that the military struggle is fundamentally important to the strategy against the dictatorship." Almeyda rejected outright the declarations made recently by Andres Pascal Allende, top leader of the Movement of the Revolutionary Left (MIR) which is allied with Almeydist socialism in the Popular Democratic Movement (MDP).

Manuel Almeyda, brother of former Popular Unity minister and Socialist Party ideologist, Clodomiro Almeyda, said the military struggle "does not lead to popular rebellion," and he added such a thing "would make the anti-dictatorship struggle more vulnerable to the dictatorship which would then be able to strike out at the popular movement." Almeyda said he favored "the struggle of the masses in a broad, united, sustained, and progressive manner, with the hope that a democratic national upheaval will lead to the defeat of the dictatorship."

The Socialist Party, Almeyda said, "decidedly supports civil disobedience and the people's demands as expressed by the National Civic Assembly with the purpose of holding a national and indefinite stoppage of activities to make the country ungovernable for the dictatorship."

The so-called hardline Socialists think it is important to reach an understanding with the rest of the parties and force because "we have always thought that to oust the regime is a task for all democrats and to attain this, a social and political understanding is needed without excluding anyone." Almeyda said that "given these circumstances we believe it is very important that we reach a consensus that will provide answers to the demand for democracy of large sectors of the opposition."

Regarding the Armed Forces' role in the stage of transition, Almeyda said: "As long as the Armed Forces continue supporting and obeying Pinochet, there is no possibility of reaching an agreement with them at all." If the criminal irresponsibility -- he added -- of the ruling circle denies a solution to the crisis, the Armed Forces will have to choose between supporting a repudiated gang without any political or moral support, or taking the necessary steps to contribute to establishing peace, justice, and democracy."

After explaining the need for "a greater democratic understanding," Almeyda promised to "make the greatest effort in stepping up the social struggle to seek agreements with all democrats to find a solution that will represent the will of the majority." The socialist leader said: The Armed Forces support for the people's struggle is indispensalbe. Therefore, there should be a campaign to tell them about the patriotic role they could be playing alongside the people."

Almeyda also called on the Catholic Church, "which has approved the people's struggle for democracy to help with its moral prestige to make progress toward conquering peace and democracy."

RIGHTIST GROUP LINKED TO ANTICHURCH SLOGANS

[Text] Santiago, 12 Aug (EFE) — Temuco Bishop Msgr Sergio Contreras today filed a misdemeanor suit against three people, two of ultrarightist militants, for "outrages and damage to property."

Edgardo Barrenechea, Armin Seeman, and Fernando Varela were caught by surprise by a Carabinero last Friday. They were painting anti-Catholic Church slogans on one of the walls of the Temuco Cathedral, 700 km south of Santiago. When they were surprised, they tried to escape, but the Carabinero used his weapon, injuring one of Barrenechea's feet.

"National Progressive Movement" [Movimiento de Avanzada Nacional - MAN] leaders have admitted that Barrenechea is a regional MAN leader but denied he was painting slogans on the cathedral's walls.

Boris Camus, from the "Nacional Progressive Movement of Temuco" [Avanzada Nacional de Temuco — ANT] has stated that ANT militants were near the cathedral to face a left-wing group that was painting slogans, "and this is why they were armed."

Police reports state the three individuals were armed and were out on bail while waiting for the report on their arms registration to be issued by the military barracks.

Slogans against the Catholic Church, signed by the "Chilean Anti-Communist Group" [Agrupacion Chilena Anticommunista — ACHA], have been painted on several churches in Temuco and other Chilean cities, including Santiago.

GOVERNMENT MAKES $35-MILLION PAYMENT TO IMF

[Text] Central Bank President Leonel Figueroa today announced that the government has paid $35 million to the IMF as partial payment on the $180-million obligation that will fall due on 15 August. The IMF reaction is not yet known.

[Begin Figueroa recording] We believe that paying nearly $200 million to the IMF for a debt which has matured will hurt our effort to maintain and improve the economic gains that the country has achieved. Despite adverse circumstances, Peru has made the significant effort of paying $35 million on our total obligations, and is promising to make greater efforts to make future payments within its capabilities. In view of this situation, Peru hopes that the IMF, in a gesture of understanding, will accept this partial payment and allow a longer term than was originally established for Peru to fulfill its obligations, because their fulfillment at this time would be burdensome for the country. Peru has requested that the IMF make an exception and allow payments on its matured debt to be made in its own currency. [end recording]

COSAB President Milton Guerrero said that the measure was necessary to prevent the loss of hard currency and to protect domestic industry by ensuring, as much as possible, the purchase of national goods and services.

CONDITIONS GIVEN FOR RECALL OF AMBASSADOR TO GDR

[Text] Foreign Minister Allan Wagner today stated that the Peruvian ambassador to the GDR will be withdrawn if the precise information which has been requested by Peru in the case of the Danish ship Pia Vesta is not received. Wagner explained that the recall of Peruvian Ambassador Walter Stubbs for consultation does not necessarily mean the breaking of diplomatic relations.

A GDR Embassy spokesman has said that the Peruvian Foreign Ministry opinion on this issue will be respected and that there will be no statement from that embassy for the time being. With regard to the possibility of breaking relations, Foreign Minister Allan Wagner indicated that this is a decision that has to be made by the Peruvian Government at the appropriate time following the evaluation of various elements and reactions.

FLORES DENIES SMUGGLED ARMS DESTINED FOR ARMY

[Text] Lima, 14 Aug (AFP) -- War Minister General Jorge Flores Torres today denied that an arms shipment seized from the Danish ship Pia Vesta in Panama had been consigned to the Peruvian Army.

During a radio interview, Gen Flores called untrue some statements made by arms dealer David Duncan in the United States to the newspaper THE MIAMI HERALD.

The war minister said that he is willing to appear before the national congress to make a report giving all the assurances that the Army has nothing to do with this deal.

Some press reports in Lima have attributed to Duncan statements suggesting that the arms loaded in early May in Rostock, East Germany, comprising 32 trucks, 1,500 FAL rifles, and 1,500 Soviet-made rockets, have also reportedly been consigned to the Peruvian Navy. Thus far the Navy has not made any comments on the reports involving it in this deal.

Foreign Minister Allan Wagner yesterday stated that before it was intercepted in Panama, as a result of a Peruvian report, the Pia Vesta sailed Peruvian territorial waters in early June but did not unload any type of arms in Peru. The Peruvian Government lodged a complaint with the GDR Government, but regarding as unsatisfactory the explanations received 2 days ago it decided to temporarily recall its ambassador to that country, Ricardo Walter Stubbs Vega.

PRESIDENT DISCUSSES PROBLEMS, ACCOMPLISHMENTS

PY140315 Buenos Aires TIEMPO ARGENTINO in Spanish 10 Aug 86 p 10, 11

["Exclusive" interview with President Alan Garcia by Maria Oliva in Lima; date not given]

[Text] [Oliva] Mr President, U.S. troops are carrying out an intense operation in Bolivia to combat drug trafficking. Will your government permit a similar action to be carried out in Peruvian territory?

[Garcia] Peruvian police and the Armed Forces are capable of dealing with drug trafficking and any other issue that arises in the country.

[Oliva] Do you believe that Peru has sufficient resources with which to confront and control the drug trafficking problem?

[Garcia] Yes, I do, and what is more important we have the necessary will to resolve the problem by ourselves.

[Oliva] Bolivian opposition leaders and even members of Paz Estenssoro's party have requested his impeachment, arguing that the government has allowed "a serious violation of the nation's sovereignty." What is your position in this regard?

[Garcia] Since the Bolivian Government itself requested the intervention of U.S. forces, this cannot be interpreted as a serious violation of the nation's sovereignty. Drug trafficking, particularly the production of drugs, is an issue of concern for several Latin American countries including Bolivia, Peru and Colombia. I believe that the interesting thing would be for these countries to coordinate their operations, strategies, and actions and to grant themselves mutual support before requesting the intervention of U.S. troops. The U.S., instead of being worried about drug production, should first be concerned about the drug consumption problem which is the origin of this whole drama that affects Latin America and the entire hemisphere. Not until the United States restricts, limits, or enforces punishment for drug consumption in keeping with the principles it preaches will drug production also decrease.

[Oliva] In March you visited Argentina, where you had the chance not only to meet with President Alfonsin, but also with Argentine opposition leaders and union leaders. What was the result of this trip?

[Garcia] Argentine democracy is a moral and material good that must be preserved, protected and strengthened, and I also believe that the government of President Alfonsin has taken many fundamental steps to deserve the support of all citizens. I found that we share very important points of view both at the Latin American level, and with regard to the foreign debt, development, and social reorganization. I share similar points of view regarding democracy in Argentina. I believe I learned a lot on this trip and I saw with great satisfaction that democracy is being strenthened in Argentina.

[Oliva] During your stay in Buenos Aires you said that your country would break relations with the power that decides to invade Nicaragua. The U.S. House of Representatives has already approved $100 million to aid those who are against the Sandinist government. This is not a direct invasion, but it is close. What is your opinion about this?

[Garcia] What I said still stands, and I reassert our point of view. However, this does not mean that we support or identify ourselves with domestic policy errors or specific ideologies upheld by the Nicaraguan Government. No domestic policy errors can, however, justify foreign interference, much less intervention that comes from outside Latin American borders. I always thought that at the time of the British aggression against Argentina, the Peruvian Government should have adopted forceful decisions regarding its relations with Great Britain, because I interpreted this aggression as an aggression against Latin America in general and because, as I have already said, I believe that no ideological error, and no domestic policy error, justifies foreign intervention or the arbitary assumption of power over this continent by some great power.

[Garcia] We cannot yet describe it as direct intervention. What the Nicaraguan Government has constantly denounced is the wish of the United States to send troops, and this is what we would reject. The decision of the U.S. Government and of the U.S. Congress -- which I believe is a serious historic and political mistake -- to grant $100 million to the contras can be rejected and combatted through other means, one of them would be the Contadora Group and the Contadora Support Group.

[Oliva] Some believe that Nicaragua's intransigence and the biased pro-U.S. attitude adopted by some Central American Governments have contributed to the failure of the Contadora peace agreement. As a member of the Contadora Support Group, tell me what the next steps will be.

[Garcia] The first thing is to be patient and to understand that what was not achievable in the past may be achieved later. The fact that there has not been an escalation of violence is already a victory for the Contadora Group. I believe this is the first time that Latin Americans have conscientiously adopted a joint position. If the Contadora Group fails, the possibility of achieving any future joint position regarding the foreign debt, which is also the great historic mortgage hanging over Latin America, will also fail.

[Garcia] We greet with historic expectation the Argentine-Brazilian agreement and the initiatives that had been taken previously between Argentina and Uruguay because these constitute a qualitative step in a continent that is divided. We have not achieved any bilateral agreements yet, but we do not reject the possibility that we may seek them. You must understand that the first step that Peru has to take with respect to the neighboring countries is to remove mistrust and historic rivalries which do not make any sense at the ned of the 20th century. The second step must be to strengthen our economic relations. However, I think the Brazilian-Argentine example is very important. Neither development, justice, nor the national existence of Latin America can occur without integration; anti-imperialism cannot exist without integration, nor can democracy exist without anti-imperialism in Latin America.

[Oliva] A report made public in Argentina, datelined Washington, states that Pentagon sources have announced the future fall of your government, mentioning also the difficult relations you have with the Armed Forces. What does this type of statement mean to you? Would you consider them as an interference in the internal affairs of your country?

[Garcia] In the first place, press releases often purport to contain first-hand news that is nothing but a series of hypotheses which are not true and which do not have a real source. Political experience has taught me not to take these references into account, as long as they do not originate directly at the source. I think the need to create news is sometimes harmful because it generates this type of problem, and a responsible person would know better than to answer reports of unknown origin or which lack truth and are not accurate. Regarding the hypothesis that has been formulated, I believe that it is absolutely negative -- and I would say absurd -- in the case of a country like Peru, where the government was elected by a large majority and is supported by an ever-growing majority. Who would not want the Peruvian Government to remain firm in this difficult situation, responding, according to some, in a strong and audacious way to the problem of the foreign debt, or claiming solidarity with the wrong people -- in the case of Nicaragua -- as others say? Who would be interested in silencing the voice? Who does not agree with the present circumstances? Those who enjoy these circumstances?

[Garcia] We learn a lot about Peru through the Argentine experience. I know that some people would say that General Velasco "wants to do something like Peron did." "The fact that there are bombings and armed groups and assassinations of mayors, of governors in each town of the country, forces us to use the Civil Guard or the Army to patrol and to restrict the movements of the subversives. They call that militarization. How do you fight armed people? With arms. You fight a problem that has historical roots with a historic plan, but armed actions and crime must be fought with arms, within the framework of the law and trying to avoid outrages like the ones that occurred at the prison. And when the police have neither sufficient personnel nor enough mobility, we are not going to ask the U.S. police to come down, we have to use the Peruvian Army, under the government's orders.

You cannot call that militarization. That happens when the armed forces assume power, when the president is pushed aside, and this is not the case. I am responsible for guaranteeing the transformation, and the independence, of the Peruvian people, as well as for enforcing security and order. I am not afraid to say that if for that reason it is necessary to use arms, then we must use them. Of course, those who interpret the nation's current situation by viewing it in the light of what happened in other countries use this attitude to claim that the Armed Forces are gradually increasing their influence. The same people could claim the same of the police. We have a clear notion of the manner in which the armed actions should be carried out and we believe in punishing those who overstep their authority in this armed struggle. We are not going to cover up for any crime nor justify it. However, we are no going to allow the country to become a circus, in which the subversives parade around and carry out their crimes free and unpunished, just to avoid making any mistakes. Therefore, if the Armed Forces get involved in these cases they will do so on the strength of their constitutional guidelines. As in any other country, the president of the nation is also the supreme commander of the Armed Forces, and it is up to him to decide how these forces should be used. The president is elected by the people, so when the Armed Forces intervene in a given situation they do so in compliance with the people's wishes.

[Oliva] What is the main self-criticism you can make after 1 year in government?

[Garcia] First, I feel unfulfilled, powerless, because I have not been able to infuse into the entire state apparatus the historic desire to do something. The people understand that there is a great difference between the President's ideological fervor and the bureaucrats. The bureaucrat feels that his work is a way to earn a living and that the president will change in a few years. What makes me despair the most is the knowledge that bribes are still being taken. No one knows who is taking them, but they are obviously being taken. They continue to live on in the house, even though the house has changed owners. They are still around. This is a terrible sensation because it is impossible to determine where they are or how it is being done. This is an acknowledgement of reality, a compromise with the hypocrisy of the spirit.

The state is not alone in this. The common citizen continues to view the history of Peru as something alien to him. History stops at the door of this house, nothing outside the house belongs to him.

This passive and indifferent attitude shows that the people feel that they own nothing, as has been the case throughout their history.

I could do nothing about that passivity and indifference, but I did manage to raise expectations, hope, and faith. However, no one has yet realized that we are on the battlefront, that this could be the last day. I am not a doomsayer, but the truth is that noone has yet realized this. My speeches elicit ovations, and many do understand the meaning that they try to convey, but they do not fully comprehend the anxiety of a soldier in combat who knows that his own life depends on his own efforts. On the other hand, there are things that are very positive. An important part of the people perceives the problem, senses it, realizes it, and gives its support. There is an important part of the population that understands the need for patience. There is also the intellectual bourgeoisie who preach impatience, intolerance, and despair.

They are the ones who say that we must move fast, and the sooner the better. I told them in my speech to Congress that when I hear the cries of impatience, I also hear the silence of those who have historically remained tolerant.

Then, suddenly, one realizes that with all the effort one can muster, one can push history one centimeter forward, but that history, left alone, will continue to move just the same. Do you understand the idea?

[Oliva] Do you feel that you are alone?

[Garcia] All presidents, no matter what their thinking, feel alone, just because they are presidents. But I have by my side my party, my ideology, and my people, with whom I have a close relationship. But here, in this not too attractive office, I have to make the most momentous decisions alone. This is the loneliness of power. During the first months of my government, I spoke to the people from the balcony once a week or once every 2 weeks. Recently, however, we have a very particular situation in Lima. A politician must not become a bureaucrat. A leader cannot turn into a bureaucrat. I cannot resign myself to this.

[Oliva] What would you be if you were not a president?

[Garcia] A presidential hopeful! Well, that is just a joke. I would have been a politician, working in my party, saying and doing things, promoting something. Politics calls for creativity, just like the arts of music or painting, for instance. The problem is that just as a composer can run out of inspiration for long periods of time, a politician can cease to communicate with the people for long periods of time.

[Oliva] What is your most important project for this year?

[Garcia] To decentralize Peru. From here we control every door or window that opens and closes, even in the most remote province from Lima. This is absurd! The country's political administration must be decentralized. It should be stripped of operational and routine obligations, which must be left to the local population. We now have to sign resolutions, decide whether to pen a road, decide when the local population should be thinking about things. I am sure that decentralization will help to form local governments -- like the ones you have in Argentina -- that will have more power because they will have been elected by the people. These local governemnts, in addition to being closer, form centers in which to air the complaints of the local people and will mobilize the will to participate to a greater extent.

[Garcia] I see myself as a warrior for the independence of America and for social justice.

OIL MINISTER VIEWS RESULTS OF OPEC MEETING

PA141517 Caracas Television Service in Spanish 0000 GMT 13 Aug 86

[Report by Carlos Fernandez]

[Text] Energy and Mines Minister Arturo Hernandez Grisanti held a news conference today in which he summarized the recent decisions adopted by the OPEC in Geneva. He also gave an overview on the effects of those agreements.

In this sense, Minister Grisanti said that basically tactical emergency measures were agreed to at the meeting, and these measures have eased the tension within the OPEC. He stressed that the favorable effects of the measures will depend on their strict compliance and on the commitment of non-OPEC producers.

After summarizing the results of the Geneva meeting, Hernandez Grisanti referred to the effect of these actions in our country, and indeed he was cautiously optimistic. He said that Venezuela's daily production had to be adjusted based on the OPEC's recent decisions and Venezuala's sustained average to 3 August of this year. The actual reduction will be 6,000 barrels per day, bringing the yearly production to 1,586,000 barrels per day.

Minister Hernandez Grisanti was extremely cautious regarding prices. He said that Venezuela's average price was $14 per barrel to July of this year, adding that the situation could change favorably, in which case the prices will be adequately increased. Moreover, if the OPEC agreements are respected and prices recover by the end of the year, the situation would be even more encouraging.

[Begin Hernandez Grisanti recording] For the time beign, we must try to recover the market. I do believe that if the OPEC decisions are observed, the prices should increase to approximately $17-$18 in October and November. [end recording]

The situation will be defined on 6 October at an OPEC meeting. According to Hernandez Grisanti, if the recent agreements are not kept, the special meeting would have to be held earlier.

BRIEFS

STEEL PRODUCTION INCREASING -- For the first time in many years, the Orinoco Iron and Steelworks, SIDOR, has become a profitable company. Not only has it increased its national production, but it also has exported some of its products. SIDOR President Carlos Mendoza noted that the company has been developing new products that have substituted for previously imported products and provided better service to national customers. He added that SIDOR produces between $200 and $250 million; this would be the equivalent in foreign exchange of its exports. [Summary] [Caracas Television Service in Spanish 1600 GMT 13 Aug 86 PA]

DE LA MADRID HIGHLIGHTS TALKS WITH REAGAN

["Text" of Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid's speech delivered after meeting with President Reagan at the White House on 12 August; place not given]

[Text] Ladies and Gentlemen; First of all, I thank President Reagan for his cordial invitation to this working meeting in Washington. It has been a timely and fruitful meeting because it has brought positive results since we have discussed frankly and thoroughly various matters that both presidents consider of utmost importance for the good understanding in U.S.-Mexican relations.

President Reagan and I agreed to give priority attention to bilateral matters. We were happy to note that this year there have been positive advances and agreements on various economic matters and in border cooperation affairs. We agreed that these progresses need to be underscored.

We have agreed that from now on our government will make extra efforts to improve the atmosphere of our relations. This is an essential condition to facilitate and broaden bilateral cooperation which benefit the two countries.

Today I have confirmed with satisfaction President Reagan's strong will to encourage the development of relations marked by a positive sign between the United States and Mexico.

With this spirit, we have talked about various matters that greatly concern the two governments and, in general, the two countries. Allow me to briefly highlight them.

First, we thoroughly discussed various aspects of financial and trade relations, including the Mexican Government's recent negotiations with international financial organizations -- mainly the IMF -- which have been successful inasmuch as they allow, new, more realistic and flexible terms in dealing with the foreign debt problem. I acknowledge that the U.S. Government -- in a notable effort -- played a useful role in such negotiations, which we appreciate very much.

It is our aim that Mexico achieve sustained economic growth and build an essential foundation to restructure and modernize its economy, maintain the social progress which has been an important factor in the country's long political stability, and widen the capabilities of fulfilling its international financial commitments.

The solution to the foreign debt problem is related to the need for greater financing for development of better foreign trade conditions. Mexico wants to implement a solid foundation of non-oil exports in areas where it has a competitive edge.

We want trade ties between the two countries to develop within the framework of equality, taking into consideration the degree of development of the two economies as well as total conditions of nondiscrimination and absolute nonreciprocity, which should be the foundation of better trade relations.

Both presidents have given instructions for immediate talks to achieve a wide bilateral agreement on trade and other matters. Its contents will be defined by our respective negotiations in the next few months.

President Reagan and I also exchanged ideas on the problems the illegal Mexican workers face in the United States. The problem is a result of structural economic problems of the two economies, and, most certainly, migratory flows will decrease as the Mexican economy improves.

I would also like to refer to a very important topic President Reagan and I discussed. It was a very important part of our talks: the war against drug trafficking. The Mexican Government maintains that international cooperation is needed to deal efficiently with the serious drug smuggling problem. We agreed it is absolutely necessary to attack with great determination all the links of the criminal chain, that is, production, distribution, and consumption.

I have told President Reagan about the importance we give to the campaign started by the U.S. Government to combat the distribution and consumption of drugs in the United States. We will continue to strengthen cooperation between the two governments in order to combat this cancer of modern humankind.

I believe that, as President Reagan has said, this conversation has been particularly satisfactory. It is one more evidence of our strong and loyal friendship which unite our peoples. We can benefit much from a cordial, honorable, and mutually beneficial friendship.

I am very grateful to President Reagan and his aides for the warm hospitality they have shown us.

Finally, I again want to express the appreciation of the people and Government of Mexico for the help and cooperation given to us after last September's earthquakes. Especially Nancy Reagan's warm presence in Mexico during those days of grief.

PRI PROTESTS PAN TIES WITH U.S. GOVERNMENT

[Text] Some 4,000 PRI members have held a demonstration at the plaza of the Legislative Palace, in front of the Congress building. The demonstration was against the National Action Party [PAN]. During the meeting, the PRI demonstrators requested that PAN's [National Action Party] registration as a political party be withdrawn due to the alliances it has established with the U.S. Government and the U.S. Senate.

The charges against the PAN were made by PRI Federal District leaders Jesus Salazar Toledano and Manuel Osante Lopez. They said that the PAN has tried to sabotage the meeting of Presidents Miguel de la Madrid and Ronald Reagan. In addition, it has conducted actions to destabilize Mexico.

The demonstration, which lasted a little more than 2 hours, began after the Permanent Commission session. Yesterday, the Permanent Commission session began with the participation of the PAN representative Jesus Gonzalez Schmal, who again protested about the elections in Chihuahua. Following his speech, Jesus Gonzalez Schmal left the session.

Senator Celso Delgado then charged the PAN partisans of wishing to submit to foreign judgment affairs that are solely the responsibility of Mexico. The PRI Federal District partisans began the demonstration, following the 4-hour session.

PAN WITHDRAWS FROM CONGRESS COMMISSION MEETINGS

[Text] Mexico City, 13 Aug (EFE) -- The National Action Party (PAN) withdrew today from the two meetings to be held by the Mexican Congress Permanent Commission, in protest over the government's stubborn refusal to recognize the alleged electoral victories of its candidates.

Federal Deputy Jesus Gonzalez, who is a representative of PAN (moderate right) -- the second political force in the country -- on the commission, said that if things continue on this path, they will do the same thing during the upcoming Chamber of Deputies session, which begins 1 September and concludes 31 December.

The Congressional Permanent Commission is comprised of senators and deputies from several parties. It holds sessions from 2 January to 30 August, during which two chambers of congress are in recess.

The PRI, which has been in power since 1929, has a majority on the current commission.

Gonzalez stressed that his party is carefully analyzing the possibility that its 41 deputies will not attend President Miguel de la Madrid's fourth and antepenultimate report to the government, which will be held 1 September, to protest the electoral irregularities which -- in its viewpoint -- took place 5 July in Chihuahua.

The legislator scored the antidemocratic policy of the PRI and the government and reasserted that his party will continue struggling for the recognition of its legitimate rights and political positions that, according to him, the PAN won in Chihuahua.

On July 6, gubernatorial elections were held in Chihuahua, which borders the United States. Fourteen deputies to the local congress and 67 mayors were also elected.

According to the PRI, its candidates won the state governorate, the 14 legislative seats, and 65 of the 67 municipal posts.

Likewise, the PAN noted the PRI was involved in fraud so its candidates could win the election.

In addition, the Socialist People's Party said there is enough evidence to link the PAN with foreign political organizations, particularly from the United States, and its official registration as a party should therefore be immediately cancelled.

COMPARISON OF NORIEGA SOVEREIGNTY SPEECH

Panama City CRITICA in Spanish on 13 August publishes on page 31 the address by Defense Forces Chief General Manuel Antonio Noriega delivered at the sovereignty rally in Panama City on 12 August. The CRITICA report has been compared with the Panama City Domestic Service Spanish version published in the 14 August Latin America DAILY REPORT, page N 3, revealing the following variations:

Page N 3, paragraph one, line four reads... the righteous. God has always been our pride and... providing indistinct words;

Page N 4, paragraph three, lines six and seven, read... return to the times when votes and candidates... rewording and supplying indistinct words;

Page N 4, paragraph three, penultimate and last lines, read... popular masses were silent guests at the... providing indistinct word and deleting article for clarity;

Same page, paragraph five, last line reads... with social justice.

This overwhelming expression of civic duty confirms that the Defense Forces have answered slander and provocation with moderation, prudence, care, and a spirit of Christianity.

We have often repeated that Panama... supplying additional passage and providing indistinct words;

Page N 5, paragraph three, line two reads... [currency not specified]. Another concern of ours regards... rewording, deleting passage;

They want unity to create programs to put the unemployed to work, help reduce the cost of living, guarantee better health services and better education, improve general well-being, and implement the labor code. That is why those who spread lies before are now being repudiated to their faces.

Those who used foreigners to discredit Panama see now how those same foreigners are being questioned in their own country because they have disclosed state secrets. They sought to instigate a struggle between bothers, but the Panamanian people instead chose to come to this square and chant in unison: Panama with peace, Panama with freedom, Panama with full sovereignty!

Traditionally, we have... supplying additional paragraph and variant wording;

Page N 5, paragraph seven, last line, reads... believe in them.

We have not chosen the easy path. On the contrary, as Panamanians and men of the people, as military men and members of our glorious Defense Forces, we have chosen a more difficult path in which we struggle so that Panama is respected and so it can be free, sovereign and independent.

In the knowledge that Panama is a land bridge and not an island, and that because of its geopolitical position we feel and think differently, we believe that peace in Central America can be achieved only through dialogue and understanding among the peoples.

So long as this is not the case, Costa Rica and Panama will continue to be victims of the refugee problem, which reflects a struggle for survival and is in fact an escape in search of freedom and well-being. The refugee problem is creating more economic and social problems than those caused by the guerrilla warfare in neighboring countries.

I want to... supplying additional paragraphs;

Page N 5, paragraph eight, last line, through last graf, line one, reads... [chants] I want the foreign correspondents to know that the only exiles or deportees in Panama are backwardness, violence, ignorance, and social injustice.

There are no political prisoners! There is respect and feelings of warmth for foreign minorities. There are no ghettos or racism. There are human rights, but not those understood as the demand and supply to receive or deny credit!

I am going to tell you a secret. President Eric Arturo Delvalle is being questioned regarding the concept of militarism. He is being asked why a military man is chief of the railroads if this is a democracy. However, they refuse to remember that U.S. military men ran that same railroad in the past and that its construction was turned over to Panama by U.S. military men.

When it was the Panama Railroad [preceding word in English] it was a matter of security, but now that it is the National Railroads Directorate this is bad.

And Renare [Department of Renewable Natural Resources] is another case in point. Oh, how the president has been pressured: Why a military man? He is asked. However, the people from Chilibre, Gatun Lake, and Gatuncillo are here today. The zonians used to burn their thatched huts, go after the peasants and shoot at them with Magnums [preceding word in English]. And they called that environmental protection.

That building over there was turned over to us by a U.S. military man. However, today this question is asked: Why a member of the Panama military?

On behalf of the General Staff, officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of Battalion 2000, which is the symbolic unit of fire and movement toward the year 1999 and has a special responsibility, the new Panama Canal, a special greeting!

To all the people who marched today to express civic pride, their Christian spirit, fraternity, youth, and friendship in a genuine expression of all the Panamanian people without distinctions or complexes -- because the Defense Forces are made up of alumni of West Point, Mexico, Guatemala, Honduras, El Salvador, Colombia, Venezuela, Ecuador, Peru, Brazil, Bolivia, Argentina, Chile, Great Britain, France, Sweden, Germany, Italy, Israel, Korea, Taiwan, and Japan;

To foreign correspondents...supplying variant passage.

COLUMNIST ON 'FORCED' HOMAGE TO NORIEGA

PA141910 Panama City LA PRENSA in Spanish 13 Aug 86 p 1-A

[Text] As had been anticipated, public employees did not work yesterday because they were forced to render homage to General Manuel A. Noriega, an homage similar in purpose and result to ones paid to General Ruben D. Paredes and General Omar Torrijos. Nothing about this matter is new. The organization, transport, and other expenses were directly or indirectly paid by the state. The rhetoric, with slight variations, was the same disorderly mix of nationalist glitter and worship of militarism and populism. The supposed reaffirmation of the sovereignty proposed as the objective of the rally was not the genuine expression of the people's aspiration to unite our territory under the Panamanian flag and jurisdiction. This rally was for the interest of the military to consolidate their domination over the country, because to them sovereignty is an attribute inseparable from the Defense Forces command. The purpose of the rally was only to identify nationalism, the state, the government, the people, and the sovereignty with Gen Noriega and the military forces. They must greatly admire Louis XIV's statement: "I am the state." He was not; this was proven in time. Sooner or later it will happen in Panama.

[Abadia] Yes. Panama will attend the meeting. We are going to present a motion, and our delegation will be the largest we have ever sent.

[Reporter] Who will head it?

[Abadia] We cannot say yet. The president has to sign the decree.

[Reporter] Will the president go to the Dominican Republic?

[Abadia] That is correct, sir. The president will go to the Dominican Republic.

GOVERNMENT TO REESTABLISH UK CONSULAR RELATIONS

PA140340 Guatemala City Radio-Television Guatemala in Spanish 0400 GMT 12 Aug 86

[Text] Foreign Minister Mario Quinonez Amezquita today confirmed that the Governments of Guatemala and Great Britain will reestablish consular relations on 18 August.

[Begin recording] [Quinonez] We will establish consular relations. Consuls are not diplomats. Consular relations are not the same as diplomatic relations, they involve only trade relations. For example, the issuance of passports and visas is a duty of consuls, as is processing shipping documents. The duty of diplomats is to represent countries, convey the views of each country with the appropriate authorizations and carry out diplomatic agreements. They are two completely different functions. I wish to state clearly that Guatemala will reestablish consular relations with Great Britain, not diplomatic relations.

[Reporter] Will this take place before 15 August?

[Quinonez] Relations may be reestablished on 18 or 19 August through a joint communique issued by the two countries. We will move forward slowly and carefully. Remember that our balance of payments with Great Britain has always favored Great Britain. We also want to bring some benefits to the country through consular relations; we want them to buy from us. It does not make much sense to establish consular relations to buy from them. We want commercial exchange. While they are here, we hope they will more readily help in resolving our differences over Belize. [end recording]

QUINONEZ REITERATES SUPPORT FOR CONTADORA

PA141934 Guatemala City PRENSA LIBRE in Spanish 12 Aug 86 p 5

[Text] Foreign Minister Mario Quinonez Amezquita said yesterday that Guatemala reiterated its support for the Contadora Group because it is the best political effort to achieve peace and democracy in Central America.

Quinonez held a news conference at the National Palace, where he explained the note he sent to the governments that make up the Contadora and Support Groups. In this note, "Guatemala expressed support for the contents of the document that was presented at the Panama meeting on 6 June."

For this reason, Quinonez added, we are pleased with Contadora's decision to continue its efforts to conduct diplomatic negotiations to reduce tensions in the area.

Guatemala feels that the pending issues which must be mentioned in the document include the commitments regarding weapons and military troops, as well as the mechanisms for evaluation and verification that guarantee the effectiveness of the document.

Guatemala has learned that certain governments rejected the draft document and feels that these positions make a new meeting more urgent to continue the search for peace.

Quinonez Amezquita emphasized that he met in Colombia with new President Barco Vargas and with other chiefs of state of countries that make up the Contadora Group who said that "they are determined to continue with the process so long as the Central Americans are willing to each an agreement."

Regarding the possibility of a Contadora failure due to the stand taken by Honduras, Costa Rica, and El Salvador, the foreign minister said that "Guatemala would deplore it if that happened."

If these countries, he said, do not want the Contadora mediation, we would respect that decision, but we would deplore it.

COMMUNIQUE WARNS CITIZENS OF 'MANIPULATION'

[Communique issued by the Foreign Affairs Secretariat; date not given]

[Text] The State Secretariat for Foreign Affairs has received reliable information to the effect that a diplomatic mission in Tegucigalpa with a direct interest in the matter has been promoting through various means the adoption by some Hondurans of positions favorable to the suit filed by the Sandinist government with the International Court of Justice against the Republic of Honduras and that agents of the diplomatic mission concerned are engaged in activities to manipulate Honduran opinion into opposing the approval by the sovereign National Congress of the treaty for the delimitation of the maritime boundaries between Honduras and Colombia.

These manipulations are being carried out under the aegis of the unrestrained freedom of the press guaranteed by our country's government and do not exclude the holding of public demonstrations aimed at coercing the sovereign National Congress so it will not approve the aforementioned maritime delimitation treaty.

The Secretariat for Foreign Affairs relays this information to the public so the Honduran people will not allow themselves to be caught unaware by those who are at the service of interests pursued by other states, to the detriment of Honduras' legitimate rights.

[Text] Tegucigalpa 14 Aug (AFP) -- Honduran Air Force sources confirmed tonight that an Air Force C-130, in which 40 or 50 soldiers were traveling to the Mosquitia region, on the Nicaraguan border, has crashed. Meanwhile, a press correspondent in Comayagua, 100 km north of Tegucigalpa, asserted that the plane took off at 0930 today from the Palmerola Air Base near Comayagua, which has become a permanent base of the U.S. forces stationed in Honduras. The source affirmed that the Honduran Air Force learned of the accident at 1430 and immediately dispatched a squadron of planes and helicopters to the crash site.

According to preliminary, unofficial reports, the plane crashed in the jungle area of Mosquitia, between Olancho and Gracias a Dios Departments on the Nicaraguan border. Honduran Air Force sources, who promised to issue a report when details of the accident are ascertained, asserted that the pilot of the plane was Lieutenant Colonel Luis Aguilar. The plane was carrying 40 or 50 soldiers from the 5th Infantry Battalion, headquartered in Mocoron, in Honduras' Mosquitia region.

AZCONA EXPRESSES SUPPORT FOR L.A. PARLIAMENT

PA142243 Tegucigalpa Telvisora Hondurena in Spanish 0200 GMT 12 Aug 86

[Excerpt] [passage omitted] The Latin American presidents who attended the inauguration of the Colombian President Virgilio Barco Vargas met at the assembly hall of the Colombian Congress in Bogota on the night of the ceremony. Each president expressed his desire to participate in the Latin American Parliament. In the presence of the representatives of the legislative branches of the countries represented at the meeting -- Honduras, El Salvador, Costa Rica, Colombia, Uruguay, and Venezuela -- they discussed an initiative that could open up new possibilities for the pacification of the American Continent.

The meeting was attended by Jose Azcona, Jose Napoleon Duarte, Oscar Arias, Julio Maria Sanguinetti, and Jaime Lusinchi, presidents of Honduras, El Salvador, Costa Rica, Uruguay, and Venezuela, respectively, and the outgoing Colombian president, Belisario Betancur.

In his speech, Honduran President Azcona said that Latin America will play a more active role. He added: Now that there are many democracies in the continent, we must make the great dream of America's liberator, Simon Bolivar, come true. He also said that Honduras will be present in the Latin American Parliament with an open mind and will participate in all forums convoked to defend Latin America and the democratic systems.

[Begin Azcona recording] Developed countries have repeatedly said that Latin America does not progress because we Latin Americans have no initiative and because we have often had governments that abused their power, that in some cases were not honest, that [word indistinct] their country's wealth, etc. However, during the past few years we have also been victims of unjust trade conditions imposed on us by the developed countries. The Costa Rican president has [words indistinct] many times. How can the Latin American countries progress if in 1950 it was necessary to export 50 bags of coffee to purchase a vehicle, and today we must export 200 bags? This example is (?applicable) to all Latin American export products. The added value is transferred to the developed and industrialized countries, which force us to purchase their products at high prices while they force us to sell our products at low prices. All this is in addition to the high interest rates we must pay for the credits we have received. This means that today all of our countries are facing difficulties in paying our foreign debts.

Therefore, it is important for Latin America to make itself heard. I totally agree with what has been said here today, and I totally agree that, once and for all, and taking advantage of this occasion and this moment when there are real democracies in the majority of the Latin American countries, we should make a great effort to make Bolivar's dream a reality, at least in part. As I said in my inaugural speech, even though that dream is not possible today, we can unite to solve our common problems. I am the president of one of the weakest countries in Latin America, a country that is weak economically, democratically, and in many other aspects as well. However, the people of my country want to progress, to walk on the democratic path, and to participate in any forum where our presence is required. Therefore, Honduras will be present at the Latin American Parliament with an open mind, and it will also be present at every forum whenever it is necessary to defend Latin America and the democratic systems. NICARAGUA

ORTEGA NEWS CONFERENCE ON SENATE AID VOTE

[News conference by President Daniel Ortega Saavedra at the auditorium of the Information and Press Directorate of the Presidency of the Republic -- live]

[Text] Good morning, Nicaraguan people who are listening through this radio network; good morning, journalists. Last night the U.S. Senate committed another violation of international law. We all know of the previous voting in the lower chamber, in the House of Representatives, in which 221 representatives voted against international juridical order, against law, and 209 representatives voted in favor of the international juridical order, in favor of law.

Last night the voting in the Senate resulted in 53 senators voting against law, and 47 voting in favor of law. We consider this a truly blatant action, because although it is true that the House of Representatives' vote was a violation of the law and of the international juridical order, the International Court of Justice [ICJ] had not yet announced its decision when the House voted. The decision was announced the following day. However, now that the Senate has had to make a decision, it has done so with knowledge of the ICJ ruling, which is known worldwide, a ruling announced by the ICJ over 1 month ago.

Therefore, this is the first action of total rebellion against the highest court of justice in the world. Although it is true that the final step in enacting this act of contempt for the law -- namely the U.S. President's sanctioning of the law -- is still pending, it permits the immediate implementation of the $100 million in financial aid, forwarding weapons and sending military advisers to help the mercenary forces. This final formality, so to speak, is the only step pending before we face the first actions of total rebellion against the highest international court.

On many occasions the U.S. Government has said that other governments have not accepted the court's jurisdiction and that those governments have refrained from taking a specific dispute to the court. However, such declarations are not consistent, because in reality, when certain cases have been brought before the court, when in face of a given complaint or demand a country has refused to accept the court's jurisdiction, those problems have been resolved in the long run through understanding between the parties involved. An example of this was the case between Pakistan and India, in which a crisis developed at a given moment concerning the court's jurisdiction, but which finally resulted in an agreement between Pakistan and India.

The case between France, Australia, and New Zealand concerning nuclear tests was another case, which finally ended with the suspension of nuclear tests, although the case was not fully aired in the court. We could also mention a case presented to the court by the United States when U.S. citizens were being held as hostages at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran. The liberation of the U.S. citizens occurred while the court was debating the case, and the only pending aspect was indemnification.

So we are really facing the first action of total rebellion before the ICJ. There is no parallel action. The United States has tried to hide its guilt by mentioning some of the cases I have just noted, but, truly, none of these cases can be compared with the U.S. behavior, as it even participated in the initial phase of the process and then withdrew altogether. This action by the U.S. Government is part of a systematic policy which hurts international juridical order and the United Nations.

We, all the countries of the world, have witnessed the behavior of the U.S. Government, which has tried to deprive the United Nations of legitimacy, adopted specific measures against UN organizations, withdrawn from UN organizations, and looked for ways to negatively affect the efforts that have been made so that the countries of the world can have a legal framework for reaching understanding and resolving conflicts. They are trying to destroy this international legal framework to impose the law of the jungle.

The President of the United States still has the opportunity to avoid becoming an international criminal. The moment the U.S. President signs the bill to make it law, he will become an international criminal. However, he has the opportunity not to become an international criminal. He has the opportunity not to damage the image of the U.S. people and nation.

So we wonder: Will the President of the United States sign the law, thus exposing his country to being called an international criminal, or won't he? This is the question we are asking ourselves. In Chicago we made a proposal that we are maintaining. That proposal has to do with the peaceful solution of conflicts, with respect for international law. We want to say we are happy that following our Chicago proposal -- approximately 1 week later, in Colombia, during the inauguration of President Barco -- the Contadora and Lima groups reinitiated the work of this movement to search for peaceful solutions, through dialogues, for the conflict being endured by the Central American countries.

A few days after making the Chicago Proposal we received in Nicaragua the Vatican's representative, with whom we had the opportunity to discuss the situation. We told him we are prepared to reach an understanding with the Vatican and with the Nicaraguan bishops. He told us later -- and we received a letter in this regard from the Episcopal Conference in response -- that both the Nicaraguan Government and the Episcopal Conference accept holding a dialogue. We hope to initiate this dialogue when we return from the Harare summit meeting. We wanted the dialogue to take place immediately. That was our position, but the bishops have explained that some of them are ill and others have to leave. Thus, the meeting with the Nicaraguan bishops will be postponed until next month.

In Guatemala there has been a meeting among the Central American vice presidents. What happened last night is a blow to the dialogue effort being made by the Central American governments. It has been a blow to Contadora, to Latin America, to the Central American governments, to the dialogue we are promoting with the Church. While here we are taking steps in favor of the dialogue, the U.S. response has been to finance the war, to finance death.

We have nothing further to say about this situation. The Nicaraguan position, noted after the vote by the House of Representatives, is already known. There will be no new spectacular measure adopted. However, the Nicaraguan people will now have to be more alert than ever. They must be militarily mobilized and prepared to face the war escalation of the U.S. Government.

It is true that counterrevolutionary and mercenary forces alone have no chance to win; but by having done this, the U.S. Government is setting the basis, the political grounds, for launching a military intervention against Nicaragua. Therefore, we are facing what has been called the Vietnamization of the Central American conflict.

Based on this, we are alerting the international community and issuing this call from Nicaragua to the UN Security Council, the Contadora and Lima groups, all the countries of the world, and the Nonaligned Movement to face this situation that endangers not only the Nicaraguan people and the Nicaraguan revolution but world peace, because with this behavior the U.S. Government is challenging and trying to destroy international law. This is what we wanted to tell you after we learned of the decision made by the U.S. Senate last night.

It must be acknowledged that President Reagan is not promoting a policy that has massive bipartisan support. If we look at the count at the House of Representatives and the Senate, the difference is truly that of a divided Congress. The U.S. Congress is divided. It is true that the U.S. President got a majority of votes, but it was a majority with a very small margin.

For example, the 221 to 209 vote in the House of Representatives was very close. In addition, the 53 to 47 vote was very close. In other words, the difference of 6 votes at the Senate and 12 votes at the House of Representatives are very smallmargins that show that the U.S. Congress is not giving unanimous support to this warmongering policy, this policy of force, this illegal policy. It also shows that the U.S. people are not supporting this illegal policy and this policy of force. So we trust that the U.S. people will know how to confront this act that violates the laws of their government, which endangers world peace and threatens to shed the blood of North American youths in Central America. Do you have any questions?

[Clayman] Adam Clayman of the APIA news agency. I have two questions: Does the cancellation of your trip to Santo Domingo have anything to do with the Senate's decision yesterday? Second, do you know of any additional measures, diplomatic measures, by the United States? For example, there is the rumor that there are plans to reduce the U.S. mission in Nicaragua to the charge d'affaires level.

[Ortega] We have not cancelled our trip to Santo Domingo. We are still going. Regarding additional measures, surely new measures could be implemented after this. There is talk of a blockade, even a naval blockade, around Nicaragua. This is a step that has been contemplated by U.S. strategists who promote this policy. On other occasions there has been talk about the withdrawal of the U.S. ambassador to our country and reducing representation. But, well, that is still to be seen.

However, what cannot be denied is that there is a new turn in the war that the United States has been promoting against Nicaragua.

[Garcia] Eric Garcia Salinas of ACAN-EFE. We have reports that the government has ordered the withdrawal of European volunteer workers from the war zones. Is this true?

[Ortega] The Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry is drafting a communique in which we are taking every necessary measure so that the international volunteers will not be working in the most dangerous areas. We want to preserve their lives. We want to guarantee their lives.

We have a responsibility as a government, and thus we are going to withdraw these volunteers from the most dangerous areas of highest conflict, and we will relocate them in other areas. We have already held meetings with all government and nongovernment organizations, as well as with the volunteers who are here in our country to draft a relocation plan for those who are in the most dangerous areas.

[Corral] Fausto Corral of Ecuador's HOY newspaper. How will Nicaragua's efforts at the United Nations regarding The Hague Court issue continue? Will you take this matter to the General Assembly?

[Ortega] Nicaragua reserved the right to convoke, in due time, the UN Security Council. What we did was to inform the UN Security Council formally about this situation and report it to the international community. However, in due time Nicaragua can convoke the UN Security Council and the General Assembly.

[Unidentified reporter] Commander Ortega, the new decision of the U.S. Administration revives the topic of Nicaragua's defensive weapons. What is the current stand of the Nicaraguan Government on this?

[Ortega] The Nicaraguan position of obtaining all those weapons needed to defend the country has never been more fair. All our weapons are defensive, and we are facing what is practically a declaration of war from the U.S. Government. All that is left is for the President to sign the law. Therefore, we are facing a declaration of war. Well, thank you.

Envoy Foresees Intervention

[Text] The U.S. Congress has chosen war, Nicaragua has said regarding the Senate's approval of additional aid for the contras. The United States is heading irrevocably toward direct intervention by U.S. troops in Nicaragua and to the Vietnamization of the Central America conflict, Nicaraguan Ambassador to Washington Carlos Tunnerman has said.

The Nicaraguan Embassy last night accused the U.S. Congress of regrettably choosing war over the peaceful settling of disputes between states.

In a communique, the Nicaraguan Embassy said that the Senate's decision to support the Reagan administration's request for aid to the contras represents congressional approval for financing a war against the Nicaraguan people and government. This action shows absolute contempt for international laws and violates the International Court of Justice's ruling of 27 July 1986.

The recent actions approved by the two U.S. congressional houses shows a regrettable preference for war over the peaceful settlement of disputes between states, the communique added.

For his part, Ambassador Carlos Tunnerman said that the United States is heading irrevocably toward direct intervention by its troops in Nicaragua and to the Vietnamization of the Central American conflict.

ORTEGA BEGINS 1-MONTH TRIP TO THREE COUNTRIES

[Text] Managua, 14 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- President Daniel Ortega embarked today on a lengthy official trip that will take him to the Dominican Republic, China, and Zimbabwe, according to Sandinist sources.

Commander Ortega's tour will last 1 month, but there was no word as to the dates and length of stay in each country.

In the Dominican Republic he will attend the inauguration of the new head of state Joaquin Balaguer on 16 August. In Zimbabwe, he will participate in the seventh meeting of the Nonaligned Movement, from 26 August to 10 September.

The sources did not explain the reason for the Nicaraguan president's visit to China or how many days he will spend there. Ortega's trip takes place 1 day after the U.S. Senate approved $100 million in aid for the contras, thus ratifying the decision reached by the House of Representatives on 25 June.

RAMIREZ VIEWS RELATIONS WITH CHURCH, BISHOPS

[Text] Guatemala, 14 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- Nicaraguan Vice President Sergio Ramirez Mercado has said that the Catholic Church will not topple the Nicaraguan Government "because there is no conflict" with that institution. Ramirez Mercado, who participated with his Central American counterparts in the installation of the preparatory commission for the "Central American parliament," returned to Managua today.

The Nicaraguan vice president told ACAN-EFE that there is no conflict between the Sandinist regime and the Catholic Church or with religion, "because in Nicaragua there are 400 priests, more than 800 churches that hold masses on Sundays, and there are open-air processions and religious manifestations."

"We have no conflict with the church or religion; we have conflicts with certain bishops who support the counterrevolutionary aggression, and that is another problem" the vice president said. According to Sergio Ramirez, "The problem is not with the bishops but with their political positions, which lean toward the counterrevolution at a time of war such as we are experiencing."

The Sandinist politician said that 86 percent of the Nicaraguan people "are Catholic, and the Church is made up of God's people. Therefore, we cannot be in conflict with the Church, because God's people have the weapons in Nicaragua."

The Sandinist leader recalled that Guatemalan President Jacob Arbenz (1951-1954) "was not toppled because he confronted the church, but because he confronted the United Fruit [company], the State Department (U.S.), and the newly born CIA, and he hesitated to give the people rifles."

"In Nicaragua there are 300,000 Nicaraguans who have rifles in their hands and in this case it is not possible to take the people's power away," Ramirez Mercado said.

Ramirez said: "Criticism does not worry us, but if someone, whether a bishop or not, says that the International Court of Justice [ICJ] decision is prejudiced because it favors Nicaragua, that the counterrevolutionaries have a right to take up arms and receive money from anyone, his opinions are those of a traitor," The ICJ favored Nicaragua in a complaint lodged by that country against the U.S. Government for promoting a "war" against Nicaragua.

"Nicaragua is faced with the problem of treason against a small, poor, weak country," Ramirez added. In Nicaragua "there should be political differences, a pluralist society, and an open exchange of ideas, because that is the only way to succeed." But if during a war "that has already cost us thousands of deaths and dollars, someone says that the aggression is fair, that is another problem." "It is not a problem of opinion, but an act of treason against one's own country," Sergio Ramirez stressed.

The vice president added that the same problem exists with the opposition newspaper LA PRENSA, which has been closed indefinitely the Sandinists. Its "owners are aligned with the Reagan administration's policies," he said.

"We would not be bothered by the fact that someone has pro-North American opinions if we were at peace with the United States, but we are in a war situation," Ramirez said. He said that no country experiencing a war tolerates positions that destroy the national unity.

"When Mrs Thatcher attacked Argentina during the Malvinas war, she seized ships and censured the press," Ramirez said.

U.S. SENATE APPROVAL OF AID TO CONTRAS NOTED

FL141137 Havana Radio Progreso Network in Spanish 1100 GMT 14 Aug 86

[Text] By 53 votes in favor and 47 against, the U.S. senate has approved the Reagan administration's request to give $100 million in aid to the Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries.

While President Ronald Reagan called the Senate's decision wise, Senator Tom Harkin said the approval of those funds to the counterrevolutionaries opens the road to U.S. armed intervention in Nicaragua.

Vote Marks 'New Stage'

FL141811 Havana Television Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 14 Aug 86

[Text] The U.S. Senate approval of $100 million in aid to the Nicaraguan counterrevolutionary bands operating in Nicaragua is an official recognition and acceptance of the aggressive military maneuvers practiced against the Sandinist revolution by the Reagan Administration.

With 53 votes in favor and 47 against, after 3 days of debate, the Senate approved the large sum to finance and provide logistical support to Somozist forces.

In addition, the measure includes the concession of $300 million to other U.S. allies in Central America: Honduras, El Salvador, Costa Rica, and Guatemala.

In the opinion of several observers, that decision begins a new stage in the U.S. policy of interference in the area, especially in Nicaragua. The measure demonstrates the desperate interest of the U.S. Government in destabilizing the Sandinist revolution based on Reagan's ridiculous arguments of the so-called danger that Managua could create for regional security and the United States.

During the past few months the White House has carried out a strong pressure campaign which concluded last night with the approval of the $100 million requested by Reagan.

On 1 September Reagan's proteges -- responsible for the deaths of hundreds of Nicaraguan children, elerly people, women, and men -- will receive the first $40 million, which will initiate a higher level in the already long chain of U.S. aggressions against Sandino's fatherland.

Contadora Stance Noted

FL141605 Havana Radio Reloj Network in Spanish 1423 GMT 14 Aug 86

[Text] The Contadora Group is in the process of internal revision and is analyzing the strategy to neutralize the Nicaraguan counterrevolution and assure peace, contrary to the theories presented by the U.S. Government.

Analysts say this new alternative was discussed by the foreign ministers and leaders present in Colombia during President Virgilio Barco's inauguration.

The purpose of the new Contadora strategy is to confront the official U.S. action supporting and financing the Nicaraguan counterrevolution which, according to Washington, should be viewed as an eventual solution in Central America.

The decision made last night by the U.S. Senate to approve Reagan's request for $100 million in military aid to the Nicaraguan counterrevolution reveals a policy recognizing those bands.

LAWYERS SUPPORT ICJ DECISION AGAINST U.S.

FL141528 Havana Radio Reloj Network in Spanish 1416 GMT 14 Aug 86

[Text] The National Union of Cuban Lawyers has issued a declaration congratulating and applauding the just decision made by the International Court of Justice [ICJ] on 27 June 1986 in response to the Nicaraguan demand made in April 1984 against the United States.

The Sandinist government requested the ICJ declare the United States responsible for the aggressions committed in recent years against the Nicaraguan revolution.

The sentence given by The Hague Tribunal, the highest judicial organ of the United Nations, can be called historic.

The Union calls on all progressive lawyers of the world, particularly those in America, to give extensive recognition to the court's decision to ensure its enforcement so the United States will follow the norms of international law.

MEXICO'S PRESIDENT REJECTS U.S. 'INTERVENTION'

[Text] Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid has said in Washington that his government firmly rejects any U.S. intervention in Mexican internal affairs. In a meeting with U.S. Senator Dennis DeConcini, De la Madrid said that he was not willing to discuss Mexican election results with any U.S. politician.

One month ago Senator DeConcini handed the Senate a draft resolution in which he accused the Mexican Government of fraud in the 6 July Chihuahua state elections; in the draft he asked that the elections be annulled.

Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid said that DeConcini's information on the actual Mexican situation was not correct, and the National Action Party, which the U.S. Senator supports, is an opposition political organization that is always seeking support from the United States.

NONALIGNED MOVEMENT SUPPORT FOR C.A. NOTED

["Our America" commentary]

[Text] It has been 25 years since the first Nonaligned Movement summit meeting. In these 25 years, the movement has seen the Latin American presence within the organization grow noticeably. Today, 15 nations of the region enjoy the status of full members of the Nonaligned Movement, and 10 others participate as observers. The Puerto Rican Socialist Party, as a national liberation movement, is also an observer within the movement. The growing participation of Latin America and the Caribbean within the ranks of the nonaligned corresponds with the support that the movement has been increasingly offering to the better causes of the peoples of our America.

The Nonaligned Movement has always supported Cuba in the face of the aggressions to which it has been subjected by U.S. imperialism. The movement has also demanded that Washington put an end to the criminal economic blockade it has imposed on the island and return to Cuban sovereignty the land on which the Guantanamo Naval Base is located. The movement has also supported the Puerto Rican people's struggle for its independence and has demanded an end to the colonial presence in Guadeloupe, Martinique, and French Guiana, French territories in the Caribbean.

The movement also condemns the permanent U.S. aggression against Nicaragua and had demanded that the Nicaraguan people be allowed to build the society they feel meets their wishes and interests. At the same time it has spoken out against the United States' open intervention in El Salvador and supports their emancipation struggle. The Nonaligned Movement also supports the anti-fascist struggle of the Chilean people, Bolivia's just aspiration for a sea outlet, and, also Argentina's claim to the Malvinas Islands.

The Nonaligned Movement has also been a staunch supporter and promoter of international solidarity for the people and government of Panama in its struggle to rescue its sovereignty over its national territory and today is demanding the United States respect the 1977 Canal Treaties. At the ministerial meeting held in New Delhi in April, the Nonaligned Movement condemned foreign intervention in Haiti's domestic matters and demanded that its people be allowed to freely choose their economic and political system.

The movement's foreign ministers said the Third World's foreign debt was unbearable under the current situation, described the IMF's policies as inadequate, and urged a just and equitable new world economic order.

At the end of this month, the eighth Nonaligned Movement summit will begin in Harare, Zimbabwe. The Latin American and Caribbean representation will be larger than ever, and the movement's solidarity with the causes of the peoples of our America will be strengthened.

LOSSES IN VARIOUS MINISTRIES DETAILED

[Excerpt] As of 30 June, the country has lost 70 million pesos due to factors directly affecting profits. The main causes range from theft to pending bills which have been cancelled by some companies. Some of the main causes of this situation are lack of control, lack of demands, and irresponsibility.

Among those reflecting the greatest losses are the Ministry of Construction, 32 million pesos; Ministry of Industry, 20 million pesos; Ministry of Agriculture, 8 million; and the Ministry of the Steelworking Industry [SIME], over 6 million pesos. A portion of the losses is inevitable because of damaged or deteriorated goods. The losses that our economy suffers for unjustified reasons are very high.

For example, in 1985 the SIME Cuban-Soviet Friendship Motor Repair Company registered 5,442,600 pesos in direct losses. [passage omitted]

CDB, FAO AGREE TO PROMOTE COOPERATION

FL142155 Bridgetown CANA in English 2130 GMT 14 Aug 86

[Text] Bridgetown, Barbados, Aug 14, CANA -- The Caribbean Development Bank (CDB) and the UN Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO) today signed a letter of understanding, expected to lead to increased co-operation in technical co-operation.

FAO Director General Edouard Saouma said the organisation would be able to assist the bank in developing expertise in identification and appraisal of projects for agriculture and fisheries. The CDB has collaborated with the FAO informally since the bank was established in 1970. Saouma said the FAO looked forward to co-operating with the bank and was ready to act.

CDB President William Demas said: We are of the view that, in the agricultural sector, there are mutual benefits to be derived by our institutions through joint approaches in such areas as project identification, preparation, appraisal and implementation as well as sector studies, policy planning and information exchange. Demas said the bank was very concerned over the problems of the small farmers.

We recognise that they have played, and continue to play, a significant role in both domestic and export agriculture and provide most, if not all, of the food that is locally produced, he added. For this reason, it is our view that both of our institutions can find some common ground for collaboration to support the growth and development of the small farm sector.

JAMAICA

PANEL TO INVESTIGATE ELECTION IRREGULARITIES

[Text] Kingston, Jamaica, Aug 13, CANA — The Jamaica Government has set up an independent inquiry into reports of voting irregularities and administrative weakness during the July 29 municipal elections, swept by the Opposition People's National Party (PNP). It will make recommendations for the strengthening of the electoral system.

Prime Minister Edward Seaga announced last night that the commission will be headed by a former chief justice, Sir Herbert Duffus. It includes a former solicitor general, Ewart Forrest and a former permanent secretary in the National Security and Justice Ministry, Donald Rainford. No announcement was made on when the commission will begin its work.

There were pockets of violence on election day and reports of open voting, electoral and party officials being chased from polling stations and theft of ballot boxes. The problems were mainly in a few traditionally volatile political areas in the capital, the parish of St Catherine, west of Kingston, and Clarendon, south central Jamaica.

PNP leader Michael Manley said this week that both his party and Seaga's Jamaica Labour Party (JLP) had the capacity to solve the problems of electoral malpractices. Manley warned that if action was not taken now, it could become impossible to really know what are the true decisions of the Jamaica electorate. Elections here are overseen by an independent electoral advisory committee with members from the two major political parties and independents appointed by the governor general.

According to Seaga, the terms of reference of the commission were to enquire into allegations of misconduct, irregularities, malpractices and weaknesses in the conduct of the election. It is to make recommendations for improvements in the electoral system to ensure its strengthening and integrity. Seaga said that establishment of the electoral committee had gone a long way in improving the selection of electoral officers and functionaries.

It is, therefore, all the more necessary to ensure that the administration of the conduct of elections, including such matters as protection of ballot boxes, security arrangements at polling stations and communication in the field on election day do not fall short of what the nation is entitled to expect, the prime minister said.

HUNGARIAN CREDIT LINE PERMITS RANGE OF IMPORTS

[Text] Kingston, Jamaica, Aug 13, CANA -- Jamaica will benefit from a U.S. 22 million dollar line of credit from Hungary, the first such arrangement with an Eastern Bloc nation. The money will go toward the purchase of goods from Hungary and is being administered by the local Export-Import (EXIM) Bank, the Central Bank announced.

It said that line of credit is opened to both the public and private sectors and will allow for the import of a wide range of capital goods, raw materials, spares and consumer items. Agricultural equipment and fabricated construction materials of iron, steel and aluminium are among the products eligible under the arrangement.

The EXIM Bank said the loans under the scheme will attract an annual interest of 7.75 per cent for consumer goods and 8.5 per cent for capital goods. Both will attract a two per cent service charge by the bank. There will also be a one per cent charge for service and committment fee. Repayment period is subject to negotiation. An EXIM Bank credit official said this was the first major line of credit between Jamaica and an East Bloc nation, although trading already exists.

Business analysts say that East Bloc credits might be attractive to foreign exchange-short Jamaica because of their relatively soft terms compared to commerical and other arrangements.

BRODERSOHN EXPLAINS ECONOMIC MEASURES

PY152021 Buenos Aires BUENOS AIRES HERALD in English 14 Aug 86 p 2

[Text] (NA-DYN) -- Treasury Secretary Mario Brodersohn oficially announced yesterday that the government will send a package of economic measures to Congress next week to fight inflation.

The package, aimed at boosting production and growth, includes a "once only" tax whitewash coupled with a reform of the tax system and also the implementation of several other regulations regarding capital repatriation and capitalization of the public foreign debt. Brodersohn explained that the measures intend to "create conditions for economic growth" and pointed out that the whitewash decided by the government was "substantially different from previous ones" because it will be complemented by a tax system reform and measures to fight tax evasion. He admitted that though the whitewash was not included in the Radical Party electoral platform because it was considered "little ethical," the government had decided it was now necessary to take pragmatic actions.

Brodersohn told reporters that the whitewash will take place now that other reforms which changed traditional rules for almost all taxes have already been passed by Congress; such as the new inflation adjustment system and the elimination of banking and stock exchange secrecy and of share anonymity.

The treasury secretary also gave details on the proposed tax system reforms. This system will include the income and eventual benefits of taxpayers who have not declared these new assets up to December 31, 1985, and they will be subject to the payment of a special regulatory tax. Capital, net assets and value added tax (IVA) will also be included in the overhaul and unpaid taxes and fines will be pardoned. Brodersohn stressed that along with these measures repatriation of Argentine capital will be linked with the capitalization of the foreign debt and will be earmarked for two purposes; investment projects (basically those related to industrial and export promotion) and long-term investment.

UK PLANES 'HARASSING' SHIPS IN SOUTH ATLANTIC

[Text] Comodro Rivadavia, 16 Aug (TELAM) -- Argentine fishing ships were harassed this week by British planes operating from the Malvinas Islands base. These planes made low flights over Argentine ships that were fishing in areas outside the unilateral "exclusion zone" established by the United Kingdom. The charge was made at Puerto Deseado, Santa Cruz Province, by crewmen of the ship Rokko Maru. Gaston Vigier, the captain of the ship, made statements to the newspaper EL PATAGONICO and to Radio Puerto Deseado. Vigier said that a Neptune aircraft flying British colors and the RAF inscription painted on its fuselage made a low flight over the ship, coming within just 20 meters of its mainmast. The ship, which is 102 meters long and has a crew of 74, was fishing in the South Atlantic. The captain regarded the low over-flight as harassment and noted that other ships suffered similar intimidating actions in recent days. The report was confirmed to TELAM by the Argentine naval prefect at Puerto Deseado, Osvaldo Sieppe, who thus confirmed the charges made by the captain and crew of the Rokko Maru. Sieppe also confirmed that similar intimidating actions by British planes against Argentine fishing ships had occurred this week.

DURAN, BARTHELEMY DISCUSS AID FROM U.S.

PY160005 La Paz Cadena Panamericana in Spanish 1700 GMT 15 Aug 86

[Excerpts] Presidential Secretary Juan Carlos Duran Saucedo today downplayed Washington reports that the United States has turned down Bolivia's request for $100 million to help fight drug trafficking. The minister said that the report from the United States carried by the news agency EFE was groundless and unofficial.

[Begin Duran recording] Well, my opinion is, to begin with, this report does not provide the source of the statement. In the second place, I feel that it is a hasty statement because the Bolivian ministers did not go to the United States to ask for $100 million in cash. The ministers went to see President Reagan and the U.S. secretaries to ask them to facilitate the negotiations with the various international organizations to obtain funds. Naturally, to obtain these funds one must follow certain procedures, as is usual in the case of any foreign aid and cooperation. Therefore, it is pointless and hasty to judge the trip of the ministers to the United States as either positive or negative at this point. [end recording] [passage omitted]

Interior, Migration, and Justice Minister Fernando Barthelemy today said it would be a mistake for the United States to deny Bolivia the $100 million it has requested for the struggle against drug trafficking. The minister refused to say what the government would do if this happened, but insisted the United States must back Bolivia in its attempt at eliminating the scourge.

[Begin recording] [Barthelemy] We have nothing official. What we have are news media reports. However, my personal opinion is it would be a terrible mistake for the United States Government to refuse to contribute to an undertaking as important as the struggle against drug trafficking.

We knew very well there were bound to be side effects and economic problems for the country when we began the fight, and still we have managed to maintain the struggle against drug traffic. Therefore, the request of the Bolivian Government is fully justified. I repeat that I feel it would be a bad policy move for the United States Government not to cooperate directly with its Bolivian counterpart in carrying out this task.

[Reporter] Mr Minister, should this aid not materialize, will the Bolivian Government change its current attitude and refuse to accept U.S. troops on Bolivian territory?

[Barthelemy] I am not a prophet, and I would not like to predict anything at this point. [end recording]

Later, the interior minister said that Bolivia needs much more than $100 million to fight drug trafficking.

[Begin Barthelemy recording] It is quite obvious that it is not the amount of money needed to develop the country that helps to establish areas of development and improve the standards of living. If, on top of this, we are going to demand the eradication of coca plantations, we will need a great deal more money, not only for the antinarcotic program, but mainly for development programs. This money could be obtained through loans because these loans would be invested in productive projects. But, what is really needed is support for the balance of payments and this cannot be obtained through loans because the country cannot pay these loans. We also need support to outfit the Armed Forces and the police for a direct struggle against drug trafficking. This too must be a donation or a nonreimbursable contribution. [end recording]

The minister concluded by saying the government is awaiting the latest news on the negotiations of its ministers in Washington and he hopes that this news will be positive for the country.

Information Minister on Aid

PY161155 La Paz La Red Panamericana in Spanish 0000 GMT 16 Aug 86

[Text] Information Minister Herman Antelo denied the United States has refused to aid Bolivia with $100 million. He made this statement during a press conference referring to U.S. reports on Bolivian ministers who are negotiating in Washington.

[Begin Antelo recording] First, I would like to deny some press reports saying the United States allegedly refused to help Bolivia. This help had been requested by a Bolivian delegation in Washington. It is not true. The atmosphere in which the Bolivian request was received was totally favorable, and at the moment, the Bolivian delegation is discussing with U.S. Government officials the manner in which aid can be implemented. [end recording]

Afterward, the minister said that given the sort of aid requested by Bolivia, it will have to first be approved by the U.S. Congress. He added that the Bolivian delegation and the IMF are jointly studying the possibility of obtaining a $100-million bridge loan.

[Begin Antelo recording, in progress]...a $100-million bridge loan. One of the most important aspects raised by the Bolivian proposal -- and one which has been well-received by the U.S. Government and public -- was the Bolivian Government's decision to maintain its drug trafficking repression policy and program as well as a proposal to definitely replace the coca crop in 3 years. To carry out this plan, Bolivia has requested from the U.S. Government $300 million in aid -- that is, $100 million per year -- to provide the peasants, who are currently cultivating coca leaves, with attractive alternative farming projects. This project will be discussed by the U.S. Congress with the support of the U.S. Government. This project aims exclusively at finding an alternative for the peasants who make a living from coca leaves crops. [end recording]

COB ASKS OPPOSITION TO IMPEACH PAZ ESTENSSORO

[Text] La Paz, 15 Aug (AFP) -- The Bolivian Labor Confederation (COB) has asked opposition legislators to begin impeachment proceedings against President Victor Paz Estenssoro and four cabinet members, for allowing the nation's sovereignty to be violated according to COB leader Juan Lechin Oquendo.

The top-ranking COB leader noted that the deputies approved the request because of the unconstitutional position adopted by the executive branch in allowing the presence of U.S. soldiers in national territory, without the previous legal authorization of the legislative branch. He added that the government cannot deny the presence of foreign military forces led by General John Taylor or ignore the Bolivian Armed Forces, which are capable of confronting drug trafficking.

COCA FARMERS OPPOSE U.S. TROOP PRESENCE

[Text] Cochabamba, 15 Aug (EFE) -- The Federation of Peasant Workers of the tropical area of Cochabamba, east of La Paz, has announced it will not allow the plan to reduce coca farming to continue so long as U.S. troops remain on Bolivian territory.

Peasant leader Julio Rocha stated this decision was made after coca farmers were repeatedly attacked by antinarcotic units. Rocha also explained the program to reduce coca crops promised farmers $300 for each hectare. However, according to Rocha, the government has not fulfilled its promises, and there are many peasants who have destroyed their coca crops without compensation.

SARNEY ANNOUNCES AGRICULTURAL SECTOR GOALS

[Excerpts] When announcing goals for the agricultural sector yesterday, President Sarney said the new measures establish the priorities for the agricultural sector with increases in the production of rice, corn, beans, and manioc. On the same occasion, the president signed decrees creating teams to review agricultural insurance and define policies on the raising of cattle for slaughter. He also approved the creation of the rural savings account, the rural development fund, and the National Center for Research on Irrigation. President Sarney explained the importance of the new measures in his speech:

[Begin recording] Withthis agricultural plan and with the agricultural policy, priorities have been clearly established. These priorities encompass agriculture and cattle raising and seek to improve the situation of the poor, to produce basic foodstuff, to feed the people, to increase the domestic market, and to ensure its supply. The small farmers feel it is necessary to clearly define agricultural goals and to create policies on credit, prices, investments, stockpiling, and storage that may serve as guides for their decisions and activities. [passage omitted] [end recording]

In his weekly radio program "Chatting by the Radio" President Sarney today said that the new agricultural plan is of interest to the small farmers as well as for the consumers who are facing supply difficulties. Sarney added that the plan will grant agriculture permanent rules of defense, security, and assistance:

[Begin recording] Farmers will now be able to plan their activities a year or more ahead because they will be protected by minimum prices, which will guarantee their production, and mainly because, farmers will be insured against floods, droughts, or other problems that can affect this sector. Brazil now has a new national agricultural policy. The state owed the farmers measures like the ones announced. While industry, commerce, financial, and services activities were regulated by stable, permanent, and well-defined rules, our farming sector always awaited improvised policies. In general, government regulations, prices, and guarantees were not issued on time, but always at the last minute. Only then did the farmer know if it would be worthwhile to plant. We do not want this situation to continue. With our economic stabilization plan and the new horizons of the Brazilian economy, it is now possible for Brazilian farmers to plan their crops ahead, even up to 2 years ahead, considering the guarantees offered by the government. [end recording]

Afterward, President Sarney spoke of the creation of a rural savings account.

[Begin recording] Also, in order to grant the farming sector independent and safe resources, we announce the creation of savings accounts called the green savings account [caderneta verde], that is, a savings account paying ineterst and monetary adjustment, just like a normal savings account. This green savings account will be meant for the farmers and will be managed by the Banco do Brasil with the resources deposited used by the bank to grant farming loans. The farmers can be assured that Brazil now has a defined agricultural policy. What we wish is to give security to the rural producers. [end recording]

Finally, President Sarney explained that the new measures represent considerable progress toward solving the farming problem and that the main objective is to improve the Brazilian people's lives. The President also appealed to the people to contribute to the polio vaccination campaign tomorrow.

FOURTH, LARGEST ARSENAL DISCOVERY ANNOUNCED

The latest official reports indicate that some 15 persons are being held at La Serena for their connections with extremist activities. Several of these persons have received guerrilla training in Cuba, according to the authorities. Three leaders who had managed to escape the first dragnet have also been arrested. The first arsenals were discovered near the beaches of Caleta Carrizal Bajo and Palo Negro. Other arsenals were found hidden in semi-abandoned mines and in Huasco Bajo. Now, Copiapo Domestic Service will provide a detailed report on the new arsenal that contained arms, explosives and ammunition.

[Begin relay] An enormous new arsenal was just discovered by the authorities in yet another part of the 3d Region, a hill called Cerro Blanco, in the area of (Sierra del Sapo), some 96 km from Copiapo. The arms were hidden in caves similar to those miners use. Army and Carabineros, working together with security forces, found a great deal of firearms, explosives and ammunition, this is the largest discovery made within the framework of investigations that started with the finding of arms and explosives in Caleta Carrizal Bajo and Palo Negro.

The new discovery was found 180 km from the coast in a hilly area northeast of Copiapo. The Copiapo Domestic Service team was the first to arrive at the site to record the enormous quantity of material that international terrorists have brought into this area: 1,940 hand grenades; 650 U.S.-made M-16 rifles; 80 new Soviet-made Katiushka rocket launchers equipped with night scopes; 315 rockets for the lauchers, 800,000 rounds of M-16 ammunition; 112 rolls of P-4 plastic explosives; 239 packages of TNT; various types of fuses; FAL rifles; and a quantity of various clips for guns.

We would like to repeat that all this was discovered in caves carefully covered by boards and dirt and not easily accessible. We can also add that searches continue in the area in the hope of finding more arms. This arsenal, discovered 96 km from Copiapo, is the largest found since 1973. [end relay]

FPMR, MIR Deny Arms Ownership

[By Fernado Rueda]

[Text] Santiago, 15 Aug (EFE) -- The two main armed groups fighting against Pinochet's regime have stated that the huge arsenal of arms and explosives recently discovered by security forces does not belong to them.

The denials were made in anonymous telephone calls to the EFE office by individuals who claimed to be spokesmen for the Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front (FPMR) and for the Movement of the Revolutionary Left (MIR).

These two Marxist groups, which are responsible for hundreds of terrorist attacks, have thus denied government reports that the material found in several underground caches on the Chilean coast belonged to the FPMR.

Among the weapons discovered are 1,045 U.S. M-16 automatic rifles with 360,000 5.56 mm cartridges, 1,996.5 kg of explosives (TNT and T-4), Soviet-made hand grenades, Soviet-made Katiuska RPG armor-piercing rockets; and large quantities of detonators, fuses, and similar supplies. According to official sources, among the items found were advanced telecommunications equipment, diving equipment, generators, air compressors, tools and spare parts for maintenance of manual and electronic equipment, first-aid supplies, and enough canned food supplies to feed 30 men for 50 days. All these items were shown to the press and inspected by General Augusto Pinochet.

The arms, explosives, and other items had been introduced into Chile by Soviet trawlers and were stored in various places of Carrizal Bajo, 750 km north of Santiago, according to the National Intelligence Center (CNI, the political police). The CNI also claimed that there was evidence that the MIR's foreign branch was devoted to procuring resources (arms, equipment, training) and then to distributing them to "violent Marxist groups," among which it mentioned the FPMR.

In the anonymous calls to EFE, the alleged spokesmen of the two groups said their organizations have nothing to do with each other, and the arsenal found and seized by Chilean security services did not belong to them.

The first telephone call was received by EFE's Santiago office from an unidentified individual who said he was a MIR representative, and claimed that the MIR was responsible for several bomb attacks during the last 2 days in Santiago. The alleged MIR spokesman added that the "actions of sabotage" were conducted to celebrate the 21st anniversary of the founding of his organization, which advocates popular war as the only way to achieve socialism. Asked about the alleged MIR links to the FPMR and MIR participation in obtaining the foreign war materiel discovered in the clandestine arsenal, the unidentified individual categorically denied such links or participation.

A few hours later, another anonymous telephone call was received by EFE. This call was from an anonymous FPMR spokesman, who read an official communique from that organization which was created only 2 and 1/2 years ago to conduct an armed struggle against the Pinochet regime and which promised to disband after Chile recovers full domocracy. The FPMR, which is named after a Chilean independence patriot, also categorically denied any links to the arsenal discovered on the coast, saying it is "a clumsy farce." The spokesman added: "We do not know most of the alleged FPMR members who have been arrested" in relation to the discovery of the arsenal.

After reading the official communique and in answer to a question from EFE, the spokesman reiterated that the FPMR has no links whatsoever to the MIR, although it sympathizes with it on some points.

Seguel Questions Arms Report

[Text] Lima, 15 Aug (EFE) -- Chilean union leader Rodolfo Seguel today stated in Lima that he has serious doubts about a Chilean Government report on arms shipments unloaded in Chile by Soviet ships.

Seguel said: "We do not believe anything the dictatorship says. This report might be true, but government officials have time and again lied to us, and no one believes them any more." Seugel said that in Chile no one watches the television newscasts anymore and that the people now call the "60-Minute" newscast, "the 60 lies.'"

Seguel added that the government has blamed Marxism for anything that goes wrong. He described the Chilean situation as "dramatic, as a result of the repression exercised by the Armed Forces, which have thus lost credibility in the eyes of the people, who no longer believe them."

Seguel said Chilean Foreign Minister Jaime del Valle was wrong when he said 90 percent of the countries in the world are against Chile. This is not so, Seguel said, they are against the government of General Augusto Pinochet. All nations have rejected the military dictatorship and the desire to restore democracy in Chile "is steadily growing."

The Chilean left has radicalized, Seguel said, because its aspirations have not been fulfilled. He added: We believe the Communist Party leaders will encourage party members to seek democracy without resorting to violence.

FEUSACH PRESIDENT SAYS MARTINEZ MURDERED

[Excerpts] Santiago, 16 Aug (TELAM-EFE) -- Eugenio Rivera Campos, president of the Santiago University Students Federation (Feusach), charged today that university leader Mario Martinez was murdered.

According to the charges published in the newspaper TERCERA DE LA HORA, the crime may have been committed while Mario Martinez Rodriguez was investigating the security apparatus at Santiago University for its connection with the case of the two youths who, according to eyewitnesses, were set ablaze by a military patrol on 2 July. [passage omitted]

The Feusach president said the late Mario Martinez Rodriguez "had the mission of discovering and confirming who was in charge of the security apparatus that has been set up on the university campus," and he managed to gather information liking this apparatus to the case of Rodrigo Rojas Denegri, who died of burns on 6 July, and Carmen Gloria Quintana, who was also burned.

The Feusach president said that a few days before his death, Martinez had learned some details about the filming of a videotape delivered to television channels by Chilean authorities.

In that videotape, the burned girl Carmen Gloria Guintana, who is a student at this university, was apparently seen distributing Molotov cocktails during a student demonstration. This videotape was intended to support the first official report on the burning of the two youths, which said the incendiary devices they were carrying had caused the tragedy.

Feusach President Eugenio Rivera Campos asserted that because of what Mario Martinez Rodriguez had learned, he began to receive death threats and to be followed on the streets. Therefore, Martinez filed with the courts a request for protection, which was disregarded by the judge. [passage omitted]

Eugenio Rivera Campos reported he is now receiving threats and is being followed, and for this reason he filed with the courts a request for protection on 14 August.

PRESIDENT EXPLAINS FORMATION OF LIBERAL CABINET

PA160413 Bogota EL SIGLO in Spanish 13 Aug 86 p 1

[Text] As a result of the meeting held by President Virgilio Barco Vargas with his ministers, which took place at the Narino Palace, the press secretariat of the presidency issued the following statement:

The government has appointed a cabinet formed by 12 Liberal ministers and a high-ranking official of the Armed Forces. Those appointments are made in accordance with Article 120 of the Consitution and by virtue of the Conservative Party Board of Directors' decision to participate in the Executive Branch. Thus, the Colombian president had the authorization to freely form his government. By assuming their responsibilities as members of the political opposition, the legitimate conservative authorities contributed considerably to the initiation of a new historical phase in the relations between the government and the oppossition parties. The government is committed to the highest interest of the nation and consequently, the ministers' conduct, as well as that of all authorities and officials, should strictly reflect a true nationalistic spirit of service to the community.

CONSERVATIVES AGREE TO TECHNICAL PARTICIPATION

PA150206 Bogota Emisoras CARACOL Network in Spanish 1215 GMT 15 Aug 86

[Excerpt] Bogota -- The Conservative Party has agreed to participate in the technical aspects of the government. After a very lengthy meeting, the National Conservative Directorate yesterday drafted a document they will present today to President Barco.

The directorate basically reaffirms the criteria contained in a document released at the beginning of the government on the Conservative Party's decision not to participate in the political aspects of the current government.

However, the Conservative Party decided it cannot block or veto the participation of its technicians in the administration. If the government or the president believe they need the technical support of Colombians who happen to be Conservatives, the directorate cannot prevent or block those appointments, a directorate member said. The directorate spokesman noted that the Conservative position on not participating politically remains unchanged. The question concerning Conservatives' technical participation has been answered. The first Conservative appointed to a technical post is Francisco Ortega, general manager of the Bank of the Republic.

Asked about the political positions and administrative [word indistinct], our source replied: Those that President Barco decides. If the government appoints a Conservative to a position, it will be because the position is technical in nature, and the directorate will not veto such an appointment, he added.

The Conservative Directorate will inform President Barco Vargas about its decision today. This decision was reached after nearly 10 hours of deliberations. The message will contain the criteria on the government-opposition system which has been in force since the president took power in the wake of the Conservative Party's refusal to participate in the Executive Branch. [Editorial: "The Logic of Events"]

[Text] All events have their logic and consequences unless some change of course takes place leading to different results. One cannot attempt to place all the premises in order or indissolubly link them and marvel later because they lead to conclusions. That is how the current political process has been working. There are no surprises. Each step comes as result of the previous one.

In the past 30 years, the country moved in a climate of coexistence. Since the National Front was created, the parties employed a style that allowed political tranquillity and institutional reinforcement. There were clear rules of the game which the parties agreed on and respected. We managed to consolidate a democracy with its own characteristics, attuned to our system, which could be viewed as a model in the political lives of contemporary countries. The guidelines which those mechanisms of understanding propitated were combined with the facilities for the diverse currents of thought to freely move within a broad democratic spirit.

The country is accustomed to the calm atmosphere. It has enjoyed that atmosphere from the time the agreements between our two great parties went into force until today. It has been an experience for which all Colombians are deeply grateful.

The modes employed have been diverse. First, when we were barely coming out of that era of rude clashes among the sectors of our society, the guidelines were established to make these sectors agree on the formulas to put the country on the right course. When the advantages of this system became evident and new generations educated within this spirit entered politics, new and more flexible rules were established, always aiming to preserve the national spirit of the government. This spirit is not something that can be accepted or dissolved to suit each administration. It constitutes an imperative imposed by the nation which wants to preserve it and a mandate expressly stated in the Constitution.

In the past electoral campaign the Liberal candidate expressed his decision to establish a party government. His decision was expressed with unequivocal clarity at all times.

When the Liberal candidate won, his ideas also won. The country was facing a party government, a Liberal Party Government, of course. When no other corrections, additions, clarifications, or interpretations regarding those views, were introduced the possibility of Conservative participation vanished. The consequences were obvious. They were evident before the elections. If the idea was to establish a party government or even if there was talk of implanting a "Liberal republic", Conservatives were faced with the possibility of accepting a participation which chiefly seeks to achieve those goals. There was never any explanation on how it would be possible to reconcile that stance with the participation of members of other parties in the executive. There was nothing that could explicitly or implicitly envisage a way out. Even if they were appointed, the Conservatives would not have political responsibilities within the new government. Their presence would merely have a bureaucratic sense. That contributes nothing to preserving the national spirit our Constitution demands. This spirit does not rule because people want it but because it is mandated in the Constitution.

The meeting of the National Conservative Directorate with the president-elect did not contribute any new element to analyze the situation. We are facing the implementation of a new party government, as was announced before the elections, was reaffirmed through them, and has been repeated at all times since. There has not been an inch of progress in either sense, and there has not been the slightest clarification as to how this can be reconciled with Conservative participation. The stance adopted by the Conservatives is the logical development of facts that are clear to the entire nation. These are eloquent facts. They speak for themselves without needing interpretations. Moreover, absolutely nothing was done that could lead to another interpretation.

FEBRES CORDERO DEFENDS ECONOMIC MEASURES

[Text] President Leon Febres Cordero stated today that the economic measures issued by the Monetary Board are drastic but necessary and emphasized that they are not the only advisable measures to adequately face the crisis.

He added that to help the people endure the crisis, he will propose to Congress an increase of salaries and wages in accordance with the country's possibilities and conceded that the [word indistinct] prices had been frozen, regardless of approval.

The president said the constant reduction of oil prices on the international market has worsened the country's situation, and for this reason the decision was made to implement a new economic plan at the lowest possible social cost.

He added that these measures were essential because the state is no longer receiving $1.1 billion from oil exports. Febres Cordero said that although this is a national problem concerning all Ecuadoreans, the opposition's statements give the impression that Congress is an island that is neither affected by nor has any effect on the crisis. He noted that the opposition continues to criticize instead solve the nation's problems. Febres Cordero denied that with these economic measure the government has given priority to the payment of the foreign debt, disregarding national problems. He explained that the plan that has been drafted will first allow the government to meet the needs of the Ecuadoran people and then to pay international banks.

He admitted that the measures will have a social cost and noted: Why deceive the people by telling them that we are going to pull out of this crisis -- which is the worst in our history -- without any cost? However, he stressed that he is doing everything possible to keep the social cost to a minimum.

The interest rate will be 2.5 percent less than that agreed on during the negotiations in 1983.

STROESSNER ADDRESSES CABINET, GENERALS

PY160058 Asuncion Red Privada de Teledifusora Paraguaya Television in Spanish 1600 GMT 15 Aug 86

["Impromptu" speech by President Alfredo Stroessner to Cabinet members and senior officers at Government House on 15 August following a military parade marking the 449th anniversary of the city of Asuncion -- recorded].

[Excerpts] I would like to thank General Rodriguez for his eloquent words, and I am very pleased to hear him speak in these terms, because it is what all of us here believe in. In also thank you Messrs Generals, and all others gathered here for your unscheduled appearance in my office. [passage omitted]

This is a joyful day. We have just watched a brilliant military parade, which confirms the peace that prevails in our country. This peace is a treasure that must be closely safeguarded. [passage omitted]

It is this peace that enables our country to develop. It is not that peace is merely the absence of war, as someone has said. The truth is that the pcace we enjoy allows our people to work and study, and allows our country to achieve more things. [passage omitted]

I would also like to note that there is a small opposition group which is against the nation's development. When this group was in power our country lived in backwardness. It is this same group that said that to build the Acaray Hydroelectric Dam was to mortgage the country's future. This is completely false. They said the same thing when we built the Friendship Bridge [uniting the Brazilian and Paraguayan cities of Foz do Yguazu and Puerto Presidente Stroessner]. They said that the location of the head of the bridge violated our nation's sovereignty since it was established on our side of the river. The truth is that today this bridge no longer suffices. We need to build another bridge, because the old one cannot handle the huge flow of traffic.

We have done many things, and what we are doing now does not mean that we are mortgaging the nation's future. On the contrary, we are helping to develop our country. We still plan to build the soybean railroad, which will cost about $400 million. We are thinking about implementing this project. This is one of many important national projects. Our country will be far better off 40 or 50 years from now. [The cost of this soybean railroad] will be paid by what we are going to save in the price of fuel alone.

After one more of so many years in government, I refer only to the last period, because if I counted all the others there would be too many, I can assure you that I have the same patriotic spirit, the same spirit of a Colorado party member. I hope I will be able to continue like this, and I pray that God will accompany me, as He has always accompanied me, and I that He will accompany all of you so that all of you will be strong. We are not going to be weak, because weaknesses have resulted in great evils to this country: attempts at violence, revolutions, and even international war.

Right now we are in good condition. We of course will not satisfy everyone, but we do have a democratic government, a government that is of the majority. [passage omitted]

We know that our Colorado Party is a great party. There may be some bitterness, but this affects the weak, those who want to flirt with the opposition, who seek notoriety -- you already know to whom I am referring, a few who really have no power -- this is why we are with the people and for the people and why we shall continue to work for them.

I also hope that the barracks will always be firm bastions of the peace and development our country enjoys.

I thank you very much for your presence, and I hope that each of you will be firm in your resolve. We are not going to yield, as some charlatan's statements are published in [opposition newspapers] SENDERO, EL PUEBLO, or other newspapers, because we shall not be afraid of the opinion of one person. No, not at all. We are strong.

Let us go forward, and I hope you will all be strong, dedicated, and intelligent, so as to continue on the good path the country has been following and so that the country may have a prosperous future.

Thank you very much for your presence. [applause]

GARCIA MEETS UNION LEADERS, COMMENTS ON IMF

[Text] Lima, 15 Aug (AFP) -- President Alan Garcia today said Peru offered to pay the IMF $35 million of the $190-million debt that is due to show we acknowledge the debt but at the same time prove we are not going to sarifice Peruvian reserves.

We have told the IMF that we are sending them whatever we can. If they accept it, so much the better, added Garcia. He said, however, that according to information he has received, the IMF had decided to declare Peru ineligible for new loans. Garcia made this remark at Government House when he received a group of union leaders from seven countries attending a meeting on foreign debt in Lima.

Chilean Rodolfo Seguel, president of the National Workers Command, former Colombian Labor Minister Jorge Carrillo Rojas, Argentine Alberto Campos, and Gumerciando Bueno from Bolivia were among those received by President Garcia. Labor leaders from Brazil and Ecuador also attended the meeting.

Garcia Has 'No Fear' of IMF

[Excerpt] Lima, 15 Aug (EFE) -- Peruvian President Alan Garcia said today that IMF theories "cannot be applied to or accepted by the poor peoples of Latin America" and stated he has no fear of "ghostly figures, paper tigers, threats, and declaration." Garcia said this to a group of Latin American labor leaders while the IMF was declaring Peru "ineligible" for new IMF credits for not having met its payment obligations. On 12 August Peru paid only $35 million of the $196 million it owes. In reply, the IMF Board made a decision that the Peruvian Government itself seemed to take for granted.

Garcia said: "The meaning of the IMF declaration is more important than the credits themselves, because the credits have always been used to pay earlier debts, and there has been a merry-go-round and recycling of old debts with ever-increasing interests."

The Peruvian president, who called the IMF "the great overseer and guardian of imperialist economy and international capitalism," said his country cannot surrender its economic sovereignty by permitting itself to be governed by letters of intent or a theory belonging to the past, of its elected government.

Garcia stressed: "We cannot accept that the economy of the nation be strangled to satisfy foreign demands, which may be supported by legal documents but which historically have no moral support." The president made it clear that a government cannot sarifice its people for the sake of rates of interest fixed in New York or London. He added: "It should be understood that our working people are more important to us than the interests of a few holders of saving accounts -- who have rights -- but to whom this decision will not mean tuberculosis, criminality, subversion, or hunger."

This blocking of credits places Peru among a small group of countries including: Liberia, Vietnam, the Sudan, and Guyana. [passage omitted]

Denounces IMF Before Crowd

[Text] Lima, 16 Aug (EFE) -- President Alan Garcia today told Peruvians that they "have the obligation to be with me at this time" in a speech delivered from the balcony of Government Palace. He made this comment in answer to the IMF decision yesterday declaring Peru ineligible for new credits.

Garcia talked for 1 hour to thousands of people summoned by the APRA [American Revolutionary Popular Alliance] to the Plaza de Armas in Lima. In a vibrant and effective speech, Garcia labeled the IMF as "financial police and the guardian of the creditor countries."

Yesterday, Peru was declared ineligible for new credits from IMF after the country paid only $35 million of the $196 million of its matured debt. President Garcia said: "Democracy means sharing," and added, " I am not the only one affected. We are all in this together."

The theme of the presidential speech was a continuous exhortation for solidarity, perseverance, and unity among all Peruvians regardless of political ideology, "because we have faith in our abilities, and we will not allow our faith to be taken away from us."

The IMF decision puts Peru in a small group of countries like Vietnam, the Sudan, and Guyana. It is possible the credit ineligibility will affect not only IMF credits but also loans from other financial sources.

Garcia said that the Latin American countries, including Peru, have "an economy that is distorted by the low prices paid for our products. Where then are we going to get the money to pay our foreign debt?" The president pointed out that a few months ago the price of oil was $25 a barrel, now it is only $11; silver was $11 per ounce, now it is only $5. He gave these as concrete examples that affect Peru. According to official Peruvian economic sources, 1986 exports -- which were forecast to be $3.1 billion -- will be $2.5 billion as a result of the fall of oil, copper, and silver prices.

The president also called on the people not to let themselves be overcome by pessimism and discouragement. He said: "We must learn to confront problems now in order to achieve independence and development in the future."

"We are not making a big show of being shocked, because we are aware of IMF injustices. We merely gave a serene national and anti-imperialist answer instead of being provoked," said the president. He reiterated that although the country is not refusing to pay the foreign debt of $14 billion, it will not pay at the risk of sacrificing the country's development.

He added: "Under current circumstances, Peru must follow a different path because the debt problem is basically a system of domination and economic penetration."

Garcia rejected the IMF conditions that Peru sign a so-called "letter of intent" to reach an agreement with the creditor countries. He added: "We have avoided the protection" of those letters "so that we could control our own economy." He pointed out that the IMF formulas "are failures, which have impoverished us." He added: "The answer we received lacks sensibility and understanding. The IMF has the inhuman logic of closing its ears to the poor people of the earth."

The president -- who before he spoke was greeted with shouts of "Alan, hit the IMF hard," or "Alan, listen, the people are with you" -- rejected the idea expressed by some commentators that Peru has isolated itself by not fulfilling its obligations to the IMF. Garcia said: "No good Peruvian can say that. We need to isolate ourselves from injustice and exploitation in order to be with the people," and "we are in solidarity with the people of Latin America, with the Argentina of President Alfonsin, and with the Mexico of President De la Madrid."

In conclusion, the president said: "We are going to move forward with all Peruvians. Do not leave me alone, because I am never going to abandon Peru."

Central Bank President on IMF

[Text] Lima, 15 Aug (AFP) -- Leonel Figueroa, president of the Peruvian Central Bank, stated here tonight that the relations between Peru and the IMF are as normal as before, but with a notable, little difference [pequena gran diferencia]. The difference is that we no longer have access to IMF funds, Figueroa added.

In a press conference he held tonight, Figueroa commented on IMF's decision to declare Peru ineligible for new loans. He said this decision will have no consequences for the country's economy or for Peru's relations with its other creditors. Figueroa stressed this decision contains a significant change in the treatment the IMF usually gives to nations that fail to fulfill their obligations and are declared ineligible. The IMF decision concerning Peru states the ineligibility will be suspended automatically as soon as the country repays its debt. Figueroa pointed out that in the past, for a country declared ineligible to recover its rights, three steps had to be complied with: Pay the debt, await the subsequent IMF decision, and promise to fulfill several conditions. He also said the IMF board had agreed to reexamine Peru's situation at its meeting scheduled for January 1987.

Peru's current outstanding debt with the IMF amounts to 139.9 million SDR's (Special Drawing Rights), approximately $168 million. By January 1987, the debt will be 160 million SDR's, Figueroa said. He added that the payment of $35 million Peru made this week was not made so that it could negotiate its eligibility, but to show its willingness to pay to the extent possible. The government laments the IMF decision, but it will maintain its policy of allocating its resources for development rather than paying foreign debts.

Our differences with the IMF are a matter of viewpoints as far as the debt and the consequences of the conditions the IMF imposes are concerned. In the light of this decision, Peru has chosen to maintain its economic sovereignty, Figueroa said. He also reported having received messages from creditor banks stating that they still plan to negotiate the debts Peru has with them next month. Figueroa added the negotiations with creditor governments will be handled basically at the bilateral level.

Our trade will not suffer, Figueroa said, because the government maintains its decision to keep paying its short-term debts. In fact, he said, short-term commercial credits have gone up lately, from $150 million in September last year to $310 million now. The president of the Central Bank (responsible for issuing the currency) also stated that Peruvian exports should not be affected.

He emphasized that the IMF decision would not affect loans already approved by the World Bank and the IDB, amounting to some $500 million with each institution. However, he said that with the World Bank, Peru will renegotiate a rescheduling of the projects the World Bank loans will finance in order to adjust them to the list of development priorities and to facilitate the disbursement of the loans.

WAGNER: GDR NOTE 'STEP IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION'

[Excerpts] The GDR Government has made an ambiguous statement on the Pia Vesta case about an arms shipment from the GDR brought close to our shores. [passage omitted]

Tonight, Foreign Minister Allan Wagner confirmed that the GDR Government has answered the Peruvian Government's protest note about the Pia Vesta case.

[Begin Wagner recording] The response of the GDR ambassador states that in view of our request, the GDR Government continues to conduct a detailed investigation into the participation of two GDR enterprises in this case. Regarding the sale of the equipment and armaments by the GDR state enterprise, (Imes), to the Swiss company, Yufag, the GDR ambassador said that according to the investigation, (Imes) acted in good faith, although he admits the possibility that (Imes) may have been deceived by the Yufag Company regarding the final destination of the armaments.

We believe this answer to the protest note we delivered on 12 August is a step in the right direction by the GDR, which will eventually provide the information necessary to make a judgment regarding this case. This case has justifiably created concern for the government and the people in general. [end recording]

Denies Pia Vesta Arms Bought

[Excerpt] Lima 14 Aug (EFE) -- Peruvian Foreign Minister Allan Wagner today labeled "ridiculous and absurd" the comment by a U.S. businessman in Miami that the arms shipment carried by the Danish vessel Pia Vesta was purchased by the Peruvian Navy and Army.

War Minister General Jorge Flores stated the report is "false" and the Army has at no time purchased any armaments "especially in a surreptitious manner."

After meeting with President Alan Garcia, Foreign Minister Wagner indicated that Interior Minister Abel Salinas and Navy Minister Vice Admiral Willy Harm are volunteering to testify before the secret Congressional investigation of the Pia Vesta case. Wagner pointed out that he is waiting for the Senate to set a date for him to provide details "on the current status of the investigations of the complex case, which is typical of illegal arms traffic." GARCIA RECEIVES AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL MISSION

Hammarberg said the Peruvian chief executive, who held a 90-minute conversation with the Amnesty International mission at Government Palace, agreed with the Amnesty International position against any excesses against human rights and disappearances. President Garcia told the Amnesty International mission that whenever he learned about killings, as with the Accomarca (Ayacucho) case in which more than 40 peasants were killed last year, the authorities immediately adopted the appropriate measures to conduct thorough investigations and then followed them up with the appropriate court proceedings.

Hammarberg, who is accompanied by Michael McClintock, the Amnesty International investigator for Latin America, said the president informed them of the substantial decrease in the number of disappearances. Nevertheless, there were new cases of disappearances last year, and there are 80 cases which have not been resolved yet.

During the meeting the president stressed the huge problems his government is facing to combat terrorism. Hammarberg stated for that reason he told the president the world outside Peru and his organization are also aware of this problem. The Amnesty International official noted that of course the dilemma is to combat terrorism without human rights, which was the reason for the meeting. He also said they reviewed what measures the government may approve to confront the terrorist problems.

Hammarberg stated he and the Peruvian chief executive discussed the killing of some 300 terrorist inmates during the prison uprisings that occurred in Lima and Callao on 19 June 1986. The president reported that 124 inmates were executed by the police after they had surrendered.

The Amnesty International mission in Ayacucho, 575 km southeast of Lima, which has been in a state of emergency since 1983, will conduct on-the-spot investigations into reports of disappearances, illegal executions, and other human rights violations.

Hammarberg, who has been in Peru for the past 4 days, will go to Puno, 1,314 km southeast of Lima, after visiting Ayacucho.

GOVERNMENT PUTS SECURITY FORCES ON ALERT

[Text] Lima, 16 Aug (TELAM-ANSA) -- The intelligence services of the Peruvian Government have detected a large subversive plan that may be carried out in the next few hours by subversives of the Shining Path or the Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement (MRTA) in Lima. Because of this situation, the government of President Alan Garcia Perez has ordered all security forces to remain on maximum alert this morning.

Through coded radio signals, Army troops and special police detachments were ordered to deploy their forces through the different districts of the capital while on the outskirts of Lima, on the Panamericana Sur Highway, civil guard patrols took strict security measures. The general alert was sounded in all police units, while motorized Army and infantry marine troops were deployed throughout Lima and in the nearby port of Callao.

According to the intelligence services, the commercial centers and shops in residential areas may be the main targets of the subversive action. It is noted that the MRTA might try to conduct armed takeover operations and sabotage in urban areas as well as an incursion into southern Lima, in an area known as Pachacamac in the Lurin district.

DE LA MADRID MEETS WITH JOURNALISTS IN U.S.

[Report by Humberto Mares from Washington, D.C.]

[Text] President Miguel de la Madrid concluded his official duties in Washington today. This morning he met with U.S. publishers and columnists and with members of the Press Club. After a short speech, he answered questions. He told the audience that his conversations with President Reagan had been satisfactory and that the two exchanged views in a sincere and constructive manner on political issues and other matters of interests.

Speaking before 400 U.S. journalists, President De la Madrid reiterated that a climate of good understanding prevailed throughout their conversations, even on matters on which they hold different views.

President de la Madrid said we must prevent biased miniority groups, on both sides of the border which do not represent the interests of our countries, from creating a climate of tension and antagonism. We should not try to encourage rumors which can only harm the good relations between our countries, he said.

I am in favor of constructive criticism, I even encourage it, because it helps prevent efforts to confuse and misinform the people, De la Madrid added.

Referring to Mexico's financial situation, President De la Madrid said the negotiations carried out with the IMF and financial institutions were the best proof of the Mexican Government's desire to keep working on a structural reorganization of the country's economy. He also referred to Mexico's entry into the GATT.

Meanwhile, U.S. newsmen insisted on asking President De la Madrid about the elections in Chihuahua and drug trafficking. President De la Madrid told them that it was not within his power to annul elections and that the electoral authorities in Chihuahua must decide the situation, according to what the Constitution establishes for such cases. He also mentioned that the church has no business interfering in politics and elections.

Regarding drug trafficking, De la Madrid insisted on the need for every country to participate in the campaign against it, but always respecting the sovereignty of countries.

Following the news conference, which lasted approximately 2 hours, President De la Madrid returned to Mexico City.

SEPULVEDA ON BALAGUER, U.S.-MEXICO RELATIONS

PA160418 Mexico City Red Nacional 13 Imevision Television in Spanish 1955 GMT 15 Aug 86

[Text] Foreign Relations Secretary Bernardo Sepulveda Amor left at noon today for the Dominican Republic. Sepulveda Amor will officially represent Mexico at the inauguration of new Dominican President Joaquin Balaguer. The inauguration will take place 16 August.

In Santo Domingo, outgoing head of state Salvador Jorge Blanco said that Balaguer is wrong when he said he will take over a country in shambles. Salvador Jorge Blanco said that his efforts, especially in the economic field, overcame problems that afflicted the Domincan Republic when he took power in 1982.

Joaquin Balaguer, 72 years old and almost blind, will assume the Domincan Presidency for the fifth time 16 August for a 4-year term.

Lorena Martinez is now at the international airport with a report:

[Begin relay] [Martinez] A few moments ago Foreign Relations Secretary Bernardo Sepulveda Amor left for the Dominican Republic to attend the inauguration of Dominican President Joaquin Balaguer in representation of Miguel de la Madrid. Shortly before leaving, he said that with the withdrawal of the tuna embargo, the United States is acknowledging Mexico's sovereignty over its 200 miles of maritime territory. He added that the importance of handling bilateral issues on time, creating an appropriate atmosphere to resolve problems, and ensuring a climate of trust and respect between the two countries were stressed during President Miguel de la Madrid's recent visit to the United States.

Finally, Sepulveda Amor announced that among the president's activities for the rest of the year are his participation in the UN General Assembly and a probable visit to Japan and China [not further specified]. [end relay]

OFFICIALS DENY DEA AGENT MISTREATED

[Text] Investigations continue in the case of the U.S. DEA agent, Victor Cortes, who allegedly was mistreated by Mexican judicial agents. In Guadalajara, Jalisco, officials of the attorney general's office are making inquiries together with the local authorities.

Attorney General Sergio Garcia Ramirez congratulated and obtained the collaboration of Jalisco authorities, through Governor Enrique Alvarez del Castillo and Jalisco's attorney general, Jaime A. Ramirez.

Commenting on the case of DEA agent Victor Cortes, the Jalisco governor said that the arrest of the American is such a small incident that it cannot be reason for division between Mexico and the United States. Alvarez del Castillo added that he considers illogical the version which states that the DEA agent was tortured during his 3-hour stay in the office of the judicial police in Jalisco.

Jaime A. Ramirez, attorney general for the state of Jalisco, denied that Cortes and a colleague were mistreated. He added that they were detained as suspects because they were in a car whose license plates did not correspond to the number on the rear window sticker and because they were armed and without identity documents.

The attorney added that the U.S. agents were not even taken to cells. Instead they were in an office until personnel from the U.S. Consulate arrived 90 minutes later.

The Jalisco attorney ended by saying that once the identity of the agents was established, both were set free, and neither was tortured.

Meanwhile, in Washington, U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese was confident that Mexican authorities would clarify the situation and take appropriate steps to prevent similar incidents.

[Text] As a result of the incident that occurred in Guadalajara a few days ago between a U.S. antinarcotics agent and Mexican policemen, the U.S. Government presented a protest note today to the Mexican Government. The presentation of the protest note was announced by White House spokesman Larry Speakes, who described the incident as particularly unfortunate. According to Speakes, the incident involved Drug Enforcement Agency agent Victor Cortes, who reported presumed outrages by the Mexican police. Cortes is now in Tucson, Arizona, The Mexican attorney general's office has reported that the incident is being closely scrutinized. In Guadaljara, however, the Jalisco attorney of justice Jaime Ramirez had denied that policemen abused Cortes.

CHURCH URGES ANNULMENT OF CHIHUAHUA ELECTIONS

PA180227 Mexico City EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 15 Aug 86 p 11

[Text] For the church, the case of Chihuahua is not finished. "We feel that the best thing to do in order to have peace, is to annul the elections and to agree to hold new elections in which the will of the majority will be expressed without any pressure or obstacle."

The archbishop of Chihuahua, Adalberto Almeida y Merino; Manuel Talamas Camandari, bishob of Ciudad Juarez; and Jose Llaguno Farias, bishop of Tarahumara, announced this in "A Moral Examination of the Electoral Process," addressed to the people of Mexico and issued yesterday by Francisco Ramirez Meza, secretary of the Social Communications Commission.

They say that when the validity of an election is opposed by a general protest, the election is self-defeating "because it no longer represents the people's legitimate will." In addition, the bishops from Chihuahua State's most important cities say the elections have left doubts about the legitimacy of the authorities elected. "Any person who takes office under such conditions will face serious problems in carrying out his duties, unless he imposes his will by force, which by all means is contrary to our democratic principles," they said.

Therefore, they add, by annulling the elections, the regime would give firm evidence of its desire to respect the people's vote, and this could help to bring much needed peace and tranquillity to Chihuahua.

On previous occasions the church officials did not receive any support, even from Chihuahua's Jesuit community. This time Monsignor Almeida received a communique in which the Jesuit community is offering its support and will participate in the actions to obtain peace and justice.

PAN Continues Election Protests

PA171600 Mexico City THE NEWS in English 13 Aug 86 p 6

[By THE NEWS staff reporter Glenn Whitney]

[Excerpts] Members of the National Action Party (PAN) will move toward increasingly radical acts of civil disobedience until the results of the July 6 Chihuahua elections are annulled, a top party official said Tuesday.

Jesus Gonzalez Schmall, the PAN's congressional leader, said, "We will begin to radicalize our actions to defend democracy."

In a news conference held at the Legislative Palace, Gonzalez Schmall also announced plans to bring the annulment request to the Supreme Court. He was not optimistic about the success of a court fight to annul the elections, however, because the officials of the tribunal are nominated by the government, which is dominated by the Institutional Revolutionary Party. There is little chance for a decision in favor of the PAN, he said. [passage omitted]

Gonzalez Schmall rejected the idea that many members of his party might turn to abstention from voting to protest the electoral process. "I realize that it might seem illogical and absurd to continue to participate in an antidemocratic system," he said, "but I think the PAN must persist in its policy of exercising all resources to bring about change in the system. "Our participation has made it possible to reveal to the people that this is not a democratic government," he said. "Only through active participation do we have a chance to make our voices heard. Through our efforts, there is nobody in Mexico or outside who thinks that this is a democratic government," [passage omitted]

The PAN leader announced that the protest group headed by Chihuahua City Mayor Luis H. Alvarez arrived from Chihuahua to the city of Queretaro. This group will continue to speak against the "electoral injustices committed in Chihuahua," he said. He said the hunger strikes of Alvarez as well as those of Manuel Oropeza and Francisco Villarreal were effective in bringing about a greater public knowledge of what he termed "grave incidents of electoral fraud."

Gonzalez Schmall said according to Alvarez there are many citizens in the state of Chihuahua who believe fraud occurred in the elections and that the official results do not reveal the true wishes of the people. The government to be installed will not be accepted by the people of Chihuahua, he said. "The end of the hunger strike does not signify there is an end to the fight," he said. "There are plans to continue the fight with greater vigor and energy." [passage omitted]

The square was built under the municipal administration of Dominican political leader Francisco Jose Pena Gomez, who concludes his term with the square's dedication.

Delvalle and his retinue held a press conference at the Santo Domingo Hotel. Delvalle answered several questions; the most important dealt with Panama's participation in the Contadora Group, the Torrijos-Carter Treaties, and the return of the Canal. The session of the preparatory commission in charge of organizing the parliament began at 1600 and ended at 2200.

Leaders Comment

[Text] The Central American parliament will be the first political organization to resolve the regional problems in a search for permanent peace of our peoples, the Central American vice presidents said yesterday following their meeting in Guatemala City. This is their second meeting to organize this body.

The vice presidents of Guatemala, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras, and Nicaragua met in the Camino Real Hotel. Also present at the meeting were [Costa Rican Foreign Minister] Rodrigo Madrigal Nieto from Honduras [as published] and [Foreign Minister] Mario Quinonez Amezquita from Guatemala.

The representatives of the legislative assemblies who form part of the commissions also attended the meeting.

[Guatemalan Vice President] Carpio Nicolle welcomed his colleagues. He said that the creation of the parliament is needed and this is the first organization that will discuss the various problems of the area that are hindering the development of our peoples.

He added that this meeting is the cornerstone of "a great home in which we will live together and discuss our problems to find solid solutions that will bring peace to the region."

The Costa Rican vice president said that "this organization goes beyond Contadora. It is a great effort by Central America to establish an instrument of cooperation to reach a common goal."

Meanwhile, the Honduran vice president said that the parliament represents an option for resolving the problems affecting us.

He said that this organization will also discuss the belligerent problems affecting Central America in view of the inflexible attitude of Nicaragua.

Salvadoran Vice President Castillo Claramount said the organization will fill the political vacuum that has been prevailing in the region for many years.

[Nicaraguan Vice President] Ramirez Mercado said that his country supports "President Cerezo's brilliant idea of creating a parliament, because this will be the most qualified organization for discussing our problems and finding feasible solutions."

The meeting concluded last night, and the delegations will be going home today.

Ramirez Holds News Conference

PA151303 Guatemala City Radio Nuevo Mundo in Spanish 1200 GMT 14 Aug 86

[News conference by Nicaraguan Vice President Sergio Ramirez Mercado with unidentified reporters; place and date not given]

[Text] [Reporter] Nicaraguan Vice President Sergio Ramirez Mercado, we would like to ask your opinion regarding this meeting of Central American vice presidents.

[Ramirez] Our opinion is very favorable. We have come here with much enthusiasm and optimism, knowing that we will advance in the creation of the Latin American parliament [as heard]. This is a [word indistinct] hope for the Central American countries.

[Reporter] Does Nicaragua feel that this meeting and this parliament will somehow create a strictly Central American context?

[Ramirez] [Words indistinct] Central America. It is not subject to any foreign influences. Central America must remain for the Central Americans, and we must be the ones to build our [words indistinct].

[Reporter] What is Nicaragua's position at this meeting?

[Ramirez] We have advanced; this is a step forward. I hope that very soon the Central American presidents will be able to sign the treaty that creates the Central American parliament.

[Reporter] Has Nicaragua placed conditions or made proposals?

[Ramirez] There are no conditions. We fully agree with Guatemala's proposal. We are here to continue studying it.

[Reporter] Some governments, not the Guatemalan Government, but other governments such as the Costa Rican Government, have said that the Nicaraguan Government is not democratic. What is your opinion?

[Ramirez] There are many opinions regarding democracy. We are very busy resolving the Nicaraguan problems, and we are not about to ask whether other countries have or do not have a democratic system. That is none of our business. [Sentence indistinct].

[Reporter] What can you tell us about Nicaraguan democracy?

[Ramirez] We have a government and National Assembly chosen by the people. We are drafting our constitution. We are consolidating democracy according to our country's needs and according to our country's situation. [passage indistinct]

[Reporter] At this meeting of vice presidents is it possible that Nicaragua may suggest a condition of [word indistinct] intervention of foreign forces in Central America?

[Ramirez] It is not part of the agenda; however, this is included in the Contadora proposal. We feel that no force foreign to this region, regardless of ideology, should intervene in Central American matters.

[Reporter] Speaking of Nicaragua and its government, can the government (?confront) a foreign invasion?

[Ramirez] It is not something we are looking forward to. It is something we hope will never happen, but there is that possibility. Therefore, we are preparing to confront it [words indistinct].

[Reporter] [Words indistinct] Nicaragua of the arms race talked about in Central America?

[Ramirez] It is unfortunate that Central America and the peoples of Central America must purchase weapons when they should be building schools, hospitals, and irrigation systems for the agriculture sector and improving the industrial sector. I think that our peoples [words indistinct] peace so that these weapons will not be necessary [words indistinct].

[Reporter] During the Esquipulas meeting Honduran President Azcona said that, unfortunately, Nicaragua had to buy weapons instead of food because of the aggression it is experiencing. [Sentence indistinct]

[Ramirez] Nicaragua is not the only country that purchases weapons. There are other Central American countries that also [words indistinct] weapons. When we speak of demilitarization we must speak of demilitarization of the Central American area.

[Reporter] If an invasion did occur, is Nicaragua militarily ready?

[Ramirez] Of course. We are willing to defeat any kind of military aggression, we the Nicaraguans. We are trained for this. We have no one else. We, the Nicaraguans, will defend our homeland.

GOVERNMENT RULES OUT MEETINGS WITH NICARAGUA

PA151504 San Jose Radio Reloj in Spanish 1200 GMT 15 Aug 86

[Text] Costa Rica will not attend any meeting with Nicaragua's participation. Costa Rica asked the Central American delegations present at the installation of the commissions organizing the Central American parliament not to convoke any meetings of area vice presidents or foreign ministers.

The request was made by Costa Rican Foreign Minister Rodrigo Madrigal and was supported by Guatemala, El Salvador, and Honduras. Madrigal said that so long as the suit [with Nicaragua] is not resolved, Costa Rica will not attend any meeting where Nicaragua would also be present. The decision was made as a result of the charges filed by Nicaragua against Costa Rica at the International Court of Justice [ICJ].

Madrigal added: Costa Rica has decided not to attend any meeting with Nicaragua until the legal suit at the ICJ is settled in order to avoid goodwill gestures that contradict the facts. Madrigal said that Costa Rica will not listen to expressions of goodwill, support for democracy, or the like at joint meetings when actions are contradictory and quite the opposite.

In view of this situation, and so long as the charges filed by Nicaragua at the ICJ are not settled, Costa Rica will not attend any joint meetings with that country.

ARIAS ON SENATE APPROVAL OF CONTRA AID

PA151707 San Jose Radio Reloj in Spanish 1200 GMT 15 Aug 86

[Text] President Oscar Arias has said that the U.S. Senate's approval of aid for Nicaraguan counterrevolutionary groups was decided some time ago. He stressed that it was expected, as the Republican Party has the majority in the Senate. However, Arias said he would prefer a peaceful, negotiated solution to a military solution.

He reiterated his concern over the consequences of the Nicaraguan war in our country. He recalled that his government's intention is to reactivate the economy and promote a climate of peace to encourage new investments and create more jobs. However, the intensification of the war in Nicaragua will increase the immigration of Nicaraguans and with it the danger to our identity posed by the presence of 250,000 foreigners in our country.

Arias reiterated his conviction that Nicaragua is basically responsible for the Central American situation, because it has not shown flexibility, tolerance, or any ability [words indistinct], as requested at the Esquipulas presidential meeting. Instead, the daily LA PRENSA was closed down and some priests expelled, Arias said.

President Arias said that he has no reason to doubt President Reagan's commitment not to send U.S. soldiers to Nicaragua. He added: Although it may seem late to find a peaceful solution for the conflict, we must look forward to the Contadora Group's next meeting. The Contadora Group will hold its next meeting in New York in September, during the opening of the UN sessions.

DUARTE MEETS ORTEGA, DEMANDS END TO 'MEDDLING'

[Text] Santo Domingo, 17 Aug (EFE) -- Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte today announced that last night he demanded that his Nicaraguan colleague Daniel Ortega respect the independence of El Salvador. Duarte announced that in the National Palace of Santo Domingo, with President Joaquin Balaguer between the two of them, he demanded of Ortego that the Sandinists not meddle in El Salvador's affairs, "because El Salvador does not meddle in Nicaragua's."

According to Duarte, Nicaragua "has meddled and is meddling by setting up a sanctuary for Salvadoran guerrillas, helping them and giving them supplies and all types of logistical support, and that obviously endangers the stability of my country." He said that El Salvador has never meddled in Nicaragua's domestic affairs, and, therefore, "we demand that Nicaragua, in reciprocity, respect the integrity and self-determination of the Salvadoran people and try not to spread its revolution to other nations."

"I told him that in order to find a path of peace in Central America there must be a political will on the part of all the parties involved," Duarte stated in a news conference held this morning in a hotel in Santo Domingo. Shortly after, Ortega called a news conference in which he said that Nicaragua is disposed to signing the peace document of the Contadora Group on 16 September. He did not comment on, although he did confirm, the "exchange of views" with Duarte and Panamanian President Eric Arturo Delvalle.

The Salvadoran president told Ortega: "There cannot be an understanding among the Central American nations if Nicaragua commits the immense mistake of making demands at The Hague tribunal on democratic nations, especially on the democracy par excellence of the Costa Rican nation." He added that he told Ortega Saavedra that so long as Nicaragua aids the Salvadoran rebels, it is endangering Central American stability.

Duarte told Ortega: "We need to hold dialogues in our efforts to achieve detente, not at a bilateral level, but a multilateral effort which the five nations would feel calm and secure that Nicaragua would not destablize Central America." According to Duarte, the Managua government is willing to sign the Contadora peace document if the United States agrees to discuss the fate of Central America with the Sandinists.

Duarte stressed that, as a Salvadoran, he will not allow the Sandinists to discuss El Salvador's fate with the United States, because the Salvadorans are the only ones who can determine the country's fate. He said that, as in a laboratory, there are currently two models of revolution: the Sandinist revolution, which he described as Marxist, and the Salvadoran revolution, which is democratic.

Duarte said that Latin America practices and adopts democratic revolutions, and this is reflected in its efforts to rid itself of dictatorships. He said that his country's guerrillas are fleeing in disarray due to the training and control exercised by the Army throughout the national territory.

Duarte said that the guerrillas' actions have no military importance and that the few operations they have carried out serve only to generate international news. He said that there are only remnants of guerrillas left at the Honduran border. However, once border problems between the two countries are resolved, the guerrillas will be eliminated.

He called on the guerrillas to rejoin democratic life in El Salvador and cited the case of guerrilla leaders who have taken advantage of what he called a permanent amnesty, who are now enjoying a problem-free civilian life.

The Salvadoran Government and guerrillas will meet on 20 August in Mexico to draft a peace agreement to end a war that began on 10 January 1981 with the so-called "general offensive" of the FMLN military front. That meeting will pave the way for a third round of negotiations between government representatives and the rebels that the government has proposed for 29 August.

DUARTE NAMES REPRESENTATIVES TO TALKS IN MEXICO

[Text] San Salvador, 15 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- The Salvadoran Government today announced the names of President Jose Napoleon Duarte's delegates to the private talks with the guerrillas, which will take place in Mexico on 20 August. The commission will be made up of Rodolfo Antonio Castillo Claramount, vice president and foreign minister, Julio Adolfo Rey Prendes, the communications and culture minister, who is also one of Duarte's closest aides, and union leader Ricardo Soriano.

The meeting in Mexico will be in preparation for the third round of talks between the government and the guerrillas, which will supposedly be held in El Salvador, as agreed by the two parties. Edmundo Viera, deputy communications minister and government spokesman for the dialogue with the rebels, reported today that the delegation that will attend the 20 August meeting in Mexico is serious about preparing the third round of the peace talks." [quotation marks as received]

Colonel Reynaldo Lopez Nuila, the deputy security minister, and Alejandro Duarte, President Duarte's son and secretary of the Presidency, will be advisers for the commission; however, they will not be present at the private meetings. Viera said that the presidential commission is interested in establishing the date, place, and mechanisms for the third round of the dialogue for peace.

Rebel Delegation Named

[Text] San Salvador, 15 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- The Salvadoran guerrillas announced today the names of the members of the delegation that will represent them during private meetings with the government in Mexico to prepare for the third round of talks. The guerrillas, however, stressed that their delegation "would not be of the highest level."

During a telephone interview with a local radio station, FDR President Guillermo Manuel Ungo said that the rebels' delegation will be formed by Salvador Samayoa of the FMLN, Jose Villacorta of the FDR, and Arnet Diaz as assistant, Ungo said that "the rebels' delegation is not of the highest level."

The Salvadoran Government also announced today the names of the members of their delegation to participate in the Mexico talks. They will be Rodolfo Castillo Claramount, vice president and foreign minister, Adolfo Rey Prendes, minister for communications and culture, and Ricardo Soriano, a union leader.

Referring to the top-level commission proposed by Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte, Ungo said: "They want to take us in." He also disagreed with the meeting's taking place at the Salvadoran Embassy in Mexico City. Ungo pointed out that "the only spokesman authorized to announce the place and the procedures for the meetings as well as the commissions is the mediator, Bishop Arturo Rivera y Damas, although he is the only one who has kept silent." Rivera y Damas has been the mediator between the government and the Salvadoran guerrillas since the preparations for the new round of talks began.

On 4 August the Salvadoran Government proposed to the FMLN and the FDR to hold the new round of talks on 29 August in San Miguel, after private conversations to be held out of the country to agree on the agenda. The rebels refused to meet on 29 August in public, but instead agreed to meet in Mexico City on 20 August to determine the date, place, and procedure to be followed during the third round of talks.

Later in the interview Ungo said: "Duarte and his government are making propaganda, trying to surprise us (the guerrillas) and public opinion." Ungo added: "Duarte accuses us of trying to manipulate the dialogue and its preparation for propaganda purposes. It is the government, however, that is mounting a show."

Through these preliminary meetings the government and the guerrillas are trying to fix the place, date, and procedures for the third round of talks for peace. The rebels and the government have met twice, in October and November 1984, but no agreement was reached in either of the two meetings to end the war that has lasted for more than 6 years.

Viera Views Delegation

PA161552 San Salvador Raio Cadena YSKL in Spanish 1730 GMT 15 Aug 86

[Text] YSKL listeners, shortly we will have statements made this morning by Roberto Edmundo Viera, deputy culture and communications minister, in regard to the commission or the members of the Salvadoran Government commission which will meet with the FMLN-FDR guerrilas in Mexico on 20 August. Viera said that the commission is formed by six people, three of whom are official members of the commission and three of whom are advisers.

[Begin Viera recording, in progress] ... the national working commission with the president, and ratify the government's decision to give a content of seriousness and responsibility to these meetings in Mexico, which will set the date, place, and mechanism for the third round of the dialogue. Based on that seriousness and that responsibility, a representative, high-ranking government commission has been named. That commission will be formed of three people who will participate in the meetings and a group of three advisers, who will not participate directly in the meetings but will participate in the making of any decision regarding the mechanism and the operation of the dialogue.

The commission attending the meetings with FMLN-FDR members is made up of Rodolfo Castillo Claramount, vice president of the Republic and foreign minister; Julio Adolfo Rey Prendes, minister of culture and communications; and Ricardo Soriano, secretary general of Fesinconstrans [Federation of Trade Unions of the Construction and Related Industries, Transport, and Other Activities], who was proposed by the National Peasant-Worker Unity.

The three advisers attending the meeting with them are: Colonel Reynaldo Lopez Nuila, Jose Alejandro Duarte, and Fidel Chavez Mena. The commission highlights the seriousness which the government is giving the meeting in Mexico, and for that reason it is giving this level of representation to the commission. As you can see, the vice president of the Republic is heading the commission going to Mexico.

In this regard, we trust and hope that during this meeting we will determine the date and place as well as all the operational mechanisms for the third round of talks. This is basically the information regarding the commission. It will be in Mexico on 20 [August].

We are proposing to meet at the Salvadoran Embassy. Granted, they will reject the embassy, alleging that the meeting will not be private and that the place is known. Still, they have not proposed an alternative site. Our commission will be there. If they make contacts through the mediator to seek a different place in Mexico City, we are willing to seek a place. That is not a matter of honor and or a major point. The place could be some other area which would expedite the meetings.

Regarding the terms they have used, as they told Msgr Arturo Rivera y Damas, they are talking about prior private meetings. In this respect, our view of the concept of private does not mean that the location or whether the meeting will take place be kept secret. It is known that a meeting will take place. What is discussed is viewed as private, because the specific working commissions know about them. If the two sides do not reach an agreement, then things will remain at that level. If the two sides reach an agreement, the results of the talks held will be disclosed. That is our view on private meetings. It is not a matter of not disclosing that the meeting is taking place, but rather of not disclosing the topics discussed. This is handled as an agreement between the two sides.

Therefore, this is the commission which the government has set up. As you can see, this is top-level government commission. We hope that the FMLN-FDR treats this meeting with the same seriousness which the government does. [end recording]

It was unofficially reported this morning that the FMLN-FDR had named Salvador Samayoa to represent the FMLN. Also, Jorge Alberto Villacorta was unofficially mentioned, as well as Ruben Zamora of the FDR, to attend the prior meeting in Mexico City on the 20th. It was also reported that when the Salvadoran delegation arrives in Mexico an agreement on where to hold the meeting could be reached. The guerrillas, through Radio Venceremos or the mediator, could disclose their proposal to meet in some place other than our country's embassy in Mexico. [End recording]

CEREZO COMMENTS ON PLOT TO DESTABILIZE REGIME

[Text] Guatemala City, 16 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- President Vinicio Cerezo has downplayed a plot by "agricultural and military" sectors to destabilize his Christian Democratic regime which was uncovered this week.

The president, who yesterday went to Quiche Department, 164 km northwest of the country [as received], to inaugurate a regional fair, stated: "The destabilizing plan did not succeed because of the Army's loyalty to the process of democratization."

Cerezo disclosed that during a recent meeting with unidentified conservative politicians a group of agricultural exporters who are apprehensive about land reform talked with Army officers to get their support to topple the government.

The Guatemalan agricultural sector which sought the military's support was thinking of starting a "destabilizing plan" with the murder, kidnapping, and disappearance of "well-known personalities," according to yesterday's disclosures by the "Tele Prensa" newscast and the dailies LA HORA and PRENSA GRAFICA.

In addition, they had planned to step up destabilizing actions with a shortage of staple products and an increase in the price of food to cause an adverse reaction among the people "during a moment of despair."

The president did not reveal the names of the leaders of agricultural exporters who were involved in the plot. However, according to unofficial reports, government officials may be involved. The Christian Democratic government is currently facing strikes in 38 hospitals and 336 state health centers, pressures to increase the wages, and pressures by the private sector to raise the price of milk.

Also, there has been a critical shortage of sugar in the domestic market, to the extent that the Treasury Police had to conduct an operation in this capital and arrest 28 persons for hoarding the product.

The civil government views these incidents and the increased crime reported daily by the National Police as part of the destabilizing plan.

Agricultural exporters are apprehensive that the government will support expropriation land reform owing to the demands by Father Andres Giron, the leader of southern coast peasants, who is asking that land be given to 75,000 dispossessed families.

Defense Minister General Jaime Hernandez Mendez and Interior Minister Juan Jose Rodil Peralta have not commented on the plot.

[Text] The Guatemalan foreign minister has said that more publicity abroad is required but that there is a shortage of money for this. A few days ago this radio station aired an interview during which Deputy Guillermo Enrique Villar Anleu of the Christian Democratic Party said that he had just visited Europe and learned that Guatemala's poor image abroad continues, despite the democratization process initiated by the current government. During the interview, Villar Anleu said that some diplomats were useful only to attend cocktail parties. He added that he would report this situation to President Vinicio Cerezo Arevalo so that it could be corrected.

Regarding these remarks by Deputy Villar Anleu, this radio station interviewed Foreign Minister Mario Quinonez Amezquita, who also discussed other topics of international interest.

[Begin recording] [Reporter] [words indistinct] the resumption of consular relations with the United Kingdom on 15 August?

[Quinonez] Well, I will answer your question in all respects. Consular relations between the two countries will be established. The date that you have mentioned, however, is wrong. It will not be on 15 but on 19 August. At 0900 the two countries will release a joint communique [words indistinct]. The relations to be established will be consular, not diplomatic. This will occur on the morning of 19 August. Then we will issue a simple communique, mentioning only the reestablishment of consular relations and Guatemala's position.

[Reporter] Mr Minister, what implications will this have for Guatemala?

[Quinonez] Basically, it will accomplish two things: One, we will have better trade with the United Kingdom and neighboring nations; and two, we will be able to [words indistinct] and exchange views about [words indistinct]

[Reporter] Has the Guatemalan consul to represent us in the United Kingdom been appointed?

[Quinonez] No, not yet. Several candidates are being considered.

[Reporter] Will future relations with the United Kingdom and the question of Belize have [words indistinct]?

[Quinonez] [passage indistinct] As I have said a number of times, we will exchange views directly. Both the United Kingdom and Guatemala have been considering some proposals to be exchanged during a coming meeting. Perhaps we will reach an understanding.

[Quinonez] Not even if they come accompanied, except if they come as citizens [words indistinct] regarded as government representatives.

[Reporter] One last question. In the context of Guatemala's new image, has the establishment of diplomatic relations with Cuba been considered?

[Quinonez] The truth is that diplomatic relations are established with a country [words indistinct] exchange. In other words, we do not have commercial or diplomatic relations at present. Some have said such relations could be possible in the future. No such relations, however, are contemplated at present.

[Quinonez] In the first place, I do not accept as true the opinion of [words indistinct]. The country's image has changed greatly. [passage omitted] The proof of this is that the human rights commission [words indistinct] relaying information to various governments. This information does not always reflect reality. This does not mean that they create a poor image of the country, this means that some people do not want the Guatemalan democratic process to succeed. [passage indistinct]. Now, I do think the country must make an effort to improve certain aspects of its foreign diplomatic relations, not only on the level of embassies or [words indistinct] but also public relations. [passage indistinct] We (?invite) local news agencies to spread information, make the country known, have very good relations with the press of all those places, particularly Europe, but this is not precisely [words indistinct]. There should exist an agency in parallel with the diplomatic service to do this work. I do admit that it is necessary to speed up the country's public relations.

[Reporter] Have you suggested something about this to the president of the Republic?

[Quinonez] Not only have I made suggestions, I have requested a budget increase to allot special funds for this. [end recording]

ARMED FORCES COMMUNIQUE ON CRASH OF C-130

PA160004 Tegucigalpa Domestic Service in Spanish 2200 GMT 15 Aug 86

[Special communique issued by the Armed Forces; read by Colonel Leonel Gutierrez Minera at the Hernan Acosta Mejia Air Force Base in Tegucigalpa; date not given -- live]

[Excerpt] The Honduran Armed Forces hereby report:

A. On Thursday, 14 August 1986, a C-130 Hercules airplane with registration number FAH-556 departed from Tegucigalpa at 1035 for Dursuna, Mocoron, Gracias a Dios Department, on an official mission for the Armed Forces.

B. The airplane's crew was made up of Lt Col Luis Isidro Aguilar Godoy, Air Force Major Rigoberto Casco Posas, Air Force 2d Lt Marvin Edgardo Meza Valladares, 2d Sgt Hector Nery Hernandez, and 2d Sgt Miguel Maldonado David.

C. The aircraft was carrying 52 persons, including civilians and military members of the 5th Infantry Battalion; a list of their names is attached to this communique.

D. At 1400 vague reports were received from various sources indicating that some people had seen a burning plane near the community of Pimienta.

E. All possible means of contacting the aircraft were exhausted, and given that it did not reach its destination at the estimated time of arrival, airplanes and helicopters were sent to look for it. The search continued until nightfall and was renewed early this morning.

F. Today at 1000 the wrecked airplane was located close to Pimienta, at the following coordinates: 84 degrees 45 minutes West and 15 degrees 10 minutes North. The aircraft was totally destroyed, and all its passengers were killed. The force of the impact caused the disintegration of the aircraft, which caught fire. Consequently, the recovery of all the bodies has been difficult, and in some of the cases the bodies have been burned completely. Thus, it is not possible to identify all the bodies -- which will be brought to this capital tomorrow for a funeral service at the 1st Infantry Battalion headquarters. The funeral entourage will depart from there for their Christian burial.

G. Preliminary reports, issued by members of the Air Force's Department for the Investigation of Aircraft Accidents — who have been at the site of the tragedy since yesterday --- have revealed to the Honduran Air Force General Command that the severe weather conditions which prevailed in the area might have been the cause of this deplorable accident, which has brought mourning to Hondurans. A final report on this accident will be officially issued as soon as we have all the elements which pertain to an investigation of this type.

2. [number as received] The Honduran Armed Forces, upon reporting this sad information, publicly state their sorrow at the irreplaceable loss of dear comrades and distinguished citizens. We avail ourselves of this occasion to present our sincere condolences to all the relatives of the victims who died in this deplorable accident. Also, we raise our prayers to the Lord for the eternal peace of the souls of our dear comrades in arms and their relatives. [passage omitted]

ARMY APPOINTS TEMPORARY FUSEP COMMANDER

PA161428 Tegucigalpa EL HERALDO in Spanish 14 Aug 86 p 5

[Text] Colonel Alonso Tercero Beltran will temporarily assume the post of Public Security Forces (FUSEP) commander general, replacing Colonel Wilfredo Sanchez Valladares.

This was reported by Lieutenant Jose Anael Perez, chief of the FUSEP's Public Relations Department. He said that according to the law, Col Tercero Beltran assumed the top-ranking national security post as of yesterday.

Col Sanchez Valladares and Colonel Roberto Nunez Montes were suspended by the Armed Forces top echelons while there is an investigation of the public charges issued by Nationalist Deputy Rodolfo Zelaya.

Zelaya has claimed that the attack which was recently carried out against him was due to the "envious feelings" that Nunez Montes (G-2) feels for him because he has not been able to participate in Zelaya's business activities. He also said that Col Wilfredo Sanchez Valladares is involved in this.

Meanwhile, a commission comprised of top-ranking Armed Forces officers is investigating the charges, so top military echelons decided to temporarily suspend Sanchez Valladares and Nunez Montes. The deputy and businessman has been instructed to provide appropriate evidence.

Col Alonso Tercero Beltran formerly held the post of FUSEP inspector general, so he should assume the post of FUSEP commander general, it was stated by Lt Perez. The Armed Forces' Public Relations Department had not revealed as of yesterday afernoon who would replace the military intelligence (G-2) commander, Col Roberto Nunez Montes.

GONZALEZ MUNOZ 'SURPRISE' ENVOY TO NICARAGUA

PA161411 Tegucigalpa EL HERLALO in Spanish 14 Aug 86 p 2

[Article by Ramon Murillo Cantoral]

[Text] Tomorrow Colonel Efrain Lisando Gonzalez Munoz, former chief of the Joint General Staff of the Honduran Armed Forces, will take up his post as Honduran ambassador to Nicaragua in what appears to be an independent effort by the government to improve relations with Nicaragua.

The appointment of the veteran officer is a political-military surprise, as during a recent conversation with one of our editors he said that his new destination was the Honduran Embassy in Guatemala.

Until last month Gonzalez Munoz had been military attache at the Honduran Embassy in El Salvador, after having been chief of the Joint General Staff following the forced resignation of the previous commander, General Walter Lopez Reyes.

The transfer of Gonzalez Munoz to the embassy in Nicaragua was decided in a matter of hours, as he was just about to travel to Guatemala, whose government had already given approval. In addition, President Azcona Hoyo had already authorized the appointment.

The former chief of the Joint General Staff of the Honduran Armed Forces will also act as military attache in Managua.

Officials close to the presidential palace interpreted the appointment of Gonzalez Munoz as an attempt to improve relations with Nicaragua, which have been at a low level since the triumph of the Sandinist revolution in July 1979.

Gonzalez Munoz is considered a moderate within the Armed Forces and one who could carry out a better tour of duty than the ambassadors to Nicaragua during the last few years.

In addition, it is believed that he could be a valid speaker for the Sandinists, considering that the Sandinists gave him their approval within hours.

Initially it was announced that the new ambassador to Nicaragua would be Colonel Rigoberto Regalado Lara, brother of the present commander in chief of the Armed Forces, General Humberto Regalado Hernandez, and also military attache to the Honduran Embassy in Guatemala.

Gonzalez Munoz survived the "purge" a few years ago against the young officer movement that overthrew former President Oswaldo Lopez Arellano and which brought to power General Juan Alberto Melgar Castro.

At that time several officers were removed from active duty and branded as leftists, which was never proved. Among them were Juan Ramon Molina Cisneros, Mario Maldonado, Mario Leonel Fonseca, Gerardo Wildt Yates, and others.

In Gen Melgar Castro's government, Col Gonzalez Munoz held the post of minister of culture, tourism, and information. From there he went on to several posts within the military.

He was also founder of the Armed Forces Public Relations Office.

RAMIREZ CRITICIZES APPROVAL OF CONTRA AID

PA152024 Guatemala City PRENSA LIBRE in Spanish 15 Aug 86 p 14

[Text] The $100 million in aid for the contras is an unfortunate, unjust, and illegal decision, Nicaraguan Vice President Sergio Ramirez Mercado said during an interview shortly before he returned to his country. Ramirez said: "The United States has no right to intervene in Central America, much less to promote a war to harm the Nicaraguan people."

He recalled that the International Court of Justice recently ruled in favor of Nicaragua and demanded a stop to those attacks. President Reagan's [as published] decision is illegal and places him on the margin of international law.

Ramirez said that the million-dollar aid for the contras will only worsen the situation and entails grave risks and great tensions. We are worried because the warlike situation in Central America could become worse, he said.

"The United States is meddling in Central American affairs; however, Nicaragua will successfully repel the Somozists' invasion," Ramirez Mercado concluded.

GOVERNMENT PULLS FOREIGN WORKERS FROM WAR ZONE

[Text] Salvador Alarcon, public relations officer of the Nicaraguan Committee of Solidarity with the Peoples [CNSP], announced today that the committee is withdrawing all internationalists and cooperation workers who are helping the revolution in the war zone. Alarcon announced that the CNSP will issue an official statement this afternoon in regard to the transfer of the cooperation workers and internationalists to another zone. He said that a meeting has been scheduled with all foreign residents to brief them on the new measures the government has adopted.

This does not mean that international solidarity with Nicaragua will be discontinued. In the next few months measures will be adopted with regard to the internationalist brigades that come to Nicaragua to participate in the coffee harvest, Alarcon noted.

[Begin recording] [Alarcon] With this decision, the CNSP is complying with the revolutionary government's orders. Along these lines, the brigades we are attending to now are being moved to areas quite close to the departmental seats. In addition, the brigades that are arriving or are scheduled to arrive [words indistinct] to take charge of some projects they are sponsoring will also be housed in areas near departmental seats. This decision has been adopted by the CNSP leadership to comply with the revolutionary government's instructions.

[Reporter] Historically, internationalist brigades have been formed to help the Nicaraguan people with the coffee harvests and other activities. How is it going to be during this coffee season? Will this be kept up, that is, will brigades of pickers be formed?

[Alarcon] As we understand it, Commander of the Revolution Jaime Wheelock, minister of agrarian reform, has said that the most qualified people will pick the coffee this season. That is to say, this coffee harvest is being handled differently. [passage indistinct] I cannot answer your question directly now. We must wait to see what the situation is when the harvest begins to be able to say what will happen. I would dare say at this moment that the brigades of pickers will be located in areas as close as possible to the departmental seats.

[Reporter] In view of this situation, what will the CNSP do about projects scheduled to be implemented before the end of this year?

[Alarcon] The projects will continue. They will not stop. However, what we must make clear is that Nicaraguans will be (?exclusively) in charge of these projects. Nicaraguans will fill the positions the internationalist companeros had filled voluntarily and will take charge of fulfilling the projects, even if they are financed by international solidarity. This does not mean that the committees of solidarity that had money for a project will withhold it. The solidarity will continue from this standpoint. [passage indistinct]

[Reporter] Generally speaking, have the internationalist cooperation workers understood the measure adopted by the revolutionary government?

[Alarcon] We feel their reaction has been very positive [words indistinct].

[Reporter] Have you determined if there is a tendency among the counterrevolutionaries to assail international solidarity?

[Alarcon] Yes, the CIA has issued this guideline to the mercenary forces to reduce solidarity with Nicaragua, to intimidate the internationalists. However, you have noticed that the statements coming from all solidarity sources have been very [words indistinct]. They have said that they will always be ready to continue supporting this popular revolution and sending more brigades. This has demonstrated that these people have a great solidaristic feeling toward the revolution. [end recording]

REPATRIATION OF MISKITOS, SUMUS ANNOUNCED

PA160450 Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 15 Aug 86 p 8

[Text] Reinaldo Antonio Tefel, president-minister of the Inssbi [Nicaraguan Social Security and Welfare Institute] said yesterday that in the next few months 2,000 Indians will enter the country as part of a repatriation program implemented by other organizations.

On this matter, he said that there exists a tripartite commission formed by the Nicaraguan Government, the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Reguees (UNHCR) and the Honduran Government.

He noted that in the past months from 6,000 to 7,000 Miskitos and Sumus voluntarily returned to their places of origin. "They have repatriated themselves. They crossed the border and returned to their homes," he explained.

"If the black legend of the ethnic persecution were true, they would not repatriate themselves en masse," Tefel said. He said that the Indians were forcibly taken to Honduras or had been deceived.

Moreover, UNHCR Representative in Nicaragua Jaime Ruiz de Santiago told the local press that $300,000 had been earmarked for the repatriation's first phase.

The program, which also includes the repatriation of refugees, could end by the end of the year. They will receive housing, food, and fishing materials.

FDN PLEDGES TO RESPECT COSTA RICAN NEUTRALITY

PA170042 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 1948 GMT 16 Aug 86

[Text] San Jose, 16 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- The anti-Sandinist FDN today reiterated its respect for Costa Rica's neutrality regarding the conflict in Nicaragua and stated that it will "never" involve Costa Rica in its struggle.

A document signed by eight FDN commanders of the "Southern Front" also says that the FDN will not provoke any incident on the Nicaragua-Costa Rican border and will "never" set up military bases in the latter country.

The Costa Rican Government has declared neutrality in the Nicaraguan conflict. In the past few months it has mounted several police operations to determine the location of clandestine field hospitals and recovery centers for the counterrevolutionaries in Costa Rica. These hospitals and recovery centers operate without official authorization.

According to the FDN communique, its 4,500 combatants fight in a 25,000-sq-km area in southern Nicaragua. It added: "This strategy, applied over these 3 past years, has allowed us to operate from our own territory and among our own peasants."

According to the FDN commanders, the $100 million in military and humanitarian aid that the U.S. Senate approved for the counterrevolutionaries this week will make it possible for them "to make important progress" in the struggle against the Sandinist government.

The document also said: "We will not disappoint the Nicaraguan people, the U.S. people, or the peoples who support us."

BRIEFS

ANGOLA OPENS EMBASSY -- Angola has opened its diplomatic representation in Managua. The new embassy is in the Planetarium neighborhood and is the first southern African representation in Nicaragua. The official who will head the embassy raised the Angolan flag in the front yard shorty after 1000. It was a simple but solemn ceremony attended by Nicaraguan Deputy Foreign Minister Xavier Chamorro Mora and Manuel Pacavira, the Angolan ambassador to Cuba, who will also be the ambassador to Nicaragua. SEVERAL SECTORS VIEW U.S. AID TO CONTRAS

["Our America" commentary]

[Text] On Wednesday mercenaries and bribery received new backing when the U.S. Senate approved the trite $100 million for the Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries. By 53 votes to 47, the Senate passed the bill presented by President Ronald Reagan. In June, the bill was approved by the House of Representatives. Only the President's signature is now required. As a result, by the year's end the mercenaries will surely begin receiving the $100 million destined to finance an army that is fed and clothed and murders with U.S. taxpayers' money. During debate in the Senate, which began on Monday, President Reagan again badgered the legislators with his annoying propaganda for the aid for his freedom fighters, while the delivery of $300 million for El Salvador, Honduras, Costa Rica, and Nicaragua [as heard] was also discussed. This aid was also approved.

This shows that, while it backs mercenaries militarily and financially, the White House and its followers in the U.S. Congress buy the posture of the countries neighboring Nicaragua to neutralize them and turn them into meek instruments of the Yankee policy toward Central America. Reagan and his allies have turned a deaf ear to requests to cease support for the counterrevolutionaries. These requests have been made by groups, political leaders, and church authorities, not only from Latin America and Europe, but from the United States.

With arrogance, Washington ignored the international laws that forbid any one nation from conducting actions to topple other governments. This is done openly against Nicaragua. President Reagan himself demonstrated the current administration's deeply reactionary inspiration. In a press conference a few hours prior to the Senate vote, he expressed tolerance toward the apartheid regime and repudiated the Nicaraguan revolutionary process. Asked by a reporter about his refusal to apply economic sanctions against the South African regime while he maintains an economic blockade against Nicaragua, Reagan cynically argued that what he described as the expansion of communism in Central America must be stopped and that a U.S.' hostile stance regarding South Africa would harm the black population.

Such cynicism would perhaps find a parallel in the Hitler regime. Are the U.S. people aware of the adventure in which their president involves them? Will this be the harbinger of a new Vietnam, so much repudiated by the U.S. people?

Commentary Cites Other Views

[Commentary by Pedro Otero and Miguel Cabrera]

[Text] [Otero] Yesterday the U.S. Senate approved the $100 million requested by President Reagan for the Somozist mercenaries. Evidently this is the first step toward a greater U.S. war escalation in Nicaragua and in Central America, in general. The approval once again shows President Reagan's adventurous policy, as well as that of a large number of U.S. Congressmen, who are playing the White House game in this strained situation in the Central America region.

As a matter of fact, Cabrera, I do not know if you read about the reactions provoked by that approval by the U.S. Senate.

[Cabrera] Yes, of course I did. One of the first replies came from Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega, who said that the U.S. Senate approval is a sabotage of the ICJ [International Court of Justice] and a confirmation that through its terrorist policy, the United States is willing to violate all international rules. As we can recall, recently, the ICJ ruled in favor of Nicaragua in its demands against the United States.

[Otero] To this we can add a series of statements made by Latin American political, labor, and social leaders, who from the first vote in the U.S. House of Representatives, which approved a version of the aid for the Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries in June, have been making statements against that U.S. Government policy, particularly against the aid that Reagan wanted and wants to give to the Somozist mercenaries.

I remember that members of the Anti-Imperialist Tribunal of Our America, several governments represented at the OAS, and the Contadora and Support Groups made statements opposing the U.S. war escalation in Central America. I think that those statements are important, because if we remember the Malvinas case, all of Latin America became a single force supporting Argentina in its struggle against Great Britain. I think that the Nicaraguan case could turn Latin America into a single union against the U.S. Government and create an anti-U.S. feeling, which is already very widespread in the entire area.

[Cabrera] Reactions to the contra aid approval are also seen in Europe. The socialist countries' position in regard to the U.S. policy against Nicaragua is well known. In Great Britain, [name indistinct], the spokesman for the foreign affairs area of the British Labor Party, condemned the U.S. Senate approval of the $100 million and urged British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher to deny her support for that U.S. policy. According to the British legislator, the current U.S. position is very similar to the one that appeared prior to the U.S. invasion of Vietnam. A direct intervention of the U.S. Army in Nicaragua should not be ruled out.

A situation similar to the invasion of Vietnam is the most feared event by the U.S. people and the main cause of protests in the United States.

[Otero] Well, finally, I wanted to end this brief analysis by saying that the Senate vote on Wednesday did not surprise anyone. We all knew that the Senate was going to approve the aid for the Somozist mercenaries. As I said before, the U.S. House of Representatives approved the aid in June, despite the Democrats' majority. Thus, the Senate approval was expected since it has a Republican majority. Traditionally, Republicans have supported President Reagan's policies, mainly his warmongering policy throughout the world, and especially in Central America.

I want to add what is missing now is an agreement between the Senate and the House of Representatives, to issue a definitive version on the method the financial aid will be delivered to the Somozist mercenaries. This will be in September, when Congress resumes operations.

As we all know, that will be only a simple procedure; after all, the U.S. Senate voted for the war. The U.S. taxpayers will be the ones to help the Somozist mercenaries kill Nicaraguan civilians, to kill men, women, and children as they have been doing. In the long run, it will be the U.S. taxpayers who will call the U.S. Government to account for its present actions.

Abrams, CIA To Direct Aid

[Text] Elliott Abrams, U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs, will oversee the program of military aid to the Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries which the U.S. Congress recently approved, White House officials have disclosed. It is believed that Abrams' new duties in the anti-Nicaragua program will be officially announced in September when U.S. President Ronald Reagan signs the law on the aid to the mercenary bands. However, it has been learned that he will control the operation through a Central America assault force directed by his assistant Robert Kagan, current head of the Office of Public Diplomacy. The operational part of the program, which includes war tactics, military advisers, and training, will be handled by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency with the assistance of the Yankee Pentagon.

Balaguer Vows To Restore Trust

[Text] Santo Domingo, 16 Aug (DPA) — Today Dr Joaquin Balaguer Ricardo assumed the Presidency of the Dominican Republic for the fifth time in his long political life and stated that his government's first goal will be to restore the country's trust in its public officials, to search for political harmony, and to construct a shared democracy.

Balaguer was sworn in by Florentino Carvajal, president of the Senate and National Assembly, shortly after 1030 before guests from 33 countries, including the presidents of El Salvador, Nicaragua, and Panama.

Balaguer began his inaugural speech as follows: "I return, not to produce miracles, but to courageously face the crisis which afflicts us. I return to restore the nation's deteriorated faith, to help consolidate it by alternating different parties in the government, a national democratic process."

"The first goal will be to restore the country's trust -- trust in the honesty of its public officials. All the citizens must live, convinced that the honesty of the nation's highest authorities is the best guarantee for them and their interests." He added: "Trust creates security. There is no stability without security, there are no investments without stability, and there is no development without investments."

The new president stated: "The Dominicans have been waiting a long time for a conciliation phase which will prepare the country for an era of true democratic coexistence. I hope that this conciliation is now possible in the Dominican Republic. If it is possible, we welcome it with open arms. I am prepared to establish no differences between the members of our party and those of other organizations. My main ambition is to treat all my fellow citizens on an equal basis and to serve them all with the same spirit." He added: "Within this conciliation, we also need a political truce of at least 2 years. Without that truce, we will expose the country to grave problems, such as exchanging our democratic institutions for others which are similar or worse than the ones which -- until yesterday -- served as the expression of all our vices and our traditional bad habits."

Balaguer described corruption as "the worst defect of our democracy" and asserted: "Corruption will not go unpunished in the administration which we begin today." The new Dominican president also said: "I shall not persecute anyone, because I believe that the country's problems cannot be solved except in an atmosphere of political accord."

Expanding on his government's goals, Balaguer revealed: "Within the next few years we intend to create the necessary conditions for establishing a shared democracy in the country." He explained: "My modest wish is for a democracy in which all the country's forces may participate, and in which all the sectors -- including the unions -- may participate in all the organizations and fully intervene in the national problems." Similarly, Balaguer rejected accusations that the repression against popular sectors in his country will worsen under his administration, and stated that this propaganda "is clearly the work of another party."

"I am pretty sure, sincerely sure, that I do not lie if I end this speech with the words which have been used by most of my predecessors to conclude their speeches to the National Assembly in similar circumstances. Therefore, I quote the phrase: I know that freedom will not perish in my hands." He added: "However, I would like to be more categorical and state, with my feet firmly planted on the ground, that in my hands, freedom will not be maintained by sacrificing peace, and peace will not be maintained by sacrificing freedom." The new president also stressed that he will rule the country with a new sense of responsibility, and he will offer important posts to the youths in the nation. Last, he asserted that his government is not pledged to any specific group. "I shall rule without pledges to anyone. We are not pledged to anyone, only to God and the homeland," he concluded.

Once the swearing-in ceremony was concluded, Balaguer and his special guests went to the national monument, where he deposited a wreath. He later participated in a Te Deum which was celebrated by Monsignor Nicolas Lopez, metropolitan archbishop of Santo Domingo, in the cathedral. Balaguer then went to the National Palace.

PRIME MINISTER MITCHELL RESHUFFLES CABINET

[Text] Kingston, St Vincent, Aug 15 CANA -- Three St Vincent and the Grenadines Government ministers have exchanged portfolios and a new junior minister was appointed in the second Cabinet reshuffle announced today by Prime Minister James Mitchell.

Mitchell did not name a new attorney-general and minister of legal affairs to replace Emery Robertson who resigned last month.

In the reshuffle, Tourism, Information and Culture Minister John Horne takes over the education portfolio from Allan Cruickshank, who is given the Communications and Works Ministry held by Burton Williams. Williams has assumed responsibility for Horne's former portfolios.

Parliamentary Secretary in the Ministry of Communications and Works Louis Jones was named minister of state within that ministry.

Mitchell said the reshuffle was a routine one in keeping with his administrations policy of broadening the experience of ministers.

MITCHELL COMMENTS ON CARICOM COORDINATION

FL151518 Bridgetown CANA in English 1449 GMT 15 Aug 86

[Text] Bridgetown, Barbados, Aug 15, CANA -- Prime Minister James Mitchell of St Vincent and the Grenadines last night called for greater coordination of development policies in the Caribbean Community (Caricom) and urged a lowering of barriers to the free movement of peoples and finance among the 13 English-speaking countries involved.

Mitchell obliquely suggested that the real solution to the regional trade problems may lie in political integration.

He was one of three panellists participating in the region-wide Caribbean Crossfire radio programme produced monthly in the studios of the Caribbean News Agency (CANA) and which last night looked at the difficulties facing intra-regional trade. The others were Wilfred Espinet, head of the export division of the Trinidad and Tobago Manufactures Association (TTMA), and Henry Vierira, Vice President (manufacturing) of the Caribbean Association of Industry and Commerce (CAIC) based here.

...A lot of the problems we are facing in trade will still have to come back to certain forms of political integration...We have got to keep that kind of thinking very much into focus...Mitchell declared.

...We have to coordinate national development policies, as was spelt out in (the Caricom) treaty a long time ago. I don't believe this has started at all. Everybody is doing his own thing. There is need for some coordination between the governments... and working out a joint strategy for development, he added.

Mitchell called for the abolition of the requirements for Caribbean nationals to have alien land holding licences if they wanted to invest in each others territories.

I think we have got to be always opening up our minds and opening up our economies to our neighbours, he added.

Examining some of the issues in intra-regional trade, Mitchell saw the protectionist trends in the region as a reaction to the economic problems of the area.

Protectionism is really a reaction to the problems that individual countries have been going through, Mitchell said.

He singled out Guyana, where foreign exchange earnings have been low, Jamaica, where bauxite prices have declined, and Trinidad and Tobago, which has had to deal with a sharp fall in the price of oil, mainstay of the economy.

But Mitchell stressed the importance to the seven-island Organisation of East Caribbean States (OECS) of continued exports to the larger markets in the broader (Caricom).

It is, therefore, quite important to us in the OECS territories that we have access to the more-developed countries (MDC) markets, Mitchell said.

He also spoke of the reduced emphasis on multilateral approaches to trade in the community, in apparent reference for bilateral agreements.

...This is the new trend of what is taking place. Instead of Caricom functioning and operating within the framework of a treaty, we are now having quite a lot of bilateral discussions, he added.

But, he said, he believed this was only a temporary stage in the community.

Noting that he himself had already held some bilateral talks with Barbados Prime Minister Errol Barrow, and Trinidian leader George Chambers, Mitchell announced his country's intentions to hold further discussions with Port-of-Spain.

He said these will cover the questions of import licensing.

Mitchell welcomed Trinidad and Tobago's decision to remove some of the barriers to Caricom products as of September, but expressed some concern about pervious transactions.

We are quite concerned about the outstanding payments which are due to a number of traders from St Vincent who have not been able to get their foreign exchange for goods already delivered into Trinidad, he said.

PRESIDENT SANGUINETTI RETURNS FROM 10-DAY TOUR

[Excerpt] Montevideo, 16 Aug (EFE) -- Uruguayan President Julio Maria Sanguinetti, who today returned from a 10-day trip to Colombia and Brazil, has labeled the economic agreements signed with Brazilian President Jose Sarney "significant."

Presidents Sanguinetti and Sarney signed bilateral agreements which will triple the current trade between the two countries. In statements to the press Sanguinetti labeled the economic agreements with Brazil "significant" and said that they are a step in the search for a Latin American Common Market. Sanguinetti and his delegation were welcomed at Carrasco airport by Vice President Enrique Tarigo, members of the Cabinet, and other officials.

President Sanguinetti resumed the Presidency at the airport, and official spokesmen announced that the president will report on his trip in the next few days. [passage omitted]

SELA MEETING BEGINS 18 AUGUST IN CARACAS

[Text] Caracas, 18 Aug (EFE) -- Representatives of the 25 SELA member-states began a meeting today to refine the proposals that will be analyzed during the Latin American council's 12th meeting scheduled to be held in Lima in October.

The economic relations of Latin America and the Caribbean, in both domestic and foreign areas, are the main topic of discussion at this preliminary meeting. The gathering was opened by Sebastian Allegret, SELA permanent secretary.

Allegret stressed the importance of the event in the "complex situation" of the region, which is affected not only by "the hitherto unsolved problem of the foreign debt," but by the industrialized nations' commercial protectionism as well. He noted that industrial protectionism has become one of the region's biggest problems. "This protectionism takes the form of restrictions which the developed countries impose on the access of the region's products to their markets."

To illustrate the problem the protectionist trend of the industrialized countries represents for the Latin American and Caribbean economies, Allegret said that restrictions have been place on more than half of Latin America's exports. He mentioned both the EEC and U.S. subsidies on agricultural production as a specific case of protectionism in the region.

He also said the sale of subsidized wheat by the United States to the Soviet Union has affected Argentina. This subsidy is another case of protectionism.

In addition to the controversial topic of protectionism, Allegret referred to an issue that has recently been of concern to the Permanent Secretariat, "the alleged changes in the international economic order" fostered by industrialized countries in the financial and commercial fields. This alleged change is being promoted by the industrialized countries "without taking into consideration the opinions" of Latin America and the Caribbean.

This is why one of the objectives of the Caracas meeting is to clear the way so that, during the next SELA meeting, the region can present a consistent and unified posture on this important matter.

An additional topic to be analyzed during this preliminary meeting will be the new round of GATT negotiations. The developed countries plan to include the topic of services in the negotiations.

Allegret remarked: "We must appear at those meetings in a coordinated manner to present a consistent posture and to defend our interests." He also said that the current meeting is important because it is a technical one, where proposals on various issues which the ministers will consider during the Latin American council meeting can be outlined.

During the 5-day meeting, the SELA members will discuss three topics relevant to the economic and commercial fields. This will take place at a crucial time for a region affected by a huge foreign debt of more than $350 billion, a region that is seeking ways to overcome the crisis.

LUSINCHI ADDRESSES LATIN AMERICAN PARLIAMENT

PA161531 Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 8 Aug 86 p 12

[Speech by Venezuelan President Jaime Lusinchi at the opening ceremony of the Latin American Parliament meeting held in Bogota; date not given]

[Text] Mr President of Colombia; Presidents of El Salvador, Honduras, Uruguay, and Costa Rica; Foreign Ministers; Ministers; Mr President of the Colombian Senate; Mr President of the Latin American Parliament; Latin American parliamentarians; ladies and gentlemen:

My words will be brief to celebrate this event which has a very special meaning of its own, because it is the result of a 20-year search by a group of visionary men, some of whom are present, Andres Townseen and Luis Leon, among others, who have steadfastedly concentrated on a great idea, during quite a difficult transit, and this idea has a possibility of becoming a reality with a strengthened Latin American democracy, thanks in part to that effort.

The presentation of this Latin American Parliament institutionalization proposal has the endorsement of the Venezuelan parliament. We fully identify with this proposal. I told this to the parliament directors during a recent visit to my office in Caracas.

This ceremony takes place within the framework of a fundamental event for Colombian democracy, and for the democracy of the entire continent. A new president, freely elected by the Colombian people, will be sworn in, and presidents from all countries have come here to render homage to President Betancur, to President Barco, and logically to the great and noble people of Colombia.

Today is the celebration of 100 years of the Colombian Constitution, one of the world's oldest and most lasting, at least in Latin America. It was written by Miguel Antonio Caro and has been strengthened during a century of Colombian history, with modifications which have converted it into one of the most democratic and modern.

This people has a noble and democratic tradition. It has had interruptions and disasters which we have all deeply lamented, most especially its neighbors, the Venezuelans, who care a lot about Colombia, not only because of the obliging Bolivarian brotherhood which unites us, but because to a great degree we are independent and because we inescapably influence one another.

This is why being at this ceremony is particularly important for me. I am an old parliamentarian. I went to Miraflores [Presidential Palace] from the parliament. My political career was spent mostly in the Congress, and of course I learned more about my people and about the American destiny than I could ever learn from any book. I learned to think, to tolerate, and to get along with others. As far as our peoples go, I firmly believe that our problems will only be resolved once we forget parceled-off criteria and we go to a real political and economic integration.

Well, let us finish, although it would be interesting if we could unfold our thoughts. It would be particularly inconsiderate if we converted this ceremony into a session of the Latin American congress. There will be time enough to talk. The important thing is to carry out this treaty. In advance I promise what has been since my own lesson and a dream: to one day see the Latin American peoples united. Above all other things, I, and allow me to use the first person which I seldom use, a Venezuelan, I am a Bolivarian, and thus I feel I am a citizen of America, and, why not, a citizen of the world.

CAPUTO ON GRAIN DECISION, UK 'HARASSING' BOAT

[Text] Buenos Aires, 18 Aug (NA) -- Foreign Minister Dante Caputo today charged the United States with being "inconsistent" in its international policies, because while it defends free trade on one hand, on the other it subsidizes grain exports to the Soviet Union and the PRC, seriously hurting the economy of other grain-producing countries like Argentina.

The minister also confirmed that the Foreign Ministry "is gathering pertinent information to take the required steps in handling the case of the reported harassment of an Argentine fishing boat by a British Neptune plane outside the unilaterally established exclusion zone around the Malvinas Islands." Eventually, the Argentine Foreign Ministry may lodge a protest with London through the Swiss Embassy, which is in charge of British affairs in Argentina.

Once again, Caputo contended that the subsidies policy of the United States and the European Economic Community "is something that worries us," and added the government "is working on this question." He then said the Reagan government's decision seems like "an electoral strategy."

Going back to the incident involving the Argentine fishing boat, Caputo reaffirmed that the Foreign Ministry "is gathering information in order to take the appropriate steps." Caputo made these remarks at the Metropolitan Airport, before boarding a plane to go to the city of Tucuman where he will open the Seminar on Latin American Integration, organized by the university and the municipality. Caputo also said the Naval Prefecture is investigating the case. He repeated: "The Foreign Ministry is gathering information in order to take the steps the case requires. Although aggressions against Argentine fishing boats have been repeated, the case must be carefully investigated before making any decision."

The head of the San Martin Palace courteously declined to comment on the repercussions in government circles of the cost of living increase, which rose 6.8 percent in the past month. He said that "the answers must be sought in the economic area of the government." Asked about the possibility of Argentina supporting Peru -- which was declared "ineligible" by the IMF -- Caputo replied: "The government's priority is strengthening ties with Latin American countries and constantly expressing its solidarity with friendly countries." He then added: "Argentina has always shown solidarity with Peru, and the fact that our credits to Peru have been maintained is irrefutable and concrete evidence of that solidarity."

ALFONSIN: PEOPLE SHOULD 'SHUN EMPTY SLOGANS'

PY190104 Buenos Aires BUENOS AIRES HERALD in English 18 Aug 86 p 7

[Text] (NA-DYN) -- In a speech given before 8,000 people celebrating the centenary of Haedo, President Raul Alfonsin urged Argentines to "find in the present crisis sufficient imagination to project us into new fields which will prop and assert the social justice we are seeking for" and to "shun empty slogans and cheap demagoguery."

The president referred to a much-needed sense of solidarity to overcome social strife, criticizing the "pessimism and nostalgic melancholy" which makes us see the present crisis as "a sort of frustration," and not as a historical period, "which will illuminate the present so that we'll never make the same mistakes again."

Alfonsin also said it was urgent to consolidate democracy without upholding conservative attitude, but rather by promoting "creativity and change." He complained of the technological gap with industrialized nations and their policies of trade discrimination, "coupled with an internal disunity (among developing countries) which has crippled our efforts to present a common front."

Also present during the ceremony was Buenos Aires Governor Alejandro Armendariz who announced the decision to reform the provincial constitution but failed to provide a set date. The province is scheduled to hold elections for Governor by November, 1987.

Alfonsin also presided over a ceremony marking the 136th anniversary of General Jose de San Martin's death. Interior Minister Antonio Troccoli, Defense Minister Horacio Jaunarena, Lower House Speaker Juan Carlos Pugliese, and Armed Forces Chiefs of Staff Hector Rios Erenu, Ramon Arosa, and Horacio Crespo also attended the ceremony.

Retired General Manuel Laprida gave a speech exalting the "complex and overwhelming" personality of San Martin, and his "respect for the freedom of the people." The man known as the Liberator of Argentina, Chile and Peru died in France after 30 years of self-imposed exile.

CENTRAL BANK ORDERS NEW DEVALUATION OF AUSTRAL

[Text] Buenos Aires, 18 Aug (NA) -- The Central Bank today ordered a new devaluation of the austral, by almost 1.55 percent, establishing 97.50 australes for the purchase of each $100 and 97.80 for the sale of every $100. This is the 13th devaluation since the implementation of the Austral Plan in June 1985.

COB PROTESTS U.S. PRESENCE, CALLS FOR STRIKE

[Text] The Bolivian Labor Confederation [COB] has ordered a 48-hour strike on 21 and 22 August in support of Bolivian mineworkers and in solidarity with the council for the defense of national sovereignty, which demanded the withdrawal of U.S. troops from Bolivian territory.

This was the main resolution adopted by the COB national meeting held today in the Teachers Union. The resolution was adopted as a result of a request from the Trade Union Federation of Bolivian Mineworkers, which wanted the COB to come out in defense of mining problems and to implement radical pressure measures. The COB strikes will also serve to demand wage increases for workers and to revive some of the bonds that were abolished by Decree 21060.

In order to find the way to implement the 48-hour strike in relation to emergency services and means of communications, the COB is going to meet on 19 August with the representatives of all labor sectors to determine case by case what to do during the strike.

It has been learned that the fuel supply services and health centers will operate during the strike. However, no decision has yet been made regarding the communications media. Massive mobilizations are also going to be held in all departments in the next few hours as part of the measures approved during the COB meeting. Therefore, on 21 and 22 August the workers who are members of the COB will stop their activities on COB orders.

Barthelemy Scores Strike

[Text] Interior Minister Fernando Barthelemy has labeled the attack against the house of the Oruro prefect a few hours ago as criminal.

Minister Barthelemy told the press it is not known who was responsible for the dynamite attack, but the government obviously knows where that type of attack comes from. The minister was also asked about the 48-hour strike ordered by the Bolivian Labor Confederation for 21 and 22 August throughout the country. The minister said the COB wants to implement a measure that should only be used under extreme circumstances.

PINOCHET SCORES SUBVERSIVES ON ARSENAL

[Relay from 7th Region]

[Excerpt] President Pinochet has said that the government will soon implement decisive measures regarding the discovery of the subversive arsenal in the 3d Region. President Pinochet made this announcement when speaking to the people of Cauquenes at a rally held at the city's Paza de Armas. This is what President Pinochet said:

[Begin recording] I would like to publicly state that we recently found a huge arsenal to be used to promote terrorism and violence and ultimately to promote an armed clash among Chileans.

We believe not only those who use these arms are responsible for this, but also those who look the other way and deny that these things are taking place. [applause] The government believes that those who bring the arms are just as responsible as those who elude responsibility.

I want to inform you that in view of these belligerent actions, which are part of a carefully planned communist strategy of armed subversion, presently accompanied by what they hypocritically call civil disobedience and ungovernability -- hiding behind laws drafted for normal situations -- we shall soon implement measures which, without alarming the people, will be decisive in the short term. [end recording]

President Pinochet also issued another appeal to non-Marxist sectors to stop violence in the country. Cauquenes was the first leg of Pinochet's 3-day tour through the 7th and 8th Regions.[passage omitted]

AIR FORCE COMMANDER SUPPORTS ARRESTED PERSONNEL

[Text] Air Force Commander Fernando Matthei made an interesting statement this morning regarding several national issues, but mainly regarding Judge Carlos Cerda's decision. General Matthei said he categorically supports former Air Force Commander Gustavo Leigh Guzman, as well as those Air Force colonels and officers who were indicted by Judge Carlos Cerda.

General Matthei said that in the name of all Air Force personnel he expressed his solidarity and support in every sense of the word for those who were arrested. Later, Gen Matthei said he trusts the Chilean justice system.

[Begin Matthei recording] The entire Air Force, all men who are both on active duty and retired, have asked me to express our categorical solidarity, and our deepest expression of affection and support in every sense of the word both materially and spriritually to General Leign, General (?Viliegas), general Ruiz, and those colonels, captains, officers and noncommissioned officers, either retired or on active duty, who have been recently indicted by the courts.

We want to tell them and the Chilean people that the Chilean Air Force knows these men who have given everything of themselves during the difficult times our country experienced a few years ago and which it is again experiencing today. These men risked their lives to grant us peace and security, and the Chilean Air Force is certain they could not have committed the crimes they are being accused of, because it has known them throughout many years. The Air Force trusts the court and has faith in these men. [end recording]

It must be noted that Gen Matthei interrupted his post-operative convalescense to hold an impromptu press conference and inform the public that those Air Force officers who are allegedly involved in the disappearance of communists will be placed at the disposal of the Chilean courts and they will have the Chilean Air Force's full support. Matthei said that Chileans know perfectly well who is responsible for the present situation Chile is experiencing.

[Begin Matthei recording] I believe that all Chileans know perfectly well who is behind these charges [passage indistinct]. [end recording]

NEW GROUP ATTACKS UPI OFFICE IN SANTIAGO

[Text] Santiago, 18 Aug (AFP) -- An armed commando group this afternoon attacked the offices of the UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL (UPI) in Santiago. According to police sources, this attack was intended to serve as a propaganda action by the 5 April People's Detachments [Los Destacamentos Populares Cinco de Abril]. Five masked members of this organization, which has now made its first appearance in Chile, violently broke into UPI offices and forced UPI newsmen to stay inside. According to early reports, the attackers did not release any communique but left behind a red flag with the inscription D.P.5.

SANTIAGO ARMY COLONEL RIVADENEIRA KIDNAPPED

[Excerpts] Santiago, 18 Aug (AFP) -- It was officially reported today that a colonel of the Chilean Army was kidnapped by an armed group intercepting him as he left his residence in Providencia, a Santiago neighborhood. The kidnapping occurred around 0700 when Colonel Mario Haberle Rivadeneira was getting into his car to go to his office at the Defense Ministry.

Police sources indicated that the 58-year-old colonel belongs to the Army Intelligence Service, but an Army spokesman has denied this. The spokesman explained the colonel merely handled protocol affairs for the commander of the Santiago Garrison. [passage omitted]

Initial police reports indicated that Col Haberle was overpowered by six men carrying automatic weapons. The officer tried to resist, but in the end he was forcibly placed inside the trunk of the car the unidentified assailants were using. One of the colonel's sons, a schoolboy who was accompanying Haberle, was not taken by the kidnappers and returned inside the house to inform his family.

The car used to kidnap the military man was found empty 11 blocks from the house. Policemen who participated in the wide and swift dragnet throughout most of Santiago said many men and vehicles were involved in the kidnapping.

The kidnapping of Col Haberle is the first action of this kind against a high-ranking Chilean officer during the 13 years that General Augusto Pinochet has been in power. At the end of 1985, the clandestine Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front (FPMR) captured a noncommissioned Carabinero for propaganda purposes but released him within 1 week. Col Haberle's kidnapping has not been claimed so far.

Conflicting FPMR Claims

[Excerpts] Santiago, 18 Aug (AFP) -- The Chilean Army today condemned the kidnapping of Colonel Mario Haberle Rivadeneira and indicated incidents of this type are a serious attack against national coexistence.

In a communique, the Army reaffirms that all actions of a terrorist nature seeking to intimidate its members will not achieve its objective, and no one will ever be able to force the Army from the path the fatherland and its people demand of it.

According to the semiofficial news agency ORBE, responsibility for the kidnapping of the high-ranking military officer -- the first in the 13 years that the Armed Forces have been in power -- has been claimed by the clandestine and leftist FPMR, which promotes armed struggle against President Augusto Pinochet's regime. [passage omitted] According to an anonymous telephone call to ORBE, the FPMR will release its prisoner within the next 24 hours.

[Madrid EFE in Spanish at 0316 GMT on 19 August reports: "A person who claimed to represent the FPMR tonight called EFE and other international news agencies to announce that the FPMR had not contacted ORBE to claim responsibility for the kidnapping."]

COURT ORDERS RELEASE OF 12 OPPOSITION LEADERS

[Text] Santiago, 18 Aug (EFE) -- The Santiago Appellate Court today ordered the release on bail of 12 of the 13 leaders of the National Civic Assembly [ANC] who are being held in custody awaiting trial. The decision will not effect Eduardo Valencia, president of the Coordinating Board of Slum Dwellers, who is now standing trial.

The ANC leaders will leave the Capuchinos Prison as soon as they are officially notified of the court decision. Among the ANC leaders who will be released is Dr Juan Luis Gonzalez, president of the ANC and of the Chilean Federation of Professional Associations.

The ANC leaders were taken to court by the government on charges of being responsible for the acts of violence that took place during the first national stoppage staged on 2-3 July.

'CLANDESTINE' INTERVIEW WITH MIR'S PASCAL ALLENDE

PY151837 Santiago APSI in Spanish 11-24 Aug 86 pp 11-13

["Clandestine" interview with MIR [Movement of the Revolutionary Left] leader Andres Pascal Allende by Journalist Jorge Andres Richards, at which MIR second-in-command Hernan Aguilo was also present, in Santiago; date not given]

[Text] [Richards] There is a lot of talk about a military approach and a political approach to opposing the current regime. Could you tell me, how can the two coexist?

[Pascal Allende] We do not believe in two different approaches. This is something abstract.

[Richards] What I mean is this: all the opposition forces have reached agreements, through social organizations, on the peaceful means that must be used to make it impossible to rule the country. Through some organizations, you participate in the National Civic Assembly [ANC]... So what is your position?

[Pascal Allende] Our position is self-evident. We support the ANC, and we certainly favor stepping up offensive mobilization and developing a sustained mobilization. We are in favor of protests and stoppages.

[Richards] Yes, but at the same time you are talking about arming the people...

[Pascal Allende] We believe the people not only have the right to rebel and resort to any means of struggle but also that they must do so in order to attain the objective of toppling the dictatorship. Furthermore, we believe that the people must be organized as militias in order to build true democracy in Chile and to start organizing the future democratic and popular Armed Forces.

[Richards] But the problem is that Pinochet has chosen the military approach. Are you about to engage him in a face-to-face struggle?

[Pascal Allende] I believe that not only Pinochet but also the Armed Forces, U.S. imperialism, the big businessmen, and the right-wing sectors have declared war on our people. We have not declared war on anyone. All you have to do is take a look at what happened during the latest strike, at the military occupation of the country during this strike. Thus, we feel the people have the right and the duty to defend themselves from all this repression.

[Richards] But are you arming the people just to defend themselves or for a confrontation?

[Pascal Allende] Naturally, we actively support the development of armed self-defense and the organization of the "Salvador Allende Popular Resistance" militias, which are being organized among the youth, in townships, and in factories. The job of these militias is to take a hand in defensive measures, to protect demonstrator and strikers, and to engage in armed agitation against the repressive forces. On the other hand, the MIR [Movement of the Revolutionary Left] is developing combat units that are better armed and trained.

These units are used to carry out more offensive actions whose obvious objective is to destabilize the dictatorship. These guerrilla-type operations are well-known to everyone.

[Richards] Speaking of these actions, you mentioned during an interview granted to EL MERCURIO last year that 50 percent of all sabotage actions, bombings, attacks, and so forth, were being attributed to the MIR and the other 50 percent to the FPMR [Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front]. However, you did not attribute even 1 percent to other sectors that have also carried out attacks and sabotage, although they were not exactly of the opposition.

[Pascal Allende] It may well be my words were understood in the way you say. However, I must explain that although the interview did not distort my words, it did change the order of the questions. This gave the impression that I said all the actions were carried out by ourselves or by the FPMR. Later in the interview it becomes clear we oppose terrorist actions. The regime alone resorts to terrorism in this country through torture, murders, and government-staged attacks.

[Richards] Let us clarify this. Several recent events have drawn the attention of the people: the attack on the bishop of Osorno, the bombing at Teatinos and Alameda, and the car bomb at the Libertadores regiment. Do you claim credit for any of these deeds?

[Pascal Allende] No. These are standard terrorist actions aimed at frightening the people, and we abhor terrorism and the blind use of terror.

[Richards] What about Carol Urzua?

[Pascal Allende] We carried out that action, and we acknowledged it. Furthermore, we feel it was a legitimate and just retaliation against a person responsible for crimes against our people. It must be taken into account that Carol Urzua was a high-ranking military intelligence officer.

[Richards] Does this mean you favor taking justice into your own hands?

[Pascal Allende] Look, there is no justice in Chile. All you have to do to realize this is to take a look at Judge Echavarria's ruling [in the case involving torched youths]. We will continue to carry out actions against repressive groups. In fact, we have carried out attacks on Carabineros special units. We also attacked Manuel Contreras twice and failed. This "gentleman" is very lucky. The evil is probably on his side. But I want to make it very clear our actions are aimed only at repressive groups that murder our people. In addition to armed actions, we also engage in sabotage and we cut power lines among other things, but our actions are always carefully executed to avoid harming innocent bystanders and the people to whom we belong.

[Richards] Excuse me, but by carrying out all these actions you prompt more repression against the people, more killings, and a greater radicalization of the country.

[Pascal Allende] Look here! During the first years of the dictatorship when thousands were being murdered, actions of the kind we are staging now did not take place. However, repression has been on the rise all these years. People are being killed in broad daylight. The case of the torched youths is a good example.

[Richards] But what do you accomplish with your kind of armed actions?

[Pascal Allende] As in the case of Carol Urzua, we inflicted a blow on military intelligence. Naturally, this action was severely criticized, because at that very time the sectors of the opposition favoring negotiations were trying to launch a dialogue with the government. Under those conditions, the attack on Carol Urzua was criticized by certain political sectors, but not by the people. Therefore, we believe inflicting blows on the dictatorship is a way to mobilize and to strengthen and stimulate antidictatorial rebellion.

[Richards] But don't you believe because it is a minority force, the MIR is leaving no option to the majority of the opposition, which does not believe in war?

[Pascal Allende] You are misjudging the MIR by supposing that it sees the struggle against the dictatorship as a confrontation between two armed forces: the resistance and the regime.

[Richards] That is precisely what I want you to explain to me.

[Pascal Allende] We have a political-military strategy. We actively promote an active role for the people in social mobilization, in their own self-defense, as well as in the military struggle. In this regard, we have not yet reached the point of developing an armed confrontation against the dictatorship. Consequently, we cannot say there is a people's army struggling against the army of the dictatorship. But we do have militants who come from the masses and participate in the armed struggle. Although these are not the majority, this is not a problem because as history shows, it is not the majority that is physically involved in any revolutionary process, despite the fact that the majority supports the implementation of the different forms of struggle. Therefore, it is not our policy to carry out a "cowboy" [in English] war between the CNI [National Center for Information] and the MIR. We uphold armed struggle against the dictatorship as part of a process to promote popular rebellion, which promotes social and political organization and also the organization of the militias of the masses. Consequently, I reassert we believe there is no contradiction between one form of struggle and the other. In this regard, we have deep respect for the ANC and for the actions carried out by other political parties.

[Richards] However, there are very important national and opposition sectors insisting that such a contradiction exists.

[Pascal Allende] Yes, of course there is a contradiction for those who wish to negotiate with the Armed Forces. There is a contradiction for those who wish to negotiate with the government and to achieve an agreement leading to a transitional regime that will be democratically restricted.

It is these people who believe there is a contradiction; those who want the Armed Forces to continue to have a governing role in our institutional future and in our country.

[Richards] In this regard, how do you view the issue of the correlation of forces?

[Pascal Allende] There are great national majorities (and I am not only referring to the people, but to vast middle sectors) that demand a deep democratic change in our country. Moreover, the Pinochet regime is socially and politically isolated. The only thing it has left is military force. Without this, it would not last much longer. However, the correlation of forces cannot be measured only by Pinochet. We have to compare and measure those forces which favor a continuation of the present economic and social order, and those other forces which, like ours, favor a democratic and popular change. This is the only true social and political polarization our country is increasingly experiencing. Based on this point of view, I believe there are powerful forces that oppose a deep social and political change. Therefore, our struggle is not just to do away with Pinochet. What we pursue is a profound democratic, economic, and social change. Consequently, the correlation of forces must be measured in relation to the willingness to achieve this change.

[Richards] Based on this proposal, how do you visualize the end of the regime: Do you believe it will be a military defeat or one which involves negotiations with the Armed Forces? In other words: Will it be Nicaraguan- or Argentine-style?

[Pascal Allende] The solutuion will necessarily have to be Chilean-style, because each country has its own experiences.

[Richards] Could you explain what you mean by Chilean-style?

[Pascal Allende] We believe in the end of the regime through the development of a social, political, and military confrontation. However, this does not imply a war between two armies. It deals with an end brought about through an ungovernability caused by social, political, and military struggle. The end of the status quo will give us a chance to use different alternatives. We propose the establishment of a broad, national and popular government. However, the problem now is we are aware there is an attempt to concentrate different forces which encompass the Armed Forces, imperialism, the great business sectors, rightist sectors, and even bourgeoisie opposition trends that are seeking an agreement. This agreement seeks the end of the regime by 1989 and its replacement by a new civilian or military government, which in effect will enforce a restricted democracy. If this happens, we believe the social, political, economic, and moral crisis that this country is experiencing will not be resolved.

[Richards] Then your proposal is to immediately install a profound and popular democracy once this government ends?

[Pascal Allende] What we seek is to end the regime and achieve a profound democracy.

[Richards] Could you explain the characteristics of this democracy which you say must replace the present regime?

[Pascal Allende] The dictatorship will be replaced by an emergency government including all democratic forces.

This government must be based on popular power, that is, the conquering of a government of a democratic and popular nature which implements the measures proposed in the Chile Demands statement: To repeal the dictatorial Constitution and to call a constituent assembly, democratically elected, in which our people will sovereignly decide about the institutional future of our country; to eliminate the repressive apparatus; to reorganize the Armed Forces on a democratic basis, and to submit to trial all those responsible for the dictatorship; to dismiss those judges involved in the dictatorship and implement an exhaustive reorganization of the judicial system; to end the monopolies that control the nation's economy and to fully restablish political, and social freedoms without any restrictions. However, if the dictatorship is going to be replaced by another bourgeoisie government that will not satisfy the people's demands and will maintain the same Armed Forces, despite the fact that they send them to their barracks, we shall continue struggling for the establishment of a broad government of a democratic and popular nature. Any other type of government will be met with more rebellion and we shall be with the masses, resorting to all the forms of struggle necessary, so as to achieve the objective of establishing an authentically democratic and popular government that we have already described.

[Richards] Which is to say that you will continue the same policy you have been upholding until now...?

[Pascal Allende] Obviously.

[Richards] From the Communist Party, on the left, to the rightist sectors actively participating in the opposition, each one in its particular way is advocating negotiations with the Armed Forces. Are you willing to negotiate?

[Pascal Allende] We are not going to negotiate with the Armed Forces. We are going to fight.

[Richards] Then you are going to be categorically isolated from the others?

[Pascal Allende] We are not going to be left alone, because we are inserted within the popular movement, which emcompasses a vast majority of the country.

LONDONO SAYS BORDER SETTLEMENT 'DIFFICULT'

[Text] Bogota, 17 Aug (AFP) -- Julio Londono, the new Colombian foreign minister, admitted here that a settlement of the border disagreement between Colombia and Venezuela is difficult. He hinted at the possibility of resorting to other procedures, such as arbitration or mediation, to resolve this issue.

Speaking to Emisoras CARACOL, Londono nevertheless stressed that Colombia will make all efforts to find a negotiated solution by the two governments.

He said: "The best prcedure is direct negotiations, a bilateral agreement, because arbitration decisions or mediation sometimes elicit reactions. One of the sides always feels it has won the upper hand, while the other always feels it has been cheated. This affects the future relations between the states."

He added: "When it is evident that it is impossible to reach an accord, the sides must resort to other procedures for a peaceful solution set forth by international law, such as mediation, arbitration, or legal settlement."

Recalling that the negotiations for the delimitation of marine and submarine areas in the Gulf of Venezuela date to 1954, Londono said in conclusion: "The fact that an accord about the border disagreement has not been reached so far indicates that it is difficult. It would be unrealistic to deny it."

4 'AMERICA BATTALION' GUERRILLAS DEPORTED

PA170414 Madrid EFE iu Spanish 0235 GMT 17 Aug 86

[Text] Cali, Colombia, 16 Aug (EFE) -- Two Peruvian and two Ecuadoran guerrillas linked to the M-19 have been deported by Colombian immigration authorities. Four others remain in detention.

The Administrative Department of Security, DAS, in Cali has reported that two of the deportees are members of the Peruvian guerrilla group Shining Path, while the other two are members of the Ecuadoran group Alfaro Lives.

The guerrillas were captured by the Army recently during clashes with the America Battalion in the mountains of Cauca Department.

The America Battalion is an international rebel group formed by, among others, Peruvian, Ecuadoran, Panamanian, Venezuelan, Nicaraguan, and Colombian guerrillas, who fight the Colombian Army in the country's southwestern mountains.

The DAS identified the deportees as Sistero Garcia Torres and Marcos Murga Zelada of Peru, and Paola Andrea Montenegro Morales and Carlos Fernando Quintero Bordon of Ecuador.

The DAS chief in Cali, German Jaramillo, has reported that four additional people are being detained by a criminal investigations court.

Jaramillo added that those detained are Ecuadoreans Patricio Eduardo Belalcazar Acosta, Jose Abelardo Negrete Rodriguez, and Luz Estella Navas Merminacho, and Peruvian Amilcar Trujiool Huaman, a member of Shining Path.

ELN GROUP ATTACKS MILITARY CONVOY 12 AUG

PA160347 Bogota EL SIGLO in Spanish 13 Aug 86 pp 1, 2

[Article by Eduardo Carrillo]

[Excerpt] One noncommissioned officer and seven soldiers were killed and two others were wounded yesterday by a dynamite explosion set by leftist guerrillas on the road where a military convoy was traveling to the oil port of Barrancabermeja in Santander Department.

The initial official reports indicate that members of a group of the Castroite National Liberation Army (ELN), led by a so-called "Captain Parmenio," planted dynamite in the road from Bucaramanga to Barrancabermaja near the place known as "Puente Sogamoso."

The guerrillas initially opened fire on the military vehicles in which Colonel Elkin Antonio Focassio, chief of staff of the 5th Brigade, and 50 soldiers were traveling. The guerrillas were apparently trying to force the convoy to cross the section of road that had been mined. The jeep carrying Col Focassio and the two soldiers was not hit by the gunfire, but the truck suffered the full impact of the explosion.

The following were killed at that location: Corporal Jose Manuel Guiza Caballero and soldiers Asdrubal Gafaro Acevedo, Miguel Delgado Maldonado, Hector Espinosa Tovar, Edgar Eduardo Cruz Cruz, Orlando Jimenez Vargas, and Henry Ardila Legato. Soldiers Juan Ismael Cruz Cruz and Carmelo Nieto Romero were seriously wounded and taken to the San Rafael hospital in Barrancabermeja, while soldiers Jerez Florez and Dias Cubides were treated for minor wounds. It was later confirmed at the hospital that one of these soldiers died.

Fifth Brigade spokesmen said that in addition to firing rifles and submachineguns, the insurgents attacked the military truck with homemade bombs and fragmentation grenades after it was hit by the dynamite explosion.

Many insurgents of the rebel column were apparently wounded. The rebels fled to the mountains and are being pursued by special forces of the National Army. [passage omitted]

CONGRESS REJECTS IMF DECISION ON CREDITS

[Text] Lima, 18 Aug (AFP) -- The Peruvian Congress tonight rejected the IMF decision to bar Peru's access to its credits by declaring it ineligible, and expressed full support for the government of President Alan Garcia.

The factions of the ruling party, APRA [American Popular Revolutionary Alliance], and the opposition faction, United Leftist Marxist Front, voted for a motion stating that the IMF did not take into account the Peruvian Government's willingness to pay according to its economic possibilities, and for this reason they reject the IMF's attitude. The rightist parties, Popular Action and the Christian Popular Party, abstained from voting because they felt that prior to supporting the government, Prime Minister and Economy Minister Luis Alva Castro should explain to Congress the policy to be followed from now on.

The approved motion was drafted by APRA and United Left officials. It urged Alva Castro to explain to the parliament the policy assumed regarding the other Peruvian creditors and the policy that is being followed concerning the Peruvian debt, which surpasses $14 billion.

PAYMENT IN KIND PLAN NEGOTIATED WITH BANKS

[Text] Lima, 15 Aug (AFP) -- Deputy Minister of Commerce Pedro Menendez Richter today reported in Lima that Peru has been sounding out 15 of the 280 foreign banks to which it owes money in order to pay in kind part of its debt to these banks, which amounts to $4.4 billion.

The deputy minister said that the talks began discreetly in March, and 15 U.S., European, and Japanese banks have expressed some interest in Peru's proposal. This proposal is based on a payment scheme agreed upon with the Soviet Union which has been in operation for the last 3 years and in which other nations have participated. Official statistics show that in 1984 and 1985, Peru paid in kind some $343.7 million owed to the Soviet Union, Romania, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Yugoslavia, Israel, and Panama.

The proposal addressed to the banks -- which the deputy minister refused to name -- offers minerals, cotton, textile products, and engines that foreign trade companies could purchase through an agreement with Peru's creditors. Menendez Richter said that an official team is working on a list of products available for payment of the foreign debt. This list will be delivered to the Economy Ministry within 2 weeks so that negotiations with the banks can go on.

According to reports, Peru has a foreign debt of $14 billion, of which $4.4 billion is owed to foreign banks.

CIVIL GUARDS PATROL AMBUSHED, TWO KILLED

PY181627 Paris AFP in Spanish 1526 GMT 16 Aug 86

[Text] Tingo Maria, 16 Aug (AFP) -- Local police sources today reported that two Civil Guardsmen died and two others were wounded in an ambush by a column of drug traffickers and their terrorist allies on a police patrol in Aucayacu, Huanuco Department in eastern Peru.

Approximately 50 subversives armed with FAL rifles and submachine guns ambushed the 6-man patrol at a crossroads of the Tingo-Maria-Pucallpa Highway in Huanuco Department.

According to the sources, the patrol was pursuing a gang of drug traffickers that provides fuel and other supplies to the clandestine camps of drug traffickers and terrorists in the middle of the jungle. During the uneven battle that ensued after the bursting of the tires of the police vehicle, Patrolmen Juan Gernandez and Marcos Ortiz were killed and Sergeants Enrique Echavarria and Rigoberto Huapaya were wounded. According to the sources, the casualties, both dead and wounded, were evacuated to Lima today.

TERRORISTS CARRYING 'HIT LIST' ARRESTED IN LIMA

[Text] Lima, 14 Aug (AFP) -- It was reported here today that the police yesterday arrested a Maoist Shining Path unit and confiscated a hand grenade, guns, ammunition, and what is believed to be a hit list of senior Army officers. There were a total of 11 dynamite attacks last night in Lima and the neighboring port of Callao against banks and government offices. The attacks caused substantial damage, but no injuries.

The five alleged terrorists are Lourdes Carpio, a professor at San Marcos University, and four students, who have also been identified. They were arrested while acting suspiciously on a street in Mirones district.

The 54th Civil Guard office has reported that the group was planning to murder some Army officers and that one of them was carrying guns and a notebook with names of several Army colonels. A sixth terrorist, who was carrying a submachine gun, managed to escape.

A pickup truck bomb exploded yesterday outside a Civil Guard office in Huancavelica, 522 km southeast of Lima. The blast caused injuries and damage to the police office and neighboring houses. The pickup truck that was used for the attack was completely destroyed.

ANTIDRUG CAMPAIGN MUST INCLUDE ADDICTION ASPECT

PA181342 Mexico City EXCELSIOR in Spanish 15 Aug 86 p 6-A

[Editorial: "The Joint Antidrug Struggle"]

[Text] The agreements and disagreements of the fifth meeting between Presidents Reagan and De la Madrid in Washington stem from the varying degrees of similarity and the heterogeneity of the topics discussed.

The war against drug trafficking and the consumption of drugs stand out among them, although the latter problem pertains primarily to the United States, because the final destination of drugs is the United States.

Thus, the marked vigorous tone of the conclusions reached by the presidents regarding this problem does not surprise us; they plan to "launch a large-scale coordinated border campaign against the illegal drug trade into the United States and arms into Mexico."

It is obvious that the border area is involved in both flows, because the traffic of drugs and arms is reciprocal. However, we must note there are serious difficulties obstructing efforts to curb drug and arms trafficking with border surveillance alone; the case of drug trafficking deserves a special reflection.

We conclude that a genuine campaign against the criminal drug trade involves a similar measure against drug addiction; so long as there are addicts in the richest country in the world who can afford to nurse their addiction, no border campaign will overcome the traces of frustrating past experiences.

GOVERNMENT EXPLAINS FUEL PRICE INCREASE

[Text] Noting that the recent gasoline price increase has led to legitimate concern in the community, the Inter-Secretariat Commission of Public Sector Prices and Rates issued an official communique explaining this price adjustment.

The communique noted that the hydrocarbon prices have been falling on the international market and the consumers of the importing countries have benefited from this situation.

This is not the case here because the export of petroleum represents a very important source of revenue for the public sector which has permitted the financing of projects the community demands, including the construction of hospitals, schools, and waterworks and the improvement of basic services. In view of this situation, the government ruled out the suspension of basic projects or printing more money and decided to adjust the prices of the petroleum products.

The communique noted the price of gasoline in Mexico is 10 percent lower than in the United States, a country with one of the lowest gasoline prices in the world. A similar situation occurs with the prices of diesel, fuel oil, and liquified petroleum gas. The communique reiterated that gradual periodic adjustments in the previously mentioned prices have already been announced, and it added that they will be lower than the ones recently made.

CUSTOMS FINES PIA VESTA $11.4 MILLION

[Excerpt] Panama City, 6 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- The Danish vessel Pia Vesta, which was captured in Panama with an illegal load of weapons bound for a mysterious destination, must pay a total of $11 million to leave the country, it was officially reported today.

The regional customs administration set the amount to be paid at $11.4 million on 15 June, but the attorneys of the owner of the vessel, Danish citizen Jorgen Jansen, appealed the decision. The appeal was rejected today by the appeals office of the General Customs Directorate for lack of grounds. [passage omitted]

Arms Reportedly for El Salvador

[Text] "David Duncan tricked me. The weapons on the Danish vessel Pia Vesta had only one destination: El Salvador," replied Emilio Ortiz de Zevallos to CRITICA shortly before giving a deposition at the Technical Investigations Department of the General Directorate of Customs of the Finance Ministry.

Ortiz de Zevallos added that from my conversation with David Duncan after I was surprised by the capture of the Pia Vesta and by the fact that yesterday the newspaper EL DOMINICA published a 'Bill of Lading' [preceding three words in English] dated 29 April 1986 which clearly showed that the Pia Vesta cargo was headed for El Salvador." [quotation marks as published]

Ducnan, a well known gunrunner, told THE MIAMI HERALD last week that the arms were for El Salvador's Christian democratic regime and that their destination was the port of Acajutla.

Duncan, who said that he had received death threats from the West German Baader-Meinhof gang, warned Emilio Ortiz de Zevallos: "If you speak up, I will send you a messenger."

Ortiz de Zevallos works as administrative manager of Terminales Chiriqui, Inc, (Techisa). He said: "All of Duncan's papers claiming that the arms were going to Peru are totally false. The documents dated 30 April 1986, which he forged and which sought to involve the Peruvian Army and Government, do not have any consignee or specific names, because no one in Peru knows what 'Sinato International,' the company Duncan invented to receive the weapons, is."

"During my conversation with Duncan, who spoke to me from Miami, he assured me that El Salvador was going to get the shipment of weapons. He read me the following address: Salvadoran Armed Forces, Joint Chiefs of Staff No 002158 [as published] signed by Adolfo E. [as published] Blandon, chief of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and a big seal on that same side, and another on the left side which read OB/MEG" [not further identified], Ortiz de Zevallos added.

"Duncan also told me that he had talked with the U.S. Defense Department regarding the weapons," Ortiz de Zevallos noted. On this matter, he also said that Duncan had revealed to him that "he could send the weapons to the Howard Air Base and speak to U.S. Colonel Elvon Cummings about it."

COURT RULES INTERCOMSA CONTRACT CONSTITUTIONAL

PA182013 Panama City LA PRENSA in Spanish 18 Aug 86 p 1

[By Franklin Bosquez D'Giovanni]

[Text] Justice Camilo O. Perez noted his reservations regarding the [Supreme Court's] decision involving Intercomsa [Intercontinental of Communications Via Satellite, Inc.] He said it is unacceptable at this stage to have the state's sovereignty "diminished" by leaving international communications in private hands.

Virgilio A. Hernandez filed charges on the alleged unconstitutionality of Contract No 9 of 21 December 1966 signed with Intercomsa to install and operate commercial international telecommunications service in Panama.

Hernandez filed his petition through lawyer Adolfo Alberto Benedetti, asking the Supreme Court of Justice to declare the entire contract unconstitutional, alleging it violates Articles 45, 46, and 280 of the Constitution.

The court's decision, proposed by Isaac Chang Vega, stated the contract is not unconstitutional because, although most of the company's capital should be national, there is no "specific prohibition" regarding the participation of foreign capital in private companies for public services.

Justice Perez -- the lone dissenter -- said the contract "flagrantly violates" Article 280 of the Constitution.

"If we analyze the contract in its entirety, we can see that the state -- and this cannot be denied -- is placed in a pejorative and diminished position, and a private company is given all the rights. The leasing company can even transfer those rights to a foreign company or to a foreign power," Perez stressed. He said he is concerned over the situation, which practically means that the state has signed a lease contract, [contrato por adhesion] as would any private company.

He added: "It is unacceptable at this stage to have the state's sovereignty diminished, and to have a public service such as communications, which should be directly managed by the state, unconditionally subject to the will of a private enterprise."

According to Perez, satellite communications are a strategic public service which can be used by the national government to promote its initiatives. Furthermore, the government has a right to planning secrecy so that its policy will always benefit the people based on social and public interest, he said. "This is particularly true at this crucial time, when so much effort is being dedicated to recovering what for Panamanians represents more than fantasy, a dream: the administration of the Panama Canal."

The Supreme Court of Justice should protect those functions, which are not only contingent but necessary, Justice Perez stressed.

VIERA DISCUSSES PREPARATIONS FOR REBEL MEETING

PA190135 San Salvador Radio Cadena YSU in Spanish 1800 GMT 18 Aug 86

[Passages within quotation marks recorded]

[Text] The attempt of Salvadoran political parties to reach a consensus proposal to be considered in the third dialogue has been at a standstill since meetings began 4 August. However, Deputy Culture and Communications Minister Roberto Edmundo Viera reported today that meetings could be renewed this week.

[Viera] "There have been no new developments. We are hoping the various party leaders can meet this week. Since that meeting with the press at the Camino Real Hotel, it has been impossible, for several reasons, to arrange a new meeting. We think there will be a meeting of the parties this week. This way, a stance by the political parties could be agreed on. But there is nothing specific so far."

Viera said the parties are willing to meet to clarify concerns about the talks between the Salvadoran Government and rebel representatives.

[Viera] "We have talked to the leaders of some parties, and we believe that a willingness exists. I think we have to clarify some concerns about the talks. Because political parties are institutions dedicated to eminently political matters, they will undoubtedly be concerned about political factors or how the talks will be handled from a political viewpoint. In this regard, it is good to sit down and clarify some things. The talks are a mechanism to seek peace, and their success will benefit all of Salvadoran society, not just a specific party or political institution. These are the most sensitive aspects of the talks. It is in this regard that we must clarify the concerns which various political institutions may have."

Viera said the government delegation will travel to Mexico Tuesday or Wednesday. However, he did not guarantee that the preliminary talks will be held at the Salvadoran Embassy in Mexico.

[Viera] "The commission that will go to the preparatory meeting will be leaving for Mexico City 19 or 20 August. Hopefully, the site of the meeting will be settled. As far as the Salvadoran Government is concerned, we proposed the embassy because it is Salvadoran territory. The other side complained that that site was well-known, therefore precluding a private meeting. We think that the meeting site in Mexico is secondary. The main thing is to sit down with the commitment to decide the date, place, and time for the third round of talks. In any case, our commission will be there, and an alternative site is possible. The problem with the other side's proposal is that they have shown a negative attitude regarding the site without suggesting an alternative. Even if there is no specific proposal, the government commission will be in Mexico City at the Salvadoran Embassy on 20 August. If we can look for another site from there, let us look for another site.

"For this reason, we want to tell the Salvadoran people again that President Duarte, fully aware of the importance of this meeting, appointed this commission at the highest level. This commission is truly representative. It is authorized to negotiate the place and date of the third round of talks. In other words, the commission is fully authorized to make decisions.

"We hope that the other side respects the importance of this commission. We also hope their representatives are authorized to make decisions. Otherwise, the dynamics of this preliminary meeting could be hampered."

Viera denied that the Salvadoran Government has failed to discuss the meetings with Mexican authorities, as the guerrillas have argued.

[Viera] "What they say is completely false. We reported that when we gave our proposal to Msgr Rivera y Damas we contacted our ambassador to Mexico. He reported the Salvadoran Government's wish to hold this meeting to the Mexican Foreign Secretariat. The Mexican Government is aware of this. An initial conversation about this has already been held. I think we could give some more information today or tomorrow. We cannot report on this now, because talks are in progress. We have to get in touch with the Salvadoran Foreign Ministry to know the correct procedure. It is, therefore, completely false that no contact was sought. This contact consists of reporting to the Mexican Government our intention to hold this meeting. I can tell you that the Mexican Government views this meeting positively. The mechanical procedure, in which the Mexican Government would have to intervene, could be clarified later."

Viera said the FMLN-FDR's assertion that the government is not willing to hold a dialogue is false. He added that the best proof of this is the various proposals presented by the guerrillas since 1 June, when President Duarte proposed the third round of talks.

[Text] [Hurtado] This is an interview with Jorge Alberto Villacorta of the FMLN-FDR. He is one of the persons designated by the rebels to attend the preliminary meeting in Mexico on 20 August. Mr Villacorta, do the fronts have an alternate site for this meeting, other than the embassy, as the government has proposed?

[Villacorta] The meeting cannot be held at the embassy because no privacy could be enjoyed there. The government has insisted that this will be a private meeting. Consequently, the site chosen must meet a minimum of conditions. The government made the mistake of publishing the name of the site proposed well in advance. For this reason, the embassy is no longer a private site. Some journalists have already planned to set themselves up with full gear, including tripods, to report on this meeting. The people think that if this meeting is not held at the embassy, it will be held at the ambassador's residence. The two sites do not meet the privacy requirements. This is why we have insisted that the meeting be held elsewhere.

In addition, the site chosen must be neutral. For us, the Salvadoran Embassy represents Duarte's government rather than the Salvadoran people. This is our view. This is why we suggest that the meeting be held elsewhere. As host country, the Mexican Government can and should offer a much more suitable place. This government has more than enough experience in this kind of matter. We hope to have a suitable site soon. As you will surely understand, the site must be an entirely private one.

[Hurtado] I suppose the fronts could not report the name of the place that they propose. This name would have to remain a secret to some extent.

[Hurtado] Specifically regarding the preliminary meeting, how would the news media be able to report on the results of this meeting?

[Villacorta] During the preliminary meeting on 20 August, one of the things we will consider and on which we must agree is the manner in which we will report to the public, the international community, and, of course, to the Salvadoran people. We would have to agree with the Salvadoran Government's representatives on the manner of this reporting. Rest assured, however, that we will report [words indistinct].

[Hurtado] What topics will be brought by the fronts for discussion?

[Villacorta] This meeting [words indistinct] will be solely to talk about the preparation for the third round of talks to be held in Salvadoran territory. We will consider only the place, date, and security aspects of the third round of talks. We will discuss the transportation of the participants, their security, and the duration of this round of talks. These are the things that we will discuss. We will not consider any topic in depth, only the points, let us say, four or five of them. We will not discuss anything else.

[Hurtado] Will the fronts insist that the dialogue be held in San Salvador?

[Villacorta] Just as we have proposed, we will insist that the meeting be held in San Salvador.

[Hurtado] What do the fronts think of the government's designating a member of the [words indistinct] organization, described as progovernment, to participate in the meeting?

[Villacorta] We have said we wondered about the designation of this gentleman, not because he belongs to a labor or whatever organization, but because we will discuss the operational, administrative, and logistical aspects of the meeting. Consequently, we will reach accords with the government regarding security, date, place.

(?He) could do too few things, unless he is a representative of the security organizations, Ministry of Transportation, the Foreign Ministry, or something similar, where he can make commitments regarding the operational aspects of the meeting. We have wondered at the designation of this gentleman, who cannot make any commitment of any sort; he just cannot. Now, we will ask that he and trade union leaders be present as observers at the dialogue's third meeting, when we will certainly discuss things in depth. We feel the presence of this gentleman is quite absurd, considering that we will discuss only the place, date, and duration of the meeting.

[Hurtado] What do you think about the other members of the delegation?

[Villacorta] The delegation looks quite large, that is all. Anyway, this is the government's prerogative. I am afraid their delegation has quite a few people. We suppose these people are very busy in more important matters related to their jobs. Anyway, it is the government's prerogative to send such a large delegation. We designated a delegation of our fronts in accordance with the purpose of the meeting, that is to say, to reach an accord on operational and administrative matters.

[Hurtado] Regarding the exchange of Colonel Avalos for numerous persons detained in the country's prisons, we understand that you will get a list of the persons who could be included in this exchange of prisoners, as you describe it. Will this take place in Mexico, and will the mediator deliver these papers to you?

[Villacorta] As the mediator, Msgr Rivera y Damas told us that he will bring us the list that has been drafted by the various humanitarian organizations and institutions. This will take place apart from the preliminary meeting. We will get this list [words indistinct]. But this will occur entirely apart from the meeting.

BLANDON: PIA VESTA ARMS NOT DESTINED LOCALLY

[Excerpt] San Salvador, 18 Aug (AFP) -- The Salvadoran Army denied today that the arms shipment confiscated from the Danish vessel Pia Vesta in June in Panama was destined for El Salvador. General Adolfo Blandon, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told reporters today that the reports originating in Panama "have no validity whatsoever." He said that it was not true that the weapons, some of Soviet manufacture and sent from the GDR, were to be traded for coffee in the Salvadoran port of Acajutla and sent to anti-Sandinists in Honduras.

Blandon added: "We would not be trading coffee for communist weapons, as our professionalism does not allow us to be involved in such international crimes." [passage omitted]

GUATEMALA

DEFENSE MINISTER ON REBEL STRATEGY, CONTADORA

PA190401 Guatemala City PRENSA LIBRE in Spanish 18 Aug 86 p 19

[Text] Quezaltenango -- The subversives have adopted a new strategy in confronting the government, Defense Minister Jaime Hernandez Mendez said during an interview here.

Hernandez Mendez said that clandestine armed groups have intensified their activities during the past few days due to logistical support from countries in the Soviet orbit and their allies.

Nevertheless, the Guatemalan Armed Forces, showing a patriotic and professional spirit, are using every means available to control the rebel actions.

Regarding the Contadora Group, Hernandez Mendez said: This group might not be able to achieve the objectives sought by the Central American countries, simply because Nicaragua will not accept the norms in the group's draft document.

HONDURAS

PRESIDENT DENIES PLANE DOWNED BY SANDINIST FIRE

PA181706 Tegucigalpa Cadena Audio Video in Spanish 1130 GMT 18 Aug 86

[Text] Some European stations have suggested that the Honduran Air Force Hercules C-130 airplane was downed by Sandinist antiaircraft fire. However, the Honduran president has ruled out that theory. He also said that families of the victims of the air disaster who need government help will obtain it. In remarks to Radio America, President Azcona said that it was an accident and that such accidents will continue to occur in the future, just like train and car accidents. We repeat: President Azcona has ruled out the possibility that the Hercules C-130 was downed by Sandinist fire, as some European stations have reported. Here are the president's remarks to our reporter, Alejandro Casco:

[Casco] On 16 August members of the Armed Forces, through their commander, General Humberto Regalado Hernandez, and the Honduran president attended a ceremony at the 1st Infantry Battalion to pay a last tribute to the soldiers who died in the airplane accident that has shaken the national public. Regarding this tragic accident, President Azcona said:

[Azcona] "As all the Honduran people feel, this is a very painful event, because (?61) Hondurans have died in an unfortunate accident."

[Casco] When President Azcona was told that European stations have reported that it is not ruled out that Sandinist antiaircraft fire caused the tragedy of the Hercules C-130 plane, he said:

[Azcona] "I have spoken with the military and with the Honduran Air Force, and so far nothing of the sort is suspected."

[Casco] Azcona was asked what his government will do to help the relatives of the soldiers and officers who died in this airplane accident.

[Azcona] "The Armed Forces have a military (?welfare) institution that covers the officers and the troops. If the government can in some way help the relatives of the officers and troops who died, we will do so."

[Casco] Azcona was told that the airplane had previously suffered two mechanical failures, and he was asked whether he will order a thorough investigation to prevent this in the future.

[Azcona] "No, I do not think it had had serious mechanical defects. The Honduran Air Force is very responsible, and if the plane had some defect, it would not have been flown. Look, accidents happen. Airplanes, helicopters, cars, trains, all vehicles suffer accidents. [Words indistinct] airplanes of the world airlines, and they will continue to occur."

REGALADO DENIES DIVISION WITHIN ARMED FORCES

PA190057 Tegucigalpa Voz de Honduras Network in Spanish 1130 GMT 18 Aug 86

[Interview with General Humberto Regalado Hernandez, commander of the Honduras Armed Forces, by Juan Bautista; place not given -- live telephone relay]

[Text] [Bautista] Dear listeners: Regarding remarks just made by Enrique Ortez Colindres [former Honduran ambassador to the United Nations] we have on the line General Regalado Hernandez, who wants to explain his views. Good morning, General, go ahead.

[Regalado] Thank you, Juan Bautista. First, I want to thank the station publicly for the praiseworthy work carried out in informing the Honduran people about the accident (?we suffered) and the grief that we are feeling because of it. We are eternally grateful to the radio station. In addition, I agree with some of the views expressed by Ulloa Duarte [not further identified] and Ortez Colindres. However, I want to refute the statement that there is division within the Armed Forces. I wish they would be more explicit when they talk about division within the Armed Forces, because it seems that these remarks encourage certain people who are interested in showing that living under a democracy is not the best way to live.

Perhaps there are certain sectors of a sister nation that may be paying certain people -- I do not mean Ortez Colindres -- to try to destabilize this government. The only one who would benefit from this would be the Sandinist Government of Nicaragua. It does not want any competition, which is what living under a democratic system entails. It seeks sufficient reasons to say that the democracies of the Western Hemisphere are no good.

Consequently, I do not agree with the idea that there is any division within the Armed Forces. I reject this. We are very concerned in the Armed Forces. We are also very busy planning everything that pertains to national security, inside and outside the country. Thus, we have enough work to do. We have enough problems. Instead of being divided, we are united to fulfill the sacred mission given us by the Constitution of the Republic. Thank you HRN. Thank you Juancito. I felt it was necessary for me to clarify this.

[Bautista] We thank you for calling, General. We also want to take advantage of this opportunity to ask you a question. What is your opinion about this campaign being carried out by the international press regarding a division within the Armed Forces, and particularly about reports saying that there is a division as far as wanting to hoard or to manage the funds given to the Nicaraguan counterrevolution by the U.S. Government?

[Regalado] This is completely absurd. We have no interest [in that]. It is not possible to make a generalization because of the remarks made by one person. On the contrary, we are worried because the strategy of the Communist Party of Honduras [PCH] includes three aspects which we must stress within the country's internal policy. They are doing this as a commitment to the Sandinist government, because of the financial support and advice that the Nicaraguans have given local communists to get the terrorists out of jail. In return, the PCH and the leftist groups have said that they must support Nicaragua by [words indistinct], discrediting the Honduran [as heard] counterrevolutionaries and calling for the expulsion of U.S. troops from Honduras.

They are worried about the security that Honduras has, as was publicly expressed by the U.S. President. They are worried about the treaty that was ratified by President Azcona. They are very worried about it because they know that the minute they trespass the Honduran border with the huge quantity of weapons they have, the United States will be on Honduras' side, defending Honduran territorial integrity.

The Sandinists wish they had a similar treaty with the Soviet Union so they could guarantee their security, just as Honduras does with the United States; this is a deal which is disadvantageous for the communists. This is why they have established this strategy which covers three aspects. The Honduran people must be careful about them. Congress should not become a sounding box for their strategy. I want to clearly stress that this strategy covers three aspects.

[Bautista] Unfortunately, our connection with Gen Regalado has been cut off. He was going to expand on the three aspects. We are going to try to restore the connection.

Dear listeners, we were talking with Gen Regalado, but we were cut off. However, the three aspects he was referring to as those used by the Honduran Communists to harm the Armed Forces are: 1) discrediting the Nicaraguan counterrevolution; 2) promoting the expulsion of the U.S. troops from Honduras; and 3) reviving the missing persons issue. Gen Regalado said categorically that these three aspects are being used by the Honduran Communists to try to divide or discredit the country's armed institution.

NICARAGUA

ORTEGA HOLDS NEWS CONFERENCE IN SANTO DOMINGO

[News conference given by President Daniel Ortega Saavedra from the studio of an unidentified television station in Santo Domingo -- live relay; broadcast in progress]

[Excerpt] [Moderator] ... personalities and friends of President Ortega. Would you like to begin by saying something, or shall we turn you over to the journalists at once? [laughs]

[Ortega] Well, first of all, a warm embrace from the Nicaraguan people for the Dominican people. [Words indistinct] for the opportunity of communicating directly with the Dominican people. Thank you very much.

[Moderator] We would like the various journalists to identify themselves and the news media to which they belong. The question and answer session can commence whenever you see fit. We will try to speed things up, because the president must be out of the studio by 1415.

[Iversal] Manuel Iversal, information director for Radio Commercial.

[Moderator] You can start, you can start.

[Perpena] Raul Perpena of EXCELSIOR of Mexico. Mr President, it had been said that you would meet with Cardinal O'Connor of New York. This was even announced in the press. A report was published today denying any contact. We want to know what contact was made and with whom.

[Ortega] I got in touch with Cardinal O'Connor in Nicaragua last year. When I arrived in Santo Domingo a common acquaintance proposed a meeting with Cardinal O'Connor here the day after I arrived, at the home of [words indistinct]. It is not the home of the Santo Domingo archbishop. I read in the newspapers that the archbishop denied any such meeting at his home. I understand Cardinal O'Connor was urgently called back to New York. He left me a note regretting that he was not able to meet with me. He also said he would write to me and that our meeting is still pending. He is particularly interested in the specific case of [words indistinct] of the Nicaraguan foreign minister, who belongs to the Maryknoll Order, the main office of which is in New York. The cardinal wants to discuss the matter with them because he belongs to the New York diocese.

[Reporter] Mr President, how will your government tackle this double front in the Nicaraguan conflict? The first one is domestic and the second is international. The first is the result of the confrontation with the church and the closure of newspapers, while the second is the result of the aid that the United States has earmarked for the counterrevolutionaries who are struggling in your country. How do you plan to cope with this situation?

[Ortega] We have an external problem, that is, the war that the United States has declared on Nicaragua and that is being discussed at the U.S. Congress. This war affects all Latin American peoples, all of whom are demanding that the United States change its policy. The Contadora and Lima Groups have also demanded this. The problem must be handled by the international community, because anything done to Nicaragua could also be done to any country in the world. The idea is to uphold respect for law, respect for international legal order.

As for our country's domestic situation, we were not acquainted with democracy in Nicaragua. With the revolution, however, we began to construct democracy. War happened to us later. This was has provoked obstacles that have prevented us from developing democracy. In addition, political tensions with some Catholic Church members have been created. The Catholic Church people have their own view and conflicts. Some agreed with Pope John XXIII's preferential treatment for the poor, while others did not. There are priests in the Nicaraguan Government. We would like to have more clergymen in the government. We do not have any trouble with the church or religion. This is to say, all the churches, including Evangelicals and Catholics, participate in the people's religion. There are, however, problems with the political postures of some church members. These are in the process of being solved, however.

Before leaving Nicaragua, I met with the representative of the pope. We discussed the problem. He talked to Cardinal Obando y Bravo and the Nicaraguan bishops. We have agreed on a meeting to be held in September to consider these problems and solve them.

[Rojas Leon] Ricardo Rojas Leon of ULTIMA HORA. Mr President, although you and other commanders of the Sandinist revolution have described the process you direct in your country as a revolution in the context of the principles of nonalignment, political democracy, and mixed economy, some sectors that peacefully oppose your government, such as the COSEP [Higher Council of Private Enterprise], the National Central Organization of Nicaraguan Workers [Central Nacional de Trabajadores Nicaraguenses], the PSC [Social Christian Party] and some sectors of the church understand the Sandinist revolution to be oriented in other ideological directions. It has even been said that the Nicaraguan Government is a Marxist one. Pardon me for reiterating my question. Are you a Marxist?

[Ortega] I am a Sandinist. Christian feelings caused me to begin opposing Somoza. I belong to a people with deep Christian roots. I believe in a Christ who favors the poor and justice. The first doctrine that I was familiar with was the Christian doctrine. Later I encountered Sandino and, even later Marx. Marx has also fostered the workers' well-being. So, the two are not incompatible. Now there is political pluralism in Nicaragua. We have seven political parties in our country.

We are accompanied by Mauricio Diaz, vice president of the national consistent assembly and president of the Popular Social Christian Party. His is an opposition party which participated in the elections. He has his own views. He could also tell us something about pluralism in Nicaragua.

[Reporter] You said a short while ago that, like Christ, you became interested in the social problem at the beginning and that you encountered Marx later. Do you believe in Marx now?

[Ortega] I believe in man. I believe in the doctrines at the service of mankind. I believe that Christianity serves mankind. I also believe that Marx, from another perspective, contributes a doctrine to serve mankind.

[Lomo] Miguel Lomo of AFP. Mr President, you have said that the idea is to establish an integrated democracy in Nicaragua. Could you give us some details about the nature of such a democracy?

[Ortega] The idea is not just to hold elections every few years to construct an integrated democracy. See? We have held elections in our country as a part of the domestic process. We feel, however, that elections must be held so that the people can choose among the various political alternatives presented. However, in addition, these elections must be accompanied by specific tasks leading to the democratization of wealth, that is to say, a better distribution of wealth. Nicaragua is a deeply Christian country where everybody, from the wealthiest to the poorest, claims to be Christian. Now we appeal to the wealthy and tell them: What did Christ say? We must share our wealth. This is what we ask of the wealthy in Nicaragua, to share their wealth with those who have less. In other words, we do not oppose the rich and do not try to eliminate them, but we do ask them to act as Christ demanded, to share their wealth.

[Reporter] Continuing with Christianity, Mr President, you said you have gotten in touch with several Dominican sectors. We would like to know if these sectors include some Christian religious groups.

[Ortega] Yes, we had a meeting with some priests -- some 100 priests -- Catholics and some representatives from other evangelical churches of different denominations. We had a very fulfilling meeting, as naturally there is concern regarding the religious situation in Nicaragua, because the idea exists that all revolutions have to clash with religion. In Nicaragua that cannot happen, because Christians, priests, and religious members have participated since before the triumph of the revolution in the transformation process, and they continue participating. Therefore, it is part of the social, spiritual, and integral transformation process [words indistinct].

[Reporter] This question probably warrants two replies: First, how do you visualize the damage to Nicaragua by the war; especially with regard to the U.S. help in maintaining this war; and second, what future developments do you see against any Latin American country, especially in Central America, or with regard to U.S. activities against Nicaragua?

[Ortega] Well, I talked to the Central American presidents on 25 May in Guatemala, in the city of Esquipulas -- a religious symbol for all the Central American countries -- and there I understood the consensus that none of them want war. None of them agrees with the policy of force the United States uses in Central America. None of them would back a U.S. invasion against Nicaragua. However, U.S. pressures against these Central American governments are very great. There you have the mercenary camps on Honduran territory, the military bases in Honduran territory. The threat from Honduran territory exists, even though the Honduran Government does not share this policy. Therefore the prospects are complex. The United States has become more directly involved in an interventionist war process against Nicaragua.

What is the war doing to Nicaragua? It is leaving death, grief, and sacrifice among the people, because even where we build a school, the counterrevolutionaries come and destroy the school. Where we build a health center, the counterrevolutionaries come and destroy the health center. Where we build cooperative centers for the peasants, they arrive and destroy the cooperative centers. This is something really dramatic, because these mercenary forces are not fighting the EPS -- they shy away from these clashes -- they are attacking the Nicaraguan people, killing women, old people, children. There have been more than 31,000 war victims during the last 5 years.

[Reporter] Mr President, when one analyzes the crisis your country is going through in these international forums, even within the Socialist International -- its president for Latin America is here with us, Dr Pena Gomez -- there are sectors that have said that the U.S. presence in the Central American conflict, as it has been called during the last few years, is really intervention, but that there is also Soviet intervention. It has been said that Nicaragua is a country that, although it defines itself as nonaligned, is aligned with the USSR; it receives Soviet assistance and backs the guerrillas in El Salvador. Some people say you are leftists. Do you believe, as certain liberal, democratic sectors of the Socialist International believe, that the interventionism in Central America is not only North American, but that there is also Soviet intervention; or do you believe that there is only intervention on the part of the colossus of the North?

[Ortega] I understand and interpret serious international opinion, that this is a North-South problem and not an East-West problem. [Words indistinct] a problem of the USSR intervening in Central America. [passage indistinct] Nicaragua is alert to verification in the sense that in Nicaragua there are no Soviet bases. In Nicaragua there are no Soviet military troops. In Nicaragua we do not carry out military maneuvers with the Soviet Army. On the other hand, in Honduras there are U.S. troops. There are U.S. bases in Honduras. In Honduras military maneuvers are carried out by the United States. The truth is that the United States has occupied Honduras, not to help Honduras but to attack Nicaragua. In Nicaragua such Soviet military presence does not exist.

What is it? It is a pretext. They have always used an excuse to attack Nicaragua. Last century, in 1855, even then the United States arrived in Nicaragua, invading it with its expansionist policy. The USSR did not exist then. In 1909 it overthrew a government, in 1912 it intervened with its troops; the USSR still did not exist. Then one must say that this is not really a new policy. It is a very old policy, a bad policy, and the United States has not understood that this is a bad policy. They should correct that bad policy.

[Reporter] Mr President, you say that this is a North-South problem or an East-West problem; there is, however, still time for it to be North-South. [sentence as heard]

[Ortega] Well, I believe the world situation is so critical, and so critical for Latin American countries, that unless we become aware that such a problem tends to spill out because of the actual crisis, then all that awaits is chaos and instability for the Latin American and Caribbean countries and Third World countries, in general, because peace is threatened not only through war, as in the case of Nicaragua -- through U.S. military actions. While the United States defends an unjust international economic policy toward Latin American countries, it is attacking peace and promoting instability throughout Latin America. There is really concern on the part of all Latin American leaders. There is a convergence -- a unity of opinions -- among Latin American rulers on the need for a change of economic policy in the world.

[Moderator] I would like to ask for a small break, as we would like some of the public -- some that might be interested in talking with the president -- your name please?

[Perez] My name is Wilson Perez Saldano.

[Moderator] You want to ask the president something?

[Perez] Yes. My first question for the president of Nicaragua is that, seeing that the U.S. Government -- the Congress -- has approved aid amounting to $100 million for the Nicaraguan contras, in other words they have now had a direct participation with Nicaragua -- do you believe that Nicaragua would be militarily prepared for a U.S. invasion? [passage indistinct]

[Ortega] That is a good question. [laughs] The Nicaraguan people have moral readiness, and accompanying this moral preparedness is the decision to face this intervention, if it does take place, with weapons. The Nicaraguan people do not have atomic weapons. They do not have sophisticated armaments. What the Nicaraguan people have are rifles to defend themselves in case of an invasion. They are therefore prepared to face that invasion, to resist that invasion, and to defeat that invasion. Be assured that if that invasion takes place, if the United States again makes that mistake in Nicaragua, they will be defeated by the Nicaraguans. They will be defeated by Nicaraguan peasants, by Nicaraguan youths, by Nicaraguan women, because even the [words indistinct] are prepared to fight back in Nicaragua in case of a U.S. military intervention.

[Motta] Francisco Motta. Mr President, how would you explain the attitude of Mr Eden Pastora, the legendary Commander Zero, who fought beside you to topple Somoza and then, after a time, turned against you, alleging he was going to fight for true Sandinist values?

[Ortega] Well, historically, situations like this always arise. It even happened to Christ. A Judas emerged among the apostles. It is therefore not strange that a Judas should appear in Nicaragua.

[Motta] Is that the reply?

[Ortega] Yes. [laughs]

[Reporter] Suppose the United States invades Nicaragua, would you ask the USSR for help?

[Ortega] We are going to defend ourselves with our fists, with the sweat, blood, and heart of the Nicaraguans.

The Nicaraguans are the ones who are going to face the invasion, we are the ones who have to resist that invasion, and we are the ones who are going to defeat the invasion. We are not expecting anyone to come with their troops to help. It is the Nicaraguan people who are going to fight against and defeat that invasion. However, we know that we are going to have the active solidarity of the peoples of the world, of the Latin American people, and even of the people of the United States.

[Reporter] Mr President, the Contadora Group has drafted a peace plan for Central America which, according to what you have said, has 21 points. This plan was first approved by Nicaragua and rejected by the other countries; afterward it was approved by the other countries and rejected by Nicaragua. What could you tell the Dominican people about the contents of this document?

[Ortega] Well, this is like a problem between two neighbors; if they cannot reach an agreement, they will need a mediator. This has been the case with us, and we have resorted to Contadora, to the Latin American countries. Contadora submitted a peace plan which has faced many obstacles. The last peace plan submitted by Contadora was accepted by Nicaragua. We are willing to continue with the negotiations to sign the Contadora peace plan. This is the line we are maintaining, and we invite the Central American governments to make a decision in favor of signing the Contadora peace plan, even if it annoys the U.S. Government, because it is better that they do this so that we can have peace, instead of heading toward a war just because they do not want to annoy the U.S. Government.

[Moderator] Mr President, is it true that well-known Somozists [words indistinct] have remained in Nicaragua and are working without being bothered and have not had any problems?

[Ortega] That is right. There are many people in Nicaragua who worked for Somoza. For example, there are many public employees who are working. There are even some military who were with Somoza but who did not commit crimes, and they are still working for their country. There is the amnesty policy. Now and then we release some prisoners. Not too long ago we released 400 prisoners who had been in prison since 19 July [1979]. Some of them were guardsmen during Somoza's regime. We even release a former sergeant who was a Somoza bodyguard. Our policy is to be flexible with Nicaraguans who really want to work and participate in politics in a civil state.

[Reporter] Mr President, you have said that despite the problems from abroad with the counterrevolutionaries and some local opposition, the Sandinist government is set on building a democracy. If this is true, is there any possibility of reopening the newspaper LA PRENSA?

[Ortega] The newspaper LA PRENSA has been temporarily closed, but not because we are against freedom of the press. As a matter of fact, we favor freedom of the press. The government's radio station has a program every day from 0800 to 1200 in which its mobile unit goes to the streets interviewing people, who say whatever they wish. Every day the people criticize the flaws they see in the government. The program has gained an audience which I think no other government radio station in the world has. Domestic Service is the radio station with the largest audience in the country. This radio station gives the people the opportunity to criticize and express their views and present their problems. The members of the Cabinet are then forced to answer their questions. As you can see, we favor freedom of expression. The political parties also have programs on radio stations, on Radio Independiente, for instance.

The newspaper LA PRENSA was operating, but the owners broke the law when they went to the United States to support the approval of the $100 million in aid for the counterrevolution. That is a violation of the law, because the problems we have in Nicaragua should be resolved by Nicaraguans. We consider it a crime to support the U.S. Government so that it can continue killing the Nicaraguan people. This forced us to temporarily close LA PRENSA. If the owners of the newspaper sever their relations with those who are attacking us, then we will immediately change the measures. The newspaper and its owners are here in Nicaragua. They meet, they have their newspaper. We have not seized its installations. They are making statements and issuing protest notes. A letter from one of the owners of the newspaper has been published. All this proves that there is freedom of expression. If we did not have freedom, they could not be writing from Nicaragua all the things they say. They go abroad to make statements, and they return to the country. Everyone comes and goes without any problem. There are no restrictions. They are all free to speak.

[Reporter] Mr President, do you not think that the United States, far from wanting a direct intervention by U.S. troops in Nicaragua, is trying to subdue Sandinism through a war of attrition, through an internal struggle with the aid to the counterrevolutionaries?

[Ortega] The U.S. Government has sought what is less costly, and that has been the counterrevolutionaries. But the counterrevolutionaries cannot defeat the Sandinist revolution. Since they cannot defeat the Sandinist revolution, now they are intervening [words indistinct]. When the CIA comes to Nicaragua to take part in operations, as authorized by the U.S. Congress, and when the U.S. military advisers visit the mercenary camps, the United States is getting more directly involved in the war. This is leading to a Vietnamization of the conflict and to an intervention.

[Reporter] Mr President, what is the real correlation of forces, militarily speaking, between the counterrevolution and the Sandinist Army?

[Ortega] The counterrevolutionary forces are totally defeated. Proof of this is that the counterrevolutionaries are now attacking the civilian population. They do not dare attack military positions. When they see a public vehicle they attack it. In recent months they have killed a French doctor, a Swiss and a German internationalist, and also a Spanish internationalist. These were foreign internationalists who came here to cooperate with various programs, to help the peasants build schools, to help them with their health problems and with various social projects. They go about their business, and they get killed. This is what the counterrevolution is doing. The Nicaraguan people are rejecting the counterrevolution more and more every day. The counterrevolution does not have a chance. It does not have any support from the people.

[Reporter] What is the situation of the peasants regarding the possession of the land before and after the Sandinist revolution?

[Ortega] As I have tried to explain here, we are making efforts to appeal to the people's conscience. For example, if a person has a farm of 10,000 -- how do you call it here, hectares -- let us say 5,000 hectares, and he is only working on [words indistinct] the portion he is not working on is distributed among the peasants, either individually or in cooperatives. It is up to them. At this moment we have in Nicaragua more peasant owners of the land than prior to the revolution. We have more private owners in Nicaragua than before the victory of the revolution.

Before, the land was in the hands of four people who were millionaires, who did not even work the land efficiently. Now we are distributing the land to do justice. Now if there is a person who has 5,000 hectares and he is doing a good job, there is no problem with him. It has been necessary to have a place for dispaced peasants, because in a war zone thousands of peasants have abandoned their homes, and we have had to find them some place to settle. Then we talk to the owner of the land so that the peasants can use it temporarily. When the war is over, the peasants can return to their homes,and he can take over his property.

[Reporter] When you talk about the land given to the peasants, is the land theirs as long as they work it?

[Ortega] They receive the land as their property. They receive their land deeds. Of course, this is done so that they have land to work. Besides, one does not have to tell a peasant to work the land. The peasants are in need of land to work. Once you give them the land, they immediately start working on it, and you see corn and beans sprouting, the products they are going to consume and that they will take to the people in the city.

[Reporter] Mr President, one of the accusations against the Nicaraguan Government is that it is helping in many ways, even militarily, the Salvadoran guerrillas. There is a well-known report indicating that the guerrillas have their headquarters in Managua. There is also the case of a guerrilla leader who was killed in Managua. What can you tell us about this?

[Ortega] Look, the Salvadoran guerrillas existed long before the victory of the revolution in Nicaragua, because of the state of social injustice in El Salvador. The Salvadoran revolutionary leaders visit many Latin American countries, not only Nicaragua, just like those people the U.S. Government is financing -- the counterrevolutionaries -- also move fromone country to another [words indistinct].

The leadership of the Salvadoran guerrillas is in El Salvador. Not long ago, Msgr Rivera y Damas, who has been making efforts for a dialogue, [words indistinct] some 20 km from San Salvador, where he met with the leaders of the guerrillas, who are in the country fighting. Once in a while they travel to Latin America and Europe [words indistinct]. From where do they get their arms? Right there. The arms sent by the U.S. Government to El Salvador are seized by the guerrillas from the Army. There is an Army report indicating that during a guerrilla attack, they took 300 rifles, mortars, and cannons. In reality, the arms are being supplied by the U.S. Government to the Salvadoran guerrillas from the arms being sent to El Salvador.

[Reporter] Mr President, during an interview carried by a television station yesterday, you said -- and in this I agree with you -- that the world cannot be divided into white and black, answering the question of a newsman who asked you if Nicaragua was building a capitalist democracy or a Marxist regime. You told him that you did not believe in that [words indistinct] of black and white, and that in between there were many grays. But, in relation to the type of society being built in Nicaragua -- even between the capitalist democracy of the United States and developed countries and the Marxist regimes, for example, of the USSR and Cuba -- in the past 40 years, since the end of World War II, there have been different models put into practice. There has been a type of socialism in Yugoslavia and the national democratic revolution, which the Dominican Revolutionary Party, PRD, put into practice in 1976, and also advocated by a sector of the Socialist International and the Nicaraguan Social Christian Party. In which of these grays would you place the society the FSLN is building in Nicaragua?

[Ortega] I think we are contributing with a new gray, different from all those you have mentioned. We are trying to build something of our own, without disregarding the historic experience of those systems.

The truth is that we cannot compare the Nicaraguan process with that of the United States or the USSR, which are countries with a very advanced technology and industry. It is a different situation. I would say that the Nicaraguan example falls more within the Latin American context, and, in Latin America, more within the Central American and Caribbean context, with which we have more common characteristics and problems. Therefore, we are seeking our own gray.

[Reporter] Mr President, could you tell me about the international solidarity with Nicaragua?

[Ortega] International solidarity has been tremendous. I would make special mention of the more than special solidarity offered by the U.S. people. In last instance, it is an obligation of Latin Americans to get together to defend ourselves. Just imagine how difficult it can be for a U.S. citizen to oppose the policy of his government against a Latin American country. Thousands of U.S. citizens of different views, members of the Republican and Democratic Parties, have come to our country, as have many church people, Catholics, Methodists, evangelists of different congregations.

Many of them arrive in our country full of prejudice -- because the campaign against our country is strong -- to find that in reality things are different. I have seen U.S. citizens arrive in our country full of prejudice, thinking that everything here is terrible, that there is anarchy and lack of freedom, but when they arrive in our country and face the real situation and see what the counterrevolution and the U.S. Government is doing killing children and women, they feel ashamed and cry out in indignation. When they return to the United States they become real active in the solidarity with Nicaragua. They are not moved by a very logical motive, but by the honesty of man's reasoning. The solidarity of the U.S. people with Nicaragua is very impressive. In Nicaragua there are hundreds of U.S. citizens working alongside the Nicaraguan people, in inhospitable zones, risking their lives at the side of the Nicaraguan people.

[Reporter] [Name indistinct] of the Dominican press. Recently, while you were in New York, a Dominican stood up and asked you several questions. You answered by saying that it was an honest question, at least [words indistinct] and that you invited him to visit Nicaragua. He is in Nicaragua at present. We want to know whether there is any restriction on this Dominican's learning about the problems of the country. He showed a special interest in talking with you even before you left New York.

[Ortega] Yes, we met at the Riverside Church in New York. I met with the people. Questions were asked, and I answered them. At that time the Dominican suddenly asked his question. The question [words indistinct]. His was not really a question, but he believed what he was asking. So I told him it would be best for him to go to Nicaragua. U.S. citizens -- because he is a U.S. citizen -- can enter Nicaragua without any visa requirement, so he can travel to Nicaragua and see the situation for himself. He is in our country. We paid his fare to Nicaragua. He is there now. He has been there for a week now, and he has been able to move about freely. [passage indistinct] Upon my return, I will talk to him and ask him what he thinks about what he has seen in Nicaragua.

In addition, now that I have arrived in Santo Domingo, I have met with much solidarity. Such solidarity includes a letter from a Dominican who has not been able -- for lack of money -- to travel to Nicaragua to fight beside the Nicaraguan people and defend them against the aggression by the U.S. Government. [applause]

[Reporter] [Words indistinct] he sent a dispatch from Managua saying that he could not find out much about the country's situation because the people were reluctant to speak much.

[Ortega] Well, he can speak to whomever he wishes in Nicaragua. [Words indistinct] the U.S. press visit Nicaragua, talk to and interview the people, and later those interviews are broadcast in the United States. I entertain some doubts regarding dispatches all the time. Some of them do not reproduce what one says correctly. So I would rather talk to him upon my return to Nicaragua. I also invite the Dominican people, whoever has doubts about what is going on in Nicaragua, to visit my country. [passage omitted]

Discusses Dominican Visit

[News conference given by President Daniel Ortega at the Information and Press Directorate in Managua; -- live; broadcast in progress]

[Text] [Ortega] ...Reception by outgoing President Jorge Blanco. President Jorge Blanco, President Delvalle of Panama, and I were there. When Mr Shultz started to approach President Jorge Blanco, who was the host, and he saw me, he turned around and slipped away among the people. He even evaded a protocol greeting. He evaded it. This shows the U.S. position of not even meeting face to face with Nicaragua. It seems that this is the U.S. attitude.

[Reporter] Regarding the Dominican people, what did you (?achieve) for Nicaragua?

[Ortega] Well, we felt a great solidarity. In other words, we also felt the Latin American solidarity in the Dominican Republic. But it was especially marked by a great combative spirit. The combativeness of the people and their demonstrations of solidarity with Nicaragua were very expressive. There were some demonstrations organized by the CIA, the contras, the FDN with placards similar to the ones set up when we went to the United States. They were logically a minority. Another phenomenon is taking place, and that is that wherever we visit, the U.S. Embassy immediately pays for the television to show a terrible, slanderous anti-Nicaragua documentary they have made. They made it on the Miskitos 3 years ago as part of their propaganda campaign against Nicaragua. When we went to the United States it was immediately shown on some television stations. Now, when we arrived in Santo Domingo, it was shown. However, the solidarity, the affection, and the combativeness of the Dominican people was much greater. They would shout: Nicaragua is not alone. That was the cry of the Dominican people, of the Dominican youths.

[Reporter] Commander, in the next few days you will be touring several countries and will participate in the Harare summit. What position will Nicaragua take to the Eighth Nonaligned Summit in Harare?

[Ortega] As is known, we are part of the Nonaligned Movement and we defend the Movement's principles. One of the main points that Nicaragua will be making in defense of the movement is respect for the international legal order and law which is being threatened today more than ever by the United States. After the ruling of the International Court of Justice and the U.S. Senate vote, the only thing lacking before we find ourselves confronted by an action which shows the greatest contempt for the international legal order and the International Court of Justice is the signing of the law that establishes the financing and the sending of weapons and military (?advisers) to the mercenaries.

Therefore this is a topic that is of interest to all the member-countries of the Nonaligned Movement because of their own security and survival. Therefore, we are going there to discuss this substantive topic which seeks to defend the international legal order. Of course, there are other topics such as the economic topics and as you know, Nicaragua seeks to be the site of the movement and we are going to [words indistinct]. We have also scheduled visits to some nonaligned countries such as Burkina Faso, Ghana, and The Congo. We will be in Harare for the summit. We will make official visits to India, China and Korea [not further specified]. That is what we have scheduled so far. We will also visit the GDR.

[Ortega] This falls within the efforts that Nicaragua carries out to develop relations with all countries of the world and to strengthen those relations in all fields.

[Ortega] In the Dominican Republic we had the opportunity to speak with representatives of the Contadora Group and also to speak with President Duarte. To date, we have not seen a receptive attitude from some of the Central American countries regarding the Contadora proposal. Even President Duarte in a news conference in Santo Domingo sought to blame Nicaragua for the fact that the Contadora peace act has not been signed. That is a totally false statement because it is well known that in a public communique Nicaragua stated its position while on the other hand Salvadoran Foreign Minister Claramount launched insults against Contadora. We have issued an appeal so that the Central American countries will make efforts to place the interests of the Central American people first and so they will have enough courage to face the U.S. pressures and in this way we can support the Contadora efforts, seek peace, and move away from the path of war which is the one that the United States has been promoting with its policy of pressure on the Central American countries.

[Question] Commander, Cardinal Obando y Bravo has said that on (?4) September the Nicaraguan Episcopal Conference and the Nicaraguan Government would meet. Many of us understand that this would be after the Harare summit. We would like to know what the Nicaraguan Government (?expects) from this upcoming meeting with the Episcopal Conference?

[Ortega] We proposed that we meet immediately in August, but the 4 September date was given. The problem is that they had already been told that I was going to be out of the country for that period. I am willing to meet with the bishops after I return from this tour and the Nonaligned summit meeting. We hope to address topics that provoke conflicts and tensions between the government and the church, and we hope to reach an agreement to regulate the actions of the state and the actions of the church, each one in its own field, each one in its own sphere, to overcome these tensions.

[Question] What is the Dominican Government's position on Contadora and specifically regarding Nicaragua?

[Ortega] Well, we had the opportunity to speak with President Balaguer on several occasions. [Words indistinct] he personally accompanied us to the airport and clarified his position about maintaining the friendly relations with Nicaragua and continuing the policy of previous governments in this regard.

Regarding the situation of intervention, he is against an interventionist policy. He is in favor of peaceful solutions and the Contadora efforts. Therefore, we feel that the new Dominican Government through President Balaguer has expressed a position that falls within the Latin American spirit of seeking a peaceful solution and that in the bilateral field seeks to maintain relations with Nicaragua.

[Reporter] Commander, Costa Rican President Oscar Arias, in remarks cited by the INTER PRESS SERVICE 4 days ago, said he does not believe there will be a Vietnamization in the Central American region because he has no reason to doubt President Reagan's statement that he will not permit a single U.S. soldier in Nicaragua. What is your opinion about this?

[Ortega] President Arias has held very courageous positions in the face of U.S. policy. We cannot fail to acknowledge the position he maintained regarding opposition to the approval of the $100 million. It was a clear attitude, and he confirmed it even when he visited the United States. That annoyed the U.S. Government. If President Reagan has told that to President Arias, then President Arias has every right to trust what President Reagan tells him. But in practice and in reality, the U.S. Government has just approved the sending of U.S. military advisers to Central America so that they will wage war on Nicaragua. It has also approved the CIA actions against Nicaragua.

That means a direct commitment of U.S. personnel in the war against Nicaragua. That is why we speak of the Vietnamization of the conflict because Vietnam did not begin with the presence of millions of U.S. soldiers. Instead, it began with the presence of half-dozen advisers and ended up with half-million soldiers.

[Ortega] I believe that all the opposition parties in the institutional framework, especially those in the constituent legislative assembly, have the right to behave as they please. It is typical to see in the parliaments of Latin America and Europe that parliamentary people who are representatives of the various political forces often withdraw when they disagree with a proposal made by the government's majority in the parliament.

In some European countries parliamentarianism is strong, and this type of situation occurs. So you should not be surprised by some behavior because this is parliamentary play by a civic opposition that has the right to act according to what it finds most suitable.

We, as representatives of the FSLN, have to seek to promote a united effort in the face of war and foreign aggression and to avoid tense domestic situations. We have to make efforts to prepare the constitution, which is the master element that will give a constitutional nature to the Nicaraguan revolutionary process.

[Reporter] Commander, one of the points of the Chicago Proposal deals with LA PRENSA. Has there been any response from the owners of the daily LA PRENSA to that proposal?

[Ortega] The response has been negative because they have dedicated themselves to sending letters abroad and Violeta [Chamorro] has claimed that her life is in danger, that we are going to kill her here in Nicaragua; completely irrational ideas. If there is one safe place for Violeta it is here, in Nicaragua. She is completely safe here. Nothing has happened to her here.

There is another LA PRENSA personage: Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Barrios -- Violeta's son. His arrival in Honduras with his wife to visit the mercenary camps was shown on U.S. television. There were shots of him happily stepping out of a plane in Honduran territory at mercenary camps. So the owners of the daily LA PRENSA are apparently ratifying their ties with the mercenary forces. They are not giving a positive answer to the possibility that has been opened to them, that if they change their attitude we would reconsider the [suspension] measure.

[Ortega] Here there has been a situation as a result of which the institutional church has been affected. The departure of Vega, Carballo, and 12 priests who demonstrated in support of a priest who is involved in armed activities could have affected the church as an institution. But from the church we have seen charges and campaigns against the government that have affected the Nicaraguan Government, revolution, and people.

We have to start from a true situation to search for new proposals that could lead to the solution of current problems. There are situations that are irreversible, that have done damage, that have provoked tension, and damage has been done. What we have to do now is to see what we can do to prevent harming each other and to find a policy of coexistence that should help the Nicaraguan people face a situation as difficult as that of the United States coming down arrogantly and strongly to continue the aggression.

[Reporter] Commander, how would you characterize relations with the Vatican since the arrival of the new apostolic nuncio, Msgr Paolo Giglio?

[Ortega] We have relations with the Vatican. We cannot say, of course, that these are excellent relations, because we would be exaggerating.

We have found in him a great opportunity for finding a solution to problems. A few hours following the meeting I had with him when I received his credentials he informed us that the bishops had agreed to a meeting. So we are already seeing the fruits of the work of the new representative.

[Reporter] One last question, Commander. President Alan Garcia is currently facing a very difficult situation because the IMF has decided not to give Peru any kind of credit. I would like to know your opinion about the IMF decision and the position of the Peruvian president.

[Ortega] The position of the IMF does not contribute to resolving the problem. It aggravates the problem; this problem is being faced by all Latin America. What they are doing with Peru now they will be doing tomorrow with other Latin American countries that have not been affected yet by the IMF.

The evidence is that on one side there is a stubborn position by the IMF, and on the other we find that Latin American unity is now more necessary than ever to united face this economic problem, the problem of the debt, which the North -- the U.S. Government -- does not understand. That government insists on maintaining a policy of force that is destroying the development possibilities of the Latin American countries.

BORGE: NATION STRONG DESPITE U.S. PRESSURES

AU181924 East Berlin BERLINER ZEITUNG in German 16-17 Aug 86 p 4

[Interview with Tomas Borge Martinez, commander of the revolution and minister of interior of the Republic of Nicaragua, by Maritta Tkalec; date and place not given]

[Text] BERLINER ZEITUNG: What changes in the military situation and internal security does the Sandinist government expect, once the counterrevolutionaries have received the $100 million granted by the U.S. Congress?

Borge: According to our evaluation of the future, there will be no fundamental change in the present balance of power between the contras and the defense and security forces of Nicaragua. The counterrevolution so far has not succeeded in achieving its aims: It could neither take possession of a piece of the national territory, nor set up a provisional government there, it could neither take in cities, nor bring terror and sabotage to the area of the Atlantic coast. This failure of the contras is the result of hard work which we performed internally. We do not think there will be fundamental changes here. The danger is of a different nature.

First of all, one must think of the complicity between the U.S. Congress and the policy of President Reagan. Probably some of the representatives think the $100 million is an alternative to a direct U.S. invasion. But the truth is -- independent of what certain people may think and independent of their views -- that the injection of the dollar, as confirmed by the Congress, is a political escalation of the aggression against Nicaragua, which can turn into a military escalation -- up to a direct intervention of the North American government with its troops into Nicaragua.

On the other hand, the increased use of advisers and trainers, planned by the Pentagon for the counterrevolutionary armed forces, can considerably increase the danger of a direct interference of North American troops into this war. This would already be observed in Vietnam.

In addition, the counterrevolution has proved incapable of bringing terrorist activities and sabotage into the economic center of the country. For, so far, not a single bomb has exploded here, not a single act of sabotage or terror has been made here despite numerous attempts of this kind. But if now, the CIA directly takes charge of implementing these crimes in the future, this can mean several operations will be more successful for the counterrevolution than they have been so far.

In this spirit, one can talk of an aggravation of the situation, even if this does not mean the counterrevolutionary war will expand in general in the near future.

BERLINER ZEITUNG: Are there any references concerning the extent of the CIA's work inside the country?

Borge: So far the CIA has basically directed the diverse activities of the counterrevolution. However, the results of the secret service work of our Ministry of Interior, as well as information by the people, reveal that now CIA participation seems to be changing. It is even probable at present that the CIA is attempting to set up illegal centers in various cities and in the countryside. So far, the CIA officers have worked in their legal center, in the U.S. Embassy in Managua. Thus, the CIA will undoubtedly interfere even more in the counterrevolutionary activities.

We also anticipate the possibility of terrorist attacks against the people along the Pacific coast and prepare ourselves to meet such operations. Only today I had a long meeting with security people and counterintelligence specialists from all over the country to reorient the work as it relates to the nature and extent of the confrontation. In accordance with the expected CIA activities -- like espionage, attempts to destabilize the country, and preparation of acts of terror and sabotage -- we will act.

BERLINER ZEITUNG: The defense efforts Nicaragua is forced to maintain have obviously aggravated the economic problems of the country. How do the difficulties affect the mood of the people? Is the war of attrition achieving its goal?

Borge: Our economic crisis has, of course, various origins: the unequal conditions of the world economic order, the burden of foreign debts, the international economic crisis, the blockade of the United States around our country, the blocks constructed by the United States that keep us from getting credit, and above all the means used for the defense. The war is a true monster and devours about half of the means which the country has available.

In addition to all that, there are the mistakes we have made -- disorder in the administration that has not been mastered yet, and lack of necessary organization. There are problems in distributing products, in setting prices, and also in meeting demands. In fact, uneasiness and dissatisfaction are increasing among parts of the population. Promoting dissatisfaction is part of the North American policy.

But what can we see? Although the people are dissatisfied with difficulties in transportation, the housing shortage, insufficient medical care, although they are angry because essential consumer goods have become more expensive, dissatisfied with the speculation, with the shortage of many products -- despite all these problems the people continue to be loyal to the revolution.

Also, the members of the Sandinist Front often cannot buy rice in the market and are angry, or they have a housing problem. But in no way has this weakened the support and sympathy for our revolutionary project as a whole. This phenomenon can be explained by the nature of a true people's revolution, by the great trust and belief of the people in their future.

It is important to understand this. He who wants to understand Nicaragua must comprehend both aspects of this situation: the support for the revolution and the dissatisfaction with the revolution. This seems to be contradictory, but it is not.

BERLINER ZEITUNG: Will that also be the case if measures of a wartime economy, which have been discussed for some time, are introduced?

Borge: I think despite the numerous economic problems I listed, several measures can be taken in the spirit of a more just distribution of the few things we have. At present, a number of saving measures are being studied, for instance, concerning the state expenditures.

Although there are few available products, the product supply to fighters in the combat zones is guaranteed. Also, these products will be available for the workers in the factories, their families, and for the peasants -- for all who produce.

TARIFF AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH VENEZUELA

PA190336 Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 18 Aug 86 p 6

[Text] An important tariff agreement has been signed at the Foreign Ministry between Venezuelan Ambassador Faustino Pulgar Gruber and Orlando Solorzano, Nicaraguan deputy minister of foreign trade.

This agreement opens new possibilities for trade between the two countries.

This agreement also seeks to ratify the aspirations for complete Central American economic integration, which is partial at the moment.

This is a nontraditional partial agreement that grants tariff reductions of 60 to 100 percent on imports and exports.

The agreement contains a list of products such as honey, ipecacuanha, and other Nicaraguan products that will be exported to Venezuela as part of a plan to reduce the deficit in the balance of trade. Venezuela will export machinery and some raw materials to Nicaragua.

This new agreement involves a $15-million line of credit which is being increased by $5 million more in the iron and steel industry.

Venezuela has signed similar agreements with other Central American countries to expedite the economic integration of the isthmus.

PCD WITHDRAWS FROM CONSTITUTIONAL DEBATES

[Excerpts] Managua, 17 Aug (AFP) -- The Democratic Conservative Party (PCD), the country's second most important party, decided today to withdraw from a parliamentary commission that is drafting the country's Constitution after denouncing the FSLN's "totalitarian tendencies." The decision was made on Sunday by a full PDC delegates' meeting, which also decided to suspend the bilateral meetings it was holding with the government party.

This means that the two majority opposition parties in the constitution-drafting commission, the PDC (14 deputies) and the Independent Liberal Party (PLI), which withdrew from that commission 1 week ago, will not participate in the constitutional debates. Clemente Guido, leader of the legislature's Conservative bloc and a former presidential candidate, told AFP that a party assembly will probably be convoked next month to decide on the PDC's definitive withdrawal from the constitutional discussions. [passage omitted]

Guido said that thus far the Sandinists have been rejecting a 17-point proposal "to guarantee that the constitution will be democratic." He noted that the Sandinists are trying to consecrate in the Constitution "the fusion of army-party and party-state" and that "they refuse to include the invocation to God in the constitution."

"We cannot agree to that, nor do we favor presidential reelection, he explained. "We are trying to ensure that the Constitution establishes the basis for dismantling the totalitarian system that the FSLN has been consolidating," the Conservative leader said in closing.

NICARAGUA MAINTAINS FIRM STAND ON CONTRAS, AID

Ortega on U.S. Aid to Contras

[Text] Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega has reiterated his country's willingness to hold a dialogue with the U.S. Government to solve the Central American conflict. In a news conference in Santo Domingo where he attended the inauguration of Dominican President Joaquin Balaguer, Ortega said the Nicaraguan Government will not discuss internal issues with the United States because each country has the right to establish the political system it deems advisable.

The Nicaraguan president said that the U.S. Congress' approval of $100 million for the Nicaraguan counterrevolutionary bands will lead to the Vietnamization of the Central American conflict. Ortega stressed that Nicaragua will not hold a dialogue with the mercenaries because the Reagan government finances and directs the forces based in Honduras and Costa Rica. Ortega also reiterated Nicaragua's willingness to sign the Contadora Group's peace act.

Labor Groups Reject U.S. Aid

[Text] Nicaraguan labor organizations and foreign volunteers working in Nicaragua continue voicing their rejection of the disbursement of $100 million approved by the U.S. Senate for the Nicaraguan counterrevolutionary bands. The Sandinist Central Organization of Workers charged that the aid for the mercenary groups set the stage for a direct U.S. intervention in Nicaragua. It called on holding a national meeting to rally fundamental forces of the revolution.

At a meeting in Managua, 700 foreign volunteers working in Managua reaffirmed their support for the people of that Central American nation and expressed their regret over having to interrupt their work in the war zones. The Nicaraguan Government decided to transfer them to safer areas to protect them from the mercenary attacks.

Meanwhile, a survey conducted by the newspaper BARRICADA revealed that generally the people do not feel afraid of the approval of aid to the counterrevolutionaries but, rather, that they must be prepared to repeal a possible attack.

GRANMA VIEWS CONTRA ACTIVITIES IN HONDURAS

["What the Press Has To Say" feature, read by Maruja Garcia and Norberto Hernandez]

[Text] [Garcia] "Honduras: Contra Terrorism and Peasant Evictions." Under this headline, GRANMA refers to the terrorist activities of the Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries in Honduras.

[Hernandez] Last week, GRANMA states, a violent explosion destroyed the automobile of journalist Rodrigo Wong Arevalo, director of Radio America, and caused heavy damage to the front of the journalist's house in La Primavera, a neighborhood in southern Tegucigalpa.

[Garcia] Shortly after the terrorist action, the National Confederation of Rural Workers charged that the Nicaraguan mercenaries were responsible for the attack. Wong and Radio America have risen up as defenders of the national interests and they have been prominent in rejecting the presence of President Reagan's so-called freedom fighters.

[Hernandez] The approaching delivery of the $100 million and the repeated statements on aid by Reagan have encouraged the Somozists and their supporters to carry out attacks. The Wong case demonstrates this. In addition, reports from Honduras discuss the plight of peasants in El Paraiso Department.

[Garcia] Quoting an AFP report, the Cuban newspaper GRANMA adds: Approximately 10,000 Nicaraguan contras operate in the Honduran region of El Paraiso, from where peasants are constantly displaced. These displaced peasants, AFP reports, have been forced to abandon their land due to the lack of security and the war situation imposed by the repudiated presence of the counterrevolutionaries.

[Hernandez] The territory occupied by these mercenaries includes the communities of Capire, (Villa Nueva de Yamales), (Yamales) and Arenales, 12 to 25 km from the Nicaraguan border. The displaced peasants went to Tegucigalpa newspapers to demand the government provide them with protection. We are desperate because our lands are being occupied by an army that is increasingly stronger while we are increasingly unprotected, the peasants said.

[Garcia] The GRANMA commentary adds that the displaced peasants are making their situation known. Along with seeking to silence journalist Rodrigo Wong and attacking a neighboring country with which Honduras has diplomatic relations, the counterrevolutionaries are turning into a serious threat to the peace and sovereignty of Honduras.

CONTRAST NOTED BETWEEN U.S., CONTADORA ACTIONS

[Interview with correspondent Frank Gonzalez in Bogota by reporter Fernando Alcorza in Havana; date not given — recorded]

[Text] [Gonzalez] The 1st week of Virgilio Barco Vargas' Liberal government has resolved around two fundamental aspects. As is well-known, the first aspect concerns efforts to seek procedures to expedite achieving a peaceful solution to the Central American conflict. This took place to take advantage of the presence in Bogota of representatives from the Contadora and Support Groups. Surprisingly, as his first action in office, President Virgilio Barco Vargas summoned a working meeting with the representatives of the two groups. There was much speculation on the eve of the inauguration seeking a negotiated solution to the Central American conflict through another forum such as the OAS. There was also speculation that he would advocate finding solutions outside the Contadora and Support Groups.

[Alcorza] How is the contrast between this meeting which the Contadora Group held and the U.S. Senate approval of $100 million in aid to the Nicaraguan contras seen in Bogota?

[Gonzalez] Well, in fact I cannot imagine two more antagonistic things. The contrast is very great, not only in terms of the U.S. Senate approval of the $100 million in aid, but also, when representatives of the Contadora and Support Groups were meeting here to promote the search for a political solution in Central America, U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz was holding a separate meeting with the Central American presidents, specifically the Salvadoran, Costa Rican, and Honduran presidents, as part of an ongoing campaign against Nicaragua. Among other things, he said that the only solution to the Central American problem was to oust the Sandinist government.

The U.S. Senate approval of the $100 million in aid to the contras is viewed here as part of the U.S. aggressive policies toward the Central American nations. Likewise, a great contrast is apparent between the Central American nations and the peace efforts, on the one hand, and the U.S. Government's aggressive policies on the other.

UN: ORAMAS FAVORS PUERTO RICO'S INDEPENDENCE

PRESIDENT BALAGUER MEETS L.A. COUNTERPARTS

[Text] Santo Domingo, 17 Aug (AFP) -- President Joaquin Balaguer, who was sworn in as president of the Dominican Republic for the fifth time yesterday, carried out a busy work agenda marked by meetings with his Latin American counterparts, appointments within his administration, and consultations with his ministers concerning measures he will begin to enforce tomorrow.

Balaguer's 1st day of activities ended with a large reception for foreign delegations, which several thousand people attended at the Government Palace.

He arrived at his office early this morning and immediately held meetings with some of the 16 Cabinet members who were appointed yesterday. He later met with Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte, with whom he exchanged awards; Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega; and Argentine Vice President Victor Martinez; in addition to others who led the foreign delegations that attended his inauguration. Balaguer issued his first foreign policy statement after decorating Duarte and noted that he intends to maintain and strengthen cordial relations with the countries that have diplomatic links with the Dominican Republic. He stated his hope that the Contadora Group (Panama, Mexico, Colombia, and Venezuela) may soon conclude its mediation for the achievement of peace in Central America and advocated the achievement of full democracy in the five Central American countries.

The most important appointments made by the executive branch today include those of the three Armed Forces Chiefs of Staff. In the Army, he appointed General Juan Dario Delgado Gonzalez; and in the Navy he appointed rear Admiral Juan de Jesus Cabrera.

The top-level military echelons are led by Armed Forces (Defense) Minister Rear Admiral Victor Manuel Barjan Mufdi, who was appointed yesterday in the first presidential decree.

General Rafael Socorro Payamps was appointed chief of the National Police; he was personally sworn in by Balaguer in a ceremony that was held at the general police headquarters, and assured that no member of the police corps would be retired.

Balaguer later accompanied Daniel Ortega to Santo Domingo's international airport. He left on a special flight for Managua.

The new president told the media he had decided to creat a commission which would investigate the handling of the state budget; the commission would be comprised of independent persons and would be presided over by Nicolas Lopez Rodriguez, archbishop of Santo Domingo, so that corruption does not remain unpunished.

However, the archbishop declined the position because he considers this -- in a certain way -- a political commission, Balaguer said.

He said he has decided to create the commission anyway; it will be presided over by someone who is widely respected.

BALAGUER EXPRESSES CONFIDENCE IN CONTADORA

PA181736 Panama City LA ESTRELLA DE PANAMA in Spanish 18 Aug 86 pp A-1, A-16

[By Special Correspondent Cesar E. Gomez Marin]

[Text] New Dominican President Joaquin Balaguer last night expressed his confidence in the Contadora Group as it is the best path to peace in Central America and a firm manifestation of a Latin American solution of the conflict.

He reaffirmed his government's support of collective democratic solutions to settle regional conflicts which may imperil peace and Latin American coexistence and its traditional norms of respect for liberty, participative democracy, and human rights. Balaguer, who took office for the fifth time, made those remarks on Saturday, 16 August, at the Diplomatic Hall of the Las Americas Airport, during the brief period in which he accompanied Panamanian President Eric Arturo Delvalle and his retinue who were returning to Panama after attending the inauguration ceremonies.

Answering questions by Panamanian newsmen, Balaguer attributed his presidential victory over the favorite and ruling Dominican Revolutionary Party [PRD] to mistakes and bad administration which led the country to one of its most serious social, economic, and political crises.

Balaguer reaffirmed his trust in giving opportunities to young people to honestly and responsibly participate in government. However, he declined to discuss considerations of a political nature when asked about the possibilities of a 1990 alliance with PRD leader Jacobo Majluta, his closest rival during the past elections. "There is no final word; no one can assure something in politics, however, since Majluta's group remains with the PRD, I do not think that a future alliance can take place," the Dominican leader said. Balaguer also said there are many promising young figures to succeed in the leadership of the Reformist Social Christian Party. Regarding the confirmation of posts for several officials, or even the promotion of some of them, Balaguer said that these decisions come as the result of his statement that he would keep some valuable figures in his government, because of his government's participatory and harmonious nature.

Regarding his decision to fight and eliminate bureaucracy and corruption and to turn over those persons who have unlawfully enriched themselves in public posts over to the courts, Balaguer reiterated that decision. He said the goal is not only to punish crimes but also to recover all the huge losses to use the money to benefit the Dominican people.

Regarding the similarities between himself and former Panamanian President Arnulfo Arias, who has been president of Panama three times, the Dominican leader said that coincidentally the two of them received the support from their country's poorest and neediest sectors, from the popular classes, which constitute the majority. Balaguer hinted that the people turn to those leaders because of the inability of the parties and their new political leaders to provide solutions to the major national problems.

The Dominican president was accompanied by Donald Reid Cabral, minister of foreign relations, a member of the army, Marisol de Motta, Panamanian consul to the Dominican Republic, and others. They briefly talked to Eric Arturo Delvalle, president of Panama, Jorge Abadia Arais, minister of foreign relations, Carlos Brandariz, Panamanian ambassador to the Dominican Republic, and other figures, before the Panamanian delegation departed the Las Americas Airport.

FAO MEETING ENDS; FINAL REPORT ISSUED

[Text] Bridgetown, Barbados, Aug 15, CANA -- The regional Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO) conference which ended here this week has condemned international protectionist policies and the subsidies war saying they had hit developing countries hard.

The placing of large agricultural surpluses through dumping had significantly depressed the prices of staple commodities on international markets, and severely limited the capacity of countries in the region to relaunch their economies ordeal with the burden of external debt, the final report of the meeting said.

The delegates also denounced what they said was a campaign conducted by some developed countries against multilateralism and the threat to the stability and very existence of the various agencies in the United Nations system.

Delegations said they understood the efforts made by the FAO, a UN agency, to channel exceptional resources to Africa, but pointed out that this had affected the level of FAO assistance to Latin America and the Caribbean.

They expressed the hope that the improvement in Africa's food situation would lead to renewed attention and additional resources for Latin America and the Caribbean.

The region has been allocated U.S. 105 million dollars for the 1986-1988 biennum.

The report said the FAO director-general, Edouard Saouma, was requested to find the resources needed to conduct a special study on the long-term development of Latin America and the Caribbean.

The special nature of the problems of Latin America and the Caribbean was stressed during the conference, as well as the need to increase trade between groups of countries.

Delegates also emphasised the need to reinforce intra-regional technical cooperation and devise ways for the most advanced Latin American countries to offer training fellowships for Caribbean technicians in Latin American technical institutions.

Emphasis was placed on the importance of audio-visual techniques for training and technology transfer for farmers.

The consensus was that the FAO had the technical and working capacity to help the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean to develop these communications media and requested FAO support for this purpose, the conference report stated.

Warns West About Apartheid

[By Paget de Freitas]

[Excerpt] Kingston, Jamaica, Aug 18, CANA -- South African Bishop Desmond Tutu today repeated his counsel to Western leaders that by being unwilling to impose economic sanctions against Pretoria's white minority government they ran the risk of developing anti-Western attitudes in post-apartheid South Africa.

We have warned the West that they are laying down the condition for the emergence of a disposition that is hostile to the West and some of the things that the West holds dear, the black Anglican bishop of Johannesburg told reporters.

He said Western leaders often spoke of the strategic importance of South Africa and stressed that the country will be no less strategic after the system of apartheid ends.

Bishop Tutu added that he was not anti-West but rather was not impressed with some of its leadership.

I have considerable faith in the decent people of the West, he remarked.

Tutu added: I love the West, but certain persons I do not respect. [passage omitted]

SANGUINETTI SCORES STANDS ON MILITARY REGIMES

[Text] Montevideo, 17 Aug (AFP) -- Uruguayan President Julio Maria Sanguinetti today stated opinions on how to deal with the human rights violators of the previous military regime are becoming more extreme, and added the country cannot live obsessed by events of 10 years ago.

The president added that the overassessment of the subject, in which a group of excited leftists and a small group of nostalgic military men are beginning an argument, is increasingly creating a climate of confrontation.

Sanguinetti stated that in safeguarding human rights, what is important is that democracy is strengthened. He added that to paralyze the political system because of arguments over a period of the past is, to my opinion, a mistake. He said the subject is sliding toward extremes and added the subject has not been handled in a positive manner.

Regarding a possible political solution to the issue over the violation of human rights committed by the military regime between 1973 and 1984, President Sanguinetti stated there is nothing planned nor is there any specific formula.

Negotiations conducted by some parties in the past have been frustrated because, while the government has considered the possibility of granting amnesty to the accused, or of finding another solution, the opposition claims they must be tried by civilian courts.

SIDE HEAD DENIES FOREIGN GUERRILLA PRESENCE

[Text] Buenos Aires, 19 Aug (NA) -- Facundo Suarez, head of the Secretariat for State Intelligence [SIDE], stated today that the SIDE "has not recorded the entrance" of presumed foreign guerrillas in Argentina. He also denied the existence of a subversive resurgence in the country and ratified the Argentine Government's neutrality regarding the Chilean internal political situation.

Suarez told Radio Belgrano that "to start a new witch hunt is a mistake" and that "what we have to do is to defend the institutional order from those elements that conspire against it." Suarez thus denied a news report which stated that on 14 August the government reportedly studied "with concern" the entrance of alleged foreign terrorists, during a meeting among Foreign Minister Dante Caputo, Defense Minister Horacio Jaunarena, and Facundo Suarez himself.

Suarez minimized the importance of that meeting, saying that "these meetings are held regularly to provide an opportunity for the ministers to be informed about the type of intelligence SIDE is carrying out."

In this respect, he stressed that "the era when the SIDE was an arm of the police of an ideological nature has passed. At the present time we are carrying out a really true intelligence task." He also stated that the SIDE "will never again become an arm of the police; and it will limit itself to its appropriate task: information."

After pointing out that the SIDE "has not noted the entry" into Argentina of alleged foreign terrorists, Suarez ratified statements by Interior Minister Antonio Troccoli that there "has been no type of subversive resurgence in the country."

He then stated that Chile "is experiencing a stage of great violence that entails some inconvenience for Argentina," but at the same time he ratified the government's "neutrality regarding events that could upset other countries."

He also maintained that the SIDE "has not organized any type of action to violate the freedom of the citizens." He stressed that "there is absolute freedom of expression, and political parties act without restrictions."

NAVY OUTLINES MODIFICATIONS TO DEFENSE LAW

PY191525 Buenos Aires NOTICIAS ARGENTINAS in Spanish 2125 GMT 14 Aug 86

[Text] Buenos Aires, 14 Aug (NA) -- The Navy today proposed a series of modifications to the National Defense Law, which has already been approved by the Chamber of Deputies. The highlight of the modifications refers to the participation of the Armed Forces "when any type of aggression or threat has to be faced," not only "when the aggression is of a foreign nature," as specified in the original document. The Navy also proposes the elimination of the principle of military intelligence organizations "in no way" becoming involved in "the country's internal political affairs."

The Navy has also stated that it supports the replacement of the chief of staff of each force and the naming of a commander in his place. It has also proposed the post of chief of the Joint Staff be rotated among the Army, Navy, and Air Force.

These ideas are contained in an extensive 26-page document that Navy Chief of Staff Admiral Ramon Arosa this afternoon submitted to Antonio Berhongaray (UCR [Radical Civic Union] for La Pampa Province), who is president of the Senate Defense Committee. The document recommends modifications to 19 of the 37 articles of the National Defense Law.

The Navy's document also proposes the creation, jointly with the Defense Cabinet and the Military Committee, [passage indistinct] drafted by the executive branch of the National Intelligence Center, and the elimination of a paragraph that specifically establishes that the members of the Armed Forces "will be subject to a rule of internal discipline and they will adjust their procedures to national and international laws that apply to armed conflicts."

The document states that it is also necessary to exclude a part of the draft's first article that establishes that none of the National Defense Law regulations "will be interpreted to the detriment of the constitution or of the representative, republican, and federal system of government.

"This wording," the document stresses, "is redundant, because there can be no law that is contrary to the spirit and/or letter of the constitution."

Regarding its request to modify the phrase "aggressions of a foreign nature" for the phrase "every type of aggression or threat," the Navy's document states that "it must be taken into account that aggression cannot be considered as only foreign and military, there is also the aggression that affects the nation's interests, whether they are diplomatic, economic, or ideological."

In the 7th article the Navy wants to change the passage "the National Defense Cabinet will be presided over by the president of the nation" for the passage " the meetings of the National Defense Cabinet will be presided over by the president of the nation," based on the argument that the chief of state "presides over the cabinets, but is not a member of them."

On requesting modifications to the 9th article, the document states that the military committee will assist the president in conducting war in all its phases, because "modern wars are fought without a prior declaration and, therefore, they do not have a well-defined starting point" and, therefore, "the president would be deprived of advice even after the hostilities have started."

On changing the current title of chief of staff to commander, it is noted that the suggested title "respects and differentiates constitutional rights and at the same time gives each force a title that is in accordance with its appropriate functions."

Regarding the National Intelligence Center, the document maintains that the "military intelligence doctrine, where the intelligence system is instituted, establishes rules and procedures for the collection, evaluation, and dissemination of military intelligence, and it also establishes each level's guidelines in executing the effort and the functional relations that they maintain between themselves and each level of the hierarchy of the political leadership."

The document states that if the "executive branch orders that" the post of chief of the Joint Staff be rotated among the three Armed Forces," it will prevent "frictions and thus make the results of the organizations' orientation much more balanced."

Article 15 stresses that "the dissuasive use of the Armed Forces is a strategic model to be used only when the adversary has been clearly defined," but with the provision that "the effective use is to be a last resort, and that this attitude can change substantially according to the mission assigned by the president."

In conclusion, the document indicates that it believes that the law must contain the expression "military zone," and define the responsibilities that will be exercised in such areas.

STREET RIOTS IN ORURO; 42 ARRESTED, 7 INJURED

[Text] La Paz, 19 Aug (AFP) -- It was reported here today that in the past few hours 42 people were arrested and 7 injured during clashes between demonstrators and the police in the city of Oruro. A general, indefinite strike over regional demands has been underway there since 14 August.

Miner Federation leader Simon Reyes, a member of the Chamber of Deputies, has said thousands of miners are coming from their districts to the capital cities of Oruro and Potosi Departments, where there has been intense social mobilization. He added that miner leaders are meeting to coordinate their actions with the general strike called by Bolivian Labor Confederation (COB) for 21 and 22 August.

The most serious incidents ocurred in Oruro, where thousands of workers, students, teachers, and peasants detonated sticks of dynamite as they clashed with police, who tear-gassed the demonstrators.

The Oruro civic committee and union organizations demand the reopening of the state-owned mining and metallurgical companies, the provision of utilities, and an authorization to operate two television stations. The Oruro and Potosi Departments and the mining sector decreed a general strike, demanding the government solve the crisis in the mining sector. They also demand a solution in connection with the plan to close 11 companies and dismiss 13,000 miners. In view of this, Deputy Interior Minister Guico Meruvia went to Oruro to try to meet civic and union leaders in search of a solution to the crisis.

Interior Minister Fernando Barthelemy a few hours ago said the government might impose the state of siege in case of a widespread mobilization fueled by opposition labor sectors, which might be trying to create an atmosphere of subversion to topple the government.

For his part, defense Minister Fernando Valle has said if the police forces are overwhelmed by the demonstrators, the Armed Forces will take the necessary action to preserve order.

U.S. TO SUPPLY SERVICES TO JOINT COMMISSION

PY191602 La Paz La Red Panamericana in Spanish 1130 GMT 19 Aug 86

[Text] Foreign Minister Guillermo Bedregal Gutierrez has stated that Bolivia and the United States have decided to create a commission to fight drug trafficking. After his last meeting with President Victor Paz Estenssoro, the decision was made to continuously rotate U.S. troops and equipment. According to the foreign minister, the two governments will create a joint commission.

The U.S. Government will supply logistical and technical support through a program aimed at rotating the special U.S. forces and equipment.

Reporting on the outcome of his recent trip to Washington, the foreign minister stated that it was decided that the U.S. troops will proceed with a continuous rotation program. The training of men and the supply of equipment to the special Bolivian forces by U.S. Army experts is also planned.

The foreign minister failed to mention how long the U.S. troops will stay in Bolivia. On this point, there are no official reports, Bedregal Gutierrez said. We only have the comments made by Ambassador Fernando Illanes, who reportedly stated that U.S. troops will stay, quote, 60 days, unquote, in Bolivia.

Drug Raid Near Trinidad

[Text] Information Ministry Director Jaime Vazquez has reported in Communique No 9 that U.S. troops and Umopar [Mobile Units for Rural Areas] forces have recently raided an important airstrip used for drug trafficking supplies and operations.

[Begin Vazquez recording] A clandestine airstrip, which apparently was used as a supply base for international drug trafficking operations, has been located by Umopar forces with the logistical support of the U.S. mission some 250 km northwest of Trinidad.

The raid started early in the morning when several patrols were deployed to locate the base, and then they continued through the jungle until they reached the airstrip. The patrols found more than 60 drums of gasoline. [end recording]

It has also been reported that the police have seized large quantities of chemicals -- mainly ether -- which were intended for use by laboratories in Beni Department. From the site inspection, it is believed the airstrip was being used to conduct transactions and also to ship out chemicals.

[Begin Vazquez recording] Inhabitants of San Antonio, a small town nearly 25 km from the airstrip, have said the airstrip was constantly being used by all kinds of aircraft.

Operations continued today in this area, although no laboratories were found. The operations will continue. [end recording]

This was the official report issued by the Information Ministry on actions conducted over the past few hours against cocaine traffickers in Bolivian territory. The Information Ministry will issue its regular communiques when the actions against drug trafficking are resumed.

BEDREGAL COMMENTS ON RECENT TRIP TO U.S.

[Excerpts] In the opinion of the Bolivian foreign minister, the negotiations with the U.S. Government were successful. After returning, Foreign Minister Guillermo Bedregal Gutierrez told Panamericana the following:

[Begin Bedregal recording] The first stage of the mission that took us to the United States was successful. Something apparently unusual occurred; the venue for the meeting with the U.S. President was changed. It was held in his office -- the Oval office -- in the presence of the most important officials of his administration: Secretary of State Shultz, Secretary of Defense Weinberger, Secretary of Treasury Baker -- of the famous Baker Plan, -- Attorney General Edwin Meese III, and the under secretary for cooperation. This meeting lasted more than the usual 10 minutes. [passage omitted] [end recording]

Bedregal also explained that the visit cannot be considered a request for help, but a coordination of efforts within a global program. He continued:

[Begin Bedregal recording] We did not ask them to help us. Help is a word that particularly (?disgusts) me. We explained the necessity for [word indistinct] drug trafficking, (?according to the law,) as a joint task of the Bolivian and U.S. Governments, and of the governments that are involved in this [words indistinct] crime. As far as volume is concerned, the greatest harm drug trafficking causes is to the moral structure of a society, particularly in the United States and other industrialized countries. These are the countries more virulently affected by the consequences of this malignant trade. [end recording]

Referring to the statement of U.S. President Ronald Reagan, Bedregal said:

[Begin Bedregal recording] During our meeting, President Reagan perfectly understood our request. We were not here to hold a discussion. We took a program of figures, an immediate disbursement, that would ethically resemble an invoice for actions conducted by the country to fight a crime as evil as that. If this was understood on those terms, obviously our task was very important. Right after the meeting with President Reagan, in an almost marathonic relay of work, we held individual meetings with each one of the secretaries, with the worldwide chief of the Agency for International Development, at the Department of State with Mr Shultz, separately with Mr Weinberger, [words indistinct] and with the secretary of the treasury, very positive meetings. [end recording]

Later, when asked about the negotiations for the $100-million loan to continue with the fight against drug trafficking, Minister Bedregal said:

[Begin Bedregal recording] It is a 3-year program that would cost basically some $400 or $360 million. Right now, to start implementing this program, we would need a bridge loan of $100 million, that is obviously [words indistinct] and have to be well figured out. The difficulty, however, is that we cannot simply say: Give me a $100-million check to continue this fight.

Such a proposal would be totally routine and would not reflect the reality of an action as complex as the one we have just started. Besides, this matter is also related to the balance of payments to our current economic policy, and to the program of economic reactivation we will have to conduct as soon as the consultative group of the World Bank meets. [words indistinct] This reactivation program will be launched in the month of October, under circumstances making this reactivation not merely a matter of empty words, but something real and concrete, based on the priorities of our development [words indistinct].

Besides, we had to hold talks with the IMF. Mr de Larosiere was on vacation, so we talked to his deputy. We also talked with IDB officials in order to plan multiple actions in an attempt to solve the dramatic and critical situation we are experiencing. [passage omitted] [end recording]

According to Minister Bedregal, we have succeeded in obtaining international confidence in the operations being carried out in Bolivia. [passage omitted]

In conclusion, Bedregal said -- referring to the operations against drug trafficking -- We cannot talk about military support. We are receiving police support from experts who are making their contribution to Bolivia. In answer to several questions by Panamericana on the talks with Chile, Minister Bedregal commented on some reports that have led to speculation.

[Begin Bedregal recording] I have explained that it has been a rapprochement, a rather personal rapprochement of the spiritual kind, to start an effectively positive dialogue. To overcome a stage [words indistinct] is what we must do now. Nevertheless, the reporters' guesswork has absolutely no official basis with regard to the talks we held for more than 9 hours with Chilean Foreign Minister Jaime del Valle and his friend, the Peruvian foreign minister. GOVERNMENT DECREES 20-PERCENT IMPORT TAX

[Text] La Paz, 15 Aug (EFE) -- The Bolivian government today enforced a new customs tariff with a fixed tax of 20 percent on all imports, both by private business and the public sector. The government said: "The critical economic situation of the country demands that emergency measures be taken."

The government decree enforcing the new tariff simplifies the customs rules for imports and consolidates all concepts in a single tax, officials assert. The 20-percent tax will be applied to all imports on the value of the goods placed at the border. There are exemptions for imports made by diplomatic missions or those covered by the investment law.

The private sector and the industries have expressed their concern over the single 20-percent tax, since it does not differentiate between the imports of raw materials, machinery and tools for foodstuff production, and the luxury imports, such as cars. The Bolivian agroindustry and the agricultural sector have said that the 20-percent tax will affect the price of foodstuffs of which 40 percent are imported. According to estimates by the businessmen, the single import tax may cause an increase in foodstuff prices of 8 to 12 percent.

FRG REPRESENTATIVE DISCUSSES INCREASED SUPPORT

PY200111 La Paz EL DIARIO in Spanish 15 Aug 86 p 5

[Text] Dr Volkmar Kohler, a representative of the FRG Government now visiting Bolivia, has expressed his country's intention to cooperate with Bolivia "beyond bilateral support."

Kohler is an official of the Federal Ministry of Economic Cooperation. During his stay in La Paz, he will meet government authorities, congressmen, and departmental authorities. After his visit to Bolivia, he will travel to Brazil, and then to Denmark.

According to Kohler's statements, he came to Bolivia to learn about the national situation, particularly in the economic field; Kohler said that during the meetings he held with President Victor Paz, Vice President Julio Garret, and other authorities, the favorable atmosphere allowed him to learn some aspects inherent in the Bolivian economy, and he will transmit the Bolivian necessities to his government.

Kohler explained the help the FRG is ready to offer cannot be expressed in figures, but that his country belongs to multilateral organizations, such as the IDB, the World Bank, the IMF, and others, in which it has a decisive role in the decisionmaking. In order to make any decision, these organizations must consult the FRG or get its approval. Therefore, if the FRG knows the Bolivian problems, it can help through its representatives in those organizations, with decisions that benefit Bolivia.

When asked about the total amount of the Bolivian debt to the DRG, the FRG ambassador to Bolivia who was also present on that occasion said it amounts to DM24 million. This debt, according to agreements made with the Paris Club for bilateral debts, will be paid just like the debts to other creditor countries.

Kohler also said no further loans have been negotiated with the Bolivian authorities. He visited the projects being financed by the FRG, and said the rural projects being conducted with the participation of the beneficiaries are a priority because they do not require the participation of big companies.

PINOCHET ANSWERS CRITICS, DENIES SEEKING POWER

[Excerpts] Speaking in Cauquenes, President Augusto Pinochet said the huge extremist arsenal discovered in the northern region of Chile is worth $5 million. President Pinochet said we have discovered a plot planned by opposition members living both inside and outside the country. The following is a relay from Cauquenes:

[Begin relay] President Pinochet today said in Cauquenes that the politicians who are always distorting information that is not to their advantage could never deny they have lost $5 million with the finding of the subversive arsenal in the northern region.

The president also said that in view of the discovery's seriousness, the government will soon enforce decisive measures, but he did not specify these measures. [passage omitted] President Pinochet closed his address by issuing a new appeal to non-Marxist sectors to eradicate violence.

Immediately after this ceremony, members of the local community held a luncheon in his honor at the end of which Pinochet delivered another speech. This time, Pinochet denounced the attacks to which the government has been subjected by Marxism since 1973 and particularly over the last few months through a plot planned by members of the opposition who live in Chile and abroad. He also denounced the fact that in their struggle Marxist opposition members have acted in various groups such as the National Coordinating Union Board; the committees for the rights of the people; the committees for the rights of youths; and the National Civic Assembly, among others. The president said: There are a thousand ways to present the same objective, which is to overthrow the government.

Pinochet also referred to the existence of arsenals which were part of the opposition's plan to overthrow the government. He added that the number of arms found were greater than those of the Chilean Army [sentence as heard].

He stated he will not yield 1 single inch to the communists and answered his detractors who charge he is power hungry by saying:

[Begin Pinochet recording] I do not want to expand on this because I do not want to create an atmosphere of fear among the people. But I want to make it perfectly clear: (?They say I run like a hare), but I will not yield 1 single inch to the communists. [long applause, shouts of "Pinochet, Pinochet"]

Many charge that I am power hungry, but I am here not out of ambition. I am here because I am convinced that I am struggling for a great cause: my fatherland.

They cannot take anything from me, nothing at all. I am an austere man. (?This is my personal rule.) As a man, I am not one who seeks luxury or anything not in keeping with an austere life. I love my family, and I love my wife. Consequently, the only thing they can charge now is that I am alone. But when I look around to see if I am indeed alone and I see that I am surrounded by people, I feel an urge to embrace all those around me. [long applause]

I end this message by thanking you for your affection and also by saying that the discovery [of the arsenal] in the northern region may be denied, and a thousand things may be said about it, because politicians are always distorting things to their advantage, but they will never be able to deny they lost $5 million worth of arms. [end recording] [passage omitted] [end relay]

PINOCHET: ARMED FORCES WILLING TO SHED BLOOD

[Text] Chillan, 19 Aug (AFP) -- President General Augusto Pinochet today said the Armed Forces and Police are determined to shed the last drop of blood to keep the regime for the good of all Chileans. He added: I know the psychological campaign continues. A colonel in charge of the protocol in the Santiago garrison has been kidnapped, but we have the courage to confront them if necessary.

Mario Haberle, a high-ranking officer of the Army, was kidnapped on 18 August by an unidentified armed commando. He has now been in the hands of his captors for 40 hours, and his whereabouts is unknown.

Gen Pinochet who spoke in the gymnasium in Chillan -- 400 km south of Santiago -- to a crowd of about 2,000 youths, emphasized that the Armed Forces will continue to work to implement the national Constitution which established his mandate until 1989.

Pinochet expressed his categorical rejection of foreign intervention in Chilean internal affairs. He reiterated the decision of the Armed Forces and Police to achieve peace and security for Chileans in the face of the efforts to destabilize his government through the use of violence and weapons. Pinochet said: We members of the Armed Forces and of security forces are determined to shed our last drop of blood to safeguard freedom and to preserve all this for the good of all of you.

Then, thanking those supporters who attended the rally, Pinochet said: The support you are now giving the government shows that the government is not alone, that it is backed and supported by all of you.

On the 2d day of a 3-day tour of the Chilean central region, Pinochet stated that those attempts to bring the nation to a standstill are directly detrimental to the workers, especially, to the most needy sectors. Opposition sectors are preparing a second national stoppage for 4 September, a date when presidential elections are usually held in Chile. The clandestine Manual Rodriguez Patriotic Front (FPRM) has also made a call to the people to paralyze the country.

CUADRA SAYS TIME FOR 'CHILDREN'S' GAMES OVER

[Text] Santiago, 17 Aug (AFP) -- After the discovery of a very powerful subversive arsenal on the coasts of northern Chile, General Augusto Pinochet's government today warned that the time for playing children's games is over.

Stressing that the situation is serious, Minister Secretary General Francisco Javier Cuadra stated this is not a time for weakness, it is a time for definitions.

The first arms cache was discovered on 7 August, and then three more caches were discovered apparently unloaded in the area of Carrizal Bajo, 770 km north of Santiago. The caches included: 1,700 U.S. carbines; approximately 100 Soviet rocket launchers; and tons of explosives, according to the authorities.

The official reports have provoked incredulity in opposition sectors, while the clandestine FPMR (Manuel Rodriguez Patiotic Front) and the MIR (Movement of the Revolutionary Left) -- whom the government has accused of promoting this subversive operation -- have stressed that the discovery of the caches is a farce from start to finish.

In an interview published on 17 August in the newspaper EL MERCURIO, Cuadra warns: He who has eyes, observes; he who has ears, listens -- apparently referring to the skeptics. The high-ranking official also stated that the time for playing children's games is over, and he stressed it is necessary for the subversive groups to be isolated, terming as naive the strategy of the moderate opposition, which is promoting civilian disobedience against the regime in order to achieve a return to democracy.

In an extensive recount of the most recent dynamite attacks, kidnappings, and the violent deaths of opposition members and government agents, EL MERCURIO states that between January 1984 and June 1986 the Chilean diary of terror and political violence had more than 1,000 entries. The process appears to be escalating and has resulted in approximately 100 deaths, the article adds.

PINOCHET 'TARGETS' CNS LEADERS FOR ATTACK

[Excerpts] National Union Coordinating Board [CNS] President Manuel Bustos this morning said General Augusto Pinochet's remarks on the CNS target CNS leaders for possible terrorist attacks. Bustos added that the same thing happened after the president leveled charges against ANEF [National Association of Government Employees] leader Tucapel Jimenez. Bustos said the president's statements in Cauquenes -- where Pinochet said that the CNS is a communist front organization -- are very unfortunate.

[Begin Bustos recording] I want to tell you that, unlike Gen Pinochet, the CNS does not operate as a communist front organization. Actually, for 11 or 12 years he has engaged in an intense anticommunist campaign. He has thus advertised communism in Chile, free of charge, particularly in the case of the arsenal they said they discovered, in their campaign through the television, the radio, and the press. The government claims to have discovered over 2,000 rifles and an incredible quantity of dynamite. How then can one expect the anticommunist policy of the past 12 years to be of any profit at all? [end recording]

This means that the true communist activist is the government, rather than the CNS, Bustos said. [passage omitted]

Bustos compared what happened on 18 August with the atmosphere prevailing before the murder of Tucapel Jimenez.

[Begin Bustos recording] Gen Pinochet, who claims to be working for the unity of Chileans, should not attack unions. The only thing I can say is that the president's remarks yesterday have made us possible victims of the groups inserted in the regime: the same groups who have abducted and killed a boy, whose body was found upon the stones in Santo Domingo, and the same groups who have beheaded professors. Now we are on the top of the list of victims. We must recall Tucapel Jiminez' death. Tucapel Jiminez was killed after Gen Pinochet mentioned him in Temuco. That is why the president's remarks have made us possible victims of the extremist groups sheltered by the security agencies. [end recording]

Bustos concluded by saying the president will be directly responsible for anything that may happen to CNS members, because with his remarks he paved the way for the murder of union leaders. Bustos added that some people do not want Chilean unions and union leaders to struggle for the rights of workers.

SECURITY SERVICES REPORTEDLY SPYING ON EMBASSIES

[Text] Madrid, 19 Aug (EFE) -- The security services of the Chilean military government have been engaging in espionage activities to obtain confidential information from the Spanish Embassy in Santiago. Sources of the Spanish Foreign Ministry who are aware of the affair have reported that the embassies of several other countries in Santiago were apparently also targets for espionage by the security services of the Chilean military government.

Reliable sources have told EFE in Madrid and also reported outside of Spain that the Spanish Government has concrete evidence of the affair. According to these sources, many confidential reports and secret communications exchanged between the Spanish Embassy in Santiago and the Spanish Foreign Ministry in Madrid have fallen into the hands of Chilean intelligence organizations.

EFE has discovered that some of the intelligence material collected by the Chilean security services is dated this year. There are coded documents, some of them secret, that were sent from Santiago to Madrid and also similar documents issued by the Spanish Foriegn Ministry that were received at the Spanish Embassy in Santiago.

A spokesman for the Spanish Foreign Ministry told EFE that none of the documents intercepted by the Chilean security services was important. "None of them was much more than wastepaper basket material," he said. The spokesman indicated that the Spanish authorities have been aware of the situation for several weeks and that security measures at the Spanish Embassy have been reinforced.

The Spanish Foreign Ministry has raised the issue with the governments of other countries whose embassies in Santiago have also been subjected to espionage, the spokesman said.

Government: 'No Comment'

[Text] Santiago, 19 Aug (EFE) -- The Chilean military government did not make any declarations today about the news coming from Madrid saying that Chilean security services have allegedly spied on the Spanish Embassy in Santiago. When questioned about this subject, Foreign Ministry spokesman Ambassador Pablo Valdez said: "We cannot make any comment," since no official information has been released on this subject.

Spanish Foreign Ministry sources, who knew about the matter for some weeks, confirmed in Madrid today that some confidential documents of the Spanish Embassy in Santiago had allegedly reached the Chilean intelligence services. The same sources added that apparently other embassies in Santiago -- which they did not identify -- are being watched. They also minimized the importance of the intercepted communications of the Spanish Embassy in Santiago.

These remarks seem to confirm an earlier report delivered to EFE by Chilean exiles in Spain to the effect that the other affected embassies could be those of Uruguay and Venezuela.

The Spanish Embassy in Santiago has declined to comment on reports of the alleged espionage activities carried out against it. In reply to EFE, a Spanish Embassy spokesman said: "No comment." The spokesman did not want to comment on the vulnerability of their security system and declined to confirm or deny reports that in recent weeks security measures have been reinforced at the Spanish Embassy.

"Like any other embassy," the spokesman said, "the Spanish Embassy in Santiago has its own security measures."

Venezuelan Ambassador to Chile Hector Vargas Acosta has also declined to comment on the subject by contending that he had no information on it. An Uruguayan Embassy spokesman gave EFE a similar reply. Like the Venezuelan and Spanish Embassies, the Uruguayan spokesman also minimized the issue.

MERINO DENIES CIA TAPPING, HELMS REPORT

PY191712 Santiago EL MERCURIO in Spanish 8 Aug 86 p C5

[Text] Admiral Jose Toribio Merino yesterday emphatically rejected the possibility that the CIA is tapping the internal communications of the Armed Forces, as reported by U.S. newspapers.

"Nothing of the sort. It is not true. It is a lie," Adm Merino stated.

Adm Merino said this at the end of a special session of the Government Junta, which yesterday approved the Electoral Law. Adm Merino also briefly referred to other issues attracting public attention.

When asked whether he is denying the rumors that the Government Junta has received secret information from Senator Jesse Helms, Adm Merino stated: "Not at all, not at all. He does not know anything about secrets, and neither do I."

Concerning the death of the University of Santiago leader [Mario Martinez], Adm Merino stated that he learned the news from the press.

When asked his opinion on the current situation, Adm Merino stated that "my opinion is that the analysis made some 3 weeks ago on the general guidelines that terrorists will use in the future has concluded that the selective assassination of people would be implemented to produce a split in public opinion over the state's capability to ensure tranquillity."

Opposes U.S. Intervention

[Excerpts] With regard to the release on bail of the Civic Assembly leaders, Admiral Jose Toribio Merino Castro said, quote, I hope they take advantage of their freedom to organize another protest on 4 September, unquote. Regarding the U.S. intervention in Chile, Merino indicated that President Reagan should not get involved in Chilean affairs. He made these statements during a conversation with reporters in the Diego Portales building. [passage omitted] Admiral Merino rejected the U.S. intervention in Chilean internal affairs. He said the U.S. representatives come here only to observe the situation in Chile.

[Begin recording] [Merino] No one came here to intervene in our affairs. They come here to observe and learn because the information they get apparently is not complete. They take the information they obtain here back with them and then release it to the press there.

[Reporter] President Reagan advocates a peaceful and orderly transition in our country [word indistinct].

[Merino] [Words indistinct] Because President Reagan should not get involved here or tell us what to do. We do things as we like, and we have said this many times.

[Reporter] He advocates a peaceful transition just like the government wants.

[Merino] Well, that is fine [words indistinct] because this is exactly what we are doing. Those who oppose it are the ones who advocate revolution, communism, destruction and all kinds of psychological tension on the population to create chaos. Communism wants chaos because this is where the communists get their power. [end recording]

In conclusion, Merino emphasized that the government and the country strongly oppose U.S. interference in Chilean affairs.

FPMR CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR KIDNAPPING

[Text] Santiago, 19 Aug (EFE) -- The Marxist group Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front (FPMR) tonight claimed responsibility for the kidnapping of Colonel Mario Haberle Rivanedeira.

Three international press agencies including EFE received a phone call giving instructions to go to a place in Santiago where the FPMR had left an envelope containing two written communiques, a picture of the colonel, and the officer's identity card. One of the communiques has an FPMR declaration stating Colonel Haberle's life is at stake if the regime of General Augusto Pinochet does not stop the repression of the people. The other communique is aimed at the Armed Forces, calling on them "to stop repression" and to join the opposition struggle.

POLITICIANS REACT TO PASCAL ALLENDE'S REMARKS

[Excerpts] Representatives of various Chilean political parties yesterday categorically rejected the remarks of Andres Pascal Allende, secretary general of the Movement of the Revolutionary Left (MIR).

EL MERCURIO asked the politicians for their opinions about the remarks Pascal Allende made in a clandestine press conference held in Santiago on 8 August. In this press conference, Pascal Allende advocated "armed struggle."

The MIR leader states, "Only a popular uprising will overthrow the dictatorship," and ruled out any dialogue with the Armed Forces and the proposals for social reconciliation, which he labeled, "a blank check for the ruling classes."

Politicians of various leanings agreed that Pascal Allende's remarks contradict the objective of establishing a democratic regime in Chile. [passage omitted]

Radical Party President Enrique Silva Cimma criticized the coverage the news media allots to Pascal Allende's statements, adding: "I would like the media to give the democratic parties, which are struggling for a peaceful return to democracy, the same coverage they allot to the MIR and other similar movements."

He went on to say: "If this clandestine press conference indeed took place, then all I can say is that the remarks are sheer nonsense, the result of total ignorance of Chile's real status quo."

Silva Cimma emphasized: "Our people do not want 'executions,' 'military actions,' 'expropriatory actions,' or 'popular power,' the way they are described in the interview. What the people want is peace, freedom, and democracy. Thus, we are struggling peacefully and abhor violence and terrorism.

Eugenio Ortega, secretary general of the Christian Democratic Party [PCD], categorically stated: "We should not play Mr Pascal's game. It is not suitable to pay attention to someone who is just seeking publicity. The country is well aware of his political irresponsibility and of the immense harm the MIR has done to the Chilean people and to their democratic cause."

Ortega stressed: "General Pinochet has pointed them out as his 'ideal enemies.' He has declared war on them, and by doing so he justifies any outrage."

He stated: "After 20 years they remain a tiny minority that some people want to watch and even promote. Those who advocate violent and armed struggle, like Mr Pascal, end up by going to the other extreme and continue harming the cause of Chile and its people. This cause is none other than the peaceful and urgent return to democracy."

The Christian Democratic leader went on to say: "Certain sectors, which support the government, take advantage of this kind of remark to slander democratic sectors, thus giving rise to an atmosphere that is favorable to polarization and extremism. The true allies of extremism in Chile are the people who block political solutions." [passage omitted]

Armando Jaramillo, president of the Republic Party, also scored the statement of the MIR leader, adding that he "categorically disqualifies them."

Jaramillo said: "Pascal Allende has been out of Chile for a long time and is, therefore, essentially ignorant of the status quo and the aspirations of the Chileans."

He emphasized: "We are in favor of peaceful social mobilization. To speak of popular uprising is tantamount to seeking to plunge the country into an extremely violent confrontation which could only lead to a bloodbath and will justify the current regime and make it stronger."

As to Pascal Allende's remarks about dialogue with the Armed Forces, Jaramillo indicated: "By saying what he did, Pascal Allende confirmed he is totally out of touch with the country's true status quo." Jaramillo concluded by saying: "Any agreement for the return to full democracy will require prior dialogue with the Armed Forces, which, as far as I am concerned, are simply citizens in uniform."

ANALISIS BACK ON STREETS; DIRECTOR STILL IN JAIL

[Excerpt] ANALISIS magazine is already on the newstands, but its director, Juan Pablo Cardenas, has been in the Capuchinos annex of the Santiago Jail for 21 days.

Maria Olivia Monckeberg, ANALISIS deputy director, has expressed to Radio Chilena her concern over Cardenas' arrest.

[Begin Monckeberg recording] Well, ANALISIS is on the streets again after its 3-week closure. But our director, Juan Pablo Cardenas, has already been in jail for 21 days. He is at the Capuchinos annex of the Santiago jail. We are concerned over the trial process, because last week, on 12 August, we appealed the indictment issued by Judge (?Lionel Beraux). SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC UNION ISSUES PROPOSAL

PY192226 Santiago LA TERCERA DE LA HORA in Spanish 11 Aug 86 p 6

[All quotations marks as published]

[Text] The Social Democratic Union, [USD], a movement established by a group which recently split from the Social Democracy, "seeks the establishment of full democracy in our country." This is included in a political document entitled "Social Democratic Project" recently issued by this group.

The Social Democratic Union states: "The USD will not only be a political expression which upholds human rights but also one having a deep social content concentrating on the enforcement of all rights of workers because this is the only way for a democracy to be just, stable and permanent." In the document, "the USD expresses its respect for private property, and also the production sector. It adds that property must be used for social purposes. It also notes wealth and labor must also be fair to avoid anarchy as well as all forms of capitalist exploitation." It also upholds: "The concentration of economic power must be avoided because it creates distortions that dangerously interfere in the people's ability to make sovereign decisions."

USD accepts foreign investments which follow national regulations as long as they are limited to the business sector. It refuses to grant privileges to the sectors that are not in keeping with the treatment granted to the Chilean investments.

The USD also promotes the existence of intermediate social organizations and the development of economic organizations resulting from the cooperation and initiatives of workers.

The USD political project also notes: "The unity of the democratic left is a historical imperative and through it we will end those divisions caused by minority sectors."

BARCO ON MILITARY'S ROLE, TIES WITH CUBA

PA191913 Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 14 Aug 86 pp 1-A, 9-A

[By German Acero Espinosa]

[Excerpt] President Virgilio Barco yesterday demanded the Armed Forces' total loyalty and warned the country that he will not be intimidated by the subversive groups that want to spread violence. He also admitted that the possibility of reestablishing relations with Cuba in the future has not been dismissed.

Barco was at the Military Cadet School yesterday for the ceremony in which the Armed Forces recognized the president. Also present were former Presidents Carlos Lleras Restrepo and Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala and several retired generals, including former Defense Minister Miguel Vega Uribe.

The president took advantage of a meeting with the press to confront the Conservatives regarding their constant refusal to participate in the government. He said he has at all times called on the Conservatives to collaborate in his government, but they have preferred a reflective opposition.

In an urgent tone Barco said his government will not apply a "sweeping policy" in administrative positions; he denied rumors regarding the suspension of the work contracts of more than 100 public employees.

Barco made a broad analysis of what the peace process will be within his government, and he explained that for some time he and his advisers have been outlining a strategy that will lead to the country's normalization and institutionalization in such a way that the government can establish peace in the country within a prudent deadline.

Regarding the state of siege, he did not hesitate to say that it could be gradually lifted in some parts of the country, but he clarified that it is not a measure that is currently being studied.

Regarding the reestablishment of diplomatic relations with Cuba, he said that there has been much speculation, to the point where some sectors of the press have said that former President Alfonso Lopez Michelsen and former Minister Jaime Castro were to travel to the island to hasten the process. "Colombia has a pluralist philosophy and maintains relations with many countries. Therefore, given that conditions are adequate, there would be no obstacle in resuming the relations we once had with Cuba," Barco said.

President Barco also attributed the greatest importance to yesterday's ceremony at the Military Cadet School since, he said, the ceremony has a very high meaning for the country's republican institutions, because the Armed Forces defend our sovereignty and democracy.

After receiving top honors from the four military branches, Barco greeted the ranking military officers and requested that the military establishment give his government total loyalty. He stressed the high degree of professionalism that exists within Colombia's military.

Barco said his program to rescue coexistence, peace, and normalcy, which was outlined during his campaign, has found the fundamental pillars for its execution in the military sector.

He insisted that the Colombian Armed Forces have a well-earned stature within Latin America because of their noble virtues and because of their firm adherence to the system of democratic government.

Barco stressed his respect for the Armed Forces and thanked Generals Miguel Vega Uribe, Augusto Moreno Delgado Mallarino, and Augusto Moreno Guerrero and Admiral Tito Garcia Motta for the services they have rendered to the fatherland.

"With the support of these institutions I can aspire to fulfill the government program we have prepared for the good of all Colombians, regardless of party, creed, race, or condition," Barco stressed. [passage omitted]

REBEL LEADER SEEKS ASYLUM IN AUSTRIAN EMBASSY

Previously, two other guerrillas had asked for political asylum at the Swiss Embassy, but their request was rejected.

CARTAGENA JUDGE ORDERS RELEASE OF OCHOA VASQUEZ

[Excerpt] Cartagena, 16 Aug (DPA) -- Colombian Jorge Luis Ochoa Vasquez, one of the alleged drug trafficking chiefs most sought by the U.S. authorities, was released by a Cartagena customs court judge after paying a bail of 2 million Colombian pesos (approximately $10,000).

Ochoa Vasquez, who was extradited from Spain to Colombia a few weeks ago after being held in jail in Madrid for more than 1 year on charges of drug trafficking, had been accused by a Cartagena judge of smuggling 127 bulls for bullfighting.

U.S. authorities believe the Colombian is one of the main chiefs of the drug trafficking between Colombia and the United States.

The Cartagena customs judge ordered the suspension of the 2-year sentence through the payment of bail and ordered that Ochoa Vasquez report every 15 days to the judge's office.

It has been learned that Ochoa Vasquez, who was being held in the "Ternera" jail, automatically obtained his freedom and left the city for an unknown destination. [passage omitted]

PRF HEAD SAYS ARMED STRUGGLE 'LAST CHANCE'

[Text] Asuncion, 19 Aug (AFP) -- During a panel discussion hosted by university students today, Febrerista Revolutionary Party (PRF) President Fernando Vera said armed struggle is the last chance to change the current Paraguayan regime into a democracy. The panel focused on the national dialogue being sponsored by the Catholic Church.

The PRF, a party which has abstained from elections despite its legal status, belongs to the National Accord, an opposition coalition. The Christian Democratic Party (PDC), the Authentic Radical Liberal Party (PLRA), and the Colorado Popular Movement (Mopoco) -- all of them outlawed -- are also members of the accord.

If the position of intolerance of the regime, headed by General Alfredo Stroessner, remains unchanged, if the government continues to disregard constitutional rights, and if it refuses to reach an accord with all the political and social sectors, then armed struggle will be the Paraguayan people's last chance to build a democracy, he stressed.

Vera, a retired IMF economist, said the National Accord and the national dialogue are using the same approach in the search for a transition from a totalitarian regime to a system of government guaranteeing freedom and democracy for all.

He recalled that the National Accord demands the state of siege -- which has been in force for 32 years -- be lifted that freedom of assembly, of the press, and expression be respected, and that the existing repressive laws be repealed.

GOVERNMENT BANS FESTIVAL FOR POLITICAL REASONS

PY191909 Asuncion EL DIARIO in Spanish 15 Aug 86 p 47

[Text] At noon yesterday the mayor of Ypacarai sent a note to the president of the Honorable Municipal Council, Juan Carlos Galaverna, and to the commission of the Lake Ypacarai Festival, informing them that the Interior Ministry will not authorize the 16th Lake Ypacarai Festival.

The ministry's decision, contained in the note to the Municipal Council, says: "I hereby notify you and whomever it may concern that this ministry will not authorize the 16th Lake Ypacarai Festival scheduled for 25 August-28 September. This measure has been taken because the program of the festival has been changed to fulfill political ends. Therefore, the festival is suspended until a new disposition is taken." At the end of the note there is a seal and the signature of Interior Minister Sabino A. Montanaro.

National Deputy Luis Becker, a member of the organizing committee of the festival and president of the Ypacarai Colorado Precinct, has said this measure is an attack against culture and: "The festival has not been changed for political reasons, as the note contends. The lake festival is a community effort with roots among the people themselves. To suspend it is to kill culture."

The deputy added that in the festival "there has never been and there is no party politicking. The members of the committee come from all sectors of public opinion."

CONGRESSMEN: CIA INVOLVED IN PIA VESTA CASE

[Excerpt] Lima, 19 Aug (AFP) -- Peruvian political circles today hinted that the Danish ship Pia Vesta detained in Panama was reportedly carrying weapons to the Nicaraguan contras in an operation in which the CIA is involved.

Although the Peruvian Government is maintaining absolute secrecy on the investigations conducted so far, congressmen of the ruling party are saying that the GDR weapons found aboard the Pia Vesta were on their way to destabilize deomcratic governments of the region.

Senator Humberto Carranza, of the ruling APRA [American Popular Revolutionary Alliance] party, has stated that the information gathered so far leads us to deduce that the CIA and other spy organizations that are enemies of democracy are involved in the smuggled weapons found aboard the Pia Vesta.

Before being detained in Panama, the Pia Vesta had anchored off the Peruvian port of El Callao. Congressional circles have discounted the possibility that the arms could have been meant for Peru and that the country was only a stopover on a maritime route whose final objective was to enter the zone where the Nicaraguan guerrillas are operating.

The U.S. daily THE WALL STREET JOURNAL on 18 July reported that a member of the U.S. National Security Council, Lieutenant Colonel Oliver North, provides weapons from the socialist bloc to the contras, and in Lima this has been considered proof of the Pia Vesta's destination.

Without revealing its sources, this week's edition of the magazine CARETAS states that the supply of weapons from Eastern bloc countries to the Nicaraguan contras has sought to create the image of an independent revolution, trying to make believe they are fighting with weapons seized from the enemy.

CARETAS also states that contraband operations of this type become very delicate, because not long ago the U.S. Congress refused to approve funds to the Nicaraguan guerrillas because such an operation involved a contradiction of congressional objectives.

CARETAS adds that the idea of providing weapons from the Eastern bloc to the contras is in keeping with the same principle used by the Soviet Union and Cuba of supplying U.S. weapons captured in Vietnam to the Salvadoran FMLN guerrillas. [passage omitted]

Senate Investigates

PY191634 Lima Television Peruana in Spanish 0100 GMT 19 Aug 86

[Excerpt] The Senate today designated a multiparty committe to investigate the case of the Danish ship Pia Vesta. This decision was made after a secret meeting that lasted more than 4 hours.

Senator Javier Silva Ruette will preside over the multiparty committee, which will investigate everything related to the course, cargo, and destination of the Danish ship Pia Vesta. This was decided during a meeting held in the Senate at which the Foreign Minister Allan Wagner Tizon, Navy Minister Vice Admiral Willy Harm, and Interior Minister Abel Salinas reported.

The secret meeting began at 100 and was presided over by Senator Armando Villanueva del Campo. After the 4-hour meeting, the ministers of state left the Senate without giving further information on the Pia Vesta case. The foreign minister briefly stated that the return of the Peruvian ambassador to the GDR is important because he will provide further information to the Foreign Ministry on this case and on the results of his negotiations in Berlin. He added that the investigations are continuing.

MINISTER HUAYTA COMMENTS ON IMF DECISION

[Text] Lima, 17 Aug (EFE) -- Peruvian Energy and Mines Minister Wilfredo Huayta today said in Lima that Peru "is not alone," because "fresh new" dollars are being invested in the country.

Huayta added that among the investments is $400 million the U.S. Occidental Petroleum company will assign to developing its oil fields in the Peruvian jungle zone.

He also mentioned a $40-million credit from Brazilian banks for an energy development project, and $60 million from the Nordic countries for a project in the northern department of Lambayeque.

The minister referred to those investments when commenting on the IMF decision to declare Peru ineligible for new credits, and added that, "the IMF will not make our country yield through that decision."

Huayta said the situation created by the IMF declaration "is difficult and worrying, but not alarming."

IGLESIAS PRAISES TRADE WITH BRAZIL

[Text] Montevideo, 18 Aug (AFP) -- Foreign Minister Enrique Iglesias today said that in the future Uruguay will have a security cushion for its exports after signing several agreements with Brazil allowing Uruguay to market a good part of its agricultural produce there.

The minister, who participated with President Julio Sanguinetti in a 1-week official visit to Brazil, said the visit was historic and the two countries had fortified dialogue and understanding.

Following last week's agreements, Uruguay can place 60 percent of its rice production and 50 percent of its meat production in the Brazilian market.

I think the country has attained an old objective, which is to have a security cushion for agriculture, Iglesias said.

The agreements between Brazil and Uruguay were signed some weeks after Brazilian President Jose Sarney and Argentine President Raul Alfonsin signed in Buenos Aires a number of integration agreements with the aim of forming a subregional common market in a short period of time.

All this is part of the desire to achieve a closer relationship among the three countries, said the Uruguayan Foreign Minister.

COLORADOS WILLING TO GRANT AMNESTY TO MILITARY

[Text] Montevideo, 18 Aug (EFE) -- The Uruguayan ruling Colorado Party today decided "to assume its responsibility" and "work for peace" to promote amnesty for members of the military who violated human rights during the "de facto" government (1973-1985).

The "Colorados" claim that as the "Tupamaro" guerrillas were granted amnesty shortly after the democratic government came to power, pardon must also be extended -- for the sake of justice -- to those who fought against the guerrillas.

The left and a sector of the main opposition National (Blanco) party refuse to grant amnesty, thus creating a conflict 18 months after the reestablishment of democracy in the country.

After a lengthy meeting between President Julio Maria Sanguinetti and the main leaders of the ruling Colorado party, an agreement was reached to immediately promote a bill to resolve the situation.

The decision was made after no negotiated solution was reached with the opposition parties who are demanding an investigation of the cases of human rights violations and punishment for those responsible.

The public discussion of the subject has caused uneasiness in sectors of the left and in retired military groups whose main officers were on active participation during the "de facto" period.

In this regard, Senator Manuel Flores Silva stated that in Uruguay "there are no good or bad tombs," referring to violations of human rights by subversives and those who fought against them.

Flores Silva added: "The time has come to assume responsibilities," and to open the doors "to all parties." He added: "The country will decide who is capable of making the difficult decisions and who is not."

He said the "12 years of illegality" have followed an internal war born from the terrorist movements.

Flores Silva stated we are living through a period of transition "and here we must look toward the future, and the solution cannot suppose that the deceased will rise and fight each other."

FRENCH OFFICIAL SUPPORTS CONTADORA, MEETS LUSINCHI

[Text] Caracas, 19 Aug (AFP) -- Didier Bariani, the French secretary of state for foreign affairs, today in Caracas criticized the lack of sufficient liberties in Nicaragua. He asked that the country "not enclose itself in an ideological position" and reiterated France's support for the peace-making effort being made by the Contadora Group (Mexico, Colombia, Panama, and Venezuela) in Central America.

Bariani, who is on a political tour of Latin America, visited Colombia and the Dominican Republic and will travel to Peru. He was received today by Venezuelan Social Democratic President Jaime Lusinchi. Bariani admitted that there could be "people discouraged by the lack of immediate results" in the Contadora effort, but he reiterated France's support for the quadripartite group.

"We believe that the dialogue through Contadora must continue; otherwise, if there were a political void, it could increase the confrontation and violence on the Latin American continent," he added. Asked about the possible "death" of Contadora, the diplomat said: "It is enough to say that during the inauguration of Colombian President Barco the members of the Contadora Group and the Support Group (Argentina, Brazil, Uruguay, and Peru) decided to continue their efforts."

"I must also say," Bariani pointed out, "that the developments in Nicaragua have not been satisfactory. The difficulties we see in that country, the fact that freedom of press as well as personal and political liberties are increasingly repressed, complicates things very much."

"In Bogota I had the opportunity to speak to some of the Latin American presidents. They are all against violence, against a military solution. What is needed is a common political will that will lead us all to make Nicaragua understand that enclosing itself in an ideological position, as it is doing, will not lead anywhere," he added.

Bariani said France is willing to help the Central American countries in the struggle against poverty and to ensure peace. The secretary of state made these statements after meeting with the Venezuelan president. After describing the meeting as "the most interesting I have had during my entire Latin American tour," he said that "the French point of view is identical to the Venezuelan president's."

With Lusinchi he also discussed the common concern over the struggle against drug trafficking and French interest in participating in a program of infrastructural projects in Venezuela that will cost $4 billion in 3 years. He also expressed satisfaction over the selection of French technology for the Caracas subway system.

CONGRESS PRESIDENT SUGGESTS GOVERNMENT PROGRAM

PA191422 Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 11 Aug 86 p 1-13

[Letter sent by Leonardo Ferrer, president of the National Congress, to President Jaime Lusinchi, dated 6 August]

[Excerpts] I am deeply concerned about the social and economic situation that our country has been facing during these last few years and the lack of any apparent means to recover the optimism common to Venezuelans.

I have stressed through various channels -- lectures, speeches, articles, and books -- the need to speedily overcome the current backward situation and replace it with a grand national program in which each of us will play a corresponding role. This type of program is needed not only in Venezuela, but throughout the world.

The foreign debt, which has reached $1 billion [figure as published] in underdeveloped countries, has become the main topic of interest throughout the world. Of this huge foreign debt, $360 billion is Latin American. Venezuela owes a little more than 10 percent of this sum.

The precarious stability of international economics and finance is becoming worse. In view of the underdeveloped countries' inability to pay their foreign debt, the industrialized countries seek various formulas to collect their debts, through severe measures in the indebted countries' national programs and negotiations to defer payments on capital. Together with these formulas, they are conducting financial juggling to ensure the payments of interest and to avoid stoppage of payments, which would mean losses to the banks that made the loans.

Making great efforts, Latin American countries have adopted these measures for several years, with very disappointing results. [passage omitted]

The results have been: reduced production and income; reduced participation in international trade with the corresponding loss of foreign exchange; reduced income, mainly from oil; massive capital drain; reduced imports, including basic products; increased foreign debt; rampant unemployment; and idle machinery. Latin America cannot cope with this situation much longer.

Our guide for a new era on our continent should be a better form of life compatible with current technological advances and not based on unattainable goals of yesteryear. [passage omitted]

We should immediately strive for increased trade between Latin America and the industrialized countries.

If Latin America enjoyed a self-sustaining development, it would be possible to conduct viable refinancing agreements. We should also seek other solutions to be put into effect immediately to overcome backwardness: a) conversion of the foreign debt to capital; b) "institutionalized involuntary loans" by the creditor banks in view of the crisis and the need for fresh capital to aid recovering lost growth indexes; and c) acceptance by the creditor banks of payment of capital and part of the interest in local currency by countries with monetary stability.

This strategy, with the vote of confidence by the creditor banks, could mean the beginning of a new and more just international economic order. [passage omitted]

Let us demand sacrifices, beginning with ourselves, so that we can conduct a great national program to overcome backwardness, recover lost time, with a renewed confidence, which we should have never lost. It is then that democracy can be better served.

Otherwise, why make sacrifices?

Sincerely yours,

Leonardo Ferrer, president, Chamber of Deputies

VISITING ROMANIAN AMBASSADOR ON DISARMAMENT

[Text] Mexico City, 19 Aug (NOTIMEX) -- The Romanian Ambassador to Mexico, Constantin Babalau, has noted the urgent need for undertaking a program of general disarmament which would include chemical and conventional weapons, troops and military expenditures. As he inaugurated Romania Week at the National Autonomous University of Mexico [UNAM] in commemoration of the 42d anniversary of the Romanian revolution, he said that responsibility for achieving an international treaty on space belongs to the United Nations. He said one of the main goals of Romania's foreign policy is directed at the struggle for the defense of peace and the right to life, which is the most important right. He added that his compatriots actively defend the program of nuclear disarmament and a ban on nuclear tests.

Finally, he said Romanian-Mexican relations, which were established 100 years ago, have been developing continuously. Proof of this is Roman Week, which has been held at the UNAM yearly in coordination with the Romanian-Mexican Friendship Association and the Romanian embassy.

PALA DEMANDS COMPLIANCE WITH UNADE PACTS

PA191557 Panama City Circuito RPC Television Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 18 Aug 86

[Communique issued by the corregimiento representatives, councilmen, and mayors of the Panamanian Labor Party, PALA; place and date not given]

[Text] The corregimiento representatives, councilmen, and mayors of the PALA who met in a general assembly feel the need to make the following statement addressing the country and the parties within the National Democratic Union, [UNADE]:

1. During the 1984 elections, the political parties that supported a process of change in our country founded the coalition called UNADE which won the elections that brought the current government to power and which constitutes the support of the national government;

2. Included among the necessary and natural political agreements which the diverse executive committees of the PRD [Democratic Revolutionary Party], PALA, Republican Party, and Liberal Party made even before the 1984 electoral victory to create the UNADE and to conduct a coherent political action and maintain the effectiveness of government actions, it was agreed that the party that obtained the highest number of votes would appoint the president of the Legislative Assembly; the party that came in second would appoint the first vice president; and the other parties included in the UNADE would appoint the second vice president on a rotational basis;

3. Therefore, our party's legislative bloc is entitled to hold the first vice presidency of the legislative branch, a post which our legislators have occupied in an outstanding manner since 1984;

4. At all times, PALA has firmly and decisively been at the forefront of the nation's political developments, something which the UNADE has fully realized every time our participation has been needed, as we have completely fulfilled our duties in the government's actions;

5. Behaving irresponsibly, certain persons want to fulfill their personal ambitions by trying to take the first vice presidency of Legislative Assembly from the PALA, although they fully know that with this action they are playing into the hands of the opposition which is constantly trying to destroy unity within the UNADE;

6. In view of this attitude which is neither serious nor honorable but rather politically harmful on the part of people who allegedly want to maintain a political alliance with us, we urge our party's Executive Committee members to determine who our true allies are and who are those who make agreements and later try to cunningly betray them;

7. We inform the country and our UNADE brothers that we will fulfill our political commitments solely inasmuch as the other UNADE members respect them, and that if there is a political party that thinks that it can win the next elections by itself, we will surely accept the path its members choose.

8. We declare that if during the current legislative period there is an incident of betrayal, we will ask the PALA's organizations to provide the appropriate response;

9. We demand that President Eric Arturo Delvalle, as president of the UNADE and guarantor of the pacts which support the popular, democratic, and nationalist government he heads, preserve at all cost the unity and continuation of government actions for the sake of all Panamanians.

COSTA RICA

ARIAS COMMENTS ON HUMAN RIGHTS, ICJ SUIT

PA191555 San Jose Radio Reloj in Spanish 1200 GMT 19 Aug 86

[Excerpt] President Oscar Arias has said that the country is not part of the Central American conflict, although he admitted that the region's crisis forms part of our problems. The president said this yesterday when inaugurating the fourth course on human rights organized by the Inter-American Human Rights Institute. Arias told the participants, many of them Latin Americans, that Costa Rica practices neutrality because it believes in the rule of law and not force. President Arias said: We struggle for the political resolution of disagreements among nations. This is so, he added, because we act consistently with the pacifist tradition of our first president, who was a teacher and not a general.

In his speech, Arias referred to the suit filed by Nicaragua against Costa Rica at the International Court of Justice, stating that the country will go there to prove Costa Rica's innocence. According to Arias, Costa Rica has a firm duty to carry out a crusade for human rights. He added that Costa Rica has opted for integral peace, one of the most important pillars of which is human rights. President Arias commented: We are aware of the political responsibility we have in Central America, and we struggle for peace with the resources that we have for the promotion of human rights, legality, and civility.

We Costa Ricans are convinced that the path of integral peace will make us a world power in the area of human rights, President Arias said. He added: We still have some way to go to achieve this, even though we feel satisfied with the implementation of civil and political rights, although not with the economic, cultural, and social rights. He concluded by vowing to struggle so that disagreements will be resolved by reason and not by weapons. [passage omitted]

FDR'S VILLACORTA ON GOALS OF PREDIALOGUE MEETING

[Text] Mexico City, 19 Aug (AFP) -- Jorge Villacorta, the FDR delegate to the meeting with Salvadoran Government representatives, has told AFP that the meeting that representatives of the government and the Salvadoran guerrillas will begin in Mexico on 20 August will be "secret" and may last "1/2 hour, 1 day, or 1 week."

"All I can tell you is that it will not be held at our country's embassy" as originally proposed by the Napoleon Duarte administration, stressed Villacorta, an agronomist who was Salvadoran deputy minister of agriculture in 1979. He added: By agreement with the Mexican Government, "which will guarantee security, we will meet somewhere in Mexico at 0900 on Wednesday."

The leader, who was a member of the Christian Democratic Party until 1980 when he joined the FDR, noted that the preparation for the dialogue, which was suspended 2 years ago, "could possibly end on 26 August, but that is a tentative date."

The truth is that "we do not know when the meeting will end, because we do not know what proposals will be made or the negotiation capacity that the Salvadoran Government representatives have," emphasized Villacorta, who will attend the meeting with Salvador Samayoa, the FMLN delegate.

Once the meeting is over, he said, "we will try to reach an agreement with the other party as to how we will announce its results to the media."

According to reports from San Salvador, which were not confirmed by Villacorta, the two sides will negotiate an exchange of prisoners in Mexico, which would result in the release of Colonel Omar Napoleon Avalos, captured by the FMLN in 1985, and an undetermined number of union members and members of humanitarian organizations.

The FMLN-FDR, the FDR leader stressed, "will participate with a constructive attitude and with responsibility and awareness of the need to promote the right framework so that the third dialogue can be held in El Salvador at the highest level." One of the proposals to be made by the guerrilla representatives will be "to agree on a military truce" during the third dialogue, the leader noted.

In addition, he said: "We must leave Mexico with an agreement as to the place, date, security conditions, and guarantees for the participation of various national sectors" affected or involved in the Salvadoran conflict. According to Villacorta, it is essential that "at the third dialogue we reaffirm our commitment to achieve a political solution through concrete actions that give continuity to the talks."

Villacorta added that the goals the FMLN-FDR will seek at the meeting that will reportedly be held in El Salvador include "the humanization of the war" through agreements to improve the conditions of the affected civilian population and the people being held by both sides.

"We do not intend to obtain a magic solution; we all know that a single round of talks is not enough," he stressed. "But we are convinced," he concluded, "that if the two sides are capable of reaching an agreement on a continuing dialogue, then an overall solution can be found in the relatively near future."

Vice President and Foreign Minister Rodolfo Castillo, Culture and Communications Minister Adolfo Rey Prendes, and Ricardo Soriano, leader of the progovernment National Worker-Peasant Union, will attend the preparatory meeting on behalf of the Salvadoran Government.

Managua Airs FMLN-FDR Communique

[Text] In a communique released here [not further identified], the FMLN-FDR has stated that it will go to Mexico with the spirit of creating the best framework for the third round of talks. Our delegates will participate at this preparatory meeting with a constructive spirit and with responsibility, the communique states. It adds that the FMLN-FDR will propose to the Salvadoran Government a military truce during the time that the official meeting is being held in San Salvador.

According to the communique, the FMLN-FDR believes it is necessary for the opposing sides to reaffirm their commitment to achieve a political solution to the war and undertake specific steps to give continuity to the talks. The fronts also state that the negotiated solution involves the entire Salvadoran society, that it is necessary to incorporate the various sectors in the efforts for peace and that this must begin with the presence of observers at the third round of talks.

They will meet with FMLN and FDR representatives to talk about the Salvadoran conflict. The two men arrived on a TACA international flight. FMLN CLAIMS HELICOPTER 'NET' DESTROYED AIRCRAFT

[Text] Attention, attention all our people. We will reveal how we downed a helicopter in Morazan Department on 16 August. Please pay much attention.

We will save headaches and more investigations by U.S. technicians, who on 18 August were carrying, suspended in midair, the wreckage of the downed helicopter which they were taking to investigate. We will let you know how our forces killed two pilots and other personnel in the downed aircraft. We will let you know how we downed this costly war weapon, this product of U.S. technology, with which they expected to halt the FMLN advance.

The UH-1H helicopter of the puppet Air Force which, together with another 24 helicopters, was taking part in this disastrous enemy operation in Morazan, was downed in the following manner: It was not downed with sophisticated antiaircraft weapons. It was not downed with our machineguns. It was not downed with our rifles. It was downed with a people's weapon. It was downed with a people's helicopter trap. Let us save [words indistinct] does not have to be spent thinking how we did it.

This helicopter of the Bustillos Air Force was downed Saturday in the northern zone of Morazan with a cable net placed between two high points. We repeat. We downed it with a net made with cables placed between two high points in these mountains of Morazan. This one and many other people's weapons have been placed all over Morazan Department by our forces. There is absolutely nothing that can overcome these people's weapons. They are simple weapons. Any Salvadoran can build them, and there is no power in the world that can fight against these mortal traps for enemy aviation.

On 16 August an enemy helicopter was downed in Morazan with a simple net of cables placed between two high points. These are weapons built by our people, with their ingenuity, with their creativity. It is the humiliation of a just cause imposed against the military power of foreigners who think they can dominate us.

Unlike the Somozists, the Salvadoran people do not need $100 million to destroy imperialist plans or down their war apparatus. The hands of peasants and workers, their infinite [word indistinct] capacity, [word indistinct] the fatherland. Their high conscience is sufficient to defeat Ronald Reagan's plans in El Salvador and three more like him. Celebrating this victory against [words indistinct], the imperialist war technology, we call on our fighters and all the people to continue applying with creativity all antiaircraft war tactics.

The same way we disarm and defeat them on land, we are defeating them in the air! Let the Salvadoran sky be for the birds! With people's arms, to convert each enemy helicopter in a [words indistinct].

VENCEREMOS LINKS BLANDON, PIA VESTA SHIPMENT

[Text] General Adolfo Onecifero Blandon [chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff] took a chance, but his venture backfired. What Radio Venceremos said a few days ago regarding the drunkard Blandon's implication in the already famous case of the Danish ship Pia Vesta is coming to light. It is no secret for our people that these [word indistinct] personages of the High Command and other Christian Democratic leaders, with Duarte at the head, act in accordance with Washington's and the CIA's murkiest intentions. However, our people have yet to know how the CIA pulls the puppet's strings, how it carries out its covert plans and terrorist operations.

Finally the drunkard and ill-named Gen Blandon is showing his real self, involved in one of those mysterious and entangled operations typical of the CIA so that war materiel can reach the desperate Nicaraguan contras. The operation was a real maze: The ship was to sail from East Germany, pass through Panama, make a stop in Peru, return to Panama, and finally unload the shipment in El Salvador. There, supposedly with a masterly move by the now proficient Gen Blandon, the shipment would be sent to the contras in Honduras.

As we may recall, the Panamanian Government, in coordination with the Peruvian Government and Alan Garcia himself learned of the ship's suspicious movements and foiled the CIA plans. The vessel was seized in Panama on Panamanian General Manuel Noriega's orders, and the shipment was discovered. Blandon's colleague, trafficker David Duncan disclosed the plans in Miami, admitting that the shipment valued at $11 million was destined for the port fo Acajutla, where the cargo would be delivered by the Salvadoran High Command to their Somozist buddies, as part of Reagan's $100 million for the contras.

Panamanian security intercepted communications between the gangsters which revealed that the shipment had sailed with two bills of loading: an original dated 29 April, which showed El Salvador as the final destination, and a dummy dated 30 April, indicating consignment to the Peruvian Armed Forces, which was clearly aimed at involving the Peruvian Government in the transaction.

Our people are not really interested in the CIA's intrigues and trickery but find it interesting to learn that the drunkard, and imperialism's (?plan) have failed once again. What did these men expect? Do they believe we are still in the days when the Yankees could move freely throughout the continent and do whatever they pleased with impunity? Perhaps they believe we are still in the days of pirates and filibusters, forgetting that Augusto Cesar Sandino, the general of free men, eradicated them long ago. The CIA is very mistaken, and [words indistinct] Gen Blandon also. The time for Latin America's dignity has arrived. Now there are vigilant eyes everywhere, such as Alan Garcia's in Peru and Gen Noriega's in Panama, and these eyes are alert to ensure respect for the dignity of our seas and borders and for our sacred sovereignty. These eyes -- which multiply each day -- will detect the turncoats and disclose those who throw shame on Latin America: the Blandons, the Duartes, or the Azcona Hoyos.

Today, while imperialism and the High Command blunder about, our people and the Nicaraguan people firmly advance, defeating imperialism's plans.

Castillo Rejects Charges

PA192205 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 2059 GMT 19 Aug 86

[Text] San Salvador, 19 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- The Salvadoran Government today denied that the arms shipment aboard the Pia Vesta was destined for El Salvador.

In remarks to a government radio station, Vice President and Foreign Minister Rodolfo Castillo Claramount asserted: "The legitimate Salvadoran Government does not have to resort to subterfuge or piracy, much less contraband of any sort."

The merchant ship Pia Vesta was detained in Panamanian waters with an illegal shipment of 32 IFA trucks and 3,000 light weapons, including AK-47 rifles and RPG-18 rocket launchers. All of these weapons are Soviet-designed and manufactured in the GDR.

Last weekend the progovernment Panamanian newspaper LA REPUBLICA reported that the shipment was destined for General Adolfo Blandon, chief of staff of the Salvadoran Army. Castillo Claramount bluntly stated: "Regarding this, there is no official involvement in this matter, just as there is no institutional, governmental, or military involvement."

He added: "The Salvadoran Government does not have to resort to contraband or shady dealings."

Gen Blandon flatly denied yesterday that the shipment was for him. He also said: "It would be illogical for Russian weapons to be destined for El Salvador, because we uphold democracy."

COLONEL SAYS REBEL EFFORTS IN WEST FAILURE

[By Ricardo Chacon]

[Excerpts] San Salvador, 19 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- A high-ranking Salvadoran military chief said today that the guerrilla strategy of covering the country with small units has failed in the western region, the least strife-torn, because the population does not support the rebels.

Colonel Oscar Casanova Vejar, commander of the 2d Infantry headquartered in the western Santa Ana Department, told ACAN-EFE: "The guerrillas are losing the war and are experiencing a period of contraction, not expansion."

"The Salvadoran guerillas can say anything, they can say that they are everywhere in the national territory, but I can assure you that they have been unable to enter the west," the officer added. [passage omitted]

The highest ranking officer in the western region said: "For the past 2 years the guerrillas have tried to enter this region, but the people and the constant action of the military have prevented them from doing so."

"In this work," Col Casanova Vejar said, "the civilian population has played an essential role. we believe that without the support of the people we would have been unable to stop the guerrillas from spreading."

According to Casanova Vejar, there are currently 144 requests in the western region for joint projects between the Army and the civilian population. "In general, we are winning the war; the guerrillas are losing a lot of people; there are increasing desertions; and they have been unable to spread," Col Casanova Vajar noted emphatically. [passage omitted]

Col Casanova Vejar also expressed enthusiasm about the reactivation of the Central American Defense Council (Condeca), which was founded in the 1960's under the sponsorship of Nicaraguan dictator Anastasio Somoza as an attempt to fight communism.

"It is extremely interesting that the nations of the Central American isthmus are reactivating Condeca, and in this way they will be able to give a united reply to political and military problems." The officer stated that Nicaragua can also participate in the reactivation of Condeca, because "the day is not far when the Sandinists will have to get out of Nicaragua, and then we will be perfectly able to include that country."

GUATEMALA, UK RESUME CONSULAR RELATIONS

[Excerpt] Guatemala City, 19 Aug (AFP) -- The Governments of Guatemala and Great Britain resumed consular relations today following a 5-year break in relations caused by the territorial conflict over Belize. Guatemalans have yet to recognize Belize's independence.

The Foreign Ministry issued a communique this morning reporting the resumption of relations. It stressed that Guatemala hopes Great Britain "will help in the search for a negotiated solution" to the dispute over Belize. Guatemala broke all relations with the British in 1981 after Belize's independence was officially proclaimed without a settlement being reached with the Guatemalan Government, which has claimed that territory for the past century.

The new Guatemalan Constitution includes the possibility of a popular referendum, thus making the Guatemalan position more flexible in the face of possible negotiations on recognizing what would be the sixth nation in the Central American isthmus.

The Christian Democratic administration has shown a willingness to negotiate a "real but just solution" to this conflict. Diplomatic circles have interpreted this as a sign that the possibility of recognizing Belize exists, so as long as an agreement is reached first.

The text of the agreement marking the beginning of a new stage in the bilateral relations was published in London and Guatemala City.

Guatemala maintains that any negotiation should be through the British, while Belize and Great Britain believe this must take place directly between Belizeans and Guatemalans. [passage omitted]

NICARAGUA

RAMIREZ PRESENTS C.A. ECONOMIC COOPERATION PLAN

PA200022 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1930 GMT 19 Aug 86

[Text] This morning Vice President Sergio Ramirez Mercado inaugurated the meeting of Central American foreign trade ministers and central bank presidents, who will discuss a way to speed up and revitalize the trade of the area countries.

At the inauguration of the event, which is being held at the Cesar Augusto Silva Convention Center, the vice president made a proposal to the other Central American representatives to speed up industrial and commercial development, as well as financing for the Central American Bank of Economic Integration [BCIE].

The seven points proposed by Ramirez included the joint negotiation of Central American export products to get better prices and a joint search for new markets, including those of socialist countries. Regarding this, Nicaragua offered its assistance because of its experience in dealing with these markets since the triumph of the revolution.

The Nicaraguan vice president highlighted the importance of the meeting and called it another mechanism in the search for peace in Central America. He also mentioned the Chicago proposal presented by Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega during his recent visit to the United States.

[Begin Ramirez recording] To the Nicaraguan Government, peace is essential for development, just as certain contributions -- such as this meeting -- are beneficial for development and strengthen the idea that we must advance in our path to peace.

The Nicaraguan Government feels that very close and effective economic cooperation among the Central American countries more necessary than ever, regardless of how difficult the present circumstances are.

If our wish is to achieve peace and a lasting coexistence in the long term, then economic cooperation and the reactivation of regional integration can become a decisive factor in this struggle for peace.

Regarding this, my government proposes to the other Central American governments that you represent, the following plan that will put us in a position to increase our strength vis-a-vis international economic cooperation to find ways to make the crisis more bearable or to overcome it, because it is a crisis that is seriously affecting our countries. Nicaragua proposes:

1. That, in view of the upcoming meeting between the Central American countries and the EEC countries to be held in Guatemala in January at the foreign minister level, we should draft a Central American proposal for cooperation, perhaps for the medium and long terms. This proposal should include the financing of industrial production so it can operate at a maximum capacity and result in the resumption of trade among the countries of the region. This proposal should also include a technological updating of Central American industry, which should be financed in the same way. [sentence as heard]

2. That the Central American countries should prepare joint proposals for the financing of capital for the BCIE. These proposals should be made to EEC, the miltilateral credit organizations, and the bilateral credit organizations. In this way, the BCIE can meet the demand for credits to reactivate production and exports from the countries of the region to other markets. In this way, the BCIE can also help in the regional trade.

3. That, by common agreement, the Central American countries should present proposals for preferential treatment for the exportation of our products to markets whose access is barred to us. This effort must become a permanent political action promoted by all.

4. That when the time comes the Central American countries should present joint positions to negotiate the prices of our traditional exports -- such as the case of coffee at the International Coffee Organization -- as a way to defend our balance of payments and our exports in the face of the dangers affecting these prices which are on the verge of collapse.

5. That new markets for Central American products be jointly explored. Regarding this, Nicaragua can offer its experience with the new markets it has had access to since the revolutionary triumph. These markets include those of socialist countries.

6. That we carry out joint projects for the exploitation of our resources, especially the sea resources in border areas.

7. That we speed up the regional trade. For this, Nicaragua is willing to support the draft document on Central American import rights which will be discussed at this meeting.

To conclude, Messrs Ministers and Presidents, on behalf of my government I want to reiterate this fraternal and friendly greeting and welcome you to our fatherland and to wish you success in this meeting. Finally, I want to declare this work session opened. Thank you. [applause]

GOVERNMENT HOPES TO MEET CHURCH LEADERS SOON

[Text] Nicaraguan Vice President Sergio Ramirez Mercado said yesterday that a dialogue with the church hierarchy has been proposed and that the government is hoping this dialogue will be held as soon as possible.

Vice President Ramirez did not respond to a question on whether the issue of the return of Msgr Vega and Msgr Carballo to the country and the reopening of Radio Catolica will be on the agenda. According to Cardinal Obando y Bravo, these issues will be brought up by the hierarchy.

"The meeting must be prepared, and for this we have a permanent liaison committee between the church and the government. I do not know what issues will be included on the agenda," Ramirez said.

However, Ramirez said the church hierarchy is willing to attend the dialogue which has been proposed by the government. This meeting will be held after President Daniel Ortega returns to Nicaragua.

Vice President Ramirez visited the offices of the Labor Ministry yesterday to see the condition of these installations. The Labor Ministry is located in an old building that must be repaired. Ramirez reportedly met with the minister and other officials.

7 CIVILIANS KILLED IN REPORTED CONTRA AMBUSH

BOS DELEGATES BEGIN CONGRESS IN SAN JOSE

[Text] San Jose, 16 Aug (AFP) -- The Southern Opposition Bloc, BOS, an organization fighting the Sandinist government, initiated its first congress in this capital today to choose its leaders and outline proposals for a future government in Nicaragua.

A total of 74 delegates of the BOS groups -- the Movement for Recovery [Movimiento de Rescate], ARDE, Nicaraguan Professionals in Exile [Profesionales Nicaraguenses en El Exilio], and the Social Christian Movement in Exile [Movimiento Social Cristiano en El Exilio] -- 35 observers from non-BOS Nicaraguan opposition groups, and 15 guests are participating in the congress, being held in a San Jose hotel and will last until Monday.

BOS leader Alfredo Cesar said that a permanent 30-member assembly, a board of directors, a finance commission, a secretary general, and those in charge of BOS military operations, foreign policy, domestic policy, and propaganda will be elected.

Cesar said this will be the first time that the anti-Sandinist opposition has held a meeting of this kind with broad participation of and representation by the movement's bases.

He also said that after the meeting concludes on Monday, an important document will be released. The document will serve to introduce a plan for a government platform in Nicaragua. "This platform opposes the totalitarian alternative that the Sandinist regime offers at present."

Cesar reported that the special guests include the assistants to congressmen Edwards of the Republican Party and Skelton of the Democratic Party, as well as delegates of the Christian Democratic Organization of American, ODCA; the Democratic Action Party of Venezuela; the Confederation of Honduran Workers; and the National Liberation Party of Costa Rica.

The leaderdenied that military issues will be discussed during the meeting, since the anti-Sandinists will be receiving the $100 million aid that the U.S. Government approved.

It was mentioned that the BOS is slated to receive at least $5 million of this aid.

Cesar Predicts War Escalation

[Text] San Jose, 17 Aug (AFP) -- The BOS, which will get at least $5 million of the $100 million that the U.S. Government will give to the anti-Sandinist rebels, predicts an escalation of the war in Nicaragua's rural and urban areas in the coming 6 months.

BOS leader Alfredo Cesar told AFP that the movement's combatants -- he estimated them to be less than 1,000 -- are already committed to the struggle in Nicaragua's southern and Atlantic areas. He warned, however, that their actions will be stepped up when the U.S. aid arrives.

He thinks the last chance for a peaceful solution to the Nicaraguan conflict was lost when the Contadora document for peace failed to be signed on 6 June "due to the intransigency" of the Sandinist leaders.

According to Cesar -- president of the Movement for Recovery and National Conciliation, a BOS member organization -- the Sandinists "have not yielded to one single domestic or security point," despite the other Central American countries' repeated requests.

He said that this situation and the $100 million aid for the contras that the U.S. Senate ratified last week will lead to an escalation of war "that will likely reach the cities for the first time."

Thanks to a cooperation agreement with the Nicaraguan Opposition Unity, UNO, 2 months ago, the BOS succeeded in securing for itself at least $5 million of this aid.

The agreement was reached -- amid strong discrepancies, mainly because of the presence of well-known former Somozists in the FDN, a UNO member -- as a condition demanded by the United States to aid the anti-Sandinist rebels.

Cesar said that this coordination occurs in the political field -- for instance, the presence of top UNO leaders in the first BOS assembly held in San Jose this weekend -- and in the military field, where, he said, the militarymen of the two groups fight "together but not side-by-side."

He added that, in accordance with the aid plan approved by the U.S. Government, the BOS, formed by five organizations in exile, is scheduled to receive at least $5 million that will go directly to the BOS combatants.

He said that the leadership of these forces -- most of them formerly commanded by Eden Pastora, "Commander Cero," who withdrew from the struggle on 15 May -- has been entrusted to young cadres such as "Franklyn," Justiciero," and "el Duende," among others.

He explained that other well-known military leaders such as "Tito" Chamorro and "Popo" Chamorro, have abandoned the struggle, basically for reasons of health or age, and work in BOS as political leaders.

Cesar insisted that the BOS combatants are on Nicaraguan soil, because the organization abides by Costa Rican law and this country's neutrality. He said further: "There can be no war from San Jose, because this would be fatal for us. The BOS does not agree to lead the struggle from San Jose."

It was recalled that, during the government of former president Luis Alberto Monge, Costa Rica faced serious problems because of the presence in the country's north of combatants who even had camps in the country.

Cesar also feels that, at present, there is a favorable opportunity for the Nicaraguan opposition unified in the BOS.

He referred specifically to the recent Socialist International meeting in Peru, in which the BOS was accepted as an observer and support for the Sandinist revolution's initial project, which the Managua government has not yet fulfilled, was ratified.

Finally, he predicted an escalation of the struggle in Nicaragua in the coming 6 months and that, once this term ends, dialogue, proposals and counterproposals on the country's violent situation could be initiated.

Seeks No U.S. Intervention

[Text] San Jose, 18 Aug (AFP) -- The BOS, an organization that brings together Nicaraguan Social Democratic and Christian Democratic groups in exile, asked the United States today to rule out the possibility of a direct intervention in Nicaragua.

BOS President Alfredo Cesar said the fact that communism has been introduced in Nicaragua does not give western powers the right to intervene in Nicaragua.

"We welcome the aid foreign governments may give our cause, but we will never allow others to do things in Nicaragua for us," Cesar said during the closing session of the first BOS congress.

Cesar also said that the BOS will continue to support guerrilla groups that fight the Nicaraguan Government until the Sandinists fulfill their promises of political pluralism, nonalignment, and respect for a mixed economy system, such as the one which existed when they came to power in 1979.

The BOS ended its first regular congress today. In attendance were 70 delegates, as well as observers from other anti-Sandinist groups and several Latin American Social Democratic and Social Christian organizations.

The BOS Congress condemned press freedom violations and religious persecution in Nicaragua, and accused the FSLN of leading the country "to destruction."

U.S. REFUSES TO JOIN GORBACHEV'S MORATORIUM CALL

FL191441 Havana Radio Progreso Network in Spanish 1100 GMT 19 Aug 86

[Text] The U.S. Government has rejected Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's call for declaring a nuclear test moratorium. Washington's spokesman Larry Speakes said a nuclear moratorium would not benefit the United States because these weapons need to be further developed. Speakes said nuclear tests guarantee the country's defense because they ensure continued improvements in war systems.

The U.S. reaction was made almost immediately after Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev announced in Moscow the extension until next 1 January of the unilateral moratorium adopted by the Soviet Union a year ago.

ORTEGA CITED ON 'VIETNAMIZATION' OF C.A.

PA191636 Havana International Service in Spanish 1600 GMT 19 Aug 86

[Text] The beginning of the U.S. aggression in Central America is similar to the U.S. intervention in Vietnam, said Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega in Managua, responding to remarks by Costa Rican President Oscar Arias. The Costa Rican president recently said he does not believe in the possibility of a U.S. invasion of Nicaragua because he trusts that U.S. President Ronald Reagan will keep his word and not send Yankee soldiers to fight in Central America. Daniel Ortega indicated that if Reagan made this statement to President Arias, he has reason to believe him. Nevertheless, Ortega insisted that Central America is currently experiencing a U.S.-inspired process of Vietnamization. He recalled that the U.S. Congress has already approved sending military advisers to work with the Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries, an action that directly involves U.S. personnel in the aggression against Nicaragua.

'OUR AMERICA' COMMENTARY ON SALVADORAN DIALOGUE

["Our America" commentary]

[Text] With the sluggishness that has characterized every step of the third dialogue with the guerrilla forces, the Salvadoran regime has still not asked Mexico for permission to hold the preparatory meeting there. The meeting is scheduled for 20 August.

In view of the delay, it would not be surprising if the date of the meeting is changed. The purpose of the meeting is to discuss, among other issues, the rebels' demand to make public the subjects for talks, a demand that the Duarte government refuses to accept.

Nevertheless, the FMLN-FDR is maintaining the offer made last July to free Colonel Omar Napoleon Avalos, former Civil Aeronautics director, if the regime releases political prisoners.

Inasmuch as the moment of the talks is inevitably drawing closer for the regime, it is important to note that despite the increasing U.S. support, there is evidence the rebel forces' fighting capacity has not diminished. They have become more organized to the point of forcing the Armed Forces to depend increasingly on U.S. support to continue with the counterinsurgency campaign.

General John Galvin, U.S. Southern Command chief, said his country has spent $100 million annually in recent years to support the Salvadoran Army. Despite this, the Salvadoran regime is forced to use 40 percent of the nation's budget to finance the war, a situation that could cause financial collapse.

Duarte and other government officials admitted this was possible when they explained why the government was implementing the economic measures. This proved, among other things, that no matter how much help they receive from the United States, a significant percentage to finance the war must come from state funds.

The problem for the Salvadoran authorities is not an easy one to solve. If the war demands more money, which will require implementing unpopular measures, dissatisfaction among the people will increase, and the crisis will become more serious, until it becomes a cycle without solution.

At this point, the Salvadoran working class has realized what the continuation and financing of the conflict by the authorities would mean. During a meeting last July, the National Union of Salvadoran Workers proposed a series of measures for peace and reconstruction.

It is undeniable that in face of the current crisis, with the economy affected by an unjust war, the people's increasing disapproval, and other factors affecting its stability, the Jose Napoleon Duarte regime is being forced to hold a dialogue with the forces that have all the people's support.

BRIEFS

SUSPENSION OF ARGENTINE CREDITS -- Havana (REUTER) -- According to statements made yesterday by diplomatic sources, the Central Bank of Argentina has suspended commercial credits to Cuba because of growing delays in Cuban payments of its commercial debts. Last year Argentina supplied Cuba with credit worth $2.6 billion. According to the sources, Argentina suspended its trade credits 3 weeks ago, halting a $120-million loan made in February for the construction of 2,000 Varadero beach hotel rooms. Other projects were also suspended. Cuban payments arrears began accumulating in early July after it formally suspended the interest and principal payments on its medium- and long-term debt. These payments were due 1 July and were suspended due to an acute shortage of foreign exchange. The government, however, has not formally acknowledged this suspension of remittance abroad. GOVERNMENT PROTESTS UK OVERFLYING IN S. ATLANTIC

PY202137 Buenos Aires TELAM in Spanish 2052 GMT 20 Aug 86

[Text] Buenos Aires, 20 Aug (TELAM) -- In a note sent to UN Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar, the Argentine Ministry of Foreign Relations and Worship has rejected the alleged British protection zone established in the Argentine sea.

The following is a text of the Argentine Foreign Ministry note:

Regarding the recent overflying of Argentine fishing ships by British Air Force planes, the Argentine Ministry of Foreign Relations and Worship hereby announces that it has sent a note to the UN secretary general in which it once again rejects the alleged British "protection zone," reports the above events, and lodges the appropriate protest.

FOREIGN MINISTRY CONSULTS BRAZIL ON NUCLEAR TESTS

[Text] Buenos Aires, 19 Aug (TELAM) -- The Argentine Foreign Ministry has consulted with Brazil's Itamaraty Palace regarding the Serra Cachimbo military installations. The answer given by the Sarney government has been considered satisfactory because Serra Cachimbo is not a nuclear installation, it is a base for conventional missiles.

TELAM was told this by an Argentine Foreign Ministry source, who also stated that the base was established in 1979, when Ernesto Geisel was president. He served until March 1979, when Joao Figueiredo assumed power -- both presidents were members of the military. If, in 1986, Brazil does not have the knowledge to produce the atomic bomb or nuclear warheads, it surely would have been impossible for it to have done so in 1979.

Jose Goldemberg, rector of Sao Paulo University, today stated that any type of installation at Serra Cachimbo would be useless, because it will take Brazil years to obtain the complete cycle of nuclear fuel. He also stressed that Brazil possesses neither uranium nor plutonium because it is not interested in organizing a serious program for the development of atomic weapons.

In statements to a morning newspaper of this capital, Goldemberg said that Brazil did not accept the inclusion of a clause with Argentina for mutual inspection in the nuclear sector, a point that was presumably proposed by Argentina within the framework of the cooperation agreements that were signed with Brazil.

Regarding the Serra Cachimbo installations, the newspaper FOLHA DE SAO PAULO, citing a report by the ANSA agency datelined Sao Paulo, the Brazilian Presidency has decided not to comment further on the excavations located there or on the possibility of carrying out nuclear tests at that location.

The Italian agency also reports that Paulo Tarso Flecha, the secretary general of Itamaraty, has stressed that the mutual inspection of nuclear installations between his country and Argentina could be carried out through a process of reciprocal information along the path of ever-increasing bilateral cooperation.

MINISTER SAYS STATE OF SIEGE 'AT ANY MOMENT'

[Text] La Paz, 20 Aug (EFE) -- President Victor Paz Estenssoro's Cabinet today began an emergency meeting to evaluate the atmosphere of social tension prevailing in Bolivia after a clash between demonstrators and policemen resulted in more than a dozen injuries and 53 arrests in Oruro.

Interior Minister Fernando Barthelemy stated today that the Cabinet will evaluate the prevailing "social agitation caused by political elements that clearly seek to create an atmosphere of subversive upheaval," adding "a state of siege might be invoked at any moment." The latest clashes took place yesterday during a demonstration staged by students, housewives, workers, and peasants against the government mining policy. The demonstration was organized by the Oruro Civic Committee, a nongovernment organization composed of all the representative sectors of this department, which have been on a general indefinite strike for 1 week.

Police sent from La Paz (239 km north of Oruro), stopped the demonstrators from reaching the main square of the town by using tear gas and birdshot, while the workers were hurling dynamite sticks. The clashes ended after 3 hours because of a snowstorm that began as night fell and continued into the early hours of this morning.

The departments of Oruro and Potosi have gone on strike against the government mining plan, which provides for closing down several state-run mines in keeping with IMF and World Bank instructions, according to the workers.

In addition to Oruro and Potosi Departments and the mining sector, the University of La Paz and the Bolivian Power Company are on strike. As a result of this, several sectors of La Paz -- including hospitals -- have experienced power cuts. The power company workers are demanding an improvement of their economic situation. According to Barthelemy, "subversion seeks to scuttle the economic policy in the first place, and overthrow the government in the second place."

Hernan Antelo, the spokesman of the executive branch, has stated that groups of the extreme left want to take advantage of the protests in Oruro and Potosi, and the strike which the Bolivian Labor Confederation (COB) has called for 21 and 22 August. The Labor ministry has declared the COB strike "illegal." The COB called a 48-hour strike to support the strike of Potosi and Oruro Departments and that of the mineworkers. The COB strike is also intended to repudiate the presence of U.S. troops in Bolivia (at the request of the government to help it fight drug trafficking) and the government economic policy.

Antelo said the Cabinet will approve a rehabilitation plan for the Mining Corporation of Bolivia (Comibol), which will be implemented in the next 48 hours. The objective of the plan will be to prevent the closing of the mines.

Paz Estenssoro decided to close down some unprofitable mining enterprises of the Comibol in August 1985, when he announced his economic plan at the beginning of his term.

In view of the COB's initial protests against the plan in September 1985, the government imposed a state of siege which lasted 3 months.

Arrests, 'Repression' in Oruro

PY201912 La Paz Radio Fides Network in Spanish 1641 GMT 20 Aug 86

[Text] In Bolivia's folklore capital, the city of Oruro, reports of arrests and intimidation, especially against leftwing party militants, are being made continuously. According to the Center of Law School University Students, these arrests and intimidation began with the arrival of policemen and Interior Ministry agents from the city of La Paz.

We will now contact Oruro. Good afternoon, Romulo Quintana from Radio Universidad. Go ahead.

[Begin Quintana relay] Good afternoon, dear listeners of Radio Fides network.

Oruro is united and strong. The Oruro people are united and are strongly demanding their rights. All the labor union and civic organizations in our department have halted their activities. Only the Oruro prefecture and the police are working to repress the Oruro people.

There are no train services at all. There are no buses on the streets. The markets are closed and the factories halted. On orders from union leaders, the Oruro banks are closed, in observance of the Oruro people's strike.

Activity at the Vinto [smelting plant] is reduced to emergency services. I am quoting information from the National Smelting Enterprise [ENAF]. Roads to La Paz and Potosi are blocked by mineworkers and peasants. University students have mobilized to guarantee the effectiveness of the civic-labor stoppage being staged by the Oruro people.

This is the 6th consecutive day of the strike in Oruro, despite the intimidation and repression of the official organizations. This is what is happening in our department and the strike, I repeat, the strike ordered by the Oruro Labor Federation and the Oruro Civic Committee is being strictly observed.

That is all for now and we will give you more news later. Go ahead. Thank you, very much. [end relay]

Thank you.

INTERIOR MINISTER DENOUNCES STRIKE PROMOTERS

PY210215 La Paz La Red Panamericana in Spanish 0000 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Text] Interior Minister Fernando Barthelemy has stated he will request the prosecution of those responsible for the power cuts that endangered the lives of hospitalized persons. He said there is a plan preconceived by the Bolivian Labor Confederation [COB] that allows employees of the Bolivian Electric Power Company [COBEE] to use this form of pressure to achieve increases in salaries.

The COB officials have adopted an irresponsible position, amounting to blackmail, and endangering the lives of many persons, the interior minister stated. Clearly annoyed, Barthelemy accused the members of the Patriotic Convergence Faction [Convergencia Patriotica] and the Board for the Defense of the National Sovereignty of causing the social unrest prevailing in the country. The minister added that it should be understood once and for all that stoppages and other coercive measures will not solve our national problems.

Minister Barthelemy stated that the government will maintain order in compliance with the national Constitution and the law, because we cannot continue within the framework of anarchy, while the country needs solutions to its serious problems. He concluded by urging all Bolivians to work constructively saying that this is what the country needs to promote the improvement of the country's economic situation.

In a statement released by Ambassador Pablo Valdes, the Foreign Ministry's spokesman, the Foreign Ministry acknowledges that on 19 August Spanish Ambassador Miguel Solano Aza expressed his concern to Foreign Minister Jaime del Valle about the information regarding the spying, which was denounced in Madrid by the Spanish Foreign Ministry. Following is the statement that Ambassador Pablo Valdes read to the press:

[Begin recording] [Valdes] During the late afternoon of 19 August, the Spanish ambassador met with Foreign Minister Jaime del Valle and expressed his concern about the information received from Madrid indicating that Chilean intelligence services are apparently spying on the Spanish Embassy. This information has been provided by two Chileans, who have presumably exiled themselves voluntarily. The ambassador has requested that the pertinent investigation be carried out. In accordance with this request the Foreign Ministry will make the appropriate inquiries. [end recording]

[Contreras] For his part, Spanish Ambassador Miguel Solano Aza has admitted that on 19 August he expressed his concern to Foreign Minister Jaime del Valle about the information pertaining to the Chilean espionage, whose perpetrators -- as has been mentioned -- have presumably released the details of the spying and are now out of the country.

Jose Francisco Contreras has reported from the Foreign Ministry. [end relay]

Del Valle 'Expressed Surprise'

PY201233 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1033 GMT 20 Aug 86

[Excerpt] Madrid, 20 Aug (EFE) -- A spokesman for the Spanish Foreign Ministry told EFE today that the Chilean Government has promised to investigate the alleged espionage activities carried out at the Spanish Embassy in Madrid and to "provide an explanation" of this event.

During a meeting last night, Chilean Foreign Minister Jaime del Valle promised the Spanish ambassador in Santiago, Miguel Solana, he would investigate the affair.

According to the Spanish Foreign Ministry spokesman, the Chilean foreign minister "expressed surprise" over the affair, of which he said he "was not aware." He "promised" the alleged espionage will be investigated, and the results will be relayed to the Spanish Government. Another Spanish Foreign Ministry source indicated that "the appropriate information is being awaited from Chilean authorities" and no decision will be made until the results of the investigation are known. CHILEAN, SOVIET SHIPS USING 'FORGED LICENSES'

[Text] Authorities from the Northern Naval District, based in Iquique, have requested that the 4th Iquique District Court investigate the issuance of forged fishing vessel licenses. The court has evidence that 10 ships are operating with forged licenses.

Details of these charges -- which may involve Chilean fishing ships operating together with Soviet ships, which are involved in the trafficking of arms to Chile -- is provided by Radio Nacional from Iquique:

[Begin relay] Authorities of the Northern Naval District and of the Iquique Naval Office have submitted a series of charges to the 4th District Court concerning the discovery of falsified fishing vessel licenses. This is particularly important since it may be connected with the activities of some fishing boats involved in the trafficking of Soviet arms.

Although there is complete secrecy, it is believed that more than 10 ships are now operating with forged licenses along the Chilean coast.

The serious charges raised before the local court will mean an investigation will be undertaken at the national level in all ports, particularly since Soviet ships are operating along the vast Chilean sea coast a little beyond the 200-mile limit.

Up to now the Northern Naval District and the Iquique Naval District offices have been silent on this issue, but the news has created great interest. [end relay]

FPMR ISSUES COMMUNIQUES ON KIDNAPPED COLONEL

[By Juan Jorge Faundes]

[Excerpt] Santiago, 18 Aug (EFE) -- The Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front (FPMR) armed group tonight warned that the life of kidnapped Army Colonel Mario Haberle Rivadeneira is at stake "if the regime continues its repressive maneuvers." The FPMR issued this warning in a communique in which it also claimed credit for the kidnapping on 18 August. The FPMR also confirmed it was "holding" the colonel and issued another communique addressed to the Chilean Armed Forces.

The FPMR -- a Marxist group that has been operating in Chile for 2 and 1/2 years -- delivered the communique along with the identity card of the colonel and a photograph. To make this delivery, the front's self-styled spokesman telephoned EFE and two other international news agencies and instructed them to go to a place in Santiago's Las Condes neighborhood. The photograph shows the officer sitting -- apparently calmly -- at his place of detention. He is dressed in his military uniform, and a hooded person armed with a submachinegun is standing by him. The FPMR flag and the Chilean national flag are displayed behind them.

In the first communique, the kidnappers state they "have been forced to hold" the high-ranking officer, who is chief of protocol at the Santiago Military Garrison, "in order to make sure that we will be heard." The armed group adds: "We want to warn all Chileans about Pinochet's desperate maneuvers to remain in power forever, for which he will not hesitate to unleash another bloodbath in our fatherland." The communique also said: "The colonel's detention is a reaction to these maneuvers and a warning."

FRG MINISTER COMMENTS ON NUCLEAR AGREEMENT

[Text] The FRG Government does not intend to renegotiate with the Brazilian Government the basic Nuclear Agreement signed between the two countries in 1975 in view of Brazil's decision to reduce its rate of development by postponing several projects. It will complete only the Angra II and Angra II nuclear power plants.

This intention will be restated today by FRG Research and Technology Minister Heinz Riesenhuber during a meeting with President Jose Sarney and Science and Technology Minister Renato Archer. Riesenhuber yesterday explained in Rio de Janeiro that he also does not believe that Brazil is interested in renegotiating the agreement between the governments since the necessary adjustments will be made only by the enterprises involved (KWU and Nuclebras).

The main goal of the FRG minister's visit to Brazil is to hold discussions with Brazilian authorities in order to identify projects aimed at expanding technological cooperation. As an example, he cited the health, environmental, biotechnology, and electronic research fields.

Riesenhuber denied reports that the FRG will not enter into an agreement with Brazil similar to the one signed in 1975. He made it clear that there has been a misinterpretation and that the fact that a decision has now been made to build only two reactors and not eight does not change in the least the broad cooperation agreement between Brazil and the FRG.

NUCLEAR INSPECTION CLAUSE WITH ARGENTINA REJECTED

[Text] Buenos Aires, 19 Aug (EFE) -- Brazil has rejected a clause of mutual inspection with Argentina in the area of nuclear energy. The clause was to be included in the integration agreement between the two countries, signed by Presidents Jose Sarney and Raul Alfonsin two weeks ago.

The daily TIEMPO ARGENTINO today published exclusive remarks by Jose Goldemberg, rector of the University of Sao Paulo, who said that it is not in Brazil's interest to accept such inspections, even though it does not intend to produce nuclear arms.

On the other hand, sources from the Argentine nuclear sector today said that they are "in direct communication with the people in Brazil" about the facilities in Serra do Cachimbo which, according to the Brazilian press, are capable of testing nuclear arms.

The Argentine position favors signing an agreement of mutual inspection to prevent either of the two countries from using nuclear energy for military purposes, but without the obligation to disclose industrial secrets. Argentina possesses an advanced nuclear industrial technology. The country's products range from natural uranium to the heavy water needed to cool its three nuclear reactors now in operation. Argentina also manufactures Zircaloy tubes, needed to place the enriched uranium inside the reactor.

CNI DESERTERS REPORT ON SPYING ACTIVITIES

[Text] Madrid, 20 Aug (AFP) -- Official Spanish sources reported here today that Chilean secret services have been spying on the Spanish Embassy in Santiago for at least 2 months, making a special effort to intercept coded messages. According to the information disclosed today, the espionage operation was also against the embassies of the United States, Italy, the Netherlands, Venezuela, and Uruguay.

A high-ranking official of the Spanish Foreign Ministry reported that Spain's Government had been aware of what was going on for 1 month. He added that no significant document having to do with Spanish security was intercepted.

Two Chilean military men who were working for the CNI (National Intelligence Center) revealed -- before deserting and fleeing the country -- that most of the documents intercepted by the CNI were obtained in pieces from the wastepaper basket of the Spanish Embassy and then patiently put together. The two deserters are Patricio Geldres, 33, and Victor Enrique, 31, who reported -- according to the morning daily EL PAIS -- CNI's interest in the wastepaper baskets of the five [as received] diplomatic missions. Geldres and Enrique stated the CNI had the necessary means to piece together the documents, which had been put through special machines to destroy them.

The Chilean intelligence agency had also managed to decode some of the messages the Spanish Embassy in Santiago exchanged with the government in Madrid, the informers said. Among the documents mentioned by Geldres and Enrique are 11 letters that the Spanish ambassador in Santiago, Miguel Solano Aza, sent to Spanish Foreign Minister Francisco Fernandez Ordonez. These letters have been fully decoded by the CNI.

Because of the disclosures the Spanish Foreign Ministry summoned the head of the Chilean diplomatic mission in Madrid late last night (2200). The results of the meeting are not yet known.

Foreign Ministry To Inquire

PY202202 Santiago Radio Chilena in Spanish 1700 GMT 20 Aug 86

[Text] Here in Santiago, our country's Foreign Ministry has neither confirmed nor denied the reports published by the Spanish press. The Foreign Ministry limited itself to stating that yes, on 19 August the Spanish ambassador in Santiago, Miguel Solano Aza, had submitted all the pertinent information to the Foreign Ministry.

We are now in contact with the Foreign Ministry, and reporter Jose Francisco Contreras will give us more information regarding this incident:

[Begin relay] [Contreras] Good afternoon. The Foreign Ministry has mentioned the possiblity that the two persons who supplied the information regarding Chile's spying on the Spanish Embassy in Santiago may now have left the country.

The FPMR went on to call upon the Armed Forces to "stop supporting Pinochet" and the High Command and urged them "not to get involved in the crimes against our people." It concluded by saying: "An immediate return to democracy is the best thing for the fatherland." The same position is reiterated in a more detailed manner in the second communique addressed to the members of the Armed Forces. This communique also announced that a new message will be forthcoming to the news media.

The delivery of the FPMR communiques took place amid intensive search and rescue operations that police and security forces are carrying out in Santiago. [passage omitted]

Government Bans Media Reports

[Text] Santiago, 20 Aug (AFP) -- Effective tonight, the Chilean military government banned the dissemination of reports on the kidnapping of Army Colonel Mario Haberle Rivadeneira. The clandestine and leftist FPMR claimed responsibility Tuesday for the kidnapping.

The National Division of Social Communication (Dinacos) stated: "The freedom of information and opinion is restricted in regard to the kidnapping." It warned: "The media must abstain from disseminating in any way and through any means, reports or opinions regarding this action, except for those officially issued by the government. All this is done so as not to obstruct the investigations that are underway."

The FPMR National Directorate claimed responsibility for the kidnapping, noting that it was forced to keep the colonel "so that we will be heard;" it distributed a photograph showing the military officer with his glasses on and wearing his uniform. He was sitting in front of a large FPMR flag with an armed rebel behind him.

An 8,000-man contingent of policemen and security agents have increased their operations in Santiago to find Col Haberle, who was kidnapped Monday morning.

Raids Fail To Locate Colonel

[Text] Santiago, 20 Aug (AFP) -- Military patrols have raided many areas in Santiago as the deadline established for the release of Army Colonel Mario Haberle by his abductors passed tonight. A communique released by the leftist FPMR had announced that it would release its hostage today, at 1800.

Shortly before that time, Army personnel raided several residences in the eastern sector of the city, where Col Haberle was kidnapped on 18 August by an armed FPMR commando, according to residents of the La Reina, Penalolen, and Las Condes districts. In one raid, the soldiers entered the Catholic school Hermanos de la Salle, but no arrests have been reported.

PRESIDENT DENIES TIME ITEM ON U.S. ANTIDRUG HELP

[Text] Quito, 17 Aug (AFP) -- Ecuadoran President Leon Febres Cordera, in Guayaquil for the weekend, has denied a report in TIME magazine's latest issue claiming that his government has asked the United States for troops to fight drug trafficking. The U.S. Embassy in Quito also denied this. "In Ecuador, terrorism and drug trafficking are fought with Ecuadoran resources and the legal instruments created to protect Ecuadoran society," the president said. The U.S. mission in Quito reacted to TIME's report by saying that "there has been no such request" and that Ecuador is doing a magnificent job regarding the fight against drug trafficking.

A communique issued by the embassy states that the United States is helping Ecuador technically and financially, but that it believes that military assistance is neither necessary nor appropriate." U.S. military personnel participated in antinarcotics operations in Bolivia, prompting protests from various sectors there.

CENTRAL BANK MODIFIES CERTAIN EXCHANGE RATES

[Text] In a move that took importers by surprise, the Central Bank yesterday modified the exchange rate in the controlled market, increasing it from 110 sucres to 165.50 sucres per dollar, a 50-percent devaluation. Petroleum exports, public sector imports, and payments on the foreign debt are handled through this controlled market, as established last week by the Monetary Board which removed the foreign currency for all the other exports and imports from control. Yesterday's decision means the public sector will receive 55 additional sucres for each dollar of exported petroleum but will also have to deposit 55 additional sucres for each dollar to meet foreign obligations and to pay for public imports. The measure also affects the imports conducted before 11 August whose imports permits were still being processed and which had yet to pay the insurance on exchange risks. The refunds for this were paid yesterday at 165.50 sucres. This devaluation also increases the losses of the Central Bank because of the sucretization [sucretization] of the private sector's foreign debt. Central Bank authorities gave neither a verbal nor written explanation of this measure. Meanwhile, in other areas of the public sector, such as the Industries Ministry, the measure was received with surprise.

TWO ALLEGED GUERRILLAS LEAVE AUSTRIAN EMBASSY

[Text] Bogota, 19 Aug (AFP) -- The two alleged Colombian guerrillas who requested political asylum today at the Austrian Embassy in Colombia have left the embassy. They were protected by both the National Commission for Human Rights and the Colombian police.

According to Ambassador Arthur Schuschnigg, embassy officials told Carlos Jimenez Millan and his pregnant wife, Luz Amparo Tamayo, that the Austrian Government grants political asylum only to people who are already in Austria.

Schuschnigg added that in view of that fact, Jimenez and his wife decided to surrender to the Colombian authroities in the presence of a member of the human rights commission.

The Austrian Embassy contacted former Colombian foreign minister Alfredo Vasquez, who is also the president of the aforementioned commission; Vasquez went to the embassy accompanied by lawyer Eduardo Umana.

A high-ranking official of the Colombian police told Schuschnigg that no arrest order for Jimenez and his wife exists. With the Austrian ambassador and other Austrian diplomats as witnesses, the official repeated this information to the two asylum applicants, who left the embassy 10 hours after their arrival.

According to several press reports obtained at the embassy, Jimenez said he was being persecuted for not having any identification documents, and thus being confused with an M-19 member who had pariticpated in the kidnapping of Absalon Cuadros, a doctor and cattleman killed along with three of his kidnappers during a rescue operation carried out in Cali, in the southwestern part of Colombia, last week.

OFFICIALS REVIEW LATIN AMERICAN ECONOMIC FUND

[Text] Lima, 10 Aug (AFP) -- The idea of establishing a Latin American monetary fund in response to the IMF's attitude to ban credits to Peru was reviewed here today during a meeting held by the Peruvian Government authorities and the Andean Group.

Pedro Luis Echeverria, coordinator of the Cartagena Agreement Board, noted that this idea, which has already been proposed by Peruvian President Alan Garcia, might be brought up again at the next meeting of the SELA board, which will be held in Lima in October.

He said that the solidarity of member countries of the Andean Group and of Latin American countries with Peru must be expressed now in order to counteract the IMF's attitude which seeks to isolate Peru financially in view of the courageous attitude that the Peruvian Government has adopted regarding payment of the foreign debt.

Echeverria said that Andean Group countries (Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, and Venezuela) are aware that the foreign debt problem is mainly a political problem that must be resolved in keeping with three basic criteria: to pay the foreign debt with what is left over after fulfilling those economic development and investment goals that have been established by the government; to extend the terms of payment; and to decrease interest rates.

He stated that in addition to the solidarity of the Andean Group, Peru also needs credit lines from Latin American central banks which to some extent will replace those that have been denied to Peru. He added that the Andean Reserve Fund (FAR), which is mentioned as the possible foundation of the Latin American monetary fund, has already aided the Peruvian balance of payments with better terms than those offered by the IMF. Echeverria said that the FAR has granted Peru a $100-million credit while the Andean Development Corporation (CAF) this year will disburse another $100-million credit. Echeverria stated that it is senseless to have integration only in times of an economic boom. If one of the member countries is experiencing a crisis, the Andean integration is willing to offer its cooperation.

Echeverria made these comments after signing an agreement with the Peruvian Government for the establishment of industrial coordination centers to increase the participation of Peruvian manufacturers that are suppliers to the government which this year will purchase a total of $1.6 billion.

BRAZILIAN-URUGUAYAN JOINT DECLARATION

PY210125 Montevideo EL DIA in Spanish 14 Aug 86 p 6

[Text of Brazilian-Uruguayan joint declaration signed in Brasilia on 13 August by Brazilian President Jose Sarney and Uruguayan President Julio Maria Sanguinetti]

[Text] As a result of the conversations between Uruguayan President Julio Maria Sanguinetti and Brazilian President Jose Sarney from 11 to 13 August, during the official visit of the Uruguayan President to Brasilia, the two presidents stated:

They have agreed to continue striving to make more dynamic the traditional ties of friendship, understanding and cooperation that united the Uruguayan and Brazilian peoples.

They have expressed their conviction that the strengthening of democracy is fundamental to achieving a strengthening of bilateral relations, as well as to achieve Latin American solidarity.

They have recognized that the present challenges at the international level may be better confronted through a better integration of Latin American countries to achieve a full social and economic development.

The presidents signed the following declaration:

1. They express their particular satisfaction over the gradual strengthening of the democratic process in Latin America in keeping with their aspirations to achieve development and a better coexistence among the countries in the region.

2. They view with great satisfaction the results of what was agreed upon in Montevideo in August 1985 through the establishment of the first meeting of the General Coordinating Commission and through the meeting of other subcommissions within the framework of the Friendship, Cooperation and Commerce Treaty and other important bilateral juridical agreements.

3. They recognize the advantages of the traditional cooperation in the Laguna Merin Basin and of its expansion within the framework of the Laguna Merin Treaty, the Yaguaron protocol and the works of the Laguna Merin Commission. They express their willingness to implement this protocol and to proceed with the scheduled works. They announced today's signing of a second memorandum of understanding regarding the cooperation treaty for the exploitation of natural resources and the development of the Laguna Merin Basin (the Laguna Merin Treaty), and the protocol for the exploitation of water resources of the areas bordering the Yaguaron River (the Yaguaron River Protocol).

4. They agree on the intention to make more dynamic the border areas of the two countries, especially involving the work assigned to the subcommission for the joint development of border areas, the meetings of which reflect the special interest the two parties share in this regard.

Perez was not at all discouraged by the observation that the countries that support Contadora, such as Mexico and Venezuela, are bankrupt and cannot curb the United States: "You must not abandon realism but, as you Spaniards say, at least we are still entitled to be masters of our own poverty. I believe that Venezuela and Mexico, despite their temporary economic difficulties, have an obligation to continue their action in the search for peace in Central America and for democracy."

"The Central American problem is not confined to Central America, to the isthmus," Andres Perez said: "The war that threatens us would inevitably lead to U.S. intervention. Such an intervention would cause an outright explosion throughout Latin America, creating conditions that could even reverse all we have achieved in this democratization process, which has shined so brightly."

The Venezuelan politician believes that one of the strategic objectives of U.S. policy is to destabilize Nicaragua by means of low intensity warfare. "The United States," he said, "tries to justify it by saying that only by causing a sufficiently profound destabilization of the Sandinist regime can it be induced to negotiate, but this is a false argument. It is a hypocritical argument. They know -- and it has been shown -- that this situation is radicalizing Sandinism even more and could cause it to step up armed action to settle the Central American situation once and for all. Within this radicalization and guerrilla religion a guerrilla-type militarism is unfortunately emerging, and this guerrilla-type militarism is not afraid of war and often seems to care little whether such a war does occur and sometimes seems to want it."

Carlos Andres Perez expressed the desire for the Sandinistas to heed the Socialist International because, he said, its intention is not "to interfere in the process of the Sandinist revolution" but to contribute to the mediation with the United States "within the context of Sandinism's own independent and spontaneous blueprint of political pluralism, a mixed economy, and nonalignment with either bloc."

The Venezuelan politician believes there is "no doubt" that Central America's five countries are an example of "limited sovereignty" because "the superpowers dominate the world and presume to maintain hegemony over the world divided into two blocs. We are here to discuss disarmament and we know that the major obstacle to disarmament is the fact that the superpowers always require a situation of uncertainty to justify the arms race, which is now leading us toward war in outer space. The same is happening to us now in Latin America. The superpowers presume to compete for hegemony within our own countries. The United States believes it is entitled, for geopolitical reasons, to maintain its influence in our region and it is the same with the Soviets when they invade Afghanistan and threaten Poland."

At the Mexico City conference Carlos Andres Perez stated that the only dictatorships left in Latin America are those of Paraguay and Chile. Asked whether he had forgotten Cuba and Nicaragua, the Venezuelan political replied: "Nicaragua is a process which is unfortunately moving toward totalitarianism, as shown by the closure of the daily LA PRENSA. Cuba is now situated on another front. Cuba is a communist country, and we are acquainted with the political, social, and economic parameters within which communism develops. Unfortunately, that problem is now beyond our scope."

SOVIET AMBASSADOR ACCEPTS GROUP OF SIX MEASURES

[Text] Mexico City, 19 Aug (NOTIMEX) -- After saying it is impossible to think that a summit meeting between the two superpowers can be held soon, Soviet Ambassador to Mexico Rostislav Sergeyev has indicated that his country accepts the verification measures proposed by the Group of Six.

In a press conference, the diplomat noted that the unilateral nuclear moratorium announced by the USSR is an immediate response to the Declaration of Mexico issued by the Group of Six. He indicated that his government is willing to have Group of Six envoys verify the handling of its nuclear equipment.

Sergeyev explained that the moratorium announced by Gorbachev is planned to continue through 1 January 1987, but this does not mean that weapons are not going to be built, saying that would be suicide. He added that no war experiments will be conducted with nuclear weapons during this period of time, although nuclear energy will continue to be used in development projects.

Referring to the possibility of a summit meeting between the U.S. and Soviet leaders, he said this is impossible in the near future as Reagan has not modified his international position regarding the arms race. He thinks of safety only in unilateral terms, Sergeyev said, reasserting that the Soviet Union will never initiate a nuclear holocaust, but if the United States strikes first, his country will strike back.

He indicated that since 6 August 1985 the United States has conducted 18 nuclear tests in the Nevada desert, part of which is on the Mexican border. He said the Chernobyl accident was a warning for the socialist country and made it understand the dangers of nuclear energy. He added that the USSR's new philosophy includes the preservation of humankind, not its destruction.

Sergeyev asserted that the Soviet Union has never hidden or wanted to fool the world regarding nuclear tests. On the other hand, the Reagan Administration assured that it does not want to accelerate the arms race but at the same time promotes "star wars," he said. He added that the United States lacks reasonable arguments in explaining to the world why it is continuing nuclear testing. Therefore, he continue, its assertions to the contrary are empty words.

On another matter, the Soviet diplomat confirmed that his country will withdraw six regiments from Afghanistan next December.

Soviet Nuclear Moratorium

FL201135 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 0440 GMT 20 Aug 86

[Text] Mexico City, 19 Aug (NOTIMEX) -- The Mexican Government is pleased with the Soviet Government's decision which responds to one of the most important aims of the Declaration of Mexico -- signed in Ixtapa, Zihuatanejo, on 7 August -- by the Group of Six. This was stated by the Foreign Secretariat in connection with the announcement on 18 August by the General Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union Mikhail Gorbachev on the extension until 1 January 1987, of its unilateral nuclear test moratorium.

Trade [Subhead]

5. They express their satisfaction over the results achieved within the framework of the subcommission to expand trade, because this represents important progress in the fulfillment of these goals shared by the two governments regarding the strengthening of bilateral economic and commerical relations. They express their deep pleasure over the agreements encompassed in the act to be signed today which anticipates a review and expansion of the Commerical Expansion Protocol (PEC) and the achievement of other understandings including agricultural, industrial and services agreements. They believe these agreements, in addition to encouraging the expansion of reciprocal trade, constitute a valuable contribution to the Latin American integration process, which the two presidents decidely support, and in particular to the regional negotiations carried out within the framework of the ALADI.

6. Regarding bilateral relations in the areas of scientific, technological, and technical cooperation, they note the good results obtained from the first meeting of the Sub Commission for Scientific, Technical, and Technological Cooperation and they view with great satisfaction the expansion of bilateral cooperation through the signing of agreements complementary to the basic scientific and technical cooperation agreement in the agricultural, scientific and technological, railroad, technical, and professional training areas. They also note the possible expansion of the previously mentioned cooperation to the areas of informatics and alternative energy sources.

7. They have decided to adopt measures to intensify bilateral cooperation regarding the Antarctic programs of their respective countries and to coordinate their position in those forums where the Antarctic treaty is discussed.

8. They believe that the development of exchange in the educational and cultural fields -- at the level of university and cultural organizatins -- is of fundamental interest for the strengthening of ties between the Uruguayan and Brazilian people and they confirm their decision to continue supporting the work carried out by the Subcommission for Cultural Cooperation.

9. They agree that the dynamism of the permanent relations between Uruguay and Brazil also encompasses other very important areas such as energy, transportation, telecommunications, health, tourism, commerical promotion and busienss contacts, all of which the two governments intend to continue promoting.

Development [Subhead]

10. They reassert their firm conviction that as a result of the contacts and the increasingly intense and profound initiatives between Uruguay and Brazil, important objectives will be achieved which will help the two countries improve the standard of living and the well-being of their peoples within the framework of their efforts to achieve a full material and spiritual development.

11. They recognize the importance of inter-regional trade as an essential element in achieving the general development of Latin American countries, by taking advantage of their complementing economies.

12. They note the special importance of cooperation mechanisms and regional integration and they reassert the intention of strengthening ALADI as a forum of negotiations and agreements; the SELA; and the River Plate Basin Treaty since they are useful tools to achieve the aforementioned lofty objectives.

13. They agree that serious obstacles continue to impede the improvement of the standard of living and the well-being of Latin American countries within the framework of the present international economic crisis.

14. They reassert that these difficulties may be overcome through the enforcement of a new international economic order that will instill a more just and equal treatment of the needs of developing countries, particularly regarding commercial, monetary and financial issues.

15. They express their concern over the enforcement of protectionist measures in developed markets, which affect the multilateral trade system, raising worrisome obstacles to the flow of trade and the access to markets of industrialized nations by developing countries." This is a highly important element in the strategy of developing countries which seek to achieve economic and social growth.

Foreign Debt [subhead]

16. They emphasize the importance of the Cartagena Consensus for dealing with the Latin American countries' foreign-debt problem, and stress the need to tackle this problem from the perspective of its political, social, economic, and commercial aspects. They point out the need to fairly distribute responsibilities for the problem's solution through dialogue between debtor and creditor nations, and consider positive the role of the Follow-up Committee of the Cartagena Consensus. They also renew their determination to fulfill their financial commitments through the sustained growth of their countries' economies, refusing to do so through the lowering of the standard of living of the population.

17. They voice their concern over the serious crisis in Central America, and firmly support the efforts by the Contadora Group to attain a peaceful and negotiated solution to the problems of that region, the deepest roots of which can be traced structural, historical, and social causes. They believe that the Contadora Group can, thus, continue to effectively contribute to finding a solution within the Latin American context.

18. They reaffirm their countries interest in the strengthening of the Inter-American system and the principles that govern relations among the member states. To this effect, they consider the protocol for the reform of the OAS, which was approved in the latest special session of the General Assembly, to be a positive step.

19. They reaffirm their countries' strict adherence to the norms of international law and the basic principles of international coexistence, such as the sovereign equality among states, peaceful solution of conflicts, non-use of force, observance of international treaties and agreements, respect for territorial integrity, self-determination of peoples, and noninterference in internal affairs of other states, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

They note the fundamental role of the United Nations is keeping peace and promoting international cooperation, as well as strengthening the organization for the fulfillment of the objectives set forth in its charter.

Invitation [subhead]

20. They consider disarmament, especially in the nuclear field, to be essential to the strengthening of international peace and security, and reiterate their support for the ultimate objective of general and complete disarmament under adequate international supervision. They reaffirm their adherance to the objective of complete military denuclearization of Latin America, stressing the importance of the effective observance of commitments made to that effect by the military nuclear powers.

21. President Jose Sarney thanked President Julio Maria Sanguinetti for his decided support of the UN proposal that declares the South Atlantic as a zone of peace and cooperation. The two presidents, recalling the responsibility of countries in the area to promote regional cooperation for economic development and peace, reaffirm their governments' determination to keep the region free from conflicts and rivalries that are alien to the region, particularly from the nuclear arms race.

22. They consider the universal and unrestricted observance of human rights to be a basic duty, rejecting any form of racial discrimination. In this regard, they condemn the policy of apartheid implemented by the government of South Africa, equally condemning the illegal occupation of Namibia in disregard of pertinent UN resolutions.

23. President Julio Maria Sanguinetti invited President Jose Sarney to make an official visit to Uruguay. This invitation was accepted and a mutually agreeable date will be set.

ANDRES PEREZ 'PESSIMISTIC' ABOUT CONTADORA

PM201056 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 18 Aug 86 p 6

[Jose Comas dispatch: "Carlos Andres Perez: 'Intransigence of Washington and Managua Will Nullify Contadora Efforts'"]

[Text] Mexico City -- Carlos Andres Perez, former Venezuelan president and deputy chairman of the Socialist International, has well-founded hopes of being nominated again as candidate for president by the Democratic Action Party, which he founded. Pessimistic about the Central American situation and the future of the Contadora Group, he believes the peace efforts in the region are being crushed between the intransigent stances of Washington and Managua. The following interview was conducted recently in Mexico City, where Carlos Andres Perez was attending a conference on disarmament and development.

According to the Venezuelan leader, war over Nicaragua in the near future cannot be ruled out. "The latest events show that the intransigence of both sides is reaching such extremes that it will definitively nullify the Contadora efforts. On the one hand we have the U.S. decision to provide military aid to the contras. It is not just the $100 million. It is illusory and naive to believe that this is the total U.S. aid to the contras. This $100 million is intended merely to commit the United States constitutionally to the war in Central America, but the aid in weapons and military advice is much greater. A major army is being formed to combat Sandinism."

Perez' criticism extends to Sandinism, too, "which refuses to recognize the facts and which has set itself an absurd challenge in connection with this threat, a threat not only to Nicaragua and Central America but all Latin America." "I am referring," Andres Perez continued, "to the decision to indict Honduras and Costa Rica before the International Court at The Hague. Honduras is undoubtedly violating international law by openly and blatantly allowing its territory to be used by irregular forces to attack Nicaragua. From this viewpoint it deserves to be convicted by the International Court. But while the Contadora process is in progress, seeking specifically peace and cooperation, to bring this case before the Court at The Hague would simply mean nullifying the Contadora effort."

"In the case of Costa Rica," Perez said, "it is absolutely incomprehensible, because everyone knows that Costa Rica has declared its neutrality and that it sincerely practices neutrality, even asking for Contadora Group observers to supervise its border to prevent it from being used for the purpose of attacking Nicaragua. The Costa Rican Government has consistently declared that it will not accept the use of its territory for aggressive purposes against Nicaragua. Nevertheless the Nicaraguan Government has brought it before the Court at The Hague with a single aim: to undermine the Contadora process. This is what disturbs those of us who have supported the original Sandinist blueprint and vigorously combated and condemned the U.S. aggression, since we can see we are caught in the pincer of the two intransigent stances."

Regarding the objection that if the Sandinistas are undermining Contadora -- and the United States seems reluctant for it to continue -- the initiative's demise could draw nearer, Perez replied: "Contadora is not so much a decision to mediate in a Central American conflict as a decision that originated following the Malvinas war to seek our own solution to our own differences and problems."

"Contadora," he added, "must continue, whatever happens. It has at least succeeded in preventing a regional war. It would seem as though not even this will be achieved in the end, but the process must continue because Latin America's future depends on it."

Secretary General Gorbachev, when he notes the call made to the United States and the Soviet Union by various members of the international community, especially refers to the Group of Six. He said: In the last few days in the city of Ixtapa, they approved the Declaration of Mexico in which another call is made to stop all nuclear explosions.

The Mexican Government, as a member of the Peace and Disarmament Initiative, is pleased with Moscow's decision, as it represents an important step in the efforts aimed at making progress in disarmament and guaranteeing peace and safety in the world by facilitating an essential detente and political dialogue which will benefit all member states of the international community.

Envoy on Economic Ties

[Text] Cuernavaca, Mexico, 19 Aug (NOTIMEX) -- The Soviet Union will seek new forms of economic relations with Mexico through contacts at the highest level, USSR Ambassador to Mexico Rostislav Sergeyev stressed here today.

During the opening ceremony of the USSR Cultural Week at the Autonomous University of Morelos, Sergeyev noted that his country could provide economic aid to Mexico by building factories, giving technical assistance, and conducting cultural exchanges. In return, Mexico could cooperate with goods that are broadly appreciated in that country.

With respect to the disarmament problems, he said it is going to be difficult for the United States to understand how serious it is to use cosmic space for warlike activities. However, he clarified that the Soviet Union will attempt to limit the use of nuclear arms [as received] and end nuclear testing. He added that in that respect his country fully agrees with the Group of Six, which recently held a meeting at Ixtapa-Zihuatanejo.

EL SALVADOR'S CASTILLO ARRIVES FOR REBELS TALKS

[Text] Mexico City, 20 Aug (AFP) -- Salvadoran Vice President Rodolfo Castillo arrived in Mexico City this afternoon to begin a dialogue with the armed opposition. Castillo was greeted at the airport by Ricardo Valero, Mexican undersecretary of foreign affairs.

The meeting between the Salvadoran Government and the Revolutionary Democratic Front was scheduled to begin at 0900 today but was postponed because of the delay in the arrival of Castillo, who heads the government delegation.

The Salvadoran vice president was taken from the airport to the site of the meeting in an official vehicle, and the police prevented newsmen from contacting him.

Edgardo Guijano, a cameramen of Channel 2 Television of El Salvador, was injured when members of the communications media attempted to approach Castillo.

[Text] United Nations, NY, 20 Aug (NOTIMEX) -- The six Central American heads of state and Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid Hurtado have confirmed their participation in the 41st UN General Assembly debate which will begin 17 September. De la Madrid is planning to speak to the General Assembly for the first time on 22 or 24 September. The Mexican president had planned to attend last year, but the earthquakes forced him to cancel his visit. The six Central American heads of state who will attend the General Assembly meeting are Presidents Oscar Arias Sanchez of Costa Rica, Daniel Ortega Saavedra of Nicaragua, Marco Vinicio Cerezo Arevalo of Guatemala, Eric Arturo Devalle of Panama, Jose Azcona Hoyo of Honduras, and Jose Napoleon Durate of El Salvador.

REPORTAGE ON GOVERNMENT-REBEL MEETING

Duarte Comments

PA202030 San Salvador Radio Cadena YSKL in Spanish 1730 GMT 20 Aug 86

[News conference by President Jose Napoleon Durate with unidentified journalists on 20 August at the "San Bartolo School" -- recorded; broadcast in progress]

[Text] [Duarte] ...the vice president to complete the group. The first meeting is supposed to take place later today. This is all I can say. Of course, they will discuss some mechanisms at the Mexico meeting, and I hope that everything will come out all right.

[Reporter] Mr President, a guerrilla spokesman said that you have not complied with the agreements of the first and second dialogue. What can you say in this regard?

[Duarte] It is not worthwhile listening to that type of charge. We have to understand that it was I who convoked the La Palma dialogue. We created a committee for that purpose. We also met at Ayagualo, and all of you know about the Ayagualo disaster. Now I have convoked another meeting to see if we can have a dialogue and reach an understanding, to see if we can make them define their position. With what did we not comply? What I proposed at the United Nations and at La Palma is: Forget violence, stop killing people, join the democratic process. These are the things to which they must respond. If they fail to respond it means that they want to continue waging war, violence, and death. It's as simple as that.

[Reporter] Mr President, the guerrillas have said that in Mexico they would propose a military truce for the duration of the third meeting. Would you accept that?

[Duarte] Look, in Mexico they cannot discuss anything but the mechanisms. It is obvious that if there are going to be movements by the guerrillas from the mountains and if they have to cross part of the country, it is logical that we have to provide protection so that they may move. If they want to call that a truce, it is only logical that I have to contribute to their security. The important matter here is that they have to come in security, and I and the Armed Forces are providing them with the necessary security so that they may come.

[Reporter] The truce...

[Duarte, interrupting] The thing is that I don't like that word. I don't like that way of presenting the situation, because that is a political concept, and I don't want to be led into political concepts. What I have said is that I am going to give them security and that they -- whether it is Commander Villalobos, Handal, or whoever -- will be able to reach the site of the meeting. I guarantee that.

[Question indistinct]

[Duarte] No, military activities. The Army has a function, and it has to fulfill that function, namely, the country's protection. We cannot stop protecting the country. What can be done is to give those people protection along the areas they will be transmitting so that there is no problem and so that they can cross without any problem. This means that the Red Cross and some ambassadors will be with these people, and these people will be able to move through the areas of the country they must cross.

[Reporter] Military operations definitely will not be canceled.

[Duarte] I don't think it is pertinent to speculate on this. Let's wait and see what happens. Let's see what happens in Mexico. Let's see if they are prepared to talk or not. I am prepared to talk and ready to go wherever it is necessary to go to talk and seek peace.

Castillo Notes Goals

[Telephone interview with Rodolfo Castillo Claramount, vice president and foreign minister, from Mexico City, by Raul Beltran -- live or recorded]

[Text] [Beltran] We will now contract Rodolfo Antonio Castillo Claramount, vice president and foreign minister, who is in Mexico City, so that he can tell us about the atmosphere and particularly about the Salvadoran delegation's expectations from the significant meeting that will begin today. Good morning, Mr Vice President, you are now on the air for YSKL.

[Castillo] I can tell you specifically about our criteria, atmosphere, disposition, and attitude for this meeting, which I believe is basically the important thing. We will participate in the meeting with an open mind; we will adopt an attitude and a position of understanding to try to find practical solutions for the problems that will be discussed regarding the third round of talks to be held in the next few days here in Salvadoran territory. [as heard] We are going to propose and present the government's original position, and we are going to give our views regarding these aspects. We are optimistic but not overly optimistic or naive, as we know that the subjects are complex and difficult. However, we also feel that the Salvadoran people and their need for peace are worthy of efforts and understanding by those who have adopted an antagonistic and violent position. We believe they should rectify their stand and incorporate themselves in the democratic process, which continues to advance despite the difficulties it must face.

[Beltran] Mr Vice President, regarding the government's expectations through the delegation you head, in the past few hours there were rumors that the meeting could be suspended due to statements or actions that still continue in Salvadoran territory. In conclusion, what is the real position and desire of the delegation you head?

[Castillo] As I have said, the terrorist actions that have taken place in the country during the past few hours are certainly regrettable and do not reflect willingness or the desire to stop violence in order to find peace. However, this is not surprising, because these rebel groups operate on a nihilist concept in their struggle for power, and in that sense they are confused. They are definitely in a violent position as a result of violence itself.

Nevertheless, we believe that this situation can change at certain levels and that we can find formulas of understanding that will make it possible to achieve peace by giving up violence. This requires a change in mentality, a change of attitude and behavior; we need a [word indistinct] of methods in our country on the part of these groups in order to achieve peace within a process that must bring positive results, mainly for the Salvadoran people. After all, in the Marxist-Leninist concept of struggle the people are basically the (?reason) for the struggle. Therefore, it is absolutely inconceivable to make the people, whom they are supposedly trying to liberate, victims of war, death, and pain. We must definitely eradicate this concept of struggle from our country.

Our position is to seek methods that will facilitate the incorporation of these groups, methods for opening, strengthening, and broadening the democratic process in order to create the conditions for participation, organization, and security that will permit the incorporation of these groups into the national political struggle. This is the solution, really.

There really are no other possibilities for achieving peace in any country. Trying to attain peace through violence is a contradiction and a method we hope will be changed. During the meeting in Mexico we will discuss procedures to facilitate the third round of talks. The in-depth proposals for obtaining the results I have just mentioned will be made in that third round of talks.

[Beltran] Mr Vice President: In just a few more hours the meeting with the FMLN-FDR leaders will begin. Do you have any special greetings or message for the Salvadoran people, particularly those skeptics who do not believe in this type of policy that the Salvadoran Government is enforcing and are opposed to it?

[Castillo] Thank you, Raul. This is truly a magnificent opportunity, and you have just touched on a point that is very important in the country. As it now stands, the rebels in arms in the mountains, who are motivated by a Marxist-Leninist concept, are supported by other Salvadorans who are in the political trenches or the economic trenches and are unfortuantely in agreement with these concepts. The enemy seeks to annihilate us and allegedly achieve peace in this manner. A peace based on death, annihilation, sorrow, and bloodshed is not the peace this country wants. It is not the peace that leads to national reconciliation and harmony, that the positive forces of a nation want in order to solve the economic, political, and other crises of the country, particularly the social crisis. To oppose the dialogue without presenting any other alternative, because they do not dare to do so, is definitely to play into the hands of the rebels in arms. This makes two opposite poles coincide in a single concept; in other words, a struggle to the death, with one band finally prevailing over the other, using methods of destruction and annihilation against the enemy. This is precisely the situation we want to prevent in the country.

That is why the government has made this effort to hold a dialogue, that is why we are holding these meetings, precisely to try to strengthen and seek channels for rationality instead of brutality.

In a final message, I would tell the Salvadorans that we must not rely just on very high hopes, we must not think that things will be solved overnight. However, we must not lose faith. If we lose faith in the possibilities of human understanding, we will have lost faith in the possibilities of democracy. Democracy, after all, is the enforcement of ideas as well as a respect and tolerance for ideas. If we are not capable of doing this, then the truth is that we are capable only of killing each other, like beasts in a jungle. The people must have faith in the government's stand; they must have faith in the efforts we are making. Allow me to say that I believe this is the way the vast majority of Salvadorans think. I dare say that over 95 percent of the persons listening to your prestigious radio station feel this way, regardless of their political stand. They oppose death, violence, and sorrow of the people and favor rationality. Thank you very much, Raul.

[Beltran] Thank you, Mr Vice President and Foreign Minister, who is heading the delegation that will meet at 0930 or 1000 somewhere in Mexico City with the representatives of the left. The vice president heads the delegation that includes Ricardo Soriano, member of UNOC [National Union of Christian Workers]; Julio Adolfo Rey Prendes, communications minister; and the following advisers: Alejandro Duarte, Colonel and Dr Reynaldo Lopez Nuila, and Planning Minister Fidel Chavez Mena.

Dialogue Temporarily 'Suspended'

[Text] Mexico City, 20 Aug (AFP) -- The preparatory meeting for a new round of dialogue between the Salvadoran Government and the rebels, which was scheduled to begin today in Mexico at 0900 was "suspended for the moment," Gerardo Pena, press spokesman for the guerrillas, told AFP. "The problem is that Salvadoran Vice President and Foreign Minister Rodolfo Castillo has not arrived yet," but it is expected that he will arrive by noon, and then we can begin the talks immediately," Pena stated.

FMLN's Samayoa on Delay

[Telephone interview with Salvador Samayoa, FMLN delegate to the preliminary meeting, in Mexico City by Raul Beltran in San Salvador -- recorded]

[Text] [Beltran] Now we are on direct line with representatives from the Salvadoran left since the meeting scheduled for 1000 this morning between leftist delegates and the Salvadoran Government was delayed. We are contacting Salvador Samayoa, who is an FMLN delegate to this private and preliminary meeting in Mexico City to learn what is truly happening, as we have been unable to contact Salvadoran Government officials.

[Samayoa] Greetings to all. Regarding the delay in the meeting, I would like to report that this was caused by the delay of Dr Rodolfo Castillo Claramount who is heading the government delegation. The government delegates had pledged to be in Mexico City on 19 August to begin talks early this morning. They were delayed. I do not know if this was caused by last-minute political difficulties or if this is merely a technical difficulty. According to the report we have, they should be arriving today at noon. We should begin the talks at 1700.

[Samayoa, interrupting] [Sentence indistinct]

[Beltran] This was apparently the cause. I do not know what information you have.

[Samayoa] According to our reports, Dr Castillo had just arrived in Mexico City. Therefore, the government delegation would be complete.

[Beltran] Did you, then, accept the delay of today's meeting?

[Samayoa] Sure. It made no sense for us to make a fuss about that. We have accepted postponing the meeting since they had that problem.

[Beltran] Would this mean that the meeting between Salvadoran Government officials and FDR-FMLN delegation will be extended; in other words are you not going to settle everything today?

[Samayoa] We will probably not be able to conclude all the topics today. I imagine the meeting is going to be rather complex. Well, although we have potential to reach an agreement, and keeping in mind the great desire of all the Salvadoran people and social sectors to engage more strongly in the process of searching for peace, we are going to do our best to agree to continue the talks. However, I do not think that this is something that can be settled in a few hours.

[Beltran] Mr Samayoa, can you tell us if Mexican Government officials are acting as observers, and are they providing security and attention to the two delegations for the meeting, and also, at what time are you planning to start the talks this afternoon? At what time have you decided to meet?

[Samayoa] Yes. The Mexican Government is the host of the Salvadoran Government delegation as well as ours. In this regard, it has given us some facilities and attentions for the transportation, security, and infrastructure we need to hold the meeting. However, it is not playing a major role in a political sense. This means that there will be no Mexican Government observers during the meeting. The meeting is scheduled to begin at 1700 today.

[Beltran] So that our YSKL listeners in El Salvador may have a clearer view of what is happening in Mexico, we have already talked to Salvador Samayoa, FMLN leader and its representative during this round of talks which will be held with Salvadoran Government delegates. How long do you think the private and serious meetings will last? How many topics do you want to settle or discuss in Mexico?

[Samayoa] The topics concern the preparations of the third round of meetings which would have to be held inside Salvadoran territory. That includes agreement on the place and other practical and operational matters. There is a relatively complex point. It involves all aspects regarding security, especially the security of our delegation. Duarte has said that he vouches for the security of the meeting with his life. However, that is obviously not enough. There are many people who oppose the talks and want to harm the process of talks. Therefore, we most likely will not accept that as a guarantee of safety. We would have to discuss this.

Also, there are two important political aspects. As you well know, one is that most political and social sectors are demanding to have observers at the third round of talks. We support that stance. We would have to discuss that with the Salvadoran Government here. We have learned that political parties and social and labor sectors have demanded that the government should meet with them before holding the third meeting so we may know about their stances. We support that demand, too. However, we have to learn here about the government's stance. In sum, there are some matters concerning the meeting itself. And there are political aspects concerning the participation of the diverse national sectors in the process of search for peace. Therefore, we would try to agree on practical and operational aspects as well as aspects involving the participation of national sectors in the meeting.

[Beltran] To conclude, Mr Salvador Samayoa, as one of the FMLN representatives meeting today in Mexico with the government delegation to discuss specific aspects, it was learned here today that the guerrillas, the FMLN, are proposing a truce, or a ceasefire to agree on and hold the third round of talks. Is that true?

[Samayoa] That is absolutely true. We feel that we must strive to create an appropriate climate of detente to hold the meeting. This is because there is a process of great polarization. The struggle in the political and military fields has deepened. We feel the appropriate climate for holding the third round of talks would have to include agreeing on a military truce. At least, that is our view.

Villacorta Notes 'Optimism'

[Telephone interview with FDR representative Jorge Villacorta by YSKL Reporter Raul Beltran in Mexico City -- live or recorded]

[Text] [Beltran] We now contact the representative of the leftist guerrillas and of the FDR, the chief of the Salvadoran rebels' delegation who begin the first round of talks somewhere in Mexico City today. Jorge Villacorta and Salvador Samayoa are the members of this delegation, and Dr Arnet, the widow of Zamora, is the adviser. We will now talk with the representative of the leftists, Jorge Villacorta, an engineer. He was a militant of the Christian Democratic Party [PDC] and was a member of the first cabinet of the first revolutionary government junta following the 15 October 1979 coup. He left the country after he resigned his post of Deputy Minister of Agriculture on 20 May 1980. He later joined the political sector and now belongs to the Social Christian People's Movement, a member of the FDR and of the FMLN.

The leftist delegation was completed yesterday afternoon when Salvador Samayoa, who was Education Minister of the revolutionary government junta, arrived in Mexico City. We now contact the leftist representative a few minutes before the beginning of this first round of conversations. This is the coverage being given by La Poderosa, Radio Cadena YSKL. We also want to specify that these exclusive statements were made after we contacted the two sectors.

By mutual agreement, a statement will not be issued after the first round of talks, except for whatever agreement the two delegations may reach in private. These statements would also then be broadcast by La Poderosa, Radio Cadena YSKL. This subject is one of national interest. We now listen to Jorge Villacorta, representing the Salvadoran leftists in Mexico City, and chief of the delegation.

What is your delegation's opinion as the meeting begins today?

[Villacorta] Of course, it is important for me to take advantage of this occasion to inform the Salvadoran people in general that our attitude is very positive and we are very optimistic about this meeting.

We feel the meeting is very important because it will allow us -- if we are as successful as we hope to be -- to prepare for the third dialogue meeting, to be held in Salvadoran territory in the near future. To prepare for this meeting implies our establishing a place, a day, security aspects, in other words all of the logistic and administrative aspects, but we also hope to establish the agenda for the third dialogue meeting. If we can achieve this, it will ensure that both delegations can prepare, and the basic issues can be discussed immediately.

The answer is that there is an atmosphere of optimism, of hope that everything will go well. Our attitude is very positive and we hope the government's will be the same, as it has announced publicly.

[Beltran] Engineer Villacorta, some political sectors in El Salvador have been saying that this type of meeting, and the type of dialogue that has been established with the leftist representatives should not take place. Some sectors here, according to what the vice president -- who heads the government delegation -- has said, feel that the only solution for El Salvador to achieve peace would be a military solution. What do you think of this situation, even though it is also said that the left wing plans to attain power through the use of arms?

[Villacorta] For the past 4 years, practically since the [word indistinct] began, we have said that the alternative for El Salvador's crisis, for the situation we are experiencing, is a negotiated political solution. We said that the solution calls for a negotiation because there are two sides in conflict, two sides which on one hand represent different interests but which on the other hand are definite realities. The past 6 years have shown us that the FDR-FMLN has a presence, and the government, the Durate regime and, unfortunately, the U.S. interests also have a presence. In that sense we are realistic. We are convinced that the only possible solution that will reduce costs, the Salvadoran people's grief, and the destruction that war produces is to find a political solution. That political solution, we insist, is negotiation, because there are two real sides in conflict. Fortunately, thank God and [words indistinct], we find that the majority of the Salvadoran people are aware of this. The people at one time felt that in lieu of elections they could contribute to finding an alternative. I believe the last 18 months have been more than a lesson for the Salvadoran majority in the sense that it has taught them that simple elections are not a full solution, that elections perhaps contribute to making some sectors seek solutions but they fail if they do not confront the basic problem. There is no possibility of solving economic and social problems if we do not face the basic problem, which is the war.

In this regard, though we have observed how ultra right-wing and even more conservative sectors have opposed a political solution, they are simply a minority that is trying to take advantage of the war. We know that there is a large sector of Salvadoran society which, from the time the war began, [words indistinct] from the war and thus are opposed to this type of solution. However, we are convinced, I insist, that the majority of the people, independent of their social or economic position or their political ideology, are convinced that the only alternative is a negotiated political solution, that war only generates more war, and we must promptly find a solution. We are convinced of this.

We are also convinced, I insist, of the need for a negotiated solution, not a surrender as some sectors have suggested.

A surrender is simply to surrender rifles as some people say, and join the alleged democratic path, which we consider to be insufficient at this time. We are definitely convinced that is not the alternative. We need a negotiated solution to the conflict. For this, unfortunately, the war must continue, but it must gradually disappear as we find concrete solutions from the simplest to the most complex issues.

[Beltran] Engineer Villacorta, last week it was not certain that this preparatory and private meeting with government delegates would take place because the two sides argued whether or not the arrangements had been made. All in all, there was confusion regarding the preparatory negotiations. Today the meeting is a reality and we are only a few hours away from knowing about and perhaps later viewing the meeting between the government and left-wing delegates in Mexico City. I would like you to tell us how all of this was established. I understand that there will be no statements after the meeting and that it is not possible to disclose the place where you will meet with the mediator Msgr Arturo Rivera y Damas.

[Villacorta] At last all of this is ready. The process was rather difficult. It is understandable that the war has polarized El Salvador, the sides in conflict do not trust each other, and we must generate, we must produce. We have the elements of judgement to be confident and I believe that we must build our confidence in one another. That is why these talks are difficult.

We have seen signs that lead us to believe the government is not really interested in finding a solution of this type, but in view of its weakness and political isolution -- which is known and accepted by all the Salvadoran people -- it will turn to a dialogue and through it seek support, to seek political breathing room. I believe that these prejudices exist, they are supported by actions, and definitely make this dialogue process difficult. In spite of this, the Salvadoran Government finally made the necessary arrangements from 8 August, in writing, and they made theirs on Friday, but this has facilitated and hastened the process. The Mexican Government has kindly contributed in this search for conversations in the framework of its policy of looking for political solutions for conflicts in Central America. As you have correctly pointed out, these talks will begin in a matter of hours. These talks are strictly of a preparatory nature. That is, what we are going to do is to agree on the site, on logistics, on security aspects, and on the duration of the meeting. If possible we would discuss the points of the agenda but without discussing the contents of the agenda or the proposals made by both sides.

So, we are waiting. We are only a few hours away from the meeting. The atmosphere, as I have said, is highly positive. We thank the Mexican Government for its kindness and its support in this regard.

[Beltran] Will the site for this meeting be announced?

[Villacorta] Definitely no. The two sides have agreed that this meeting should be absolutely private because, as I have said, whatever we discuss and agree on now will be very important for the third meeting. If we want to promote the security aspect, and others, for the third meeting, this preparatory meeting, the site for it and the results of it must be absolutely private.

If a statement to the press is made later -- we don't know if this will be done -- this statement would be to point out, in general terms, the environment and the success or failure. The meeting would be successful if we agree on a site and on a date that we will not be able to announce.

[Beltran] Villacorta, last Sunday the mediator said here that at the meeting in Mexico -- which is going to be held very soon -- the two parties will be discussing the case of arrested labor leaders and the case of members of humanitarian organizations who are in Salvadoran prisons, in exchange for the release of Colonel Omar Napoleon Avalos. Reportedly this is one subject not included in the agenda but that nevertheless will be discussed. Is this true?

[Villacorta] Yes. I would like to clear up this point. The intermediary Archbishop Msgr Rivera told us that he was going to take advantage of the fact that we are going to be meeting here in Mexico City and bring lists of the names of the people who could possibly benefit from these negotiations. This includes labor leaders and human rights and humanitarian organization members. His idea is that we would be in possession of these lists and be able to initiate the negotiations process. We believe that the government has either received or is about to receive these lists from the intermediary so that it may process that information. We talked with the archbishop and of course we agreed to accept these lists, but the discussions of these lists would take place at a meeting completely independent from this preparatory meeting with the government. The discussion of the lists would take place outside that meeting, after the meeting. Such discussions would take place only with the intermediary and only to receive the lists. That is: The negotiations involving the colonel and the leaders will not be included in the talks for this private preparatory meeting.

[Villacorta] Yes. Friends of YSKL: We want to take advantage of this opportunity, on behalf of our fronts, to tell the Salvadoran people our point of view on the problem. We want to tell you that we view this meeting with optimism, as one with great possibilities, yes, but we also view it very carefully and with the great attention because the conflict we are enduring in El Salvador is very complex and very difficult. Solutions are not easy. This is no simple problem. We are not going to find simplistic solutions such as surrendering weapons and joining democratic life. The problem is much more complex.

We are going to work seriously on this opportuntiy to establish administrative and logistic mechanisms that should allow us to participate in a third meeting in Salvadoran territory where we will engage in discussions and we hope to make advances on important aspects to benefit the Salvadoran people, and to secure benefits that the Salvadoran people may be able to notice the day after an agreement is reached. We are going to start with simple, immediate, and specific matters to begin advancing on the process. The negotiations process is lengthy, but we have to initiate it. The first steps are most important. The first steps -- simple but specific -- are to be made once we initiate the third meeting.

For now we are going to make advances in the preparations. We are going to be reporting to the people, by our means and through the media, on the advances that will be made in this regard.

We ask the people to be alert because advances by the two sides on the political solution process depend on the people, on their popular organizations, and on the national will.

FMLN COMMUNIQUE ON EXCHANGE OF PRISONERS

PA210253 (Clandestine) Radio Venceremos in Spanish El Salvador 0119 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Communique issued by the FMLN General Command in El Salvador, dated 20 August]

[Text] The FMLN proposal of making a goodwill gesture consisting of the release by the government of the prisoners from the people's Movement and of Colonel Napoleon Avalos by the FMLN has provided evidence of the existence of a large number of civilians -- noncombatants -- who are in prison for alleged political reasons. Their trials have yet to begin.

Auxillary Bishop Gregorio Rosas Chavez himself has said that the list of people captured -- this list was presented by relatives and people's organizations -- already numbers some 942 cases. The list has been presented to Msgr Arturo Rivera y Damas with the hope that these people will be released. The majority of the political prisoners in El Salvador are noncombatants. They are civilian residents of areas in conflict, leaders and rank and file members of the people's movement, union leaders, and leaders of humanitarian organizations. Only a small percentage of them are FMLN combatants, and these have not received recognition of their status as prisoners of war. Therefore, the people captured as part of the framework of repression have been arbitrarily, unjustly, and illegally deprived of their freedom, and the demands of the people for an immediate amnesty, which were reasserted a few days ago, are totally justified.

We want to point out that many missing people are among those 942 people. [sentence as heard] The brutality of this repressive method remains in effect. Proof of this is the capture of our companeras Yaneth Bamour and Maximina Reyes in December 1985 and the recent capture and murder of Comapnera Virginia Pena. To avoid confusion and misunderstandings by the local and international media, as well as by the people in general, we make the following clarifications:

1. In regard to our proposal for the simultaneous release of prisoners held by the government, only our combatants in prison should be excluded, who we have noted are in the minority.

2. The list we will take to the negotiations will include all the cases presented by the relatives and by organizations to Msgr Rivera y Damas.

We urge the church to cooperate so that the hopes of the Hundreds of relatives who expect to see their people released are not betrayed, given this new opportunity offered by the FMLN as a gesture of goodwill. We also urge all the people's organizations, all human rights groups to protest and demand an end to the capture and the release of people who have been unjustly arrested, and an explanation on the whereabouts of the missing people. The government policy of capturing innocent people without reason to justify their imprisonment has forced us to give priority to these cases over our combatants in prison, who are aware that we must put duty [1-second break in transmission] before personal interest, because we have dedicated our lives and our unlimited sacrifice to the people's cause.

United to fight until the final victory!
Revolution or death, we will win!

VENCEREMOS ALLEGES MILITARY RAID INTO HONDURAS

PA202343 (Clandestine) Radio Venceremos in Spanish to El Salvador 0000 GMT 20 Aug 86

[Text] Paracaidistas Battalion troops operating in the border pockets of Nahuaterique, entered Honduran territory early on Tuesday, 19 August, according to reports from people living in the area. We have already reported that troops of the Paracaidistas Battalion, who this morning entered deep into Honduran territory, are coordinating their actions with the Honduran Armed Forces' High Command, through the 10th Infantry Battalion in Marcala. It is well-known that on 14 August 24 helicopters were used to land these troops in the areas known as Las Trojas and Nahuaterique.

Furthermore, on 15 August units from the Leon Battalion of the 3d Infantry Brigade entered Honduras, close to the town of Santa Ana, Intibuca Department. Likewise, we recall that some weeks ago the Arce Battalion, which, was trained in Honduras, entered Honduran territory from San Miguel Department to rape young Hounduran women and capture and torture Honduran citizens. Azcona Hoyo's government has allowed them to go unpunished. This complicity is part of the payment which Azcona Hoyo is making for the decorations he received from Duarte and the millions of dollars he receives from the Americans.

The secret military agreements signed by Duarte and Azcona include one which allows Salvadoran troops to operate deep in Honduran territory [word indistinct] could evict the Honduran civilian population which might represent an obstacle for the American plans in that zone. The first Honduran families have already been evicted, following a raid carried out some weeks ago by Colonel Staben, well-known leader of the death squads.

We recall that Colonel Mauricio Ernesto Vargas, commander of the 4th Military Detachment in Morazan, unwisely revealed to the news media that an agreement exists with the Honduran Government which allows the Salvadoran Army to operate in the border pockets. Vice President Rodolfo Antonio Castillo Claramount publicly denied these statements.

On Tuesday morning the Paracaidistas Battalion left the border pockets and entered deep into Honduran territory, thus confirming that an agreement which gives the Salvadoran Army the authority to use the neighboring country's territory exists. We urge national, Honduran, and international news media to confirm these reports directly. We will continue to report on the situation which has developed following the raid of the Paracaidistas Battalion troops into the Honduran territory.

LOPEZ: CONTRA AID WILL NOT PASS THROUGH COUNTRY

[Excerpt] Tegucigalpa, 20 Aug (AFP) -- Foreign Minister Carlos Lopez Contreras stated today that the $100 million in U.S. aid for the Nicaraguan contras "will not pass through Honduran territory, and this is the government's official position." The contras have received supplies at their camps which are primarily in the eastern department of El Paraiso, top U.S. officials admitted in March.

President Jose Azcona has repeatedly stated that the new U.S. aid to the anti-Sandinists would not necessarily be delivered through Honduras because the United States can use airports in other nearby countries or ships or planes to deliver the supplies to Nicaragua.

Lopez Contreras stressed that the decision not to permit the passage of the aid through the country was made by the Honduran Government and reported to the Reagan administration. But he added that Washington has not threatened to cut off economic aid to Honduras in the event that it does not permit the use of its territory. [passage omitted]

He said that this is caused by the economic blockade and the war of aggression. Tirado said that in face of this situation, the unity of the working class helps to win the economic, political, and military battle against imperialism. [recorded passage indistinct]

The Sandinist leader called on the workers to express their support for Alan Garcia's government. Pressured by the U.S. Government, the IMF recently froze all loans to Peru. Tirado asked the Latin American countries to united in a single bloc against the aggression and urged the Central American countries not to continue playing the game of the U.S. warmongering policy.

NONALIGNED TO STRESS SOLIDARITY WITH PANAMA

["Our America" commentary]

[Text] Since 1903, when Panama became an independent nation, U.S. imperialism has imposed an onerous treaty which allowed the United States to seize a portion of Panama's territory, the so-called Panama Canal Zone.

Military bases and academies were established everywhere in this colonial enclave, cradle of the counterrevolution and fascism in Latin America.

Since then, the Panamanian people have been waging a difficult, uninterrupted, and at times bloody struggle, to rescue the nation's sovereignty over the Canal Zone and the interoceanic passageway, which is its main source of natural wealth.

There have been many occasions when the U.S. troops attacked peaceful Panamanian demonstrators who were demanding restitution to the country of the territory seized by Washington by virtue of the 1903 canal treaty.

When General Omar Torrijos assumed power in 1968, the Panamanian people and government joined in the patriotic crusade to win full sovereignty over the entire national territory.

From that moment, world support was almost unanimous for this just aspiration, and the U.S. Government was forced to sign the new canal treaties in 1977.

The new treaties establish that on 31 December 1999, Panama's sovereignty, the restitution of the Canal to its exclusive control, and the total withdrawal of U.S. military forces from Panamanian territory will become effective.

During the significant display of solidarity with the Panamanian people's cause, the peoples and governments of our America, for which it was an elemental duty, played an important role, as did the Nonaligned Movement, which Panama joined as full member in 1975. The following year, the fifth summit conference of the Nonaligned Movement, held in Sri Lanka, expressed in its final declaration the wish for an agreement to be reached on the canal treaties. It reiterated to the Panamanian government and people, its firm support and solidarity in their just struggle for sovereignty and jurisdiction over the so-called Canal Zone.

During the Nonaligned Movement summit conferences held in Cuba and India, in 1979 and 1983 respectively, the signing and ratification by Panama and the United States of the new canal treaties, was approved as an important action which restored to Panama its territory and its effective control over the entire nation.

However, the heads of state and government who met in Havana and New Delhi were forced to demand that the United States fully respect the terms of the treaties, inasmuch as Washington was already beginning to violate them.

The Nonaligned Movement summit which will soon open in Zimbabwe must reiterate its solidarity with Panama and strongly protest the imperialist slander campaign, which is aimed at having the fatherland of Omar Torrijos put an end to its independent, nationalist, and nonaligned policy.

PUBLIC WORKS SECRETARY RESIGNS 'UNDER PRESSURE'

FL202230 Santo Domingo Cadena Brea Pena in Spanish 1600 GMT 20 Aug 86

[Text] Elvio Rodriguez, secretary of state for public works, unexpectedly resigned today from the position he was appointed to last Saturday [16 August].

Though the reasons for his resignation were not officially revealed, "Noti-Tiempo" learned from reliable sources that the decision was made under pressure. A source reported that Rodriguez was pressured by a sector of the Reformist Socialist Christian Party which protested against him on Monday and Tuesday [18-19 August].

Reformist militants and leaders protested at the Public Works Secretariat on Monday and Tuesday, and it became necessary for police agents to remove them from the area. During this time, a reformist sector protested against Rodriguez citing his similarity with Dr Victor Gomez (Berguez), who was expelled from the party led by Dr Joaquin Balaguer.

Rodriguez' resignation is the first since the new government was installed last Saturday.

DESMOND TUTU 'OVERWHELMED' BY SUPPORT

FL201824 Kingston Domestic Service in English 1130 GMT 20 Aug 86

[Text] The Archbishop-elect of Capetown, the Right Reverend Desmond Tutu, assured Montegonians yesterday that he and his family have the most important message to take back to their people and it was that Jamaicans care. Bishop Tutu was last night toasted at a cocktail party by Health Minister Dr Kenneth Baugh at the (Windorm) Resort Hotel in Montego Bay.

An enthusiastic crowd tried its best to get a handshake or just a close look of the bishop as he arrived and began meeting the people. He eventually made his way to the platform in the main ballroom, where in a few brief remarks, he expressed gratitude to their excellencies, the prime minister and the people of Jamaica for inviting him here. Bishop Tutu said he and his family were quite overwhelmed by the response of the Jamaican people. He told the attending audience that one of the things that the Tutus will take back to South Africa was the fact that the people in Jamaica care. He gave several anecdotes to build up a point on unity, cooperation, and fellowship before closing on the note of love.

Minister Kenneth Baugh, in an interview with the bishop, noted that whatever political party Jamaicans belong to they felt strongly against apartheid and said Bishop Tutu could be assured of the country's support. A number of gifts were presented to Bishop Tutu, his wife (Helena), and daughter (Nicole). Bishop Tutu and wife will fly out of Donald Sangster Airport today while (Nicole) will leave in a separate flight later.

Ends 5-Day Visit

The black clergyman, soon to be consecrated as head of the Anglican Church in South-Africa, was guest of the Government. He left today from the north coast tourist city of Montego Bay where he spent the last two days after a hectic round of engagements in the capital, Kingston.

Tutu said last night that he would take back to South Africa, black and white, the message that Jamaica cares.

During his visit Tutu, warned by the South African authorities that he could face charges for his sanction calls, repeatedly stressed that he was prepared to continue, whatever the consequences. One does not do things constantly looking over one's shoulders, he said.

Tutu was presented with the Order of Jamaica, the country's third highest national honour and the highest that is awarded to a foreigner.

SELA REGIONAL DIRECTOR ON U.S. 'PROTECTIONISM'

PA211522 Caracas Television Service in Spanish 0000 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Text] The SELA regional coordination director, Miguel Rodriguez Mendoza, has reported on Latin American countries' trade relations with the United States emphasizing Latin America's dependency, the increase of U.S. protectionism, and the permanent confrontation between the northern power and the developing countries.

In order to confront this disadvantageous situation that affects Latin American exports, SELA proposes maintaining a systematic follow-up of the restrictive policy that the United States is trying to apply and of the legislative changes that are affecting trade with Latin America.

SELA is also considering the possibility of a coordinated action with the Latin American ambassadors to Washington, as well as lobbying, that is, mobilizing public opinion and the sectors that make U.S. trade policy in order to defend Latin American interests.

A mechanism that is considered effective and that has been put into practice by the EEC, Japan, and the United States is using the regional purchasing power.

[Begin Rodriguez recording] This basically means a refusal to buy certain products coming from the United States, if the United States does not change some of its policies or its protectionist measures affecting Latin American exports. [end recording]

In conclusion, all of the mechanisms included in the multilateral efforts of Latin America will depend on the political will of the governments affected by the U.S. protectionist measures.

CHILEAN SECRET SERVICE SPYING ON ARGENTINES

PY212148 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1912 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Excerpt] Buenos Aires, 21 Aug (EFE) -- A reliable diplomatic source told EFE today that the Argentine Embassy in Santiago is one of the diplomatic missions in Chile that was spied upon by General Augusto Pinochet's secret services. The source stated the Argentine Foreign Ministry "has evidence that its embassy in Santiago has been spied on, but that taking into account the forthcoming visit of Pope John Paul II to Chile and Argentina, it has decided to keep silent on the case." Asked further about the "evidence," the source stated: "The Hotel Tito has been erected next to the embassy's building, located at 285 Miraflores Street, in Santiago. The owner of the hotel is a high-ranking member of the Chilean secret service."

"On several occasions we have detected the drilling of holes on the adjacent wall, which were later closed," leading us to believe that microphones have been installed to record the conversations within the Argentine diplomatic mission.

"Moreover, in front of the Argentine Embassy there is another 2-story building which has been uninhabited for years. But, we know that the movement of persons within the embassy offices is watched from there," the source added. [passage omitted]

[Text] Buenos Aires, 20 Aug (TELAM) -- Latin American Affairs Under Secretary Raul Alconada Sempe today denied reports that the Foreign Ministry intends to request the number of personnel at the Nicaraguan Embassy in Buenos Aires be reduced. Alconada Sempe stated that the report by a morning daily is completely untrue and that it does not conceal its intention to disturb the relations with a friendly Latin American country.

The denial was made in the presence of Nicaraguan Ambassador to Argentina Fernando Guzman Cuadra, who went to the Foreign Ministry to discuss the upcoming visit of a Nicaraguan delegation to Buenos Aires to discuss a broad agenda of bilateral issues.

48-HOUR STRIKE UNDERWAY; COB ISSUES COMMUNIQUE

[Text] Workers throughout Bolivia today began a 48-hour stoppage called by the Bolivian Labor Confederation [COB] and the Board for the Defense of the National Sovereignty [Junta Defensora de la Soberania Nacional] the committee for the Defense of Mining [Comite de Defensa de la Mineria], and the Consultative People's Committee for the Support of Mineworkers [Comite de Consulta Popular en Apoyo a los Trabajadores Mineros].

In keeping with instructions issued by the COB, emergency services -- namely the electric power supply service, water supply service, cemeteries, slaughterhouses, municipal crews, ENTEL [National Telecommunications Enterprise], ENTA [National Automotive Transport Enterprise], LAB [Lloyd Bolivian Airline], AASANA [Auxiliary Air Navigation Service Administration], radio stations, press, television stations, YPFB [Bolivian Government Oil Deposits], health services at hospitals, clinics, and emergency services -- will work normally.

The COB has reasserted that the stoppage is being held: to support Oruro and Potosi Departments; to defend the sovereignty; to protest tax increases and the resumption of payments on the foreign debt; and, to defend sectorial social achievements and the pressing need to improve the purchase power of the salaries.

In a communique signed by Juan Lechin Oquendo, Victor Lopez, Angel Zaballa, Jose Justiniano, and others, the COB protests the government's repression against the Oruro workers and people.

The COB communique states: Never before have the protests, demonstrations, and demands of a neglected nation whose workers have been submitted to the nefarious consequences of a policy oriented toward the destruction of productive enterprises been more justified.

The COB communique adds that the government is using repression as its customary method to silence the people's protests in view of its complete inability to provide solutions or at least to find ways to solve the serious problems being endured by the Bolivian nation and people. Condemning repression and the denial of civil principles and rights provided for by the Constitution, the COB states that more than 40 people were arrested and 10 injured during the massive protest rally in Oruro. The communique states: We reiterate that it is the government that disturbs public order and denies Bolivians the right to live as human beings. It adds: the protests will continue as long as the unpopular measures, which erode the basic conditions for a peaceful and democratic coexistence, are not halted.

In turn, the government warned it will drastically enforce the law in the face of excesses by the unionists. Interior Minister Fernando Barthelemy has stated: We have been very tolerant recently, seeking to show that the government is willing to pacify the country. However, this attitude has been viewed as weakness. Now, we will have to adopt the measures established by the law, that is, we will basically carry out the law, the interior minister said.

The interior minister added: The events occurring yesterday show us the irresponsibility of some political and trade leaders. He said that we know there is a preconceived plan designed by COB and COBEE [Bolivian Electric Power Company] trade union leaders to exert pressure for their demands for salary increases by causing power cuts throughout the city of La Paz.

Barthelemy stated: Today, we will file an indictment to have these individuals tried. It is not possible to harm the people this way. Electric machines were stopped, and this was a totally irresponsible move, the minister said. The minister added: We should understand that our problems will not be solved through rash actions by irresponsible people.

Barthelemy accused the members of the Convergence Axis [Eje de Convergencia] and of the so-called Board for the Defense of the National Sovereignty of being responsible for the social unrest in Bolivia.

The minister said: I cannot understand how they failed to create a board when we were invited by the communist guerrillas and when strongly armed paramilitary groups supported drug trafficking. The minister concluded by stating that certain political sectors recently adopted attitudes championing nationalism, that the Human Rights Assembly only champions the rights of left-wing people, and that certain organizations created abroad have adopted the same orientation.

MINEWORKERS STAGE DEMONSTRATION IN ORURO

[Text] A new, noisy demonstration was staged in the city of Oruro this afternoon when thousands of mineworkers marched through the main streets detonating sticks of dynamite. A Radio Panamericana correspondent in Oruro has reported that several windows have been broken as a result of the demonstrators' explosions. Here is the report from our correspondent:

[Begin relay from Oruro] Mineworkers have announced different marches throughout the nation. A march was staged this afternoon, for approximately 3 and 1/2 hours. Simon Reyes Rivera, executive member of the mineworkers, has announced a mineworkers' march through the main capitals of the country, calling it a peaceful march for life.

Many people spoke today, but Reyes Rivera was considered to be one of the main speakers. He said that tonight the leaders of the different unions grouped in this capital will begin the preparations for the march that could begin on Saturday with a march to La Paz, and later to the other four main capitals.

This afternoon, at 1600, a demonstration was staged here with the objective of preventing the closing of the mines and further dismissals of mineworkers. Delegations from Catavi, Siglo Veinte, Huanuni, Bolivar, Santa Fe, Morococama, Machacamarca, San Jose, and Oruro were present.

A negative action -- which has caused a reaction -- was taken by the mineworkers who despite the absence of police troops detonated stickes of dynamite continuously, provoking fear among the people and causing considerable damage to the main store windows.

The demonstration also repudiated the first departmental authority. The dynamite explosions were intensified when the mineworkers observed groups of employees, workers, and other civilians along the streets. We repeat, the mineworkers staged a demonstration this afternoon, and they decided to stage other marches through the different capitals of the country to prevent the genocidal plan of closing Comibol [Mining Corporation of Bolivia]. VIDEO SHOWS 'EVIDENCE' OF ESPIONAGE CASE

[Text] Santiago, 21 Aug (EFE) -- Former Chilean Congressmen Sergio Paez and Carlos Dupre today revealed some details concerning the case of political espionage on several embassies and showed a videocassette containing the statements of the two alleged spies.

Paez and Dupre said in a press conference before Chilean and foreign reporters that they have evidence of the espionage conducted at the Spanish Embassy. They added that this was only part of a network involving "all the embassies" accredited in Santiago. They also explained that "approximately 1 and 1/2 or 2 months ago" they were contacted by two individuals who said they were in charge of intercepting confidential information from the Spanish Embassy.

They are former noncommissioned officers of the Chilean Navy, Patricio Geldres and Victor Enriquiz, who said they were working for the National Intelligence Center (CNI) and upon request of the two former congressmen, they handed over copies of the documents obtained from the Spanish Embassy. The whereabouts of Geldres and Enriquiz are unknown, but according to reports, they already left Chile.

Paez and Dupre indicated the documents were checked and later verified with the Spanish Embassy and that they were copies of notes and other documents belonging to that embassy.

The alleged spies made an extensive and detailed declaration in a videocassette that lasted 12 minutes and was shown to the reporters. The two individuals who introduced themselves as Patricio Geldres and Victor Enriquiz said they are former noncommissioned officers of the Navy and are currently working for the CNI.

They explained that their mission was to gather all the trash and other rubbish from the Spanish Embassy and to classify and select all kinds of paper, rough copies, typewriter ribbons, perforated telex tapes and even the documents put through the shredder. This material was then patiently classified according to color, weight, quality, etc, and then ordered on rubber topped tables like a jigsaw puzzle. This is how the former naval noncommissioned officers recomposed notes and documents -- some of them restricted and confidential -- which were sent from the Spanish Embassy in Santiago to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Madrid and vice versa.

The individuals indicated that the reconstructed documents included coded messages and lists of dinner guests at the Spanish Embassy. The two "deserters" also said that they were aware that similar groups were gathering information from other embassies such as the Uruguayan, Venezuelan, Italian, and Netherlands Embassies. Geldres and Enriquiz also said it is possible that espionage was also being conducted at the U.S. Embassy through infiltration of the security company "Wockannat," contracted about 1 year ago.

After the videocassete, the former Chilean congressmen offered reporters photocopies of documents allegedly intercepted at the Spanish Embassay as evidence. Some of the documents are related to the participation of Spanish congressmen in a recent meeting held in Chile.

'Vulnerable' Informers Sought

[Text] Santiago 21 Aug (EFE) -- The Venezuelan and Uruguayan Embassies in Chile have been spied on by two former Chilean noncommissioned Navy officers, who left behind a video recording and have fled the country.

Former Deputies Carlos Dupre and Sergio Paez showed the 12-minute video made by former noncommissioned officers, Patricio Geldres Santander, 33, and Victor Leonidas Enriquiz Valenzuela, 31, at a press conference. The two former Navy men said they decided to desert and reveal the details of their work when they were ordered to recruit "vulnerable" Chileans working in the embassies on which they were spying. They said the most vulnerable ones were those who had an excessive fondness for alcohol or women.

Regarding the espionage against the Uruguayan Embassy, the alleged spies said they were told to start recruiting personnel who would deliver information. For that purpose, they had organized files containing information. They had specifically selected the person in charge of security in the Uruguayan Embassy as being "vulnerable."

Geldres and Enriquiz said they had decided to hand over the information and leave the country because they were ordered to become involved in acts they considered inappropriate for former members of the Armed Forces.

They added that they were part of "one of the spy networks working in all the embassies in Santiago."

KIDNAPPED COLONEL RELEASED; CONDITION GOOD

PY220311 Paris AFP in Spanish 0303 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] Santiago, 21 Aug (AFP) -- Police sources reported that Colonel Mario Haeberle, who was kidnapped on 18 August by the clandestine Manuel Rodriquez Patriotic Front (FPMR), was released tonight apparently in good condition in the eastern part of Santiago. The colonel was released 88 hours after the kidnapping, which mobilized about 8,000 soldiers, policemen, and security agents in the search of the kidnappers.

The colonel was released after Cardinal Juan Francisco Fresno asked the FPMR to release the prisoner as a way to seek peace and real fraternity.

PINOCHET SAYS POLITICIANS AWARE OF ARMS CACHES

[Relay from Government House by Rosa Sanchez]

[Excerpts] President Pinochet has reported that the investigations into the discovery of arms caches in the Northern region and also near Santiago, have shown that more than one politician was aware of the existence of this arsenal. Pinochet announced this while thanking numerous people for their congratulations on his 13th anniversary as Chilean Army Commander, which he will commemorate within a few days.

The first greeting he received was from a Pudahuel community leader who expressed the affection of Pudahuel community dwellers and the support for a government that, as she said, has sought the best for Chileans. President Pinochet answered her by saying that since 11 September 1973, he has not been struggling for himself, but for Chile, its people, and for all those who have needs. He added that today more than ever, the Chilean Government needs their support.

[Begin Pinochet recording] They have brought (?all of this came from) abroad. There is more than one politician involved in all this. The investigations being carried out show there are some who knew the existence of this arsenal.

This is why I deeply thank you for your presence here today. You can be certain that while I am alive, and while I am here in my post, my main concern will be the people who needs the most -- the Chilean people, who must improve their standard of living -- because everyone must have the chance to be someone.

I remember once in Pisagua, I asked a lady why she was a communist and she answered: Because I want my children to be someone, and no one gives me anything.

Well, I am not a communist. I am an anticommunist. But, I also want to give you something so that your children may be able to fulfill their aspirations. [end recording]

Pinochet made a similar statement in four other meetings during which he was greeted and congratulated by other groups. [passage omitted]

Santiago Raids Yield More Arms

[Excerpts] The Government Social Communications Agency Dinacos has issued a communique which reports on the raids that were carried out yesterday by security personnel in the Santiago Metropolitan area. It adds that as a result of these raids many more arms were discovered. The following is a relay by Rosa Sanchez:

[Begin relay] The Dinacos has just issued a communique reporting that security personnel have found new arms cahces near Santiago.

The Dinacos communique states:

Dinacos informs the public that security personnel investigating the discovery of important clandestine arms caches in the 3d Region, yesterday discovered new arsenals near Santiago. These installations belong to the so-called terrorist Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front [FPMR] and are used as caches for the arms brought from the 3d Region, as well as a subversive training center.

The Dinacos communique adds that at 2496 Vicuna Mackenna Avenue, in Penaflor, security personnel discovered a specially prepared hidden tunnel, which was used as an arms and explosives cache. Security personnel also dismantled an arsenal found on lot No 4, called La Trilla. Among other things, the security personnel found the following war materiel: 60 FAL rifles; 45 M-16 rifles; 4 M-60 machine guns; mortars; rocket launchers, and explosives.

The Dinacos communique adds that another arms cache was found on a lot located at 576 Grandos Street, in La Quintana. This arms cache consisted of an abundant supply of ammunition, about 29 rifles and rockets.

Five people were arrested following the discovery of these new arms cache. They have been identified as: Jose Abelardo Moya Toro, Jorge Vladimir Velazquez Ugarte, Viviana Soledad Ortega Carrasco, Manuel Arturo Solis Cubillos, Marianeta (?Absobillo), and (?Eva Tatcher). A minor -- the daughter of one of those arrested -- has been placed under the custody of a close relative who was contacted.

Dinacos noted that the people will continue to be informed about the progress of the investigations of the arms caches discovered near Santiago. [end relay]

Before the discovery of the arms cache -- located under a chicken house -- a young couple and a mysterious third person escaped minutes before security personnel arrived. The arms found there are reportedly part of the cache clandestinely brought into the country by subversive groups during the beginning of 1986.

Security personnel continue to conduct search operations in Santiago and the provinces to discover all the arsenals and deposits installed in the 3d Region where subversives have established a beachhead to disembark the arms. [passage omitted]

IMPRISONED JOURNALIST RELEASED, EXILED TO FRANCE

[Text] Santiago, 20 Aug (AFP) -- Official sources have reported that Ulises Gomez Navarro, a Chilean journalist who has been imprisoned for the past 8 years for his activities within the outlawed Movement of the Revolutionary Left (MIR), has been released in Santiago and was exiled to France today.

Gomez Navarro was arrested in 1978 by agents of the military government of President Augusto Pinochet, who accused him of cooperating with the MIR in the clandestine publication of the newspaper EL REBELDE. Brought before a military court, Gomez Navarro, 29, faced additional charges. He was sentenced to a prison term, which, he served in several prisons in Santiago and other cities. The Chilean Government ordered his release after accepting the exile of Gomez Navarro.

A statement issued by French Ambassador to Chile Paul Depis states that Depis conveys his appreciation to the high-ranking Chilean authorities for the act of mercy which has permitted Mr Ulises Gomez Navarro to leave for France. The communique added that everyone who participated in this solidarity chain of events -- the happy outcome of which we are now learning -- must feel both stimulated and hopeful.

BARCO ANNOUNCES GUARANTEES FOR OPPOSITION

PA220132 Bogota EL SIGLO in Spanish 15 Aug 86 pp 1, 6

[Excerpts] Yesterday President Virgilio Barco sent a message to the Conservative Party leadership in which he states that "the government will do everything possible to facilitate the legal exercise of opposition."

"The appropriate guarantees, the tools to carry out opposition activities, and the proper settings will be at the disposal of the Conservatives and of all sectors of the opposition as well," the president said.

The message was sent to Rodrigo Lloreda Caicedo and Roberto Gerlein Echeverria, president and vice president of the National Conservative Party Directorate, respectively.

The following is a complete text of the message sent by President Barco to the Conservative Party officials:

Dr Rodrigo Lloreda Caicedo, president of the Natinal Conservative Party Directorate.
Dear Doctor:

The current political situation involves enormous responsibilities for Colombian Government leaders. The government and the political parties must be aware of the importance of these historic times, and therefore we must act accordingly.

I would like to strongly state that the government will not spare any efforts leading to the strengthening of our democracy through the constructive discussion of the problems of our country. We will do everything possible to facilitate the legal exercise of oppostion. The appropriate guarantees, the tools to carry out opposition activities, and the proper settings will be at the disposal of the Conservatives and of all sectors of the opposition as well.

I am sure that the organization you represent with dignity will carry out the opposition within institutional channels and in keeping with the highest criteria. Therefore I would like to express my deepest respect for the political guidance your directorate has given to the Conservative Party.

I know that the government and the party you represent will contribute to the success of this political project that lies within the framework of the tolerance of Colombian democracy.

I am especially pleased with your appointment as president of the National Conservative Party Directorate. We are willing to maintain a permanent dialogue that may allow us to move forward in the interesting job of devising new methods to improve our political regime.

The Government Minister Speaks [subhead]

Government Minister Fernando Cepeda Ulloa, at the end of a meeting with the Conservative Party leaders, said that access to public administration cannot be determined by political parties, color, or religious beliefs. He also called on everyone to work for a better Colombia.

Cepeda Ulloa announced that the Conservative Party will work with the present government in important technical positions. In this regard he said: "We are ready to appoint members of the Conservative Party in important decentralized institutions, which will be of significance to the country. [passage omitted]

Public Order [subhead]

Regarding this issue Cepeda Ulloa said that some regrettable incidents have taken place and that the government has taken measures. "The most difficult case of all, because of social reasons and not because blood has been spilled, has been one involving Cauca Department where more than a thousand peasants have been demonstrating. The government immediately sent Carlos Ossa Escobar, presidential adviser on reconstruction, rehabilitation, and normalization, to solve this problem in a civilized and appropriate manner. I believe this problem is being handled well. Regarding other cases such as unexpected attacks and ambushes, it is very difficult for the government to be as prepared as it would like to be," Cepeda Ulloa said.

Government Minister Cepeda Ulloa said the situation "is not serious," "There have been some regrettable incidents which we hope will not be repeated," he said. [passage omitted]

The Guerrillas [subhead]

Asked if Ossa Escobar would be working alone in the reconciliation duties, Cepeda Ulloa said he is not alone because he will have a government structure at his side, which will be in charge of the rehabilitation plan and national and international financing which will coordinate political, economic, and social problems of the government. "All of the ministers will convene to discuss with him the situation of former guerrillas who want to join civilian life so they may receive the benefits of those programs. The entire government will be involved in this job, led by the president who will give it more support. It will be a radical change of the policy of rehabilitation, reconciliation, and normalization," Cepeda Ulloa said.

Regarding the rehabilitation plan, he said the government is taking the necessary measures to speed up the financing of the program.

TRIBUNAL DISMISSES JUDGE WHO RELEASED OCHOA

PA211836 Bogota Television Service in Spanish 1730 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Text] The Superior Customs Tribunal has dismissed Fabio Pastrana, the sole customs judge of Cartagena, who released Jorge Luis Ochoa [alleged drug trafficker]. The U.S. and Spanish press rejected this action by Judge Pastrana.

The customs tribunal is meeting at this hour to review the names of all its delegates in the country.

Further On Pastrana's Removal

[Text] Controversy still prevails in the United States because of the decision made by customs Judge Favio Pastrana to release the alleged drug trafficker Fabio Ochoa Vasquez on bail in Cartagena after he was convicted of smuggling bulls for bullfighting.

Judge Fabio Pastrana was removed from his post by the Customs Court. However this decision was not made because of Pastrana's involvement in the Ochoa Vasquez case. The court appointed 50 out of 72 judges. It has been the largest replacement of customs judges so far. This move involves a change in customs, justice, and will surely lead to a stage of moralizing.

Regarding the Ochoa Vasquez case, we must point out that the attorney general's office has been informed by the Justice Ministry that in addition to Judge Pastrana, the warden of La Ternera Jail also knew about this incident.

It is well-known that Ochoa Vasquez is being sought by U.S. officials.

PATRIOTIC UNION MEETS WITH NEW DEFENSE MINISTER

[Text] The Patriotic Union Coordinating Board today told high-ranking military commanders of the harassment which members of the party are being subjected to in several areas of the country. Jaime Pardo Leal [leader of the Patriotic Union Coordinating Board] said this meeting with the defense minister and high-ranking military commanders is truly the democratic opening of President Virgilio Bargo's government.

[Begin Pardo recording] The meeting went just as it should. It is the first time in our country's history that a defense minister has met with the democratic and revolutionary forces. This meeting has been very useful, for us and for the country. We want nothing for our movement. We want to implement peace in our republic. The meeting was a good and honest one and we hope that what was discussed at the meeting -- in strong but polite words -- will be fulfilled. We asked that the Patriotic Union be guaranteed that all its leaders and members will be allowed to be in contact with our people and that not more graves of men struggling for peace and social changes will be opened. [end recording]

ALFARO LIVES CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR KILLINGS

[Text] Quito, 20 Aug (AFP) -- Today at noon the Ecuadoran Alfaro Lives rebel movement claimed responsibility for the murder of three policemen who were guarding a member of that group. He was rescued from the Eugenio Espejo Hospital located in front of the National Congress in Quito. The incident took place on Tuesday, and was condemned by all sectors of the country.

The rebel communique was delivered to the media, signed "somewhere in Ecuador," by the top leader of group Arturo Jarrin, for whose arrest and that of other rebels the government has offered a reward of 5 million sucres ($30,000).

The Alfaro Lives group said its Martyrs of Guayaquil Commando "rescued Companero Lenardo [as received] Vera Viteri Fidel," and it claimed "full responsibility for the three casualties inflicted on the Ecuadoran national police during that operation."

General Luis Suarez, the general commander of the police, who arrived at the premises along with Ecuadoran Government Minister Luis Robles Plaza, said that six men and a woman dressed as interns arrived at the hospital in a stolen taxi, and "killed at point blank range the policemen who were guarding the prisoner. The policemen did not have time to react. The rebels were armed with machine guns and used 9 mm automatic pistols to kill the policemen.

UNION LEADER KILLED; BOMBINGS REPORTED

[Text] Lima, 21 Aug (AFP) -- The police today reported in Lima the killing of a trade union leader of the state-owned Centromin [Central Peruvian Mining Enterprise] in Cerro de Pasco, two bomb attacks in Puno, and another in Ayacucho over the past 24 hours. It is believed the attacks are the work of the Shining Path commandos.

Trade union leader Saul Porras was stabbed to death yesterday by two presumed Shining Path members who followed him from his house in the suburbs of the city of Cerro de Pasco, 317 km southeast of Lima. Porras participated in the discussions on the latest demands raised before Centromin by the Federation of Miners and Metalworkers -- some 17,000 members -- which sponsored a strike in February and March 1986. During the strike, four trade union leaders were killed.

The Peruvian authorities then said the killings were perpetrated by terrorists who have infiltrated the trade unions with the aim of rendering the mining enterprises inactive, thus seriously harming them. In Juliaca, a province in Puno Department, the building that houses the Collasuyo Radio Station, and the house of Jose Loza, a United Left candidate for mayor of San Roman Province, were bombed yesterday. There were no casualties, but serious damage was reported. In Ayacucho, an explosive device planted at the Turistas Hotel, where APRA [American Popular Revolutionary Alliance] Deputy Alberto Valencia was staying, was defused. Valencia said that a note was left next to the bomb, threatening to kill him.

MOTION FILED TO QUESTION CABINET ON PRISON RIOTS

[Text] Lima, 21 Aug (AFP) -- Congressional sources today reported some 62 opposition deputies last night submitted a motion to summon Peruvian Prive Minister Luis Alva Castro's Cabinet for questioning in connection with the events that took place in June this year at 3 Lima and Callao prisons, where approximately 300 prisoners charged with terrorist activities died.

Meanwhile, 45 Republican Guardsmen have been sent to Canto Grande prison -- on the outskirts of Lima -- because of their direct involvement in the execution of more than 100 inmates of Lurigancho prison -- also in the suburbs of Lima -- after they had surrendered. Deputies of the United Left (IU), the second strongest political force in Peru, of the Popular Christian Party (PPC), and of the Popular Action (AP), yesterday asked Chamber of Deputies President Fernando Leon de Vivero to set the date for the Cabinet to be questioned in Congress.

This is the first time a motion has been filed to question the ministers of the current administration. It contains 22 questions concerning the events that took place on 18 and 19 June, when some 700 prisoners charged with terrorist activities staged simultaneous riots in prisons in Lima and Callao. The riots were violently brought under control at the cost of some 300 lives. A meeting with the Socialist International was being held at the Peruvian capital at that time.

DEFENSE MINISTER COMMENTS ON 'TENSION' IN FORCES

PY202250 Montevideo Radio Carve in Spanish 0930 GMT 20 Aug 86

[Telephone interview with Uruguayan Defense Minister Juan Vicente Chiarino to Radio Carve reporter in Montevideo -- date not given]

[Excerpts] [Reporter's introduction] Defense Minister Juan Vicente Chiarino has said that it is advisable to avoid radical stands and to make a great effort to understand the problem of pacification. He added that the actions recently undertaken by some groups, which frequently criticize the Armed Forces, have created tension among some members of the military, who feel that they are being harassed.

Chiarino confirmed that 17 retired generals have issued a communique accepting responsibility for their actions during the struggle against subversion. He said the military men have not categorically rejected amnesty. He also confirmed that a house next door to the houses of two officers was attacked.

[Begin recording] [Chiarino] As you know, the president has for a long time tried to work out a political accord which will create an atmosphere of peace and tranquillity, so that the government and Congress may tackle the problems facing our country. [passage omitted]

[Reporter] How do the Armed Forces regard the situation?

[Chiarino] The commanders are considering the situation with absolute tranquillity. However, there is tension, and this is logical if we take into account what is happening in this country. As I said not long ago, I believe that the Armed Forces feel that they are being harassed. I will not deny what I said before. [passage indistinct] [passage omitted]

[Reporter] Mr Minister, 17 retired generals a few hours ago released a communique assuming responsibility for their actions during the antisubversive struggle and rejecting an amnesty.

[Chiarino] I have the impression that they did not categorically reject amnesty. The communique was read to me only once. The document was read at a meeting I held with the president and the Armed Forces commanders. It was submitted to the president before being released. I have the impression that the communique issued by the 17 generals has many positive points that the public may welcome, despite the fact that not everyone agrees with the Armed Forces' viewpoint on the struggle against subversion. But that is something else. Now that you are talking to me over the phone I cannot recall all the details of the communique. Yet I had the impression that it did not convey a rejection of amnesty and that it established some preconditions for reaching a solution, which the retired generals also deem essential for the preservation of peace. Therefore, I do not think the communique has categorically rejected amnesty.

[Reporter] Dr Chiarino, how does the government view this situation, particularly in light of the recent statements by Vice President Enrique Tarigo, who said the country is very close to a state of disturbance and who even wondered whether we are just waiting to see the first victim fall in the streets?

[Chiarino] Look, I do not believe that the remarks by Dr Tarigo, which I read in the newspapers this morning, have that meaning. However, I did not read his statement very carefully because I expected to read it more carefully this evening, when I will also analyze the remarks by Dr Jorge Batlle and Senator Manuel Flores Silva. I believe that the three leaders all agree that this matter cannot remain unresolved indefinitely, because it is hindering the resolution of other key issues that can also lead to debate. Yet this debate will not be as heated as in the human rights violation case.

Dr Tarigo said that any unfortunate incident would be undesirable. I believe it is very good that he said this and warned of this, because thank God no serious street incident occurred during the first 1 and 1/2 years of this administration, except for the difficulties that are known to everyone. But serious incidents can occur any time if radical factions increase tension to an unacceptable level. If this happens, it will be too late to try to find a solution or to deplore the situation. Therefore, all of us should try to avoid such a situation. Fortunately, the painful incidents that occur in other countries are not common here. In some South American countries, such incidents have happened so many times that the people do not react as intensely as the Uruguayan people would react if an incident between radical groups ended in violence. I do not mean that the people of those South American countries have become accustomed to such events, because this too would be terrible. We should try to avoid similar incidents. BLANCO LEADER REJECTS AMNESTY FOR MILITARY MEN

PY220016 Montevideo Madrid EFE in Spanish 0038 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Text] Montevideo, 20 Aug (EFE) -- Amnesty for the Uruguayan military men involved in human rights violations is "unacceptable" for the main opposition National (Blanco) party, said top party leader Wilson Ferreira Aldunate today.

After meeting with President Julio Maria Sanguinetti to discuss this issue, the "Blanco" leader added that now the issue will have to be discussed by Congress. In turn, Sanguinetti decided not to make any statements about this matter to the journalists who were waiting for him today during a visit to the national cattle fair.

The president and his "Colorado" party last Monday decided to promote an amnesty law for military men, based on the principle of justice after the release of the "Tupamaros" guerrillas and "to pacify the country." The ruling "Colorado" party lacks the necessary number of votes in Congress to unilaterally impose its amnesty bill because it needs 66 votes and can only count on 55 among senators and deputies.

Sanguinetti today started a round of consultations with the main political leaders to achieve a consensus that will permit the approval of the amnesty bill at a time when in governmental circles a confrontation between "hot-headed left-wing people and nostalgic Armed Forces sectors" is feared.

The comments Ferreira Aldunate made tonight are the first obstacle the government has encountered in proceeding with the initiative. Political sources stated that the lack of votes to approve the amnesty bill may lead to a confrontation between branches and an eventual dissolution of congress with a call to elections in 8 weeks.

FOREIGN MINISTER CONSALVI TRAVELS TO HAITI

[Report by Martin Pacheco]

The purpose of his trip is to meet with the new Haitian authorities and with representatives of all political, economic, and social sectors.

Haiti is going through an important stage of political transition, which Venezuela has been following with great interest. After such a lengthy dictatorship, there are many difficulties that must be faced to promote a new course in this nation's history.

According to Foreign Minister Consalvi, Venezuela will contribute, as best as it can, to the consolidation of democracy in a process that is not free from serious political, economic, and social problems.

Since the fall of Jean-Claude Duvalier, a National Council of Government, headed by Henri Namphy as president, has been in power in Haiti. A private meeting between Consalvi and Namphy is scheduled.

Political and diplomatic media, especially at the Venezuelan Foreign Ministry, view this meeting as important because it is the first time a Venezuelan foreign minister has gone to Haiti in an official capacity.

FINANCE MINISTER COMMENTS ON DRAFT BILLS TO CONGRESS

PA211418 Caracas Television Service in Spanish 0000 GMT 20 Aug 86

[Text] The Finance Minister, the president of the Congress, the president of the Democratic Action [AD], the AD'S deputy national secretary, the AD'S congress faction director, and the presidents of the domestic policy commission and (?mines) commission of the Chamber of Deputies, met today to discuss the draft bills presented to the National Congress during its extraordinary sessions.

Following the meeting, AD President Gonzalo Barrios stressed that he feels that the economic matters to be discussed during this extraordinary period are important. These economic matters are aimed at reducing Venezuela's fiscal deficit. [recorded passage indistinct]

Finance Minister Manuel Azpurua elaborated on his views and said that each of the draft bills presented has its own objective.

[Begin recording] The fiscal draft bill will help cover the fiscal deficit that has resulted from the decrease in our fiscal revenue from our oil exports. Regarding the other draft bills, these complement the need and objective sought by the executive branch. The executive branch is trying to transfer and sell, to the private sector, some of the nonbasic enterprises. The amendments to the ground transportation law seek to implement a mandatory third party liability insurance and to place the Traffic Police Corps under the Metropolitan and State Police and the National Guard. [end recording]

Finance Minister Azpurua also said that from the very beginning, the government drafted an economic plan and that the goals of this plan are to achieve a balance in the foreign accounts. He said that this has been achieved. The government also seeks to achieve a fiscal balance.

[Begin recording] We have been working in this sense and we are achieving positive results. According to the information provided by the Central Bank, after a process of economic stagnation, in 1985 we reported a slight domestic growth of 0.6 percent. This year, according to Cordiplan [Office of Coordination and Planning] and the Central Bank, we should show a 2 percent growth. [end recording]

Minister Azpurpa stressed that we must maintain ourselves within a policy of discipline and fiscal austerity. He added that we must do our best to correct the deficit that has resulted from a decrease in fiscal revenue due to the oil situation.

OIL REVENUES DROP BY 21.14 BILLION BOLIVARES

FL212256 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 2206 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Text] Caracas, Venezuela, 21 Aug (VENPRES-NOTIMEX) -- It was announced here that Venezuela's oil revenues reflect a drop of 21.14 billion bolivares (approximately 7 units equal $1) compared to what had been initially budgeted.

The Council of Ministers today studied the situation and decided to reduce the budget of Venezuela's investment fund by 1.5 billion bolivares.

The drop in the price of oil has affected OPEC countries, Mexico, and some states in the United States, where the crisis has left thousands of workers unemployed.

In the case of Venezuela, the austerity measures and savings ordered by the government of President Jaime Lusinchi have avoided serious consequences, stated Carmel Lauria, minister of the secretariat of the presidency.

Lusinchi had to cut expenditures and maintain strict supervision over the fulfillment of austerity measures, without transferring great sacrifices to the popular sectors.

DEA OPERATIONS HAVE NO OFFICIAL SUPPORT

FL212059 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 1722 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Text] 21 Aug, (NOTIMEX) -- There is no existing agreement allowing the U.S. Administration's Drug Enforcement Agency [DEA] to operate in Mexico. The operations carried out by DEA agents do not have Mexico's official support.

Mexican Foreign Secretariat sources arrived at this conclusion after extensively reviewing agreements and documents that could authorize the presence of the DEA in Mexican territory.

The Mexican Foreign Secretariat denied the journalist's versions since the DEA does have permission to conduct investigations in Mexico.

On Tuesday, at the request of the governing PRI, the Permanent Commission of the Congress approved a request to the Foreign Secretariat Commission of the Senate asking for information on the status of DEA operations in the country.

REPORT ON ECONOMY GIVES BRIGHTER OUTLOOK

[Text] The Finance and Public Credit Secretariat and the Programming and Budget Secretariat asserted today that after 3 years of efforts by the present administration, the economy has more solid and secure bases to confront its problems.

The two secretariats submitted the report to the Chamber of Deputies on the status of the economy and public finances for the second quarter of 1986. The report contains a detailed explanation of the manner in which the Mexican economy has been coping with the foreign maladjustments that have impacted the domestic finances and production structures.

The situation is more solid than it was in late 1982. It is far better than in 1982 despite the drop in oil prices this year.

Bankruptcy of production apparatus has been prevented; new jobs have been generated. Inflation has been under control and reduced to levels below those of 1982.

Public finances are noticeably healthier. Disregarding interest payments, there is a surplus [superavit] in public spending of almost 6 percent over the gross internal product. [sentence as heard] This is unprecedented in the history of Mexico's public finances. Food production and housing construction reached record levels.

The crisis has been kept from further affecting real wages. In addition, important processes have been carried out regarding structural changes. The document notes that the current inflation and recession have resulted from the collapse of oil prices and not from the government's strategy or an absence of efforts by the social and private sectors. For this reason it is a mistake to try to attribute to the government's actions something that results from changes in reality.

Contingency Loans Requested

[Excerpt] Mexico, 20 Aug, (NOTIMEX) -- The Finance Secretariat has reported that Mexico has asked the international financial community for contingency loans totalling $1.6 billion to strengthen its international reserves.

Gustavo Petricioli, finance and public credit secretary, sent a communique on this matter to the international financial community.

The loan includes $1.1 billion from the United States and the central banks of 15 European countries, Japan, and Latin America. The remaining $500 million will be provided by creditor countries.

Petricioli explained that $850 million will be disbursed immediately and the remaining $750 [million] will be disbursed after a commitment is reached with the trade banks participating in the contingency loan. [passage omitted]

Citibank Grants Bridge Loan

[Text] (William Rhodes), vice chairman of Citibank and co-chairman of the Mexico Banking commission, said in Manhattan that commerical banks will give Mexico $500 million as part of the bridge loan to face short-term financial commitments. The decision to recommend to Mexico's creditor banks to participate in this contingency credit was officially disclosed in New York.

(Rhodes) also noted that the cost of the bridge loan will be at an interest rate slightly above seven percent. The banking commission said Mexico will pay commerical banks after it has received the first reimbursement of the financial package negotiated for 1986 and 1987 totalling $12 billion.

GOVERNMENT ASSUMES PART OF CFE FOREIGN DEBT

PA211755 Mexico City XEW Television Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Report by Francisco Fortuno]

[Excerpt] Yesterday President Miguel de la Madrid signed, as an honorary witness, an agreement in which the government assumes approximately 80 percent of the Federal Electricity Commission's [CFE] foreign debt, totaling approximately $8 billion.

President Da la Madrid said the federal government admits that a large part of the foreign debt acquired by the electricity sector was the result of a backward tariff policy that called for excessive subsidies to consumers.

[Begin De la Madrid recording] The federal government is not granting the electricity sector a gracious or gratuitous concession by assuming a large part of its debts. It is recognizing a reality and correcting an error. [end recording]

De la Madrid said that we must continue to realize that electricity must cover operational costs, and that they must even produce a profit for investments on a medium-term basis. He mentioned the need to diversify the sources of energy in the world, as oil reserves will eventually be consumed. De la Madrid stressed that the annual energy production growth during the past 4 years surpassed 5 percent, a percentage higher than the economy's general growth, which made it possible to meet the additional demands. President De la Madrid presided over a working session at the CFE's Technological Museum, during which a report on the progress achieved in the electricity sector between 1983-86 was presented. There were seven speakers.

Alfredo del Mazzo, secretary of energy, mines and parastate industry said that despite the crisis, the government has assigned a large sum for improvements in the electricity industry, thus guaranteeing the service and increasing productivity levels.

[Begin Del Mazzo recording] It is worth mentioning that Mexico is self-sufficient in electricity production, and that the corresponding trade balance is favorable. [end recording] [passage omitted]

FRENCH AUTO COMPANY TO CLOSE OPERATIONS

[Excerpts] Mexico City, 21 Aug, (NOTIMEX) -- Renault Mexicana S.A. has announced it will withdraw from the market and lay off 54 percent of its employees. In 1985, the company registered losses amounting close to 20 million pesos and reporting over 50 percent drop in its sales during this year's first 6 months. This was announced by Renault's director general (Mitchell Brussad), who noted that production had completely stopped 2 months ago and its workers were collecting only 70 percent of their salaries. [passage omitted] Labor sources indicated that the main cause of the bankruptcy was poor management practices of the French, who had high salaries paid in U.S. dollars.

COLOMBIAN MINISTER GETS AWARD, CABRERA ON AID

PA201439 Panama City Panavision Television in Spanish 0000 GMT 20 Aug 86

[Report by Rey Barria]

[Text] The Panamanian Foreign Ministry this morning awarded new Colombian Foreign Minister Julio Londono Paredes the Order of Vasco Nunez de Balboa in the grade of the Grand Cross. Prior to being appointed foreign minister, Londono Paredes was Colombian ambassador to Panama. Questioned by the local and foreign press about international topics, Londono Paredes indicated it was not the proper time for such topics:

[Begin Londono Paredes recording] At this time I only want to express my deep affection and admiration for the Panamanian people and their pleasant and generous country that will be remembered deep in my heart, a feeling that I am sure is shared by many Colombians here in Panama. [end recording]

On his part, Panamanian Deputy Foreign Minister Jose Maria Cabrera referred to the recent U.S. approval of $100 million for the Nicaraguan contras and to the Contadora Group efforts:

[Begin Cabrera recording] We definitely believe that this does not in any way help the process for a peaceful solution of the Central American crisis. Any funds, aid, or help that promote violence will only heighten tension and increase the price in blood that Central America is paying, and they are a clear and important obstacle to the process of peaceful negotiation. [end recording]

The Panamanian Deputy Foreign Minister also denied increasing rumors about the establishment of diplomatic relations between Panama and the PRC.

PERUVIAN ENVOY: PIA VESTA WEAPONS FOR EL SALVADOR

PA220034 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 1511 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Text] Panama, 21 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- Peruvian Ambassador to Panama Javier Ortiz de Zevallos has affirmed that the weapons transported by the Danish ship Pia Vesta were bound for El Salvador, not Peru.

Ortiz de Zevallos said: "For us, the official word has been given by Panama that the destination (of the weapons) -- and this has been proven with documents -- was El Salvador."

The Pia Vesta was seized on 14 June in Panamanian territorial waters with more than 100 tons of war materiel; the destination of the weapons is still unknown.

Ambassador Ortiz de Zevallos said that he "is absolutely sure that neither the Peruvian Navy nor the Armed Forces had anything to do with this matter."

Ortiz de Zevallos emphasized: "They have tried to use Peru as a smokescreen to conceal the fact that the weapons were coming from Eastern Europe, to make it appear as if they were coming from South America."

He added: "We were indeed concerned about the arrival off the Peruvian coast of a ship full of weapons requested by Peru. We did not know whether or not the weapons could be used in Peru. [sentence as received] We took all necessary measures to prevent the unloading of these weapons."

The manager of Terminales Chiriqui, S.A. (Techisa), Jose Fernandez, who was recently linked to the case of the Pia Vesta, said that much has been said about the weapons being transported in the ship; however, the identities of the buyer and the seller have not been disclosed.

The manager of Techisa, which is a cargo transporter, noted that the "merchandise" on the Danish ship was addressed directly to General Adolfo Blandon of the Salvadoran Army.

The Panamanian businessman said that the bill of lading only specified four wheel drive trucks and spare parts, among other products.

PRD WILL FULFILL POLITICAL PACT WITH PALA

PA211501 Panama City MATUTINO in Spanish 21 Aug 86 pp 1, 8-a

[By Jaime Beitia]

The Democratic Revolutionary Party, PRD, has decided to comply with the political pact it has with the Labor Party, PALA, on the election of Legislative Assembly presidents and vice presidents.

Sources close to legislator Alberto Aleman Boyd, a candidate to the presidency of the Legislative Assembly for the forthcoming period, have told MATUTINO that the decision was adopted following an intense dialogue among the top PRD leaders and PRD legislators.

The decision was reportedly adopted yesterday during a meeting at the Justo Arosemena Palace where it finally became possible to convince legislator Luis "Lucho" Gomez to decline his aspirations to the first vice presidency of the Legislative Assembly for the forthcoming period.

The sources also said that at yesterday's meeting, the legislators of the governing party bench reiterated their support for the candidacy of PRD legislator Alberto Aleman Boyd, who also has much backing from the other parties that compose the National Democratic Union.

Legislator Camilo Gozaine, president of the Legislative Assembly, has stated that the PRD will comply with its commitment with PALA. According to that commitment, PALA is to have the next first vice presidency post. Gozaine admitted that the PRD had assumed a mistaken position by not having acknowledged the political pact.

ARIAS SANCHEZ' 100 DAYS SPEECH TO NATION

PA210045 San Jose Domestic Service in Spanish 0102 GMT 20 Aug 86

[Speech by President Oscal Arias Sanchez; place not given -- live]

[Text] Costa Ricans: Friday marked the end of the initial 100 days of this administration's efforts. They were not easy days. The practices of the past -- good or bad -- apparently seek to impose themselves at the outset of every administration, as if nothing had to change.

There are pressures to increase prices, to increase salaries, to keep or acquire privileges, to occupy public posts. How I wish the demands of friends and the opposition of the adversary ended on election day! How I wish antagonisms would become commitments to help the country solve its problems! I know this is not easy, but it is worth trying again and again.

Today I reassert my belief that it is more important to build bridges than to erect walls. It is better to build together than to deepen the discord that divides and weakens us. Tonight I want to reiterate to you, first of all, my commitment to work tirelessly for Costa Rica's good. I will continue to encourage every initiative, regardless of its source, so long as it can be of benefit to the country. I will ask for cooperation from anyone wishing to help solve Costa Rica's problems and contribute to the nation's development.

In the name of Costa Rica I demand the right to work to implement the political program which the people approved during the recent elections. In the name of our homeland I ask that we work together to achieve all campaign promises, for which Costa Rica is waiting: to preserve peace; to resolve the housing problem; to establish morality in public and private activities; to guarantee employment to every Costa Rican; to dignify the family; to incorporate women and youths into the nation's activities; to rebuild the economy; to [word indistinct] political power; to promote economic democracy; and to (?reduce) the expenses of the political campaign.

In the name of the people I demand good faith in political struggles. For this reason I demand, with equal vigor, the right to make the will of the majority a reality, because otherwise we would be betraying democracy and flouting the most sacred part of our political coexistence. During these initial days of my administration we have centered our efforts on setting into motion the initial tenets of the political campaign. We felt it necessary to strengthen the best values we have inherited from our ancestors, which undoubtedly include honesty, sincerity, devotion to work, reaffirmation of Costa Rica's nationality, and humility. Our style of government draws its inspiration from them. We must wage a long and tenacious struggle to strengthen these values fully within our behavior.

We are working for these principles. This does not involve spectacular action or [illegible] hopes. We want a permanent attitude to permeate all of us -- the public and private sectors -- allowing us to work over and above political partisanship and to feel proud that we are making Costa Rica great. This is a call to work for honesty and to establish clear-cut rules for the public sector. I have received broad cooperation from all Costa Ricans in fighting wrongdoing. The government has begun to take action on various fronts, simultaneously and with equal determination in all of them.

We do not seek to blemish the honor of innocent people or to make the front pages of the newspapers. We seek to punish the wrongdoer in order to rebuild confidence in our public institutions and private activities, as well as (?faith) in our political parties. We have strictly adhered to our laws in every step. The country can be absolutely certain that we feel we are zealous guardians of honesty.

In another front in this same struggle, we are fighting drug trafficking with full vigor. The country has seen how we have confiscated large shipments of cocaine, destroyed extensive marijuana plantations, and captured dangerous criminals and drug traffickers during these past initial weeks. We know that this is not enough. We are drafting new legislation on this subject to be able to organize (?our resources better) and to apprehend the guilty more quickly and expeditiously. We are [word indistinct] the efforts of the authorities to make the fight against crime more effective. This is a national crusade. Together we can make life impossible for drug traffickers and force them to stop using Costa Rica to carry out their wicked trade. This must be our objective for the sake of our children and the dignity of our fatherland.

We are (?also going to launch) a comprehensive campaign to stringently combat contraband. [Words indistinct] to reorganize the customs system because it is necessary to protect law-abiding producers and merchants. We fight contraband because we know that, he who seeks to make easy profits by avoiding work and flouting the laws is a factor of social demoralization. We are prepared to cleanse the country of undesirable aliens. We are reviewing the files of some foreigners and the cases of some people who have acquired Costa Rican citizenship by lying about their backgrounds.

Some foreign nations who even enjoy certain privileges here are wanted by the international police. Others are engaged in activities undesirable for our country. Costa Rica must never be a haven for criminals nor tolerant toward anyone who uses its soil to engage in criminal activities. I advise the country very clearly that we will do everything within our power and will strongly act to expel all undesirable aliens who are a source of corruption in Costa Rica.

In addition to expelling foreigners in this situation, we are determined to take drastic action against Costa Ricans who are found to be accomplices to granting entry and protection to these undesirable foreigners who have so greatly harmed and are harming our country's morals.

Concerning simplicity [sencillez], we are working every day to end the ostentation in the public sector. There will be no luxury in vehicles or buildings. There will be no unnecessary trips. We will seek simplicity. One of our greatest wishes is to fully restore it and we are determined to achieve this. However, let us not confuse ostentation with decorum or moderation [as heard], or luxury with the dignity demanded by public office. The mistakes and failures of [words indistinct] must not affect our morale. We should only be concerned with tirelessly doing the work needed to reach a desired goal. We should never be afraid of rectifying and starting all over again if necessary.

Simplicity should also be the goal of the private sector. Certain outbursts of ostentation observed in that sector are not in line with our best traditions.

Inasmuch as many of these attitudes -- on the part of Costa Ricans and foreigners -- are backed by ill-conceived laws which were promoted, in some cases, by certain international officials under the pretext of international agreements or similar pacts, the abuses certainly distort the incentives given to them [not further identified] to facilitate their work, converting these advantages into exaggerated privileges for personal gain. I will soon send a bill to the legislative assembly putting an end to these abuses.

We will work tirelessly so that the simplicity of the past, the simplicity of our forefathers, will prevail in all our actions.

Devotion to work is also another crusade begun in these first few days. Costa Rica needs the best from each of us, in the public as well as in the private sector. [Words indistinct] very proud. Producing more and better work will depend on a great national effort. Our services must be of the highest quality. We are involved in an effort unprecedented in our history, the goal of which is to have our public officials' devotion to duty to be fully reflected in their actions. What we must do, we must do well, with happiness and satisfaction. The long lines of citizens at hospitals, banks, post offices, bus stops, and in many other places of service are sometimes signs of the scarcity of resources. However, all too frequently they show an insensitivity on the part of public servants. We have vowed to correct this situation.

Our government action is aimed at [word indistinct] the full meaning of devotion to work. Devotion to duty must be shown in the greatest respect for the users of these services. This is why I have asked all my collaborators in the central government and the decentralized agencies to put the greatest care and attention on substantially improving the public services.

We want to preserve and strengthen Costa Rican patriotism, our sacred inheritance. It includes all possible aspects, which are sometimes hard to define. It includes our love for freedom, the enjoyment of [word indistinct], and democracy, a deeply-rooted desire for peace, a sense of brotherhood, and many other things that unite us and make us different from other people. We must protect our special nature. Threats exist that we must face with realism. It is estimated that approximately 250,000 foreigners live among us. Many of them do not fully share the values of our patriotism, which is so much ours and so dear to us.

War conflicts, intense ideological struggles, and the constant violation of human rights in neighboring countries have forced men, women, and children of those nations to seek refuge among us.

Our laws to admit foreigners and to grant them citizenship were passed foreseeing economic and political situations common to our nations. These laws do not address the massive immigration of families from other countries, seeking peace in Costa Rica. These laws were formulated without considering that thousands of people would be seeking citizenship in a short time.

Ours is a small country, exceptional in many respects, but we must prudently preserve the balance which makes us different. A constitutional amendment is under debate which will make it even more difficult to obtain Costa Rican citizenship. It is an urgent and necessary amendment. However, it will be some time before this bill can be passed. I have asked the authorities in charge to be particularly careful in processing naturalization papers.

I want to talk about what used to be one of our best characteristics: humility. Nothing we do will be good enough unless we do it humbly. We despise arrogance. The legal system that prevails in Costa Rica demands that everyone comply with the law. To apply the laws in the same manner to the weak and powerful is the strength of public officials, who can and should be humble in dealing with the public, always according to the law.

Humility guides the government's actions. During the past 100 days, we have implemented specific actions to awaken and strengthen the principles we believe in and so proudly inherited. We want to deliver to the new generations these enriched principles; and this, we will do. We work daily for these principles. I will accept the temporary failures we have as flaws of my administration. But, I want us to celebrate as a victory of Costa Rica the achievement of what we set out to do.

The challenge we overcame just yesterday was to stop the catastrophe which threatened to destroy all we had achieved during many years of work. The challenge we are facing today is to build a new economy. We plan to correct imbalances and to confront the negative traditions.

There are imbalances in financing our expenses and in our commercial account. We owe a lot of money abroad which we are obligated to pay, and we intend to. We have drafted a new proposal which we will submit to our creditors.

I reiterate here my promise to find a Costa Rican solution for the establishment of a new economy. We are holding talks with public institutions and with representatives of the productive sectors. We have been talking to businessmen and workers. We have to establish a more efficient economy. We should not be just seeking new markets. If we increase and improve our production, we will be improving the living standard of Costa Rican consumers.

Three years from now it will be a century since we established a democratic system. Unfortunately, this is an anniversary that many sister countries of the continent cannot celebrate. What makes us different from other countries? Many things. Tonight, I will only mention one: the survival of small properties. The small farmer and industrialist is the fundamental pillar of our democracy. Let us not think otherwise. The day they vanish, our democratic system will also vanish.

Each day the world becomes more competitive, demanding more efficiency in order to survive. The answer is [words indistinct] obligation to the cooperative. I reiterate once more my desire to help in every way possible so small property owners can organize strong and efficient cooperatives.

In the agricultural field, I have said that the technical aid the state offers should be exclusively for small and medium-size farmers, giving priority to those organized in cooperatives and other types of organizations. For fairer distribution of aid for agriculture, price policy should not be used to hurt producers, but neither should it grant them excessive subsidies by approving prices much higher than the prices in the international market.

Prices should be used as incentive mechanisms to increase production. On the other hand, they should not be a heavy burden for local consumers. We are fighting inflation. The success of this struggle will depend on whether we can improve the standard of living of every Costa Rican. Wages should always be higher than prices. I feel that if we act responsibly, we will achieve our objective and in May 1990 every family in Costa Rica will be in better socio-economic conditions than now.

Our people have proven their will to achieve greater transformations in the country. They did it when they decided to launch the education and health campaign. Today, this will is again expressed with the solution of the housing problem. These first days of my government confirm that we are going to be successful in our efforts.

I also want to speak to you tonight about peace. Costa Rica wants to share its desire for peace with other nations. Costa Rica believes that only democracy can put an end to wars among brothers. The Latin American continent is tired of useless violence. It is tired of groups of both political extremes claiming that they represent the majority. It is tired of seeing small groups of fanatics taking over the liberating struggle of entire nations.

More than ever Latin America needs to work in peace and freedom to generate wealth and fight poverty. More than ever the use of hatred to promote violence negates our Christian upbringing. More than ever we renew our confidence in the possibility that our problems can be solved with freedom.

Peace in Central America is threatened by the Nicaraguan dictatorship, by Somoza's heirs, by those who were afraid of their people's freedom and replaced the old tyrant in order to swear loyalty to the Marxist empire.

All Western European countries bordering on the communist world spend millions of dollars on defense. They form costly military alliances to prevent communist expansion. Costa Rica is the first country without armed forces that borders on the Marxist world. The Costa Rican Government is making the necessary efforts to find a peaceful solution in Central America. We trust the diplomatic efforts will [word indistinct] to return to the Nicaraguan people the fruit of their liberating struggle: democracy.

(?In regard to) the conflicts in the region, Costa Rica applies the strictest neutrality. We do not permit our national territory to be used for military actions. We do not believe in this type of solution, and we have said so to our best friends and allies in the international arena. We have given unequivocal proof of our desire for peace and our willingness to practice our neutrality.

No one should be surprised by our determination to continue this policy. It is the mandate of a democratic and peace-loving people. We maintain the policy of expelling any foreigner who collaborates with war activities. We will also punish, with all the severity of the law, those Costa Ricans who participate, promote, or permit these activities.

These actions in our territory are very dangerous for our peace. In addition, they are a source of corruption that fosters arms trafficking and permits easy connections between this type of trafficking and (?the no-less-dangerous) drug trafficking. Any foreigner linked with armed struggles underway in other countries will lose his political asylum in Costa Rica. Those with these ties will not receive political asylum either. Costa Rica's neutrality must be respected by all nations and all persons.

In May I attended the meeting of Central American presidents in Esquipulas. Later I attend the inauguration in Colombia. On both occasions, as I reported to the press then, when I met with the other presidents I clearly explained my decision and views about the Central American situation.

Costa Rica's position cannot be more clear. We will be neutral, and we will see to it that this neutrality is respected. Only democracy can guarantee an era of peace in Central America and Latin America.

I also emphasized our Latin American spirit, which favors a true democracy for all the nations of the continent. [Words indistinct] Costa Rica will work tirelessly for these objectives. The most sacred mission of your chief of state is to keep Costa Rica out of the war that is approaching Central America. Let none of our children die in wars which are not ours.

Once more Nicaragua has chosen the path of obstructing the Contadora dialogue by accusing us -- for purely propagandistic objectives -- at The Hague International Court. Costa Rica does not shun the courts; we trust in justice. We will go to that court to defend the honor and dignity of Costa Rica, which, in addition, has great support among the democracies of the world.

Costa Ricans, things never before seen are taking place these days. A woman is presiding over our Legislative Assembly. For the first time, a woman served as the acting president of the republic. More than coincidence, these are signs that men and women in Costa Rica will be sharing on an equal basis from now on the administration of the country's destiny.

The laws which discriminate against women will be abolished in this administration. The bill guaranteeing the full equality of women will be approved by this government. Young people have been appointed members of the cabinet. The schools are preparing the changes that will open the doors to new technology.

There are conflicts between workers and bosses, and between producers and consumers. I have called for a special kind of conciliation, in which dialogue is the only solution to the Costa Rican problems, so that we all share in making the necessary sacrifice to solve the nation's crisis and move forward along the path of reconstruction. On this path, there is no room for unlawfulness or violence. I am not going to yield to the selfishness of groups who want more privileges. There are practices we must change and we are going to change them.

As I said many times during the political campaign, and I reiterated in my inaugural speech, we are going to do everything possible on behalf of the poor. I also reiterate my faith in the Costa Rican people [words indistinct]. We have begun the task you gave us. Our duty in the role of government will make our democracy greater.

Thank you. Good night.

GOVERNMENT-REBEL TALKS CONTINUE IN MEXICO CITY

FMLN-FDR Leaders Comment

PA211505 Mexico City XEW Television Service in Spanish 1345 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Report on interview with FMLN-FDR leaders Salvador Samayoa and Jorge Alberto Villacorta in Mexico City by Rita Ganem: date not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Ganem] The third dialogue between Salvadoran guerrilla leaders and government representatives could take place in San Salvador in the near future. However, this will depend on the the agreements reached between the government and rebel representatives currently meeting in Mexico City. FMLN-FDR delegates Salvador Samayoa and Jorge Alberto Villacorta have said that the most difficult point to be discussed will be establishing the security mechanisms for the third dialogue.

[Unidentified FMLN-FDR representative] President Duarte is defending an argument by which he guarantees with his life the security at the meeting; however, we feel that this argument is simplistic, because there are also people interested in harming President Duarte, both politically and physically. Therefore, this is not a solid argument. We would ask for more elaborate security mechanisms, and this could be a problem.

[Ganem] Samayoa and Villacorta added that the conditions for a military truce will have to be established. Regarding an eventual exchange of prisoners, they said that a mutual gesture of goodwill has been proposed, by which the government will release prisoners or missing people in exchange for Colonel Omar Napoleon Avalos, who is currently a prisoner of the guerrillas.

The rebel delegates met with the press at an office located in the Condesa neighborhood. The site of the meeting here in Mexico City has not been disclosed. However, Salvadoran Ambassador to Mexico Sigfrido Moines has admitted that it could be in a hotel in the capital. It has been said that the meeting could last 2 or 3 days and that the results will be made known afterwards.

Samayoa and Villacorta were optimistic about reaching an agreement to facilitate the next meeting. They said that the United States is hampering the pacification process with its direct military intervention. They noted that the Salvadoran civil war has resulted in more than 60,000 dead, and at least 1 million people have been displaced or have become refugees.

Pena on Meeting, Communique

[Telephone interview with FMLN-FDR spokesman Gerardo Pena from Mexico City by correspondent Raul Beltran -- live]

[Text] [Beltran] In this regard, as this document and proposal [referring to an FMLN General Command communique published in the 21 August Latin America DAILY REPORT on page P 11] came after the private preparatory meetings in Mexico City, what is the atmosphere prevailing there? What was the exact time when the talks were resumed today, the 2d day of the dialogue in Mexico City?

[Pena] The meeting began yesterday at 1745 and ended at 2100. It was resumed today at 1100. The meeting took place in a positive atmosphere, and we hope we will reap good results.

[Beltran] Mr Pena, will this communique or proposal be presented to the government or governmental delegation with which the FMLN-FDR, through mediator Msgr Arturo y Damas, will continue to meet there in Mexico City?

[Pena] Yes, the communique clarifies and defines the FMLN's position on the need to release people who have been unjustly detained.

[Beltran] In this case, could we say that should this demand not be satisfied, the release of Colonel Omar Napoleon Avalos could actually be postponed until new agreements between the government and your delegation in Mexico are reached?

[Pena] We believe that this issue must be defined in our negotiations.

[Beltran] According to your perceptions there in Mexico, how much longer do you think your meetings with the government delegates will last?

[Pena] We hope to make as much progress as possible on the agenda in our meeting today. Should we not finish, we will continue tomorrow.

[Beltran] Anything else to add during this direct report from Mexico via the YSKL radio network, in your capacity as an FDR-FMLN delegate? Go ahead.

[Pena] That is all for now, I believe.

Duarte: Lay Down Weapons

PA220251 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 0205 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Excerpts] San Salvador, 21 Aug (ACAN-EFE) — President Jose Napoleon Duarte today reiterated that "the guerrillas must put down their weapons and join the democratic process, and then we will talk and talk a lot." At an impromptu news conference at the Legislative Assembly today, Duarte said that for the private talks with the guerrillas, he appointed "the most important delegation I could ever have appointed, because even the vice president is a member." [passage omitted]

President Duarte said: "My stand remains the same. It is high time the rebels admitted that they are hurting the people." "I insist," Duarte said, "that it is the time for them (the guerrillas) to join the historic process and continue with this democratic revolution which we are carrying out. This is a revolution that is not easy, that cannot be accomplished in 1 day, because we have to deal with all kinds of problems."

Duarte stressed: "When the guerrillas join the democratic process, at that very moment, we will have much to talk about. We can talk then about amnesty, a truce, and everything they want, but they must define their position." "They must decide if they want peace. They must put down their weapons and join the democratic process. They must respect the country's institutional structure."

Regarding the truce proposed by the guerrillas during the talks, Duarte said: "A climate of dialogue must be created, but I cannot allow them (the rebels) to blow up the national palace or something like that."

"We need to have the right conditions for the dialogue, but without reaching the extreme of endangering or neglecting national security," he added. [passage omitted]

Oqueli on Duarte Stance

PA211818 San Salvador Radio Cadena YSU in Spanish 1730 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Report by SALPRESS reporter from Mexico City -- live or recorded]

[Excerpt] [Passage omitted] As for statements made by President Duarte rejecting the truce proposed by the rebels, FDR's Hector Oqueli said the following in Mexico;

[Begin recording] In that regard, Duarte showed his limitations and the conditions with which he is working on the dialogue and that are being imposed on him; they show that he is a prisoner of the military. [end recording]

The rebel leader added that the fronts are not closed to the possiblity of resuming the dialogue outside San Salvador, but they believe that the capital offers better conditions to ensure security and popular participation during the meeting.

Samayoa: Atmosphere 'Positive'

[Francisco Espinoza report; broadcast in progress]

[Text] [Espinoza] ...the Armed Forces cautioned today that, making a goodwill gesture, it has proposed an exchange of prisoners and will take to the negotiating table all the cases that popular organizations and relatives of prisoners have presented to the church. There are 942 such cases. Talks between Salvadoran Government and FMLN-FDR representatives began yesterday in Mexico. The purpose of the talks is to prepare a round of negotiations to be held in El Salvador.

On petitions from the church, the FMLN has agreed to discuss the exchange of Colonel Omar Napoleon Avalos -- who was captured by guerrillas -- for prisoners of the Salvadoran Armed Forces. However, according to reports, the rebels refuse to select 50 persons out of the list of 942. The church has asked them to select 50 persons, but the rebels said publicly today that if they negotiate on this it would be for all the cases.

Salvador Samayoa, who in the company of Jorge Villacorta is meeting in private with the official representatives of El Salvador at an undetermined location in Mexico, has said in this regard and in regard to the meeting that the FMLN-FDR and the government delegation is holding in Mexico prior to the third meeting, that the outlook is favorable. Because of the importance of this matter, we have Salvador Samayoa on a direct line from Mexico. What can you tell us about the meeting with the Salvadoran delegation?

[Samayoa] Yes, the meeting began yesterday at 1745.

[Espinoza] Regarding that meeting, which began late because of the delay of Vice President and Foreign Minister Claramount, do you have any new information?

[Samayoa] I can only tell you a few things. The first is that yesterday we had a working session. It lasted approximately 4 hours. There is a recess now. We will renew the meeting today at 1100. Yesterday the two sides agreed that neither would reveal the contents of the discussions until there is the possibility of reaching an agreement. The atmosphere has been positive.

[Espinoza] Did you discuss anything about the proposed truce?

[Samayoa] No. I believe that the government's delegations has some restrictions about discussing that, as President Duarte said yesterday.

[Espinoza] This means that the same is true in the case of Col Avalos. Did you discuss that subject during the meeting?

[Samayoa] That subject would be discussed outside of the meeting, if it is discussed. Yesterday we had only an initial working session. We have not yet discussed all the subjects of the meeting.

[Espinoza] Could we conclude that the meeting has been favorable for the two sides?

[Samayoa] I believe that so far the atmosphere has been positive. I could not say whether a general agreement will be possible; but the atmosphere is positive at this moment.

[Espinoza] How long do you think these talks will continue?

[Samayoa] It is probable that the talks will conclude tomorrow, 22 August.

[Espinoza] Would you file a report tomorrow, or will secrecy continue?

[Samayoa] No, we would keep no secrets. At the end of the meeting we would have to report to the people whether an agreement had been reached or not. We would inform the media also, of course.

[Espinoza] This was Salvador Samayoa speaking about the meeting that the government and the guerrillas are holding at an undetermined location in Mexico. According to the guerrilla's representative, the meeting will begin in exactly 1 hour and tomorrow afternoon there may be an announcement on the site and date for the third meeting proposed by President Jose Napoleon Duarte.

Blandon on Dialogue, Prisoners

PA212118 San Salvador Radio Cadena YSKL in Spanish 1730 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Text] This is our report on General Adolfo Onecifero Blandon, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, who has commented on the preliminary talks in Mexico. In addition, he has given extensive details on the removal of 36 families in the area of Sacatecoluca. Gen Blandon said that these families have been transferred elsewhere for security reasons.

Here is an excerpt of the interview:

[Begin recording in progress] [Reporter] ...regarding Colonel Omar Napoleon Avalos. What can you tell us about that?

[Blandon] There is a commission, chaired by General Rinaldo Golcher and including other chiefs, which conducts a daily review of the background and new material regarding Col Avalos. Still, at present, I could not give any exact information on the procedure, because I do not think it is appropriate. That is up to the commission chaired by Gen Golcher.

[Reporter] [Words indistinct] policy, general, that is, to make the exchange, in other words, to release the (?prisoners). There are an estimated 900 political prisoners they are asking for.

[Blandon] I do not know the exact number of political prisoners they are asking for. At any rate, no matter what the number, we must properly review the situation in order to give an appropriate response.

[Reporter] General, how does the top command view the meeting in Mexico? There were (?rumors) that President Duarte had ruled out the possibility of a truce during the third round of talks.

[Blandon] I do not know the specific topics under discussion in Mexico. I would not like to venture an opinion that may prove detrimental to the meeting. Therefore, I do not have specific information. I could not...[changes thought] I decline to comment on the [word indistinct].

[Reporter] Regarding the third round of talks, the rebels have proposed a cease-fire. As Armed Forces chief, or rather the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, would you be prepared to do likewise?

[Blandon] The president of the Republic is handling the matter of the topics to be discussed during the third round of tlaks. Therefore, he will make the more important decisions. Keep in mind that we are his subordinates; he is the commander in chief of the Armed Forces, and he decides national policies.

[Reporter] As a knowledgeable person, would you be able to accept the cease-fire?

[Blandon] Knowledgeable about what?

[Reporter] In other words, general, in the past, in December to be specific, the government accepted the church's request for a cease-fire. Then some military chiefs said there was no cease-fire and that they were totally unaware of that agreement. One gets the impression that the military chiefs have the final decision on whether or not there is a cease-fire.

[Blandon] We have a constitutional duty, which is security. When dealing with this, political and military aspects become involved. We cannot neglect our mission, that is, the security of the country. In that case, [words indistinct].

[Reporter] Regarding the "United To Rebuild Plan," that has been announced for the past 3 months, to date we do not know whether or not it has been implemented, or if has not been implemented due to a lack of support. Has it had support?

[Blandon] We do have support for it. The drafting of some government documents has been delayed, but we have been working on it. We have inaugurated and concluded three seminars at the national level. In these seminars, promoters from various government projects receive instructions as to how they are to handle the campaign. I understand that the president will shortly announce the start of three major projects in the country. He wants to start the campaign personally. [end recording]

General Blandon also urged all private enterprise representatives not to politicize the "United To Rebuild Plan." He said: I want to motivate private businessmen. We need to be united now in order to achieve peace in our country.

DUARTE DENIES CONTRAS TO TRAIN IN EL SALVADOR

PA220029 Paris AFP in Spanish 2217 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Text] San Salvador, 21 Aug (AFP) -- President Napoleon Duarte denied today that U.S. soldiers will train Nicaraguan rebels here in October, as reported today by U.S. officials.

When consulted by AFP, Duarte said: "I do not know anything about it, and if such is the case it is not true. It is speculation."

According to reports from Washington, Green Berets from the U.S. Army will train the counterrevolutionaries in El Salvador, Honduras, and Panama as part of the military aid of $100 million approved by U.S. Congress.

Meanwhile, President Duarte went to the Legislative Assembly at noon today to ask permission to travel to the United States, where, he said, he will try "to make the U.S. Government and congressmen understand that we are not fighting only for El Salvador, but for democracy in Latin America." Duarte said that the United States is discussing a new budget, which calls for a 30-percent reduction in foreign aid.

This means, he added, "$150 million less in aid for El Salvador, which would put us in a very difficult situation, even just to get by." In Duarte's opinion if the U.S. budget is cut, "it will mean that foreign military aid will end in 3 years."

Duarte emphasized that El Salvador's foreign policy should be more aggressive, and it should be carried out within the framework of the war, "because an international defeat could cause instability in the country." Duarte's trip to the United States and Central American countries was criticized by the Salvadoran Legislative Assembly, to the extent that the congressmen of the rightist Nationalist Republican Alliance, ARENA, left the room.

Also today, Duarte handed labor leader Rodolfo Prieto, who was arrested on Wednesday by the police, over to his family.

Prieto, secretary general of the National Administration of Waterworks and Sewers, ANDA, was arrested for alleged links with the guerrillas but was released today by Duarte at the Government House when he was proven innocent.

U.S. 'INTERVENTION' REJECTED IN ANTIDRUG WAR

PA211430 Guatemala City Cadena de Emisoras Unidas in Spanish 0050 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Text] The government minister has said at a news conference that the Guatemalan Government will not permit U.S. military intervention in Guatemalan territory, nor that of any other country, in actions against drug trafficking or marijuana and poppy propagation. He said that the government has taken measures to prevent drug trafficking and to fight it with the resources it has, which have so far been sufficient. Under no circumstances will it permit the presence of foreign military forces to destroy plantations with paraquat, as was done in Bolivia.

AZCONA DEFENDS CABINET, ADMINISTRATION EFFORTS

PA201505 Tegucigalpa Voz de Honduras Network in Spanish 1543 GMT 19 Aug 86

[Statement by President Jose Azcona Hoyo; date and place not given -- recorded, broadcast in progress]

[Excerpts] ...the debate over the government situation, the Honduran political situation, and I share many of the criteria expressed there. However, more than a few inaccurate statements have been made as well. For example, there have been comments on and there is still insistence on changes in the Cabinet. We have repeatedly said that the government's cabinet is working, and it has not been determined yet whether there were errors in the actions taken by several ministers. If we have not accomplished more, it is because -- honestly -- it is not easy to accomplish more in an economic situation like the one Honduras is enduring. I am not referring to the situation Honduras has had in the past 7 months of Jose Azcona's government, but to the situation Honduras has been enduring for a long time.

For example, this year we expected an extraordinary year due to the coffee prices. However, coffee prices began to decline in March, and this forced us to make important adjustments in the economy. Someone, the last person who talked [not further identified], mentioned devaluation. Gentlemen, in Novemeber 1985 the lempira was at 2.80 per dollar. This has been reduced, that is, there has not been a devaluation during this government.

To the charge that there have been no efforts in economic and unemployment matters, I say extraordinary efforts have been made. However, in order to resolve those problems, many millions are required, and it is not easy to resolve them with only a few million. What is happening, and we will say it clearly, is that this government lacks a public relations office. We do not have one, we cannot have one, and we will not have one. We will face this situation without public relations because we do not have money for it. This is the truth, and we will say it clearly. This means neither that we are against the media nor are against the journalists. On the contrary, we are aware of the role they play. However, unfortunately, we cannot allocate important resources in order to have a favorable press. It is very important to mention this. [passage omitted]

Regarding education, for the first time in Honduras more than 1,200 elementary school teachers have been hired. However, are we going to resolve in just 1 year the problem of elementary education? Impossible, because 4,000 teachers would be required. We plan to hire another 1,200 elementary education teachers next year.

We will continue to promote labor. For example, no one has mentioned that 6,000 laborers have been hired by the Public Works and Transport Secretariat. Of course, some have said there are not any plans. The Honduran economy -- let's not deceive ourselves, and economists should agree with us -- is a weak and totally open economy. A decline in the price of coffee would be enough for everything to become unstable here, or an increase in the price of oil -- God willing it will not continue to increase -- would also be sufficient for everything to be shaky here.

We have El Mochito [mine] problem. This is not a labor problem, it is not a problem of the company. The problem is that silver is now at $5.00 or $5.10 an ounce, whereas it was up to $40 in the past. Zinc is $.18 a pound, and so forth. We have an open economy. We have to resolve our problems day by day, and the government is indeed resolving them. I am aware that this will serve as criticism. Some people say the president of the Republic should not communicate on the telephones [refers to his practice of telephoning radio stations to voice his views or criticism]. Let me tell you something -- and I am addressing this to all Hondurans -- the day when President Jose Azcona cannot call on the telephone or cannot face the Honduran people is the day I will present my irrevocable resignation to the National Congress.

So far I believe that I have fulfilled my duty. The officials of my government are fulfilling their duty. Any official who deviates from the established path of honesty and work will be separated irrevocably from his post, as several already have been. Any others who fail to do their duty will also be separated. However, it is important for the labor and the peasant sectors to have faith, not in the government of Jose Azcona, because this is very transitory, but in democracy and in Honduras.

There should no longer be any editorials like those that have appeared in some newspapers; editorials which at times are almost subversive, as if this government supports only the employers, while others say the employers are not pulling their weight because the rules of the game have not been clearly defined.

Gentlemen, there has been much hubbub over something that is not true. The government is working. People talk about the best men; the best men are not just those who have one or another title. The best men are those who love Honduras, those who want to work for Honduras, and those who respect their chief, the president of the Republic. In this aspect, I have no complaints about any of the ministers in my Cabinet. Apart from that, I accept criticism, and I do not mind it, but it should be well-founded criticism. No one can objectively say so far that this or that minister has made this error or that error. All errors people say have been made are explainable. [passage omitted]

LOPEZ: NATIONAL EMERGENCY DECREE POSSIBLE

[Text] Tegucigalpa, 21 Aug (AFP) -- The Honduran Government might decree a state of national emergency due to the labor conflicts threatening to paralyze several state services, Foreign Minister Carlos Lopez Contreras said today.

More than 20 unions which operate the main state services, affiliated to the United Federation of Honduran Workers (FUTH), began partial strikes early this week to protest the dismissal of more than 100 officials from the National Agrarian Institute (INA).

Although Lopez did not offer details about the measure, which might be agreed upon tomorrow by the National Security Council, it is felt that the declaration of a state of emergency would allow the government to militarize the institutions affected by the strikes, such as water, electricity, social services, and others.

The INA labor union members and the FUTH leaders have revealed that the government intends to disrupt labor communications, and Christian Democratic Deputy Efrain Diaz Arrivillaga accused the government of being unable to solve the labor conflict, which was prompted by the reorganization of the INA.

The National Security Council, headed by President Jose Azcona, met today to analyze the suit which Nicaragua has filed against Honduras at the International Court of Justice for permitting contra operations in Honduran territory.

However, the council might meet again tomorrow to decree the state of emergency as a result of the labor strikes, Lopez warned.

Planned Decree Denied

PA220232 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 0130 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] Tegucigalpa, 21 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- Honduran President Jose Azcona Hoyo denied this afternoon that a state of emergency will be decreed in the country to avoid a social crisis. The first reports were issued this morning by low-level officials in the Labor and Social Welfare and the Government and Justice Ministries.

Javier Moncada Amador, leader of the Liberal Party bloc in congress, stated this afternoon: "President Azcona is calm and working in his office as usual, and he has told me that in no way will he decree a state of emergency here." The government is currently facing a wave of labor strikes by 26 unions, which are demanding labor protection and respect for their achievements in the sector.

Some 24 unions comprise the leftist United Federation of Honduran Workers (FUTH) and have progressively declared strikes since last Tuesday, in solidarity with the National Agrarian Institute labor union members, who have been on strike for the last 2 weeks. A strike has also been decreed by the workers at El Monchito mine, in western Santa Barbara Department, who are demanding that the U.S. Rosario Resources Company respect their achievements.

Official spokesmen have announced the possibility that a state of emergency might be decreed, adding that the executive branch would be in charge of this measure, even though the Constitution states that only the Congress may do that. Furthermore, the legislative branch's agenda for this week does not include this topic.

The National Security Council, which is comprised of top-ranking military officers and civilian leaders, met today, and the topic was unofficially discussed with the intention of analyzing the situation which has been created by low-level officials -- who have issued statements without a legal or official authorization.

Foreign Minister Carlos Lopez Contreras has revealed that the National Security Council will meet again tomorrow to officially discuss the rumors about a state of emergency and their possible sources, intentions, and consequences.

FOREIGN MINISTER ON NICARAGUAN SUIT AT ICJ

PA211605 San Pedro Sula TIEMPO in Spanish 20 Aug 86 p 5

[Text] Tegucigalpa -- Foreign Minister Carlos Lopez Contreras said yesterday that the Honduran Government "is making the necessary consultations to act in the wisest way" regarding the suit filed by Nicaragua at the International Court of Justice [ICJ].

Regarding the suit filed by Nicaragua at the end of July, claiming that the U.S.-supported war is being waged from Honduras, the foreign minister said: "This is a heavy blow to Contadora and the Central American parliament."

"It is very hard to understand a government that wants to participate in fraternal meetings of cooperation in search of solutions and at the same time demonstrates that it is not a valid interlocutor because it has resorted to an international court to resolve alleged grievances," he added.

Regarding the countersuit that will reportedly be filed by Honduras at the ICJ, Lopez Contreras said that it is under study, because "it is a very delicate case, and the necessary consultations are being undertaken to act in the wisest way."

He stressed that the Honduran Government "has always been very willing to prevent border incidents from taking on such a magnitude as to make war imminent in Central America."

NEW ENVOY TO NICARAGUA VIEWS RELATIONS

PA201527 Tegucigalpa Voz de Honduras Network in Spanish 1820 GMT 19 Aug 86

[Interview with Colonel Efrain Lisandro Gonzalez, new ambassador to Nicaragua, by Francisco Giron on 19 August; place not given -- recorded; broadcast in progress]

[Text] [Giron] Did you discuss issues regarding the problems in Nicaragua and the objectives to be achieved in the Nicaraguan region?

[Gonzalez] We discussed the relationship between Honduras and Nicaragua. I will try to make the various aspects of relations between Honduras and Nicaragua develop in a diplomatic sphere of mutual respect and dialogue. I will also try to discuss and analyze our common affairs seriously and respectfully.

[Giron] You were first named ambassador to Guatemala. Why the change?

[Gonzalez] One of your colleagues asked me that this morning. The change did not take place suddenly. Its announcement to the public seems to have been sudden, but I analyzed the change for a little over 1 month. The government, the president, the foreign minister, and the commander in chief of the Armed Forces feel that I can serve the country better in Nicaragua than Guatemala. This does not undermine the importance of our embassy in Guatemala, which is quite important, as we all know. However, the government feels that I will be more useful in Nicaragua, and I agree. I am very much in accord and feel very honored that the government delegated that responsibility to me, and I hope to fulfill my duties by putting forth the best of my ability and goodwill.

[Giron] Can it be said, then, that by naming a new ambassador there will be an improvement, and can we speak of a new era in relations between the two countries?

[Gonzalez] You know that the relations between two countries do not change from 1 day to the next. It is the Honduran Government's manifest intention to improve our relations with Nicaragua, a country with which we have a few differences that are well known to everyone. It is the Honduran Government's intention and desire to improve these relations so that the problems and issues we disagree on can be channelled through more peaceful paths.

[Giron] [Question indistinct]

[Gonzalez] The policy that should be followed is the same as in any diplomatic mission; good relations and contacts should be maintained with all sectors in the mission's country. There should be a friendly working relationship and cordial respect toward all the Nicaraguan authorities we may have to deal with and also with the Nicaraguan people. The mission represents the Honduran Government and people before the Nicaraguan Government and people.

[Giron] Within the Armed Forces you are considered a very moderate man. Did this (?influence) the military institution [words indistinct] to normalize Honduran-Nicaraguan diplomatic relations?

[Gonzalez] Relations between two countries do not depend only on an ambassador's efforts. Relations are the consequence of both contries' interests that each of the countries seek by ensuring their people's cooperation and well-being. I definitely feel that an ambassador can contribute a great deal to make these relations more favorable.

CONTRAS ALLEGEDLY COMPILE HONDURAN 'HIT LIST'

PA211234 Paris AFP in Spanish 2248 GMT 20 Aug 86

[Text] Tegucigalpa, 20 Aug (AFP) -- Today Jorge Arturo Reina, former rector of the National University and leader of the ruling Liberal Party, reported that armed gangs linked to the Nicaraguan contras are threatening Honduran politicians and leaders who oppose the presence of anti-Sandinists in Honduras and have already disclosed a "hit list."

Reina told the international media that this armed gang has published the mimeographed "hit list", which has no signatures, and has delivered the list to private right-wing groups to encourage attacks against the critics of the Honduran support policy to the contras.

Reina, highest leader of the nonofficialist movement of the ruling Liberal Party, said that his name and the names of other leaders of diverse political tendencies -- whose common denominator is their opposition to the contras -- are also included on the list.

Victor Meza, university professor and human rights researcher, who has also been threatened, said that several of the persons included on the list met last week to discuss the situation. The "hit list" mentions more than a dozen personalities, among them two deputies, one former minister, a well-known columnist, leaders of the National Autonomous University, left-wing union leaders, and members of the Communist Party, said Meza.

Furthermore, Reina warned that this situation may erupt into violent actions and bloodshed that would weaken the democratic process. Reina reiterated that the activities by the contras and the CIA "are leading us into a war with Nicaragua."

Major Jorge Arguello, director of public relations of the Armed Forces, stated that his office has no knowledge of the existence of the list.

NOTE PROTESTS REAGAN STATEMENTS TO EXCELSIOR

PA211524 Managua Domestic Service in Spanish 1200 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Text] A note of protest sent last night to U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz by Acting Foreign Minister Jose Leon Talavera states that the U.S. policy of prolonging the current situation will inevitably lead to a U.S. military invasion of Nicaragua. The Nicaraguan protest is in response to the threatening statements U.S. President Ronald Reagan made to the Mexican newspaper EXCELSIOR. The note points out that President Reagan admitted publicly that the true objective of his policy is to topple the Nicaraguan Government through the use of the mercenary groups organized, armed, and directed by the U.S. Government.

U.S. PLANS FOR TRAINING CONTRAS OUTLINED

[Text] Washington -- U.S. soldiers will begin training Somozist troops in Honduras -- and perhaps in El Salvador and Panama -- as soon as possible, according to government and congressional sources. The Green Berets will be in charge of the training. These units are stationed in Fort Bragg, North Carolina, and Panama. They are specialized in training armed forces of third countries in guerrilla tactics or counterinsurgency methods. The Green Berets are part of the U.S. Armed Forces' so-called special operation units. They are specialized in nonconventional and psychological warfare.

In addition to the training, the U.S. military advisers will help the contras in establishing a logistical apparatus that will enable them to conduct large-scale military operations deep inside the Nicaraguan territory and at the same time guarantee their supplies from abroad. The U.S. officials said that the administration is contemplating the possibility of purchasing or leasing C-46, C-47, or C-123 planes.

Although the Pentagon will be responsible for the training to a large extent, the CIA will be in control of the whole operation, according to U.S. Government officials.

HONDURAN ENVOY PRESENTS CREDENTIALS, MEETS PRESS

PA211945 Managua Sistema Sandinista Television Network in Spanish 0200 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Text] The topic of relations between Honduras and Nicaragua was addressed this afternoon by President Daniel Ortega and Colonel Efrain Lisandro Gonzalez Munoz, Honduran ambassador to Nicaragua, who presented his credentials.

Col Gonzalez Munoz has been inspector general of the Honduran Armed Forces Command. After presenting his credentials and reviewing the honor guard, he was interviewed by journalists.

[Begin Gonzalez Munoz recording] I wish to state that there is a desire and willingness to resolve the problems that exist between our two countries effectively based on mutual respect. [end recording]

The new ambassador reiterated his government's position that it will not expend resources to control its borders. International news media and the Nicaraguan Government have reported the presence of counterrevolutionary camps in Honduras. Journalists also asked him about Contadora:

[Begin Gonzalez Munoz recording] We understand that the proposals made by Honduras and other governments of the region are already on the negotiating table. When a satisfactory collective agreement is reached, my government will be signing the treaty. [end recording]

Hungarian Ambassador Istvan Soos also presented his credentials this afternoon and expressed his country's support for the Contadora and Support Group's efforts.

[Begin Soos recording] I can assure you that the Hungarian Government is closely following the events and gives its full support to the Contadora and Support Groups. [end recording]

Ambassador Soos said he will work to improve ties with Nicaragua, especially agricultural matters, in which his country has vast experience.

COMMENTS ON RECENT U.S. STANCES, ACTIONS

Reagan Rejects Moratorium

["Viewpoint" commentary, read by Angel Hernandez]

[Text] With the sense of responsibility characteristic of the first worker-peasant state in history, top Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev stated a few hours ago in Moscow that the USSR will extend to 1 January 1987 the unilateral moratorium on nuclear tests that it has enforced since 6 August 1985. This decision fully concurs with the world's hopes. With justified alarm pepole throughout the world witness the increase of atomic arsenals to the point that a superpower stocks enough weapons to destroy the world several times over.

Washington's hasty reply is completely contrary to worldwide hopes. White House spokesman Larry Speakes once again revealed the U.S. hegemonistic aspirations, when he said that Washington rejects the suspension of nuclear tests because it would curb the possibilities of creating new weapons. This is the barefaced reply of someone who lacks any sound, logical argument to face an overwhelming truth. U.S. rejections have a long history. When on 6 August 1985 the USSR started the unilateral moratorium, Washington believed it was a demagogic maneuver, because it was impossible to verify nuclear tests.

The USSR offered on site verifications, and Reagan was once again disarmed. This fallacy was confirmed a few hours ago when Gorbachev announced that since 6 August 1985 until the present time, the United States has conducted 18 nuclear tests, 3 of which were not announced publicly, but were nevertheless detected by modern technical means. All this speaks in favor of complete verification of nuclear tests.

Now the Yankees claim the need to strengthen national defense. It is the old story of the big bad wolf who wants to eat the weak U.S. lamb. However, we might ask what hidden and threatening potential can be held by a country who hasn't detonated a nuclear weapon in over two years, while the alleged victim has conducted more than two dozen tests.

Reagan doesn't have the least excuse to justify his reticence. Probably by now he is not very interested in presenting himself to the world as an alleged standardbearer of peace. Washington is cornered, and its outbursts of impotence and insanity lead it to such political outrages as announcing its intention of violating SALT II treaties.

All countries, even those allied with Washington, reject such dictates, and many Western rulers view with growing concern how the United States is treading a path that will inevitably lead to confrontation and violence.

Objectives in Nicaragua

PA211451 Havana International Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 20 Aug 86

[Text] U.S. President Ronald Reagan has admitted that his objective in Nicaragua is to remove the Sandinist government from power. In statements to Mexican newspaper EXCELSIOR, Reagan said that a takeover by counterrevolutionaries, whom he called freedom fighters, is the only option left for that Central American country. The statements to the Mexican newspaper totally contradict his previous statements that he is only exerting pressure on the revolutionary government to establish negotiations with the Somozists.

Contra Aid 'Opens the Door'

["Our America" commentary]

[Text] In addition to constituting a war declaration, the U.S. Congress' decision to grant aid requested by President Reagan for the Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries opens the door widely for the CIA to channel uncontrolled funds for the rebels.

So far, the mercenaries have received more than $130 million to carry out their banditry in addition to other millions given to them by U.S. and European rightist organizations.

According to British newspaper GUARDIAN, the CIA is now planning to give resources valued at $150 million to the rebels in addition to the $100 million recently approved by Congress. The $150 million will flow through financial channels identical to those previously used by the CIA to supply the counterrevolutionaries with helicopters, trucks, and arms although there are official prohibitions on the spending of government funds for those purposes. This also shows that the CIA, as well as the Pentagon, will continue to lead counterrevolutionary operations independently of the aid granted by the U.S. Congress.

In 1984, when military aid was temporarily suspended, counterrevolutionary leader Adolfo Calero said that the flow of advisers, weapons, and financing would not be cut off, because the United States could channel them through third countries. The facts showed that Calero knows his partner very well, because territories in Honduras and Costa Rica have gradually become permanent bases for attacks against Nicaragua. Mercenary camps receiving all the aid given by the United States, specifically by the CIA, are headquartered in those nations.

We must note that the Pentagon has invested more than $5 million to establish two bases in Palmerola, Honduras. It plans to invest an additional $20 million to build new roads, military installations, and airports. Two landing strips are also being built in the Honduran Mosquitia area to supply counterrevolutionary forces via air.

If there were not evidence of this, it would seem incredible that a country like the United States, which is on the verge of an economic recession, with approximately 9 million unemployed, and an infinite number of domestic problems, would embark on such an irresponsible and dangerous venture.

CONTRA AID NOT TO PASS THROUGH HONDURAS

[Text] Honduran Foreign Minister Carlos Lopez Contreras has said that his government will not permit the use of Honduran territory for the distribution of the U.S. aid for the Nicaraguan counterrevolutionary bands. Tegucigalpa newspapers published Lopez Contreras' remarks, which several political analysts described as surprising due to the Honduran Government's open complicity with the U.S. warmongering policy in the Central American region.

SALVADORAN REBELS, GOVERNMENT MEETING IN MEXICO

[Report by Norberto Hernandez]

[Text] Leaders of the Salvadoran FMLN-FDR and government representatives are meeting in Mexico City to establish the date, place, and agenda of their third round of talks.

According to an insurgent communique published in San Salvador, the rebel fronts said they are attending the preliminary meeting with a constructive spirit and the desire to achieve a favorable situation for the dialogue.

Salvador Samayoa and Jorge Villacorta represent the guerrillas in these talks; the government is represented by Rodolfo Castillo Claramount, vice president and foreign minister, Julio Adolfo Rey Prendes, communications minister and close friend of President Duarte, and Ricardo Soriano, a trade union leader who the insurgents describe as corrupt and pro-North American.

The talks had been suspended since November 1984. Since that time the Duarte government has tried to defeat the guerrilla forces, without success. To achieve this objective, the authorities and the Armed Forces, with the support of their U.S. allies, have carried out intense counterinsurgency operations with massive bombings and permanent attacks and dislodging of civilians in the strife-torn areas. Since November 1984, the guerrillas have insisted on the continuation of the dialogue and since President Duarte publicly announced his decision to continue it, the rebels said that the participation of the various sectors of Salvadoran society is essential to achieve a negotiated peace.

The preliminary meeting for the talks has created great expectations throughout Latin America because of the importance of finding a solution to such a grave problem. Meanwhile, the Salvadoran guerrillas have announced that they will propose a military truce during the third round of the dialogue in an effort to promote the most adequate conditions for the meeting.

In addition to reiterating the demand that the United States return the naval base to Cuba, the document condemns the presence of foreign military bases and troops in the area.

Other aspects such as breakage of some equipment needed in the completion of Cuba's project of the century, the need for a greater number of designers, and amount of supplies were also discussed.

The Soviet specialists said it is necessary to begin training the personnel required for assembling the plant.

JAMAICA

PNP'S PATTERSON SAYS PAYMENTS TO IMF IN ARREARS

FL212036 Bridgetown CANA in English 2020 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Text] Kingston, Aug 21, CANA -- Jamaica's current programme with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) has gone off rails and the government is now seeking to negotiate a new stand-by agreement with the fund, Opposition Peoples National Party (PNP) Chairman Percival Patterson has charged.

Patterson told reporters last night that Jamaica had been in arrears in its payments to the fund since April. He said that before the IMF would seriously negotiate a new package, it wanted the government to give a definitive response to the so-called Fresh Look Mission Report, recommending continued austerity by the government.

Top Central Bank officials were unavailable for comment on Patterson's charge. The government is normally slow in disclosing information on problems or negotiations with the fund.

Prime Minister Edward Seaga had invited the mission from the IMF, the World Bank, and U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) to assess the economy, hoping that they would be convinced it was time for reflation after three years of austerity and contraction. But, the mission suggested more belt-tightening, and particularly perturbed the government with a suggestion that there be further devaluations in the local currency and the chopping of more public sector jobs.

Seaga, who has devalued the Jamaica dollar from j1.78 for one U.S. to current j5.50 for one and presided over the chopping of at least 10,000 public sector jobs, rejected the recommendations in his May budget. Instead, he presented an expansionary package and declared that he had contingency plans should the agencies -- Jamaica's major aid backers -- insist that the government implement more austerity.

My understanding is that there is not presently any agreement between the government and the IMF, and that the government is in arrears in respect of some if its payments to the IMF, Patterson told reporters last night.

The government hopes to conclude a new stand-by programme, but the institutions are awaiting a definitive response to the Fresh Look Mission, he added. Jamaica is a little over half-way through a 22-month agreement with the IMF for U.S. 15 million dollars. An estimated U.S. 70 million dollars is still undrawn in that package. Patterson said the government was unable to make drawdowns because of the impasse.

Jamaica needs an IMF agreement if it is to get further renegotiation on some of its U.S. 3.3 billion dollar foreign debt.

The fund had in March granted the government a waiver to continue the current programme, after the failure of its first quarterly test last September. Seaga's first agreement with the IMF for U.S. 50 million dollars, signed in 1981, was thrown out by the fund in 1983 when both sides could not agree on whether the government has passed or failed a performance test.

SELA CONDEMNS U.S. WHEAT, SUGAR POLICIES

PA231622 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0325 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] Caracas, 22 Aug (EFE) -- The delegates of the 25 member-countries of SELA today issued a communique condemning various aspects of the U.S. agricultural policy, particularly the decision to sell subsidized wheat.

SELA's communique expresses concern over the negative effects this decision will have on Argentina, which is currently struggling against the dishonest competition within a low-price market.

The note states that the approval of the 1985 U.S. farm act and a recent amendment to that law passed by the U.S. Senate have had a negative effect on Latin America's grain-producing countries.

The amendment is part of a law appropriating funds for the Eximbank, which eliminates until 30 September the current restrictions on the Export Enhancement Program [preceding three words in English] (EEP).

The communique notes the negative impact that the recent U.S. decision to sell its reserve sugar stockpile at a price under the already depressed international market price has had on the region and the world sugar market. The U.S. decision further aggravates the difficult situation of the international sugar market, which resulted mainly from the EEC policy of selling subsidized sugar.

The communique states that the SELA member-countries "consider that the aforementioned measures are an attempt against the possibilities for economic recovery, cooperation, and development of the region's affected countries."

SELA's communique was issued during the preparatory meeting for the 12th Latin American Council, which this regional agency for economic cooperation will hold in Lima (Peru) on 16 and 17 October.

TROCCOLI: ALFONSIN WILL NOT SEEK REELECTION

PY230046 Buenos Aires Domestic Service in Spanish 1600 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] Interior Minister Antonio Troccoli stated that President Raul Alfonsin has asked the Council for the Consolidation of Democracy not to include the reelection issue in the constitutional amendment bill. Regarding the president's reelection, Troccoli said the president does not want to be reelected and added: We all believe this shows his desire for a constitution that will serve as an instrument for the modernization of Argentina.

He also accused small groups of the extreme left and of the right of trying to undermine the democratic system, radicalizing positions, and exaggerating problems. Troccoli also referred to the fugitive, former General Carlos Suarez Mason. He said that justice's long arm will also reach him. He added that despite all the abuses, disorder, and regrettable events that have taken place in the country, security forces have maintained the situation at acceptable levels. He compared these forces to the best in the world in view of their effectiveness in clearing up these events.

Regarding elections within the political parties, he said that they are difficult -- as they have always been -- and that these elections are being held within the Radical Civic Union [UCR] in the same manner they have been held in the past. He said that the candidates and new party boards will be elected by the end of November by the UCR members and that the UCR will be very successful in the gubernatorial elections, and: I do not see anything that would lead us to suppose that Buenos Aires Province will change its political party.

He admitted that Antonio Cafiero is an important candidate and added that the UCR opening to nonmember seeks to include others with similar ideas. He declined to predict the results of the elections to be held next year.

CRESPO INTRODUCES DEFENSE BILL PROPOSALS

PY230102 Buenos Aires BUENOS AIRES HERALD in English 22 Aug 86 p 11

[Text] (NA-DYN) -- Air Force Chief-of-Staff Ernesto Crespo yesterday presented the Senate Defence Committee with a 28-page text proposing amendments of 18 of the 37 articles which make up the draft law of defence.

Among the proposals, the Air Force requests that the armed forces be granted authority to intervene militarily in the event of internal conflict: a similar request to proposals submitted by the Navy last Thursday.

The defence bill has already cleared the Lower House and is now up before the Senate. The Defence Committee has already considered Navy Chief-of-Staff Ramon Arosa's and Crespo's objections to the law, and is expected to meet with Army Chief-of-Staff Hector Rios Erenu and Defence Minister Horacio Jaunarena in the upcoming weeks.

According to the Air Force proposal, national defence includes "operations against terrorism, drug traffic, organized crime and ideological infiltration in the educational and cultural fields," thus exceeding the framework of external aggression.

The text quotes Pope John Paul II, who allegedly supports involvement by the Armed Forces in domestic questions to "preserve internal peace as a tool for the common good."

The Air Force also objects to the article which precludes any participation of military intelligence units in the internal politics of the country. According to their own proposal, in order to counter foreign sabotage and spying, military units should be permitted to act domestically.

In common with Arosa, Crespo also suggested that the title Chief-of-Staff be changed to Commander, and advocated the elimination of the article which demands that the Armed Forces respect the spirit of the Constitution, claiming the request is redundant.

Bravo Herrera said he was against the defence bill as it had been passed by the Lower House and suggested the Senate "should either reform or reject it."

In related military news, Defence Ministry Spokesman Faustino Altamirano yesterday denied any member of the Armed Forces Supreme Council had resigned, thus answering press reports that Rear-Admiral Julio Acuna had given up his position in that body.

Acuna was reported to have resigned in protest over the avalanche of cases which the Federal Appeals Court has transferred to its jurisdiction due to alleged delays by the Supreme Council in dealing with them. The rear admiral was Rio Negro governor during the military regime.

Meanwhile the Buenos Aires military district yesterday announced that as of September 16 it will begin the medical examination of those born in 1968 and up for military service next year.

COB PUBLISHES LETTER REFUTING INTERIOR MINISTER

PY222157 La Paz La Red Panamericana in Spanish 1130 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] The Bolivian Labor Confederation (COB] has published an open letter to Interior Minister Fernando Barthelemy, denying his comments on the COBEE [Bolivian Eletric Power Company] workers' stoppage.

The letter says both the COB and the COBEE trade union have long warned there was a serious risk that the electric power supply service would be interrupted owing to the lack of supplies and the need to renew the equipment. The COBEE trade union reported to the Labor Ministry on the difficulties of the COBEE.

The COB rejects the comments made by Minister Fernando Barthelemy, because they create annoyance and dissatisfaction among the workers. . .

15,000 MINEWORKERS LEAVE ORURO FOR LA PAZ

[Excerpt] Let us now contact the Radio Panamericana correspondent in Oruro, Jorge Barrientos Zapata.

[Begin relay] Good afternoon. This is a report from Oruro for Radio Panamericana.

Nearly 15,000 mineworkers have arrived here and have already walked nearly 10 km on the first leg of this march, which began at 1015. It is believed the first leg of the march will conclude in Caracollo at 1800 or 1900. The marchers will then continue until they reach their goal, the city of La Paz. The leaders feel the city of La Paz may be reached in 8 or 10 days. [Passage omitted] [end relay]

Lechin: Majority Strikes

[Text] Juan Lechin Oquendo, executive secretary of the Bolivian Labor Conferation [COB], has told Radio Panamericana that the 48-hour strike called by the COB has been orderly and was obeyed by all affiliated organizations. Lechin stated the report that the strike was only partial is based on sectors that did not participate -- such as some public employees and the drivers federation -- which are not affiliated with the COB. This is what Lechin Oquendo said:

[Begin recording] Those who have reported the strike was only partial are mistaken. Both the government and some (?progovernment) organizations have thought that the strike was only partial because some public employees and transporters who do not belong to the COB did not participate. But we can confirm that 99 percent of the COB members have honored the strike called by the COB. I say 99 percent because some very small factories -- employing at the most 1 percent of the workers -- have managed to keep their employees working through threats. [end recording]

U.S. Presence Denounced

[Text] La Paz, 22 Aug (AFP) -- The 2d day of the 48-hour strike ordered by the COB against the government policies continued today with a massive rally and march through the main streets of La Paz.

About 20,000 demonstrators including workers, peasants, students, teachers, and housewives, repudiated the presence of 170 U.S. soldiers who violated the national sovereignty. They demanded the immediate withdrawal of the foreign troops.

The demonstrators also expressed total support for the claims of the mineworkers who seek the rehabilitation of the Bolivian Mining Corporation (Comibol). They also rejected the tax reform law and the payment of the foreign debt approved by the government of president Victor Paz Estenssoro.

The Bolivian Police special forces closely followed the domonstrations near the Plaza Murillo, where the Executive and Legislative Palaces are located. The palaces were well-protected to prevent the demonstrators from entering the buildings.

Similar protest demonstrations were held in the main cities of the country. About 10,000 miners left Oruro, 200 km south of La Paz, in a march for life toward La Paz to try to talk with the president. However, they were not able to fulfill their mission because the police blocked the road.

Speakers at the rally said that the U.S. intervention in the northeastern part of the country is a flagrant violation of the Constitution and called on the Bolivian Armed Forces to express their position on this issue. COB member Jose Maria Palacios pointed out that the only way to show the government that the people disagree with its policies is to go out into the streets to conquer democracy directly. He added that the popular consultation on 25 July in which 1,400,000 people voted was a clear rejection of the new tax law and of the payment of the foreign debt contracted by the dictatorial regimes.

Peasant leader Victor Morales said the U.S. soldiers want to destroy the coca grown by the peasants. He said the U.S. Government should be forced to buy the excess of coca so that it would not be used for the illegal production of cocaine.

Mineworkers leader Simon Reyes said that the mineworkers are in a serious situation without food and resources and that the government should approve a plan to rehabilitate state mining instead of handing the mines over to transnationals and private enterprises.

BARTHELEMY SAYS 'NO ALTERNATIVE' ON ANTIDRUG AID

PY222316 La Paz La Red Panamericana in Spanish 1130 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] Interior Minister Fernando Barthelemy has stated that Bolivia had no alternative but to accept an offer of the U.S. Government to fight drug trafficking.

During a meeting at the Senate on 22 August, Barthelemy gave detailed information on the events leading to the arrival of U.S. troops for operations in eastern Bolivia and in the Chapare Region. These operations permitted raids and the destruction of cocaine processing laboratories which normally processed up to 8,000 kg of cocaine sulphide, the minister said. Following are the minister's comments:

[Begin recording] We would like everyone to understand that we had no alternative if we wanted to do something to fight drug trafficking immediately without wasting any more time because this was the simplest option proposed. [Words indistinct] through international assistance our own equipment, which was to be handled by ourselves, yielded any results. [end recording]

This was why the government was forced to accept the cooperation offered. In addition to these facts, our Armed Forces lack the necessary equipment. In choosing between the two alternatives of remaining with our arms corssed or resorting to cooperation, the second alternative was chosen.

[Begin recording in progress] ...was accepted because [words indistinct] equipment handled by U.S. Army troops who were placed at the disposal of the U.S. Justice Department, a special team to support the struggle against drug trafficking. [end recording]

For about 2 hours Interior Minister Fernando Barthelemy explained many points related to this issue. Afterward the senators spoke, asking that the explanations be expanded.

REPORTAGE ON VISIT BY PORTUGAL'S DE MIRANDA

Foreign Policy Differences Found

PY231845 Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 21 Aug 86 p 8

[Excerpt] Brasilia -- Despite friendly ties and common historic roots, Brazil and Portugal have discovered that they have important disagreements concerning foreign policy issues. For example, Portugal understands the U.S. stand of supporting the contras in Nicaragua. Portugal thinks that it is naive to believe, as Brazil does, that the Central American problem will be solved by signing an agreement.

This discovery was made over the past few days during the visit Portuguese Foreign Minister Pedro Pires de Miranda made to Brazil with the goal of resuming international political consultations which have been stalled for nearly 30 years. [passage omitted]

Lisbon Reports on Visit

LD211415 Lisbon International Service in Portuguese 1000 GMT 21 Aug 86

[Text] President Jose Sarney has received Portuguese Foreign Minister Pires de Miranda in Brasilia. Afterward, the latter said that a joint committee is to be set up to plan a festival to celebrate the 5th centenary of the discovery of Brazil, to be held in the year 2000. Pires de Miranda also said that Portuguese and Brazilian businessmen are concluding negotiations to increase trade between the two countries.

The Portuguese foreign minister has also had a meeting with his Brazilian counterpart, Abreu Sodre, on the 3d day of his week-long visit. Six basic topics were discussed: the EEC, the Eureka Project, South Africa, Namibia, the orthographic agreement, and postal tariffs.

On the subject of Africa, the two ministers noted that Brazil and Portugal have different stances, but underlined that this is understandable in view of each country's specific circumstances. Brazil has a more hostile stand toward the Pretoria regime and favors economic sanctions, whereas Portugal still believes that it can contribute through dialogue to the peaceful dismantling of apartheid. Pires de Miranda apprised Abreu Sodre of the results and appraisals of the meetings held by Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Azevedo Soares during his tour of southern Africa. With regard to Namibia, Pires de Miranda called for the reactivation of the diplomatic process with a view to gaining the territory's independence.

Referring to Portugal's entry into the EEC, the Brazilian foreign minister voiced the certainty that Portugal can render services of great value to the Brazilian economy by helping Brazil gain access to the EEC by setting up enterprises on Portuguese territory.

At the end of the talks with his Brazilian counterpart, Pires de Miranda stated that the most important conclusion to be drawn from them was that, together, we can play a weightier role in the world.

ARMED FORCES OFFICIALS 'UNAWARE' OF NUCLEAR TALKS

Amaral Oliveira Comments

PY231906 Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 21 Aug 86 p 9

[Excerpt] Rio de Janeiro -- Armed Forces General Staff (EMFA) Chief Jose Maria do Amaral Oliveira, 60, said yesterday that he is unaware of the existence of studies for an agreement of mutual inspection of nuclear facilities between Brazil and Argentina as Itamaraty Secretary General Paulo Tarso Flecha de Lima told FOLHA DE SAO PAULO on 18 August. Amaral Oliveira reasserted that the facilities at the Cachimbo test site are exclusively designed for testing conventional weapons and denied that Brazil is interested in building an atomic bomb. He said: "Brazil is an earnest country. We have signed the Tlatelolco treaty (by which the signatories commit themselves to use nuclear energy just for peaceful purposes) and we will fulfill it." Saboia Comments

PY232108 Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 22 Aug 86 p 4

[Text] Rio de Janeiro -- Navy Minister Henrique Saboia, 60, said yesterday in Rio de Janeiro that he is unaware of the drafting of an agreement of mutual inspection of nuclear facilities between Brazil and Argentina. He said: "If such an agreement is being discussed, then Itamaraty is the agency concerned. The ministers of state just fulfill the resolutions of the diplomatic agreements." According to the Navy minister, there is great cooperation between the Brazilian and Argentine navies. However, he also said that he is unaware of the possibility of a technological agreement between the two countries to build submarines.

Saboia came to Rio de Janeiro to preside over the ceremony to accept the training ship "Brasil" for the Navy fleet at the Ilha das Cobras shipyard (at Guanabara Bay), where the ship was built. According to cost estimates made by Henrique Saboia, 83 percent of the ships equipment was manufactured in Brazil. The vessel cost nearly $100 million.

The Brazilian Navy hopes to complete in 1991 a program to expand its fleet at a total cost of $1.5 billion. A total of $450 million will be spent to build three submarines.

50 SOVIET SHIPS SIGHTED OFF CHILEAN COAST

PY250204 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0145 GMT 25 Aug 86

[Text] Santiago, 24 Aug (EFE) -- The official Chilean news agency ORBE has reported that 50 Soviet ships have been sighted off the coast of Valdivia, 800 km south of Santiago. The news agency reporting from Concepcion stated the ships were sighted by two Chilean Navy reconnaissance planes.

The Soviet ships were maneuvering 300 miles off the coast, and three of them "were caught transferring freight while at high sea."

Lieutenant Commander Jaime Botto, who was on board one of the planes, said that during similar flights the Chilean Navy has managed to detect up to 200 ships off the Chilean coasts.

PINOCHET CRITICIZES POLITICIANS, CHURCH

PY250039 Santiago Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] The extent to which certain spiritual organizations are confused makes them slide toward the troubled waters of politics. As long as subversion is promoted and certain democrats fail to state their position toward Marxism, the cause of democracy will be in jeopardy. Chilean extremists must realize that arms can be used only by the institutions described in the Constitution as champions of national sovereignty.

The president of the nation made this remark at the end of a lunch in his honor hosted by the Army at the Military School. The lunch commemorates Pinochet's 13th anniversary as commander in chief of the Chilean Army.

The chief executive began his speech by thanking his comrades in arms for the greetings and congratulations extended to him. Pinochet then went on to outline the true meaning of 11 September 1973. He said the future had to be assured, adding that Chile had to continue being what it was. He criticized those who want to forget about the motives prompting the military intervention.

[Begin Pinochet recording] Those who refuse to acknowledge these motives and seek to explain the military intervention from partisan viewpoints or by saying it was a political maneuver are -- to say the least -- being untruthful or better still have turned their backs on reality. They do not find it suitable for their own interests to admit the true meaning of what happened on 11 September 1973. They are craftily trying to recreate the situation that prevailed then. Meanwhile, others find it suitable to disguise the fact that they supported the military intervention, either explicitly or implicitly. [end recording]

The president added that when the Armed Forces accepted the task the fatherland had given them, they were fully aware great difficulties and challenges lay ahead. He added that great progress was achieved during these years and each and every Chilean can see for himself the accomplishments confirming this.

The chief executive went on to criticize certain partisan political groups and warned them that as long as they remain undecided toward Marxism, democracy will be jeopardized.

[Begin recording] The attitude of the political groups that make up the current opposition is far from being appropriate for true democrats. While some of them openly seek the reinstatement of the so-called Popular Unity in order to implement its nefarious program, other self-styled democrats and Christians are helping the Marxists -- whom they also supported in the past for electoral reasons -- to coordinate the actions aimed at making the country impossible to govern.

To this, we must add the attitude of the communists who encourage armed actions through their extremist cells and insist on the need for violent rebellion and their intentions of setting up a popular democracy. Let us not allow ourselves to be fooled. As long as certain sectors continue to promote subversion by working together with the communists and as long as the lack of definition of certain democrats continues to foster Marxism, the cause of democracy and freedom will be in jeopardy.

The present has no room for cowards or the weakhearted. The discovery of arms brought into the country from abroad is perhaps, the most serious piece of evidence that each and every Chilean must take into account for an in-depth evaluation that should lead to patriotic decisions. [end recording]

The president also stated that the arms found are yet another piece of evidence that the communists want to use the armed approacn to make their ideology prevail. He said this awareness of the threat that communism poses compels us to defend our freedom and oppose class struggle. He went on to warn that arms are to be used only by the institutions provided for in the Constitution.

[Begin recording] The extremists and those who support them must realize once and for all that in Chile arms are to be used only by the institutions provided for in our Constitution and that these arms must be used to defend the nation's sovereignty and its most essential values.

As Chileans and as soldiers, we will be an unsurmountable barrier for any totalitarian maneuvers. As in the past, we stand side by side with our fellow countrymen, true Chileans, who are building in peace and order. [end recording]

The chief of state also emphasized the courage and virtures of Armed Forces' members. According to him, these institutions were created by the nation to defend its sovereignty. He then lashed out at certain opposition sectors that have always refused to see the positive aspects and the accomplishments of the current government.

[Begin recording] The opposition is moved by other purposes and an obvious lust for power. They have permanently criticized -- in a destructive manner -- everything we have done. Nothing is positive and nothing has been accomplished in all these years, as far as they are concerned. The slander and lies they constantly use are at odds with the calm and firm attitude of this government which works and gets things done.

There is confusion among certain sectors, among important spiritual organizations that betray and foresake their transcendental mission and stray away from their true quest for unity and a healthy coexistence at every level. Thus, they slide toward the troubled waters of political maneuvers and toward [word indistinct] and materialistic positions. [end recording]

The president warned about the campaign which seeks to distort the information concerning the men of arms. He said this campaign is directed at weakening the iron-clad unity among the various military institutions and undermining their fighting spirit.

Finally, Pinochet reiterated his thanks for all the greetings and congratulations he received on his 13th anniversary as Army commander in chief and reasserted that the Armed Forces' mission is to guarantee institutional order.

AD CALLS ON ARMED FORCES TO 'GIVE BACK' DEMOCRACY

PY230253 Santiago Radio Chilena in Spanish 2300 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] The Democratic Alliance has reiterated its call to the Armed Forces to fulfill their commitment to give back what the country demands: an effective democracy capable of facing Chile's problems with the participation of all Chileans who love freedom.

In a public declaration the AD referred to recent events that occurred in the country, and the finding of arms in the third region. The declaration says that according to its usual practice, the government hopes to make politicians responsible for the lack of credibility among Chileans regarding the finding of arms, which has only been verified by official organizations and reports. The AD declaration adds: We hope to get more information on these findings before we make a statement. However, this lack of general credibility is by itself a very serious fact because it means that Pinochet's government has used up all its reserves of public faith. This is quite natural in the face of dubious confrontations, suicides, terrorist attacks, and brutal crimes that are never solved. These serious events cannot be verified by impartial individuals and the government clumsily uses these events for its own political gain.

The AD declaration goes on to say that events of this kind occur every time the government has to face difficult political situations, just as it is facing now on domestic and foreign issues especially with the latest court decisions on the torching, and on the arrested and missing cases. The declaration adds that if arms really were found, it is clear confirmation of the failure of repressive and regressive economic and social policies. Pinochet alone is responsible for these policies.

The AD says: In fact, after 13 years of state of exception, temporary article 24, limitations to freedom to information, political recession, serious human rights violations, and international repudiation, the government can only offer repression, violence, and war. The opposition -- amid mockery made of it by the governments -- has always realized that government policies were leading to the polarization of society and violence, thus closing the path to peaceful understanding.

The AD points out that the country and the Armed Forces have the patriotic duty to ask themselves if this is the best government to face this chaotic situation. If we are really facing a terrorist or guerrilla attack we then need a government that unites the people, and not one that divides them as never before in Chilean history. We demand a government with popular support, not the repudiation of all the people. We need a government that can be trusted by the people, not a government that lacks credibility. In other words, we need a government for all Chileans and not a government imposing Pinochet until 1997.

The AD also expresses its solidarity either civilian or military victims of the past, present, and future as a result of the government's suicidal policies. We also repudiate the irresponsible comments by an extremist leader who plays the game of the government whenever the government needs him, and we urge everyone to take a position against this attitude.

In conclusion, the AD reiterates its call to the Armed Forces to fulfill their commitment to return to the country what it demands: an effective democracy capable of facing the problems of Chile with the participation of all Chileans who love freedom.

TWO NEW ARSENALS FOUND IN VALLENAR, SANTIAGO

PY221936 Santiago Domestic Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] [Relay from Copiapo] Another arsenal was discovered last night 8 km north of the city of Vallenar, about 100 meters from the Panamerican Highway. Joint security, Army, and Carabineros forces have discovered an impressive arsenal, consisting of 22 tons of weapons, explosives and ammunition. This arsenal was very well camouflaged beneath a concrete [word indistinct] in a room built with wood which had a surface of about 32 square meters. This arsenal is also connected with the commando group that operated at Carrizal Bajo and other sectors in the 3d Region.

Security forces discovered this arsenal of guns and weapons near the entrance of Vallenar. Preliminary reports say the following arms have been confiscated: 1,300 new U.S. M-16 rifles; 50 bags of C-4 plastic explosives, each containing 16 rolls; approximately 50 bags of TNT; and an impressive quantity of various types of ammunition, mainly for rifles, totaling 100 cubic meters. Each ammunition package contains 500 rounds. The 22-ton arsenal was shipped to Santiago by plane.

This arsenal was located 8 km north of Vallenar in an old, uninhabited lodge called Maranon. [end relay]

Another arsenal -- the 10th so far -- was found at 1635 Tucapel Avenue, near bus stop No 35 on Santa Rosa Avenue in Santiago. Following is a list of confiscated items: 41 FAL rifles; 26 M-16 rifles; 2 M-60 machineguns; 100 Katiushka rocket launchers; 10 rocket backpacks; 81 rocket cartridges; 50 (?Lav) rockets; 5 grenade launchers; 17 ricochet grenades [granadas rebotantes]; 8 rocket launcher guidance systems; 320 M-16 cartridges; 5 M-16 cartridge clips [cargadores curvos]; 177 FAL rifle cartridges; bayonet and bags; and 5,000 rounds for rifles and machineguns.

Caches Pose 'Dangers'

PA240437 Paris AFP in Spanish 0255 GMT 24 Aug 86

[Text] Santiago, 23 Aug (AFP) -- Today the Chilean military government said the country is facing an "extremely dangerous" situation because of the entry of great quantities of arms destined for leftist guerrillas. Up to this moment, the raids on eight clandestine storage depots by the security organizations of President Augusto Pinochet's regime have yielded some 3,200 automatic rifles, 114 bazookas, 2,000 rockets and mortar bombs, 2,000 grenades, 17 tons of explosives, and 2 million bullets.

The president said on Saturday at the ceremony honoring generals and admirals that it is not known whether there are more weapons stored, and this is why the national defense general staff has to adopt measures.

According to the authorities, the weapons were destined for the Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front -- of Communist persuasion -- and for the Movement of the Revolutionary Left (MIR), which is modeled after the Cuban revolution. The authorities pointed out that the cargo was brought by Soviet trawlers, and in the case of the machineguns, most of them are weapons that the U.S. Army abandoned in Vietnam. The others are of Belgian manufacture, Czechoslovak, or Soviet.

The Patriotic Front and the MIR denied the offical versions and said the government created a farce to justify new oppostion repression. The opposition is bent on installing a civilian regime through democratic elections.

The Minister of Interior Ricardo Garcia, in a message read tonight over radio and television, made a vehement call so that the country will give credence to the report which he called, "grave aggression of foreign roots, carefully prepared to compromise the country's coexistence and to give rise to a sequel of death, destruction and chaos." Garcia said that we ask for this collaboration so the inquiries on the weapons can be successful, and we can learn exactly the total quantity of the materiel, and we can learn the identity of all who knew about them and prepared for their use.

The minister said that "with the war operation that has been launched in the country," it is intended to hinder economic development and hinder the battle against repression, which has been affecting Chileans for the last 4 years. He warned that this would cause "a very harmful, irreversible delay, in the welfare which we all wish for."

Experts To Inspect Arsenals

[Excerpts] Santiago, Chile, 21 Aug (EFE) -- Foreign Minister Jaime del Valle today reported the U.S. Government has accepted a request that it send experts to inspect the arsenals that were discovered last week. Del Valle said the request was submitted formally to Assistant Secretary for American Republics Affairs Robert Gelbard through Uldaricio Figueroa, the Chilean minister counselor to the embassy in Washington.

The foreign minister pointed out that the inspectors' purpose is to determine the origin of the arms. Del Valle also said that war materiel experts from other countries have been invited to cooperate in the task of determining the quality, danger, and origin of the confiscated arms caches. [passage omitted]

An article published in the last issue of the weekly QUE PASA notes the "CIA already had information about the sale of these arms," which are of U.S. origin "and which were used during the Vietnam War."

COLONEL RELEASED; FPMR, DINACOS COMMENT

PY221526 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0758 GMT 22 Aug 86

[By Juan Jorge Faundes]

[Text] Santiago, 22 Aug (EFE) -- The Manuel Rogriguez Patriotic Front [FPMR] decided to release Colonel Mario Haeberle Rivadeneira because it believed its "main objectives" had been fulfilled.

This is stated in an FPMR communique which notes that these objectives were "to make the men of the Armed Forces, particularly those in the Army, aware that if they continue along with their repressive path they will be punished." According to the communique, another FPMR objective was "to show that despite the enforcement of repressive measures that include raids, mass arrests, and dragnets, we are able to hit the Army and the High Command."

Colonel Haeberle Rivadeneira was released last night at 2240 in the southern area of Santiago. Haeberle, who is chief of protocol of the Santiago Military Garrison, was kidnapped on 18 August. Haeberle was released at the same time a woman placed a call to the EFE offices in Santiago to report Haeberle had been released at the corner of Tiltil and Aysen Streets. The woman asked EFE to go to the intersection, "because we do not want him to get sick." Haeberle's release took place on a cold and rainy night when the thermometer recorded 4 degrees.

But EFE arrived on the scene a few minutes after a Carabineros patrol car had come to pick up Col Haeberle from the "Easton-Chile" guard post of Hector Luis Maldonado, 24 years old, from whom Haeberle had requested help and the use of a telephone. This guard post is located about 50 meters from the corner where Haeberle was released by his captors. Hector Luis Maldonado reported: "He said: 'Please help me. I was robbed.' I let him come in, and he even agreed to be searched. He asked me if he could use the telephone." Maldonado told EFE: "I then asked the guard at the industry building next door to call the Carabineros. They came to pick him up 20 minutes after." The guard also said that it did not take him long to recognize Col Haeberle. "I remembered the pictures that have been published in the newspapers and that have appeared on the television," he said.

Maldonado said that when the officer appeared, he was barefooted and that "he had been tied up and blindfolded for about 3 days and he did not know where he was." The guard said: "He was not injured. He looked well, but he appeared to be dizzy."

He added: "He also told me that I should not be scared, that he was not a criminal or anything of the sort, and that they had left him at the corner inside a bag."

Once the Carabineros had taken Colonel Haeberle, the Government Social Communications Agency [Dinacos] issued a communique officially announcing that Haeberle had been released and he had been taken to the military hospital. Later, a self-styled FPMR spokesman called EFE and said: "Tonight we released Col Mario Haeberle, one of the members of the Santiago Military Garrison High Command and a Pinochet adviser." The FPMR communique added: "His release took place amid the dragnet established by over 8,000 troops of the regime's repressive forces."

According to the FPMR communique, another objective was "to personally deliver to a high-ranking Army chief our letter to the Armed Forces in which we note that decisive times are ahead in which they must decide whether to continue supporting Pinochet to the end or to abandon him and unite themselves to the people." The communique also notes the FPMR was able "to confiscate important documents, some of which have already been disclosed to the public and which we will continue to disclose."

The FPMR adds: "During the entire time Col Haeberle was in our hands, he was treated humanely, as he himself acknowledged in a letter he sent to his wife." "This shows the difference between those who struggle with arms to achieve freedom and Pinochet's repressive organizations, which torture, kill, burn, and make prisoners disappear."

The communique adds that in releasing him, the FPMR was also heeding the mediation carried out by Catholic Church representatives. It notes: "we hope the appeals made by the Catholic Church will be heeded by the dictatorship just as we have done, because in so doing many patriots may be saved from torture and the dungeons of the dictatorship."

BARCO STRIVES FOR RECONCILIATION, REHABILITATION

[Text] President Virgilio Barco Vargas today praised the work of the Presidential Guard Battalion during a special ceremony held at the battalion's headquarters.

The government's priority task will be to defend national institutions, the president said during a ceremony held at the Presidential Guard, where he also praised the work done by the military forces. Ricardo Canon now reports:

[Begin recording] [Canon] To commemorate the 58th anniversary of the Presidential Guard Battalion, President Virgilio Barco Vargas praised the professionalism of the Armed Forces as a guarantee in strengthening democratic institutions. The president promised to recover peace and coexistence for the Colombians, based on mutual respect and observance of the laws.

[Barco] We will strive to achieve reconciliation, normalization, and rehabilitation, particularly for the benefit of the more needy ones and the most remote areas to recover national peace and security. We will seek coexistence based on respect for everyone's rights, justice, and the observance of law. [end recording]

CONSERVATIVES FEAR GROWTH OF BARCO LIBERALISM

PA221559 Bogota Emisoras CARACOL Network in Spanish 1215 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] The Conservative Party feels that President Barco has revived the so-called cogovernment with the liberal directorates through the free sharing of state power. The Conservatives fear the rapid growth of a dangerous symbiosis between the party government and the government party, where it is already difficult to distinguish the public officials from the members of the official political directorates. The National Conservative Directorate expressed this in a message sent to Ignacio Velez Escobar, Mario Calderon Rivera, and William Fedul Vergara, who declined the ministerial positions President Barco offered the Conservative Party.

The Conservative hierarchy insists that the Liberal government is extremely party-oriented and is moving toward a political plan that contradicts the national spirit established in the Constitution. The Conservative Party again requested guarantees for the full exercise of its opposition, and noted that the national Constitution should not be cleverly invoked in an effort to avoid agreements that will lead to the approval of a legal document in favor of the political sectors that are not involved with the government.

BARCO ON EXTRADITION, DRUGS, OCHOA

PA231735 Bogota Television Service in Spanish 0000 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] The police today staged an operation to capture drug traffickers and guerrillas. There were no major arrests. Raids were staged in Risaralda and Quindio Departments, and on the Atlantic Coast. The operation, in which the DAS [Administrative Department of Security] and Army also participated, was to comply with court orders. Agents of the DEA, the U.S. antinarcotics agency, are not directly involved in the operation. The raids, staged mostly on homes and in hotels, are primarily aimed at finding Carlos Lehder, Pablo Escobar, and Jorge Luis Ochoa, who have legal cases pending in Colombia and whose extraditions have been requested against them by U.S. authorities.

Weapons and vehicles were confiscated during the operation. Five people, whose identities were not revealed, were taken into custody in Pereira.

Meanwhile, President Barco today denied his administration is boycotting the extradition treaty [with the United States] as various U.S. authorities have implied.

[Begin recording] [Reporter] Has the U.S. Government requested permission for DEA agents to work in Colombia to find drug traffickers?

[Barco] I have received no such request. If indeed [words indistinct] are giving technical assistance, then the request must have been made before I became president.

[Reporter] Mr President, today the U.S. prosecutor who is handling the Jorge Luis Ochoa case said that the Colombian judicial system boycotted the extradition treaty by releasing Ochoa in Colombia.

[Barco] He is generalizing. He is aware the judges act individually, and one judge did that, not the Colombian judicial system. The Colombian judicial system is very respectable. [end recording]

Minister on System, Ochoa

[Report by Mary Villalobos; passages within quotation marks recorded]

[Text] This morning the president of the Supreme Court, Fernando Uribe Restrepo, issued a communique in which he states that the magistrates not only feel like persecuted politicians without possibility of asylum but have become hostages to their positions, faced with continuous threats. Uribe Restrepo added that although the Army's guarding of the court is an extreme measure, it is the only way to defend it from its enemies.

Justice Minister Eduardo Suescun Monroy today rejected charges made by the U.S. and Spanish press concerning the Colombian justice system following the [Jorge Luis] Ochoa case.

[Suescun] "These are statements that clash with reality, because if there is any one country that has fought seriously against drug trafficking, it is Colombia. One must consider this. One must also consider that Colombian justice is a dignified, important, and autonomous kind of justice."

Regarding statements by the DEA that it has agents in Colombian territory to help in the capture of Ochoa, he said:

[Suescun] "The Colombian authorities should carry out arrests in the republic's territory."

However, he did agree that Colombian justice lacks physical, but not moral elements to face organized drug trafficking.

[Suescun] "That is the drama, the real drama. The system of penal justice has been isolated for a long time, left behind in the development process without modern work methods, without efficient ways to operate. It is in a very difficult condition to face the challenge that crime is presenting."

Search for Ochoa Continues

PA240310 Bogota Cadena Radial Super in Spanish 1730 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] Bogota -- Early yesterday morning units of the Colombian 8th Army Brigade began a search for Jorge Luis Ochoa Vasquez in the capital of Risaralda and nearby areas. The search has proved unsuccessful.

According to reports, raids were conducted in rural and urban areas where, according to military intelligence, drug traffickers presumably make cocaine or have their center of operations.

In addition, properties belonging to drug traffickers (Carlos Leder), Santa Cruz Londono, and Evaristo Porras were seized.

STRICT SECURITY MEASURES TAKEN AT SUPREME COURT

PA220404 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0121 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] Bogota, 21 Aug (EFE) -- Beginning today, a strong military guard will be deployed at the headquarters of the Colombian Supreme Court of Justice, in downtown Bogota; almost all of its members have been threatened with death.

Units of the Army's 13th Brigade are patrolling the areas surrounding the buildings as a protection measure "to provide security and dignity" to the judges of the Republic, as instructed by President Virgilio Barco Vargas.

The measures have been implemented after several anonymous messages were received which stated that "the court magistrates will be killed one by one," and added: "No one will survive."

The anonymous person alluded in particular to the magistrates who are working on the requests for extradition of drug traffickers to the United States.

The threats have been constant since 31 July, when Magistrate Hernando Baquero Borda was killed on a street in the northern part of Bogota.

Baquero Borda was assigned to the Criminal Court and was co-author of the extradition treaty in force with the United States since 1980.

AMERICA BATTALION INVOLVED IN ESCAPE, CLASH

PA231924 Paris AFP in Spanish 0157 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] Quito, 22 Aug (AFP) -- According to the terrorists themselves, at least one member of America Battalion, which is composed of subversives of three countries, participated in the rescue of one of its members on 19 August, an action which killed three policemen.

In a clandestine place, two journalists and a photographer from Quito received statements today from Leonardo Vera Viteri, who was rescued from the Eugenio Espejo Hospital in Quito, and "Captain Niclolas Cedeno," who identified himself as a member of America Battalion.

The youths insisted that they had not planned to kill the policemen; in fact, they were not aware of the presence of policemen in Vera's room.

Cedeno denied that the objective of Vera Viteri's rescue was to "eliminate" him; he said that the action responded to his wish to ensure that "no companero of ours remains in a prison" and issued threats as he demanded freedom for its members.

According to local press reporters from the evening paper LA HORA and a newscast from a local radio network, an individual who appeared to be a leader of America Battalion said that "if jail doors are not opened, we will open them."

America Battalion was established a few months ago in Colombia with the participation of the M-19, Tupac Amaru of Peru, and Alfaro Lives of Ecuador.

Meanwhile, Vera, who was left wounded in a hospital on 18 December 1985, after an attempt to kidnap Quito Businessman Eduardo Granda Garces, who also suffered bullet wounds, said that he knew nothing about the operation; in fact, he was surprised to hear the gunshots.

Vera said: "Police casualties were not the result of a murder attempt but of a clash, because they did not hear the stop warning and reacted to the situation."

All sectors of the country censured the incident involving the three policemen and labeled it a murder, because they were not allowed to defend themselves.

Vera was rescued on Tuesday after Kleber Gia Butamante escaped on Sunday from the penal center in Quito. Therefore, his escape was linked to the action at the Eugenio Espejo Hospital. According to Police Commander Luis Suarez, this possibility has not been ruled out by the police,

However, there were rumors that Vera would be executed by the Alfaro Lives group because he reportedly cooperated with a police operation in which Fausto Basantes, identified by Ecuadoran subversives themselves as second in command, was killed early this year.

PRESIDENT, OPPOSITION LEADERS DISCUSS AMNESTY

PY222238 Montevideo Radio Carve in Spanish 0930 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Excerpt] The government and the opposition in the past few hours began final discussions on the controversial case of human rights violations by military men and policemen under the previous de facto government. President Julio Sanguinetti met with his advisers and with opposition leaders.

The first opposition member to meet the president was Broad Front President Liber Seregni, who said his coalition believes that an unconditional amnesty granted before investigating human rights violations is absolutely unacceptable. Seregni said that this position does not reflect stubbornness, but rather consistency with the policy that the Front has adopted on the issue. After comprehensive debates on the political and legal sides of the issue, we concluded that Congress is the most suitable place in which to work out a solution, which we expect to find, he added. Seregni reiterated that the Broad Front believes that the issue should be resolved and the country's democratic stability should be preserved. Therefore, neither our actions nor our omissions should lead us to the conclusion that democracy does not have sound foundations, because to the extent that we admit that society agrees to impunity and arbitrariness, we shall be undermining democracy.

Sanguinetti also met with Civic Union Executive Board President Humberto Ciganda, who did not say whether his party would support the government-sponsored amnesty bill, because the details of the bill have not been made known yet. However, Ciganda said his party adopted a position on the human rights issue long ago, adding that the Civic Union believes that the courts must clarify all specific and proven charges. He explained that his party wants human rights respected and justice preserved, and that, consequently, it advocates clarification of the charges that were leveled before the courts and for which specific evidence has been furnished. The party does not support the investigation into vague charges which can not be properly clarified, he remarked. [passage omitted]

Broad Front Rejects Amnesty

PY230232 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1923 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Excerpt] Montevideo, 22 Aug (EFE) -- The leftist Broad Front coalition today decided to reject the Uruguayan Government's plan for amnesty for those who violated human rights and it also stated that the military men must be tried by civilian courts. In a communique released after a meeting of its Political Committee, the Broad Front, the country's third largest political organization, stated that the amnesty project "is an attack on the moral conscience of Uruguayan society, which will not allow those crimes, committed under the protection of the state apparatus, to go unpunished." The communique also states that the amnesty "is an attack against the country's pacification and the consolidation of its democracy, because if those crimes go unpunished it would cause frustration because those in power would be unable to make everyone respect the Constitution. [quotation marks as received]

After arguing against amnesty, the Broad Front, which is headed by General Liber Seregni, stated that it will maintain the commitments it has contracted with all the political parties after the country returned to democracy "in order to bring those who committed such crimes before the civilian courts." GROUPS CRITICIZE ACTIVITIES OF U.S. TRAWLERS

[Text] Caracas, 21 Aug (AFP) -- The Venezuelan Fishermen's Federation (Federacion Venezolana de Pesca de Altura] will boycott the activities of a U.S. fishing boat fleet in Venezuelan territorial waters, its President Marcos Jurado Blanco has revealed.

The federation, which has approximately 350 members on its roster, adopted the decision after concluding that the U.S. fishing boats Alice Mary and No Problem which the Caracas government authorized to fish in Caribbean waters, are violating Venezuelan law and can cause "serious ecological damage to the ocean fauna" of Venezuela.

According to the federation, the fleet was criticized in the United States for causing the extinction of many ocean species off the coasts of Florida and Puerto Rico by using the boulter system, or bottom rake fishing.

Meanwhile, spokesmen for the Professional Association of Merchant Marine Officers also rejected the activities of the U.S. fishing vessels.

The union leaders of the Venezuelan fishermen (Maritime Union) protested the activities of the U.S. fishing boats 2 days ago.

The permits were issued by the Transport and Communications and Agriculture and Livestock Ministries, which have offered to submit a report on the problem, but have not done so yet.

Trawlers Ordered Out

PA232004 Paris AFP in Spanish 1814 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] Caracas, 23 Aug (AFP) -- The Venezuelan Government today instructed two U.S. fishing vessels to sail out of the port of La Guaira (25 km north of Caracas and the country's main port), heeding complaints lodged by local fishermen's associations.

The fishing boats Alice Mary and No Problem, part of a fleet owned by U.S. citizen Al Marrit, ran into trouble after bottom rake fishing in Puerto Rico and Florida. They were fishing on the Venezuelan high seas with the authorization of the Agriculture and Livestock Ministry.

The Alice Mary docked at La Guaira 2 days ago with 12 tons of shark and swordfish.

The local fishermen's unions, merchant marine, and the Venezuelan Fishermen's Federation reported that they would boycott the boats. They also lodged complaints to the government here.

In addition to the American boats' fishing methods which have a negative effect on the ocean fauna, the fishermen's groups claimed the boats were in La Guaira without authorization, as they have been authorized to moor at the Porlamar piers, 500 km to the northeast, that they were violating labor laws, and that they were using the La Guaira commerical piers even though they are fishing vessels.

Today the Transport Ministry ordered the vessels to leave La Guaira.

SECRETARIAT CITES GORBACHEV REPLY TO GROUP OF SIX

PA241959 Mexico City XEW Television Network in Spanish 1600 GMT 24 Aug 86

[Text] The Foreign Relations Secretariat has released a communique reporting on Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's reply to the proposal that the Group of Six made during their meeting in Ixtapa, Zihuatanejo, on 6 and 7 August.

In his letter, Gorbachev states that he totally agrees with the concepts on peace set forth in the Declaration of Mexico. He reaffirms his government's decision to extend the duration of the USSR's unilateral moratorium on nuclear weapons testing to 1 January 1987, explaining that that decision stems from the belief that the unrestrained growth of nuclear arsenals is not conducive to greater security for nuclear powers. Gorbachev states that if the United States joins the nuclear test moratorium, a new path will open toward the conclusion of a treaty altogether banning nuclear tests.

The letter sets forth the Soviet Union's willingness to accept the Group of Six proposal for a meeting between Soviet and American nuclear experts to discuss appropriate measures on nuclear tests and establish an effective system to verify nuclear testing agreements, in accordance with the annex to the Declaration of Mexico. The letter adds that the Soviet Union is willing to sign an agreement to stop nuclear testing at the eventual summit conference with President Ronald Reagan.

The Foreign Relations Secretariat notes that the statement by Mikhail Gorbachev is congruent with the proposal of the Declaration of Mexico, as during their next meeting, the leaders of the world's two nuclear powers will possibly arrive at specific disarmament agreements.

'HIGH-LEVEL' DELEGATION IN U.S. ON DEA AGENT CASE

PA241933 Mexico City XEW Television Network in Spanish 1600 GMT 24 Aug 86

[Text] A delegation of top-level officials in the Mexican Attorney General's Office is in the United States to meet with DEA leaders and discuss the case of agent Victor Cortes, who was reportedly tortured by Mexican police. Mexican Government sources said that a report on the investigation into the Victor Cortes case will be presented to the DEA.

The Attorney General's Office officials will show Victor Cortes photographs of Mexican policemen to assist him in identifying his captors.

This is the first high-level step taken to clarify the Victor Cortes incident.

Congress To Probe DEA Role

PA221710 Mexico City EL NACIONAL in Spanish 20 Aug 86 p 6

[Text] The National Congress' Permanent Commission yesterday agreed to request from the Foreign Relations Secretariat a report on the operational scope of DEA agents in Mexico.

The consultations are aimed at briefing the legislators on the agreements between Mexico and the United States to fight drug trafficking. It also seeks to define the function of foreign police agents in those actions.

According to Deputy Pedro Penaloza of the Revolutionary Workers' Party (PRT), DEA agents violate our national sovereignty.

This position was supported by the Mexican Workers' Party (PMT), the Socialist Unified Party of Mexico (PSUM), the Peoples Socialist Party (PPS), and, of course, the PRT.

The representatives of those factions in the Permanent Commission demanded an investigation of the existing agreements between Mexico and the United States on the subject of drug control.

Regarding the proposals, PRI Deputy Fernando Ortiz Arana said that the regulations of the Permanent Commission, as well as those of the Chambers of Deputies and Senate, were not being followed. He stressed that the creation of two commissions to investigate the agreements between the two nations on the subject of drug trafficking controls was inappropriate. This can be done only by the Chamber of Deputies' Vigilance Committee, he said. He added that only the Senate can either ratify or reject bilateral agreements, that is where those agreements are reviewed and analyzed.

He proposed asking the Senate's Foreign Relations Committee to request from the Foreign Secretariat the information concerning the cooperation agreements being discussed, as well as the terms of those agreements.

FOREIGN SECRETARY ON ECONOMY, U.S. VISIT

PA221952 Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 18 Aug 86 p 3

[Text] It would be intolerable to subject Mexican society to a process of continuous adjustment that would entail the possibility of a recession, of an economic stagnation. We cannot permit this; that is why we have adopted the policy of injecting fresh resources to the Mexican economy so it will grow at a sustained rate in the next few years.

Foreign Secretary Bernardo Sepulveda Amor stated this yesterday in an interview with the official television. He stressed that the current renegotiation of the Mexican debt also involves changing the traditional viewpoint of some international financial institutions.

If in 1984, Mexico, along with the Cartagena Consensus, said that the creditors and the debtors had a joint responsibility, he added, the governments "in 1986 have assumed their share of the responsibility."

The foreign secretary said that as an important result of President Miguel de la Madrid's visit to Washington, it is now accepted that there are topics that deserve special attention. "The two governments have the responsibility of preventing any situation that might become an irritant between the two countries."

He added that the relationship between Mexico and the United States demands greater attention because it has gradually become more complex. Moreover, there are a number of topics in bilateral relations that already demand a solution. In view of the complexity of the relationship, we are going to resolve the issues.

Sepulveda Amor said that on the agenda of the talks they identified "a number of topics that can be resolved if there is political determination to do so." Regarding drug trafficking, an understanding was reached that this matter necessarily demands the cooperation of the two governments.

In reference to this topic, he explained that "it must be noted that in a good number of cases, the chain has its motive power on the U.S. side, the financing is there, the largest part of the profits is there, and the basic consumption is there."

Therefore, if one wants to attack the production and the initial start distribution of the drug, the other end of the chain must also be dealt with if one wants to be effective. With the establishment of a system of mutual cooperation, much more satisfactory results will surely be achieved.

As far as what is necessary so the financial package will function, the foreign secretary said that it must be accepted that Mexico has a real capacity to export manufactured and nonmanufactured products to the U.S. market.

"We must enter the trade field and make sure that there is a considerable expansion of the Mexican participation in world trade. This means that the expansion must not be centered on petroleum products."

He also indicated that the migration of Mexican workers to the United States is due to a structural phenomenon "because the U.S. economy, which needs the Mexican labor force, induces the migration." Mexico proposed that a system be established to fully guarantee the essential rights of our workers.

The United States has gradually accepted the Law of the Sea, which in 1980 Mexico was already demanding as a constitutional right and which the great majority of the members of the international community accepted by agreeing to the concept of the exclusive Economic Zone.

It is gradually being recognized, he added that Mexico has the right to the tuna in its patrimonial sea. We now have to be careful so that we will not export this product in excess, which would bring prices down.

Regarding foreign policy, Sepulveda Amor said "there is an active diplomacy which is independent, autonomous, proud, and forms part of our historic heritage."

He also said that Miguel de la Madrid will go to the UN General Assembly "to reaffirm the Mexican position on the value of the United Nations as an institution of peace and security and also to hold talks with various leaders."

In the rest of the year there will be an important number of visits from chiefs of state, and there are plans to accept the invitations from the Japanese and PRC Governments.

FINANCE SECRETARIAT REPORTS TO CONGRESS ON DEBT

PA221516 Mexico City Red Nacional 13 Imevision Television in Spanish 0300 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] The Federal Government has assigned 4.014 trillion pesos for interest payment during the first semester of 1986, the Finance Secretariat reported today.

The report added that this payment resulted in a deficit of 2.907 trillion pesos in the government's budget from January to June.

In a report presented to the Congress, the Finance Secretariat said that the government's income totalled 5.614 trillion pesos, while expenses added up to 8.522 trillion pesos.

The Finance Secretariat said that as of 30 June the foreign debt had reached a total of U.S. $72.937 billion, of which only $240 million must be paid in less than 1 year.

The Federal Government's domestic debt currently totals 13.555 trillion pesos. Most of this debt is in form of treasury notes.

POLITICAL LEADERS VIEW PAN, CURRENT SITUATION

PA230317 Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 18 Aug 86 p 2

[By Anibal Ramirez, Lauro Lopez, Matilde Perez, and Arnulfo de Santiago]

[Excerpts] The Confederation of Mexican Workers (CTM) has opposed the granting of privileges to the opposition because it is feared that this action will be regretted. The organization called for the political victories achieved at the ballot box to be defended, and demanded that the working class combat the enemy of the revolution, as neither the PAN [National Action Party] nor any other leftist or rightist party can guarantee changes in favor of the majority.

Roberto Castellanos Tovar, CROC [Revolutionary Confederation of Workers and Peasants] leader, has described the PAN as "a group of bad Mexicans whose leaders have reached such a degree of denationalization that they demand justice in front of the White House. Castellanos Tovar warned that Mexicans will reject every foreign intervention regardless of its origin.

Deputy Mario Rodolfo Campos Bravo, leader of the Issste [Institute of Social Security and Services for Government Workers], criticized PAN's political actions. He stated that the Mexican people became politcally mature many years ago and that he agrees with Mexico's democratic system and revolutionary regimes.

The CTM anticipated a political victory by the revolution over the rightist minorities because the rightists, represented by the PAN, want to remove fundamental constitution chapters for which that the people themselves won approval.

It also said that the working class will not let the Church tell the workers what to do and how to become educated. It said this after criticizing the political clergy for their insistent intervention in public affairs.

The leading workers' federation criticized the relationship between the PAN and the Republican Party, expressing opposition to a minority which, considering itself wealthy, wants to change the revolution's postulates and deliver Mexico into the hands of the U.S. Government.

Meanwhile, prominent members of the PRI's CEN [National Executive Committee] think that the few PAN members who stood in front of the U.S. Capitol last week in an attempt to discredit the Mexican regime only reflected their well-known stance of serving foreign interests. For the Mexican people, this position is of no political importance. [passage omitted]

In addition, National Peasant Confederation Secretary General Mario Hernandez Posadas termed as unacceptable PAN's antinationalist and antipopular posture, and condemned the party's practice of seeking the support of foreign organizations to settle matters that only concern Mexicans. [passage omitted]

"Once again, the reactionaries have gone to a foreign country to disparage the nation and request the intervention of the reactionaries' foreign allies, whose destabilization purpose is clear," Hernandez Posadas warned. He also said that the United States has already realized that the Mexican Government and people will never permit their destinies to be determined from abroad.

The accords signed by President de la Madrid and President Reagan were signed in the context of the Mexican people's nationalist nature and determination to continue to freely shape the nation's course.

He added that the people will not forsake the defense of their freedom and sovereignty, nor will they pay attention to those who only want to surrender the country's riches and seek personal profit.

In addition, Gilberto Rincon Gallardo, leader of the Unified Socialist Party of Mexico [PSUM], has said that Mexicans will solve the electoral problem for reasons of national dignity. Mexicans will not accept a policy treating the country like the Philippines [filipiniacion], with the U.S. intervening in the solution of Mexico's problems.

"The PAN is mistaken if it thinks that the struggle for democracy in Mexico requires tutors." Rather, there would be room for accords with the national political forces if they [the PAN members] limited their actions to the domestic area, as "we will not be accomplices to electoral fraud," Ricardo Gallardo said.

Regarding the results of President De la Madrid's working visit to Washington, Rincon Gallardo feels that the restoration of cordial relations with the United States "is only a temporary solution." He said that the accord with the IMF will only make the problems last longer and such an accord will last only a few months. "Today, the struggle is more complex than obtaining a credit." Interventionism will not cease, but continue, because economic integration has already reached such a level that the United States demands security and political guarantees for U.S. investments and the opening of the Mexican market to U.S. products.

CONTRA TRAINING REJECTED FROM MANY SIDES

Delvalle Opposed

PA231841 Panama City CRITICA in Spanish 23 Aug 86 p 1

[Text] Penonome (Special Service) -- President Eric Arturo Delvalle said yesterday that he is opposed to having Panamanian territory used to provide military training for the Nicaraguan contras.

President Delvalle's statements came in response to international dispatches from various news agencies which mentioned Honduras, El Salvador, and Panama as possible centers of military instruction for the Nicaraguan guerrillas, who are struggling to topple the Sandinist government.

The president also said he is against Panama's being used to launch campaigns against any country because he believes firmly in peoples' right to self-determiniation.

Panama, President Delvalle added, seeks a dialogue and a negotiated and constructive peace, and not a war in Central America.

Cabrera: Increases 'Tension'

PA231317 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 0335 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] Panama City, 22 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- Panamanian Deputy Foreign Minister Jose Maria Cabrera said today that U.S. media reports are a source of tension in the area and a reason for concern of the Contadora countries." [quotation mark as received]

THE NEW YORK TIMES reported that U.S. military forces stationed in the Canal area are going to train contra groups in view of the refusal of Honduran President Jose Azcona Hoyo to lend Honduran territory for that purpose.

"It is a reason for concern of the countries of the Contadora Group (Mexico, Colombia, Venezuela, and Panama) because it is a source that increases existing regional tension," he said.

Cabrera stressed that the reports from the U.S. media only contribute to increasing "the quota of blood that Central America is paying as a result of the regional crisis."

PRD Leader Also Opposed

PA221750 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 1716 GMT 22 Aug 86

[By Manuel Terrientes]

[Excerpts] Panama City, 22 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- The ruling Democratic Revolutionary Party [PRD] today condemned the U.S. Government pretensions to train anti-Sandinist units on U.S. military bases on the banks of the Panama Canal.

Nils Castro, PRD secretary for international affairs, told ACAN-EFE that the report by THE NEW YORK TIMES could "be another instance of slander against Panama or a test balloon to check Panama's reactions."

"It could also be another provocation against our country," said Castro, a leader of the party founded by the late General Omar Torrijos. [passage omitted]

Castro remarked: "Torrijos' followers reject outright the possibility that that training be held here. We would consider it a lack of respect toward our sovereignty and foreign policy, as well as toward the Contadora Group and the just interests of Latin America."

Panama, Colombia, Mexico, and Venezuela comprise the Contadora Group, which for the past 3 years has been negotiating for a political and peaceful resolution of the Central American conflict.

Castro told ACAN-EFE: "The U.S. military bases are temporarily in Panama exclusively to defend the Panama Canal."

He added: "Any other activity on those bases violates the word and spirit of the Torrijos-Carter Treaties," which will grant Panama full sovereignty over the canal's installations in the year 2000.

"For the same reason, the political activities that the head of those troops has been undertaking in several areas countries is also questionable," Castro said.

The PRD international affairs commission demanded that the Panama Foreign Ministry "duly clarify the irregularities, and submit a report on the case at the Nonaligned Movement summit to take place in Zimbabwe."

$88.3 MILLION IN OIL PURCHASES OWED TO MEXICO

FL222136 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 2056 GMT 22 Aug 86

[By correspondent Ana Maria Lasso]

[Text] Panama, 22 Aug (NOTIMEX) -- Panama owes Mexico $18.3 million for oil purchases made this year and $70 million more for purchases made in past years, Mexican Ambassador to Panama Carlos Planck has stressed.

During a press conference, Planck rejected press versions that the San Jose Pact would affect Panama. Periodically the local media has conducted polls on the energy agreement.

Recently, Planning and Economic Policy Minister Ricaurte Vazquez questioned why Mexico is not forwarding the 20 percent of the oil invoices which, according to the San Jose Pact, should be deposited in Panama's Central Bank for development programs.

The diplomat noted that the $9 million in arrears will soon be corrected and added that Panama owes $18.3 in 1986 for Mexican oil purchases, in addition to $70 million from previous years. He noted that the Central Bank has $66.4 million in deposit for 20 percent of the oil invoices which Panama has not yet used in development projects, as provided for by the San Jose Pact.

COSTA RICA

ARIAS: SANDINISTS RESPONSIBLE FOR C.A. SITUATION

PA231311 San Jose LA REPUBLICA in Spanish 15 Aug 86 p 4

[Text] "The Nicaraguan rulers, the nine commanders, are responsible for the situation in Central America," President Oscar Arias Sanchez said yesterday. He also made some revelations about Daniel Ortega Saavedra's stance during the meeting at Esquipulas on 23 and 24 May.

As might be recalled, the five Central American presidents met on that occasion, on the initiative of Guatemalan President Vinicio Cerezo, to discuss the Central American parliament.

During an impromptu press conference after the BANEX [not further identified] inauguration yesterday, Arias said that it was suggested to Ortega in Esquipulas "that there be ideological pluralism and other guarantees in Nicaragua."

"He failed to heed this suggestion. Instead, we saw LA PRENSA closed in the past few weeks. This paper had been directed by the late Pedro Joaquin Chamorro. Actions against high church prelates already familiar to the Costa Rican people and other measures occurred later."

When Ortega met with Presidents Arias, Jose Azcona of Honduras, Napoleon Duarte of El Salvador, and Cerezo, the situation and the need for an opening toward democratization in Nicaragua were presented to Ortega. He reacted by attacking Costa Rica's democracy. He said that there is democracy in Nicaragua, too, and that democracy is a matter of interpretation.

After an exchange of views among the five presidents, Ortega introduced his five points. The discussion came to an end.

These are the five points: 1) Nicaragua does not have to ask anybody's permission to choose its friends; 2) Nicaragua believes in the Sandinist revolution, and this is an irreversible process; 3) Nicaragua will carry its revolution as far as necessary and is determined to back revolutionary movements throughout Latin America; 4) Nicaragua will not disarm itself under any circumstances whatsoever; and 5) Nicaragua will not permit international organizations to inspect it under any circumstances.

Commenting on the U.S. Senate's approval of Resolution 53-47 dealing with $100 million in aid for the rebel groups struggling for Nicaragua's freedom, President Arias said: "The result of the voting had been virtually decided some days previously, because it is well-known that the Republican Party enjoys a majority, although small, in the Senate."

Arias said this about the aid: "I have said here, and I said it in Colombia last week, that I would rather have a peaceful solution in Central America. This has not occurred. The Sandinist government gradually closed the space."

Arias also said that he remains "very much concerned as the Costa Rican president, as a Central American, and as a Costa Rican citizen over the consequences of the war in Nicaragua."

"My greatest concern is over Costa Rica." He considered one of the aspects by which Costa Rica will be affected by the stepping up of war in Nicaragua:

"More Nicaraguans will arrive. In accordance with the World Refugees Agreement, we cannot turn them away."

"During my stay in Bogota I even spoke to U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz about Costa Rica's situation. In this country there are 250,000 foreigners (9 percent of the country's current population), many of whom are Nicaraguans," Arias said.

He added: "Costa Rica might even lose its own identity."

Asked about U.S. Senator (D) Ted Kennedy's remarks that "the approval of the $100 million is the beginning of another Vietnam," Arias said he does not believe this. "I do not believe this, because President Reagan has solemnly pledged to the U.S. people that not a single U.S. soldier will be sent to Nicaragua. I have no reason to doubt the U.S. President's word."

For the first time in his 100 days of government, Arias described the border with Nicaragua as "the border with oppression, the border with the Marxist regime."

Arias said he would "travel to San Carlos, near this border with oppression."

On other topics, Arias said:

A) South Africa: "My view is well known and definite. We even broke relations with this country. Discrimination due to the color of one's skin is incredible so late in this century, in 1986."

B) Great Britain: "Mrs Thatcher, whose country has very strong ties with South Africa, seems to think more about English businessmen than about the South African people."

C) Chile: "Let us consider Chile. I oppose what happens in South Africa, what happens in Nicaragua, and what happens in Chile with Pinochet."

D) Courtesies: [The privilege each country extends to the citizens of the other to import duty-free up to $25 worth of merchandise bought in special stores on the border. Costa Rica recently withdrew the courtesy.] "We will continue to consider this problem of the border with Panama. We hope to resolve it soon."

E) Budget: "It is true that the ministries have requested about 51 billion colones, but this is their first request. This figure will be reduced gradually. We will report on this in a week."

ADMINISTRATION MAINTAINS COOL RELATIONS WITH MANAGUA

FL221943 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 1516 GMT 22 Aug 86

[By correspondent Oscar Hidalgo]

[Text] San Jose, Costa Rica, 22 Aug (NOTIMEX) -- President Oscar Arias has confirmed that for the time being the post of ambassador to Nicaragua will not be filled. In response to an article published in the daily LA NACION, the chief of state noted that it is not urgent to designate the new diplomatic representative to Managua.

Arias abstained from spelling out the reasons for that decision, but it has been rumored for the past 2 weeks that the action is in response to the accusation made against Costa Rica by Nicaragua before the World Court in The Hague.

Cool diplomatic relations between Costa Rica and Nicaragua have occurred twice before, during the government of President Luis Alberto Monge.

Immediately after the inauguration last May President Arias' administration designated as ambassador to Nicaragua the former Foreign Ministry's Foreign Policy Director Alvar Antillon. However, Antillon did not accept the post, and the designation of a new ambassador was postponed indefinitely. By them, the former ambassador to Managua, journalist Oscar Castro Vega, had already returned home. All other attaches of the diplomatic mission were also withdrawn, the only exception being Moises Valituti who was designated consul.

GOVERNMENT, REBELS AGREE ON THIRD MEETING

PA231305 San Salvador Radio Cadena YSU in Spanish 1231 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Communique issued by San Salvador Archbishop Msgr Arturo Rivera y Damas, "intermediary in the dialogue," in Mexico City on 22 August, read by Communications Minister Julio Adolfo Rey Prendes -- live or recorded]

[Text] The Salvadoran presidential and FMLN-FDR delegations which met in Mexico City amid a climate intent on reaching an understanding to establish the place, date, and procedures of the third round of dialogue for peace, have reached the following results:

1. The city of Sesori in San Miguel Department, Republic of El Salvador, was designated as the place for the third round of talks.

2. The date chosen for the meeting is 19 September 1986.

3. The two delegations leave open the possibility of modifying, by mutual agreement, the date and place agreed upon for the holding of the third round.

4. The following points of agreement are pending: details on security, communications, mobilization, and the search for alternatives to implement the following passage of the joint communique of La Palma: B) Develop mechanisms to incorporate all sectors of the Salvadoran society in the peace efforts. The agenda of the third round was not discussed.

5. It was decided that a second private meeting will be held during the first 2 weeks of September 1986 to resolve the points pending agreement.

6. [The delegations] thank the Mexican people and government for their hospitality and the conveniences afforded them for holding this round of talks.

Castillo on Proposals

PA232050 Paris AFP in Spanish 1912 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] Mexico City, 23 Aug (AFP) -- Rodolfo Castillo, vice president and foreign minister, said today in Mexico that the central point of the government's proposal to the Salvadoran insurgency during the third round of the dialogue, which will take place on 19 September in the rural El Salvador, will be that they put down their weapons and return to democratic, political life.

During a press conference the governmental delegation that participated in a preparatory meeting of the dialogue, which began on 20 August, made it clear that the issue of an eventual exchange of political prisoners for Colonel Omar Avalos, who is in the hands of the guerrillas, was not discussed.

Fidel Chavez, the deputy minister of planning [title as received], said that the proposal to be presented to the guerrillas has three main points: the incorporation of combatants into the family nucleus, economic life, and politics. To facilitate this, a total amnesty would be decreed, granting them the same rights enjoyed by all Salvadorans, and the various insurgent groups would be legalized. He added: "Should they not accept, our goal would be to achieve a humanization of the conflict to spare the Salvadoran people greater suffering."

It was said that the issue involving Col Avalos will be presented to Msgr Arturo Rivera y Damas, who acted as mediator in Mexico, who will in turn personally present it to Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte.

According to Culture Minister Julio Rey Prendes, the government is not willing to agree to a general military truce while the dialogue is taking place in Sesori. He added: "The two sides could agree not to carry out operations on the pathways or areas being used for the meeting, but that is very different from establishing a truce; we are not willing to accept a truce, because that would involve having to withdraw our forces and allow the guerrillas to mobilize large contingents to inflict an unexpected blow on us after the meeting."

Meanwhile, Castillo said that the date and place for the second preparatory meeting that will take place during the first half of September will be determined through mediator Rivera y Damas. The vice president said: "We were surprised by the insurgents' proposal to meet in Sesori after the government's refusal to meet in San Salvador, because Sesori is one of the areas most badly stricken by the guerrillas, where there is no water, electricity, and almost no people."

He added: "We will have to work hard to reestablish telephone lines, bridges, roads, and everything else required for this kind of meeting." He pointed out that according to the agreement reached, the place and date can be changed only be a common agreement. Points still pending discussion are no justification, regardless of whether an agreement is reached, to change the place or date.

Some of the points not agreed upon include those that the insurgency deems most important: the meeting's agenda, who will guarantee security, and the participation of social and humanitarian organizations.

Samayoa on Dialogue

PA232303 San Salvador Radio Cadena Sonora in Spanish 1700 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Telephone interview with FMLN representative Salvador Samayoa in Mexico City by unidentified reporter -- live]

[Text] [Reporter] Dear Radio Sonora listeners, we now establish contact with Messrs Jorge Villacorta [as heard] and Salvador Samayoa in Mexico City. They represented the FDR [as heard] during the preparatory meetings which were held in Mexico City. Is this Mr Jorge Samayoa?

[Samayoa] Salvador Samayoa.

[Reporter] Yes. What can you tell us about the agreements reached in Mexico City?

[Samayoa] Well, frankly, there were only two tentative agreements, concerning the place and date. We say they are tentative, because all the topics concerning security measures, particularly about the agenda to be discussed during the dialogue, are still pending. The problem is that the government party insists that the meeting should be held to discuss partial measures to humanize the war, The FMLN-FDR position is that the political measures should be discussed to end the war and achieve peace. Consequently, there is a problem between the government and our fronts concerning the basic outlook, and this must be overcome to decide on the agenda. Furthermore, we have to overcome the problem of security matters which are still pending approval.

So we have tentatively agreed on 19 September for the meeting in Sesori, but this could be changed -- it all depends on whether we reach an agreement, Another point still pending is about the participation in the dialogue of all the political and social sectors. This is something which our fronts advocate, and we struggled a lot during the meetings in Mexico City so that observers could be allowed to attend the dialogue. The government representatives did not agree with the way we proposed the participation of the people in the peace process. All these points are still pending, and the dialogue could be held on 19 September, providing these problems are solved.

[Reporter] Mr Samayoa, you initially proposed to the government that the dialogue be held in the city of San Salvador, but you changed the proposal at the last minute.

[Samayoa] Yes, the problem was that we could not overcome a stalemate during the 2 days concerning where to hold the dialogue. The government does not want to hold the dialogue in San Salvador. The basic problem remains without solution.

In other words, they do not want to permit the parties and popular organizations to participate. They do not want mobilizations for the dialogue, because they believe that this is a show. We think it is necessary to encourage the dialogue and to search for peace. Consequently, they did not accept San Salvador.

Since there were some security problems we opted for the formula which includes Sesori, because that is an area which allows the free mobilization of the FMLN military units and its rearguard. This provides us with better security, because we cannot accept their proposal that our security fully depend on the government's Armed Forces.

[Reporter] Referring to this proposal, was there any indifference or refusal from the government to accept it?

[Samayoa] No, the proposal on Sesori was eventually accepted by the government after we had discarded several alternatives in San Salvador and several alternatives in the eastern side. Engineer Duarte's initial proposal was also discarded; he wanted to hold the dialogue in the city of San Miguel, [San Francisco] Gotera, or Berlin. So, this was like a compromise -- given that they did not accept our proposal of San Salvador; furthermore, we accepted their first proposal to hold the dialogue in the eastern zone.

[Reporter] Furthermore, some international news media reported that you would hold meetings with Msgr Rivera y Damas during your stay in Mexico City, to discuss the exchange of Col Napoleon Avalos. Is this true?

[Samayoa] Hello?

[Reporter] Yes. Some international news media recently reported that you would hold meetings with Msgr Rivera y Damas during your stay in Mexico City. What results have you had? Did you hold the meeting?

[Samayoa] Yes. Look, we held the meetings, but nothing specific was achieved because -- to be frank -- the church has a list of approximately 950 persons who are political prisoners. This includes labor union and humanitarian organization leaders, as well as civilians who have been kidnapped in the zones which are currently under dispute.

Consequently, based on this list of 950 persons, the church brought us a much shorter, or purged, version, listing only 23 persons who would be released by the government. We told the church that this is a painful situation for Salvadoran families; they want to see their sons, brothers, or relatives who have been unjustly imprisoned or reported missing. We believe the list should be increased to provide the appropriate basis for a negotiation. We have reached a specific agreement: The church will increase the list and deliver it to us on 1 September. We might then proceed to specific negotiations for Col Avalos' release and to attain freedom for the labor and political leaders who are currently in prison.

[Reporter] Returning to the topic of the dialogue. What specific results or achievements do you expect to attain -- or believe that you can attain -- after the third dialogue?

[Samayoa] Well, we want to seek the possibility of attaining a political solution to the conflict, with the participation of all the country's sectors.

Now then, we forsee a problem: The government is too weak, suffering many internal disputes, and has very little margin to adopt decisions. Given that it has many commitments with the so-called extreme right sectors, it has practically no capacity to make pledges in the search for peace. Nevertheless, we will continue to exert ourselves, because peace is a just hope following these last 6 years of a generalized war, and our responsibility is to exert ourselves to the utmost.

[Reporter] To conclude, Mr Samayoa, do you have any message for the Salvadoran people? The microphones are yours.

[Samayoa] Thank you very much. Our message is quite clear. We believe that all the political and social sectors should step up the struggle and demand participation in the peace process, particularly in the dialogue, because this is a problem which affects all Salvadorans, and all Salvadorans should seek a solution. Napoleon Duarte's government cannot pretend that it will be allowed to continue the dialogue without accepting the people's participation. We cannot possibly try to secure peace with justice and dignity without the people's participation. This is the specific message I have to send. I would like to reassert that we steadfastly defend this position during the talks in Mexico City, even though we could not reach agreement given the government party's stubborn attitude.

[Reporter] Mr Samayoa, I almost forgot another question. Radio Venceremos yesterday annouced a transportation stoppage for tomorrow. Do you not believe that this might interfere with the preparatory meetings for a dialogue?

[Samayoa] Absolutely not, because that is a large-scale operation at a national level, meaning a transportation stoppage and takeover of the main highways in the country. This is quite logical given that the military confrontation has not been suspended in any way. By the way, we recall that the government has not agreed to declare a military truce during the third dialogue, and this was a point which we discussed here. We cannot hold peace talks in a climate marked by confrontation.

Thus, the parties could prove their real political position by agreeing to decree a partial cease-fire, at least during the dialogue, to facilitate the negotiations.

[Reporter] Radio Cadena Sonora listeners, this was Dr Salvador Samayoa, spokesman for the FDR, from Mexico City.

[Samayoa] of the FMLN, not the FDR.

[Reporter] FDR-FMLN.

[Samayoa] Yes.

[Reporter] Well, we conclude our report. Please remain alert, we will continue with our reports later.

Rebel Notes Unresolved Issues

PA232135 San Salvador Radio Cadena YSU in Spanish 1800 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Telephone interview with FDR member Jose Mario Lopez in Mexico City by unidentified reporter on 23 August -- recorded]

[Text] The Salvadoran Government and guerrillas last night in Mexico agreed to hold a third round of talks on 19 September in Sesori, 153 km east of San Salvador, in eastern San Miguel Department. Arrangements for the new round of top-level talks came 1 and 1/2 years after the first two meetings in La Palma and Ayagualo between the sides in conflict in our country. Jose Mario Lopez, a member of the FMLN-FDR Political-Diplomatic Commission, said that if the Salvadoran Government does not establish security mechanisms for the third round of talks, there will be no firm decision regarding the place and date of the meeting.

[Begin recording] [Lopez] Given the limitations of the government delegation, which did not allow for agreements on other aspects of the preparations, such as the security issue, we cannot definitely establish a site. You must understand that the place where a meeting is held depends on security aspects. The government has refused -- and Engineer Duarte said this publicly -- to agree to a truce for this meeting, in spite of the fact that when his daughter was released there was a truce. Now that the issues at hand are of national interest, the government is refusing the truce. During the meetings in La Palma and Ayagualo there were truces. Therefore, there is a precedent, and it is necessary to apply this rule as a matter of security.

However, security issues were not discussed, because the government delegation was not authorized to discuss them. Therefore, if the security issues are not established and are unresolved, the place and even the date will not be firm.

[Reporter] It has been reported in the country that the president said he cannot talk about a truce and that the insurgent delegation would not have any problems because he would ensure security. This is why he proposed the towns of Berlin, Usulutan, San Francisco Gotera, and San Miguel for the dialogue. Why did you not agree to these towns?

[Lopez] We must take various factors into account. We struggled a great deal to hold the meeting in San Salvador, with the special interest of having the various national sectors somehow participate as observers in this round of talks. Other areas make this aspect difficult, and there are other security issues such as the fact that diplomatic representations always serve as elements of security for both sides. San Salvador has the largest sector, or rather San Salvador is the center of all of the diplomatic headquarters in the country.

Finally, in order to save the dialogue, we proposed a small town in the eastern part of the country, Sesori, as we were taking these security aspects into account. Sesori has an FMLN rearguard, and it met other conditions that lessen the security problems. You must understand that we cannot leave security in the Army's hands. We are two sectors in conflict; we have precedents as serious as the murder of FDR leaders, the murder of Msgr Romero, and violations of the truces that have been agreed upon on other occasions. Therefore, we cannot leave security in the hands of the Armed Forces, not under these conditions.

This is quite normal, considering the situation. The government has emphatically refused to call a truce during the talks, even though it is more sensible to have a truce. How can the participants in the talks move from the war fronts to the place, stay there, and return to the war fronts -- even if they are escorted by members of the diplomatic corps, church, and Red Cross -- without a truce to guarantee their safe passage? The government and Army are being intransigent. They have said that the hostilities will not be suspended. This is one reason for the transportation stoppage.

[Reporter] Will you say whether you want to change the place for the talks during the 15 September preparatory talks?

[Lopez] This is related to other problems, particularly the security problem. We do not want to change the place. Agreement has been reached on this, and we are willing to stick to it. However, if the government and Army do not offer us the necessary security guarantees, then we will have to seek better guarantees. Several factors must be taken into consideration. The government delegation came to the meeting as the representatives of President Duarte, not as government representatives. There were no Army representatives in that delegation. Colonel Lopez Nuila came as an advisor to the meeting but not as a member of the delegation. There is a certain move to evade commitments in this respect. It is noteworthy that despite his being deputy security minister and acting as an adviser, security factors were not discussed during the meetings.

[Reporter] Can we then say that the absence of a high-ranking military officer was one of the problems encountered?

[Lopez] No, it is not the absence that mattered, but the delegation's inability to discuss these aspects. [end recording]

Meanwhile, it was confirmed in Mexico that Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte will head the government delegation that will be in Sesori, San Miguel Department, on 19 September. The FMLN-FDR delegation will be headed by Joaquin Villalobos and Commander Leonel Gonzalez, as well as by politicans Guillermo Ungo and Ruben Zamora.

FMLN-FDR Communique

PA241550 (Clandestine) Radio Venceremos in Spanish to El Salvador 1400 GMT 24 Aug 86

[Communique issued by FMLN General Command and FDR Executive Committee in El Salvador on 23 August]

[Text] The first stage of the preparations for the third meeting of the dialogue ended on 22 August. Our fronts state the following with regard to the development and results of this meeting:

1. The preparatory meeting began on the evening of 20 August and lasted 2 days, during which aspects concerning the agreements on the third dialogue were discussed. Both sides maintained an attitude of understanding. However, the results of this meeting in Mexico were incomplete, in large part because of the government delegation's limited powers to reach agreements.

2. In view of the government's rejection of San Salvador as the site, claiming political reasons, and in order to make the third meeting viable, the FMLN-FDR proposed the town of Sesori, which was accepted by the government delegation. We chose Sesori because, it is not under the military control of the Armed Forces and therefore provides minimum security hazards.

3. Based on a proposal from our fronts, it was agreed to hold the third meeting of the dialogue on 19 September on the assumption that agreements will be reached on operational aspects still pending.

4. Consequently, there are other important aspects on which agreement must be reached to guarantee that the third meeting will be held. By virtue of this, it was agreed to continue the process of preparations during another meeting to be held during the first fortnight of September.

We will continue to advocate the participation of observers from the various national sectors in the third dialogue. The truce proposed by our fronts forms part of the security conditions which are still pending agreement, because it constitutes an elementary measure that has been implemented on other occasions, such as when Engineer Duarte's daughter was released.

The agenda of the third meeting of the dialogue is still pending. The FMLN-FDR appeal to all of the national sectors and patriotic organizations to continue struggle actively for the continuation of the dialogue to achieve a political solution and for their legitimate right to participate in it.

The step taken in Mexico must be successfully completed so we can come closer to the peace with justice and freedom all of us seek. United to fight until final victory. Revolution or death, we will overcome!

[Excerpt] San Salvador, 22 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- Military sources have reported that a helicopter from the Salvadoran Air Force crashed today in eastern Morazan Department. One soldier was injured as a result. Coprefa reported that the helicopter crashed this morning near Cachuatique Hill, in the north of conflict-ridden Morazan Department. Since 13 August the Salvadoran Army has been carrying out a search operation for FMLN hideouts near the place where the accident occurred. [passage omitted]

Venceremos Comments

PA230234 (Clandestine) Radio Venceremos in Spanish to El Salvador 0000 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] The black winter continues for the Duartist Air Force in Morazan! The puppet Armed Forces began their failures during the enemy operation carried out last May, when our antiaircraft units shot down a costly helicopter gunship. The Duartist Army's current operation in Morazan is proving to be even worse. We recall that we downed one of their helicopters on 16 August without firing a single shot. It was brought down by one of the many booby traps we have laid out throughout Morazan Department. Last Saturday the helicopter fell into a network of our cables like a clumsy fly.

On the morning of 22 August another helicopter crashed in Morazan close to Cacaguatique. It has fallen, and the Coprefa has accepted it. What is the matter with the puppet Air Force? The pilots who appear so courageous when bombing defenseless women and children seem very nervous. Perhaps the pilots who [words indistinct] helicopters have already died. Perhaps mercenary gringos are now flying their aircraft.

Eight aircraft have been shot down in the eastern zone so far this year. We recall the helicopters shot down in Agua Zarca, San Gerardo, Torola, and on 16 August in Arambala, and the three which were destroyed during the takeover of the 3d Infantry Brigade's installations.

To top General [Juan Rafael] Bustillo's woes, another of their helicopters fell this Friday in Morazan. This is the eigth helicopter to be rendered useless so far this year. Poor Col [Miguel Antonio] Mendez! His airborne operation is turning upside down in Morazan! Two helicopters hitting the ground within 4 weeks is simply too much! We advise the puppet Armed Forces' pilots to carry a lemon in their mouths and two small cotton plugs for their noses [Central American peasant method of preserving corpses in summer] and, of course, to choose the type of coffin they would like to be buried in before they depart on another flight.

JUDGE UPHOLDS ARREST OF MILITARY OFFICERS

PA230005 San Salvador Radio Cadena YSKL in Spanish 1700 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Excerpt] Dr Jorge Alberto Serrano, First Military Court Judge, found today that the abductions of (Carlos Alfredo Benutolo Oviedo), (Victor Rene Cordon Paul), (Jose Luis Zablah Hasbun), Elias Jorge Vajalla, and Dr Alfredo Ortiz Mancilla, as well as the theft of 26 private vehicles and metal structures on the Northern Trunk Highway committed by the bank of kidnappers led by Orlando Llovera Valet and Lieutenant Isidro Lopez Cibrian, retired, as well as other senior military officers justify their arrest and trial by civilian and military courts.

We are now contacting Judge Serrano to learn about his decision in this case. Judge Serrano, the people will now listen to you through our station.

[Begin relay] [Serrano] You have asked me for a report on this case, which has become so well-known locally and internationally, involving the kidnappings by Llovera and others. I must inform you that the arrest warrant issued by the military arraigning judge has been upheld today on the basis of the evidence and date obtained during these proceedings.

[Words indistinct] what this court is deciding is to uphold, I repeat, the arrest warrants and scheduling further proceedings for later dates to learn the truth in this case.

[Reporter] Your Honor, to whom does the arrest warrant apply?

[Serrano] Several people are implicated, but only three of them are present. They are Major Jose Alfredo Jiminez Moreno, Lieutenant Rodolfo Isidro Lopez Cibrian, and Luis Orlando Liovera Valet. As you know, the other persons implicated are outside the country. [sentence indistinct]

[Reporter] Your Honor, may we surmise then that the arrest warrant applies to all members of the band?

[Serrano] Yes, it applies to all.

[Reporter] Does that include Lieutenant Colonel Joaquin Eduardo Zacapa, Lieutenant Carlos Zacapa, and agronomist Antonio Cornejo Arango?

[Serrano] Yes, it is against all of them. As I said a while ago, the provisional arrest warrant ordered by the military arraigning judge was against all implicated persons. However, during the proceedings we have realized that some of the defendants are here and some are absent. Therefore, new arrest warrants will be issued against those who are absent for subsequent legal action.

[Reporter] What about the speculation during the past few days that Maj Jiminez is under house arrest and not being held by a security group.

[Serrano] No, it is not house arrest. He is under provisional detention, now confirmed by the court I head. What happens is that apparently other proceedings are being carried out to clarify what he said during his out-of-court deposition. [end relay] [passage omitted]

GUATEMALA

CEREZO REFUSES TO RECEIVE GAM DEMONSTRATORS

PA231357 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 0258 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] Guatemala, 22 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- Today the Mutual Support Group [GAM], which groups relatives of missing political prisoners, requested that President Vinicio Cerezo establish an investigative commission. Some 2,000 people, most of them peasants, held a peaceful demonstration this afternoon in front of the Government Palace with the GAM members. The demonstrators, carrying posters, demanded that the government establish a commission to investigate the fate of people kidnapped and missing in the past 2 decades of military regimes.

The GAM members said that the main purpose of the demonstration was to deliver a document to the Guatemalan president signed by some 15,000, who gave the people's support to "the just demands of the group." However, President Cerezo did not receive the GAM members and told them that he would not receive them until 17 September.

Nineth de Garcia, GAM's highest leader, said that Cerezo's attitude "is because he does not want to face the Guatemalan people and the reality in which we are living." She added: "Our group is the only defender of human rights in Guatemala, and thus we demand that the government appoint an investigative commission to explain the whereabouts of our relatives."

During the march, which began at 2130 GMT and ended at 2330 GMT, the demonstrators, who had the support of the Democratic Socialist Party (PSD) and the United Revolutionary Front (FUR), shouted: "They were kidnapped alive; we want them back alive."

The highest PSD leader, Mario Solorzano Martinez, said that his participation in the demonstration "was an act of solidarity and support to the GAM members and their efforts to locate their missing relatives." Solorzano noted that there is lack of seriousness on the part of President Cerezo, because at the beginning he agreed to set up a commission to investigate the whereabouts of the missing people, which he refused to do later, and now he has refused to meet with the GAM members.

The GAM has demanded that the Christian Democratic government explain the whereabouts of 40,000 people who were kidnapped or disappeared during the last 2 decades of military regimes. GAM President Nineth de Garcia has repeatedly said: "The Guatemalan Government security forces are responsible for the kidnapping and disappearance of the people whose reappearance we are demanding."

Members of the Central American Glass Factory (Cavisa) union, where Edgar Fernando Garcia, husband of the GAM president, was a leader, also participated in the demonstration. He was kidnapped on 18 February 1984. During the peaceful march GAM members stopped in front of the National Police General Directorate and requested the "immediate appearance of our relatives."

Since its creation on 4 June 1984, the GAM has held four public demonstrations with the participation of political, union, social and peasants sectors. Nineth de Garcia explained that so far in 1986 they have held more than 40 demonstrations in front of the Government Palace to request of the regime the appearance of their missing relatives. However, the results "have been negative." The GAM president said: "Ours is a distressing situation. Nevertheless, we are willing to continue the struggle until we receive specific answers to our requests."

AZCONA: CONTRAS NOT TO TRAIN IN COUNTRY

PY230213 Paris AFP in Spanish 2201 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] Tegucigalpa, 22 Aug (AFP) -- President Jose Azcona has stressed that his government will not allow the training of Nicaraguan contras by U.S. troops in Honduras, thus denying reports from the Reagan administration and the U.S. Congress in this respect.

According to a report released in Washington, Green Berets (U.S. experts in guerrilla warfare) will arrive in Honduras in October 1986 to train the contras as part of the $100-million aid package that has been approved by the U.S. Congress.

But President Azcona told the local station Radio America that his government will maintain the principle of neutrality in the Nicaraguan conflict. Foreign Minister Carlos Lopez has also stated that contras will not be trained in Honduras, and when he was asked why the Reagan administration was reporting the contrary, he said: You will have to ask them.

The foreign minister this week also stressed that the aid for the contras will not pass through Honduras and that this is the official position that the Honduran Government gave to the United States. Nevertheless, the contras have already received important supplies from Honduran businessmen in Tegucigalpa and in the eastern town of Danli. This fact has been admitted by the businessmen themselves.

According to reliable sources, a contra Military-Training Center (CIM) exists in Honduras near Yamales, in the eastern Department of Paraiso. This center was attacked five times by the Sandinist Army in March 1986, but it is still functioning.

Members of the Christian Democratic Party (DC) and of Innovation and Unity (PINU) today expressed opposition to the use of Honduran territory for training contras, who could also be trained in El Salvador or Panama, according to information received from Washington. Carlos Sosa, a PINU leader, today stated in a press conference: There must be patriots in El Salvador, as there are here, and I do not believe that President Jose Napoleon Duarte would approve of such procedures.

Regarding comments by Foreign Minister Lopez, who cynically affirms that there are no contras here, Sosa said: I believe he is expressing a wish, a good intention, a nice thought that there are no contras in Honduras. Finally, he stated that President Ronald Reagan has an excellent place near the Panama Canal to train his contras, because it is the only place in Central America where the United States exercises full sovereignty, at least until 1999.

Regalado Concurs

PA240315 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 2038 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] Tegucigalpa, 23 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- General Humberto Regalado Hernandez, commander of the Honduran Armed Forces, has ratified here that the $100-million U.S. aid for the Nicaraguan "counterrevolution will not pass through Honduran territory. That is an affair between the United States and the Nicaraguan Sandinists; Hondurans have nothing to do with it and have no reason to get involved in it."

Regalado made short statements to the media during the ceremony celebrating the creation of the 2d Airborne Infantry Battalion, held in the Tamara Valley, 15 km north of Tegecigalpa. Regalado added: "Nor will the Green Berets or any other U.S. soldier come to Honduras to train Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries."

Regalado confirmed that "both the $100-million aid and the possibility of training contras in Honduras are issues used by international and local communists to try to discredit the Honduran Government and Armed Forces."

PRESIDENT SPEAKS AT MILITARY AWARDS CEREMONY

PA230251 Managua Domestic Service in Spanish 0110 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Speech by President Daniel Ortega Saavedra at the Palace of the Revolution in Managua -- live]

[Text] Some 8 years ago the Rigoberto Lopez Perez Command of the FSLN entered this room. Seven years after the revolutionary triumph, which became a process to institutionalize our revolution and state, in this same place, which reminds us of that heroic deed, we are conferring the rank of Army general on Commander of the Revolution Humberto Ortega Saavedra, a member of the FSLN National Directorate. In so doing we are beginning a new phase which had already been called for by the development of our Army and also by the development of the Interior Ministry.

Our people have two formidable fists with which to face, fight, and defeat our enemies: the EPS and the Interior Ministry. Because of their specific characteristics, it was logical and natural that this process of changing the ranks or establishing a hierarchy [jerarquizacion] would begin with the EPS; it will be continued with the Interior Ministry in October.

We are making, building Nicaragua's history based on efforts and sacrifices, and it is the combatants of the EPS and the Interior Ministry who are tasked with one of the hardest jobs, one which requires the most sacrifice.

The 7 years spent in the organization of our Army amid the uproar of the fighting against the aggressive power, the United States of America, make this an Army that represents and gives prestige to the history of the Nicaraguan people, that represents and give prestige to the history of the Central American people, that represents and gives prestige to the history of the Latin American and Caribbean peoples, and that represents and gives prestige to the history of the peoples of the Third World.

These have been 7 years of building our Army amid fighting, great difficulties, and actions of heroism and sacrifice. We were saying that our Army's development and our country's process of institutionalization already demand that we implement this change in ranks and that we make these changes and establish a hierarchy for EPS and Interior Ministry combatants.

We have and will have generals in Nicaragua. We have and will have colonels in Nicaragua. We have and will have lieutenant colonels, majors, officers, and soldiers of our Army and the Interior Ministry who have devoted and will continue to devote their efforts, not to becoming rich, repressing the people, or defending the exploiters, but to defending the poor, the workers, and the peasants.

We will have and now have generals, colonels, officers, noncommissioned officers, and privates in our Army to defend the achievements of our revolution, to defend our people's right to work, to defend the peasants' right to own land, to defend the rights of teachers, doctors, technicians, and professionals, to defend the Nicaraguan society's rights, to defend the rights of all political, ideological, economic, and social sectors that accept the revolutionary power's framework of institutionalization and that are willing to carry forward their political action in this institutional context within the laws of the Republic.

In their own history of heroism and combat, the Nicaraguan people have been building and continue to build, consolidate, and develop our Army. The fighters of the national war, Andres Castro and Jose Dolores Estrada, are the founders of our Army. Resisting the Yankee invader, Benjamin Zeledon maintained our Army. Sandino's generals and peasant colonels and workers are the builders of our Army. Carlos Fonseca, Rigoberto Lopez Perez, and German Pomares Ordonez are the builders of our Army. They continue to be the builders of our Army, as do the thousands of heros and martyrs who fell after the triumph of the revolution, defending the homeland, defending the revolution against the foreign aggressor.

Now we have a more organized people. Therefore, we have a more developed Army. Our Army's military doctrine, based on the people's organization around the Army, is more necessary today than ever. The process of improving the institutionalization of our Army coincides with the escalation of aggression by the U.S. leaders. This also coincides with the approval, not of the $100 million, but of the sending of military advisers and the authorization to allow the CIA to execute terrorist and criminal activities against our people on behalf of the U.S. Congress.

This marks a new stage in the confrontation against those who make war -- namely the U.S. Government -- those who sponsor and continue to foster an interventionist policy. The military doctrine that incorporates the people en masse into the military defense of the revolution, and which includes a more developed and more technical Army, becomes increasingly relevant, because now more than ever an eventual intervention by U.S. troops in our country is likely.

Over the past 5 years there have been difficult moments of military aggression by the U.S. Government. A military intervention by U.S. troops has seemed imminent. In the U.S. Congress, however, resistance to this policy existed. Now the U.S. President has been able to break that resistance in the U.S. Congress, and a bigger danger exists. Therefore, we must improve our military doctrine, which has been designed with the goal of resisting an eventual U.S. military intervention against the people. We must strengthen this doctrine in practice, we must strengthen it by means of better organization, we must strengthen it by means of a better integration of workers, peasants, technicians, and professionals in various military structures being developed in this city.

This military act carries the people's signature and is intended to help us resist the U.S. military intervention until we have defeated it. This doctrine has been strengthened today. It has not been strengthened with the formal conferring of ranks. It has been strengthened because these new ranks are a result of the application and implementation of this military doctrine, which has developed our Army even more.

When conferring this rank of Army general on our comrade, Commander of the Revolution Humberto Ortega Saavedra, member of the FSLN, we are continuing the hierarchical process of the EPS and the Interior Ministry. We are sure our people are conferring this rank. It is the FSLN, the Nicaraguan people, the FSLN National Directorate respresenting the people, and the Nicaraguan Government who are confident that our weapons will defend the interests of the fatherland and the revolution. We shall follow Sandino's slogan: Free fatherland or death! Thank you.

ORTEGA MAKES STATEMENT BEFORE TRIP ABROAD

PA241733 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1400 GMT 24 Aug 86

[Report by "Companero Zamora" from Augusto Cesar Sandino Airport in Managua -- live]

[Excerpts] [Zamora] At this moment, prior to this departure for the Harare summit, the companero president will make a statement.

[Ortega] We want to say good-bye to the Nicaraguan people now that we are departing for Zimbabwe, where the Nonaligned Movement will hold a summit meeting. With our presence we are going to state our solidarity with the South African people, who are being oppressed and exploited under apartheid. We are going to defend international law and the interests of all the countries that are members of the movement. We are going to defend the importance of the International Court of Justice and to back this important organization that the movement's countries have for resolving problems peacefully.

In Zimbabwe we will also have the opportunity to meet with chiefs of state who will be present. The trip to the eighth summit will take us on a tour that begins today in Yugoslavia. We will make an official visit to Yugoslavia. From there we will be going to [name indistinct] and from there to Ghana. From Ghana we will be going to the Congo, which currently is president of the OAU. From there we will go to Zimbabwe.

[Words indistinct] official visits to India, Tunisia, the DPRK, and the GDR. We have an intense agenda. We have the cooperation of the GDR, of Companero Erich Honecker, who has placed an airplane at our disposal so we will not have to spend much on plane fares. The [words indistinct] plane will take the Nicaraguan delegation to those places, and we will not have to spend a single penny.

This will also be an opportunity for securing the solidarity of the countries to be visited and of the nonaligned countries for the Nicaraguan revolution, which today more than ever is being threatened by the United States, simply because we are defending the principles of nonalignment. We are being attacked for doing that. This is why we must suffer terrorist activities. This is why the U.S. Congress has adopted certain decisions.

We are going there to represent the interests of Latin America, which are being threatened not only by the U.S. actions against Nicaragua but also by the measures that have been adopted against all Latin American countries. Most of those measures are economic, basically. This includes the aggressive measures that have been adopted against Peru, where President Alan Garcia has firmly defended economic measures that are in line with the true situation in this country. Now he is facing the pressure, the reprisals, of the IMF. We are in solidarity with Peru and with President Alan Garcia.

We want to say also that Nicaragua has offered herself as host for the ninth summit meeting of the Nonaligned Movement. The United States is interested in making sure that Nicaragua does not host the ninth summit meeting. For this reason it is going to be exerting pressure and blackmailing governments of Latin America and other parts of the world that belong to the Nonaligned Movement to eliminate Nicaragua's possibility of being elected host of the movement.

The United States does not want Nicaragua to be elected host of the movement because this would represent massive backing by more than 100 countries -- an acknowledgement and an expression of trust -- and also because Nicaragua would defend the interests of Latin America and of the Nonaligned Movement.

We are sure that the most progressive and nationalist countries of Latin America, Africa, and the Third World will back Nicaragua's aspiration to be host of the movement to defend the interests of the movement and of Latin America.

[Zamora] Thank you, Commander. You have heard the president at this brief news conference before he leaves for a visit to several countries and eventually to participate in the eighth Nonaligned summit in Harare, the capital if Zimbabwe. [passage omitted]

Commander of the Revolution Daniel Ortega Saavedra is being accompanied by Major General Joaquin Cuadra Lacaya, deputy minister of defense and chief of staff of the EPS; Deputy Interior Minister Javier Chamorro Mora; Foreign Trade Minister Alejandro Martinez Cuenca; Companero Carolos Fernando Chamorro, chief of the Agitation and Propoganda Department of the FSLN; Companero Julio Lopez, chief of the International Relations Department of the FSLN; and the director general of The Voice of Nicaragua, Companero Carlos Jose Guadamuz.

Manuel Espinoza Henriquez, information and press director of the Presidency is [words indistinct] advance. Foreign Minister Father Miguel D'Escoto Brockman is already in Harare to participate in the experts' meeting that will begin tomorrow.

REGULATIONS IMPOSED ON INTERNATIONAL FLIGHTS

PA221752 Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 21 Aug 86 pp 1, 8

[Text] The Civil Aeronautics Directorate (DAC) is regulating the formerly unrestricted operations of international airlines in Nicaragua, it was reported yesterday.

DAC Director Sergio Buitrago said that "regulatory procedures have begun."

He cited the case of the Salvadoran airline TACA, which has been assigned a maximum of 30 passengers per day on its flights to the United States.

"That means that TACA will be allowed to move approximately 900 people per month," Buitrago explained.

In El Salvador, the Nicaraguan airline Aeronica is allowed to carry no more than 50 passengers per week, while in Nicaragua, TACA can transport 210 passengers in that same time period.

Additionally, TACA receives dollars for its ticket sales in Nicaragua, while in El Salvador, Aeronica receives colones, with which it cannot purchase dollars.

Aeronica Manager Julio Rocha has reportedly been meeting with TACA executives in El Salvador. Several of them have been invited to Nicaragua in an effort to strengthen relations between the two airlines.

DEFENSE MINISTER NOTES EPS BUILDUP TO FACE U.S.

PA232210 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 1942 GMT 23 Aug 86

[By Denis Garcia Salinas -- All quotation marks as recieved]

[Text] Managua, 23 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- Nicaraguan Defense Minister General Humberto Ortega declared today that the Sandinist Government will continue to build up a modern army to face U.S. intervention.

Regarding the EPS, Gen Ortega said: "We are no longer a handful of men. Today we are a government; a more disciplined army, with organized techniques and strategy." In 7 years "we have progressed" militarily, Ortega said, after adding that "we have the conviction of defeating any foreign invasion, which "will bite the dust of defeat."

Gen Ortega states that the bold "will bite the dust of defeat, and "despite the shameful commercial, political, diplomatic, and military blockade, we are a powerful Army, because we have reason on our side.

Despite the "mercenary war" of the United States, the EPS has "been consolidating itself to confront any possible U.S. invasion."

Defense Minister Humberto Ortega conferred the rank of "major general" this morning on Joaquin Cuadra, and the rank of colonel on Brigade Commanders Julio Ramos, Hugo Torres, and Leopoldo Rivas, at a ceremony held in this capital. Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega yesterday converted the rank of brigade commander of Joaquin Cuadra to colonel, and he was promoted to Army major general of the EPS today. The ranking military officer stated that "we will continue to strengthen and buildup a modern army and military strategy to face a direct U.S. intervention." We have learned from studying military doctrine, approved in August 1985, the strategy, the concept of the framework of the Army, and its consolidation and military unity," Ortega stated.

The general added that this was to "count on a responsible and monolithic Army that will respond to the need of applying a military art demanded of a modern army." The military leader explained that the government was "concerned with endowing the Army with a military organization to defend the interests of the people and Nicaraguan sovereignty."

Since 1980 the Army has sought the aid of Latin American countries and even that of the Carter administration to build a new Nicaraguan Army," he noted.

Humberto Ortega warned that the Sandinist Army is prepared to struggle in case there is a surprise U.S. invasion of that country. He said that it is not his intention to confront "the U.S. military attache, because "we do not want U.S. youths to come to foreign countries to defend an unjust cause without determination."

Ortega stated that they have no other alternative than to defend the revolution from any hostility of large proportion, concluding that he is convinced of "victory."

U.S. GOVERNMENT TIGHTENS ECONOMIC BOYCOTT

FL230114 Havana Radio Reloj Network in Spanish 0101 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] A spokesman for the U.S. State Department announced today that President Reagan had approved a number of measures directed at tightening the economic embargo against Cuba.

According to the spokesman, the measures are aimed at controlling the amount of dollars obtained through diverse trade transactions by the government. Among the measures adopted is one that would strictly supervise private firms which organize or promote trips to Cuba, as well as the forwarding of funds or goods here.

U.S. officials indicated that the decision's objective is to tighten the economic embargo adopted in 1970, whose main purpose is to make it difficult for the government to obtain dollars.

Radio on New Measures

PA230145 Havana International Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] The U.S. Government announced today that it will increase the economic boycott it has maintained against Cuba since 1960. According to the statements by U.S. officials, the measure is aimed at exerting pressure on Cuba to force it to accept the immigration agreements signed with the United States in 1984. The agreements were suspended after Reagan's administration decided to begin, on 20 May 1985, the broadcasts of an anti-Cuban radio station.

In addition to strengthening the economic boycott, President Reagan approved other restrictive measures, including increased control on the organizations that promote and sponsor trips to our country from the United States.

Foreign Ministry Notes 'Pressure'

PA230152 Havana International Service in Spanish 0000 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] Foreign Ministry sources have said in Havana that Cuba has proven more than once that no pressure or economic measure adopted by the United States will force our country to negotiate or violate its principles.

The statement was issued shortly after the U.S. Government announced a strengthening of the economic boycott, which has been in force since 1960. The sources added that Cuba does not benefit in the least from the departure of Cuban citizens to the United States; they stated that shady deals have been carried out -- for illegal visas and fake visas -- in Miami and other places. The sources recalled that the immigration problems are mainly the fault of the United States.

SELA DELEGATION HEAD COMMENTS ON CARACAS MEETING

PA221856 Havana International Service in Spanish 0000 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Interview with Pedro Morales, head of the Cuban delegation to the preparatory SELA meeting in Caracas, by Alberto Martinez, no place or date given -- recorded]

[Text] [Martinez] Morales, we would like to know what basic issues will be discussed at this meeting to prepare the 12th SELA council, which will be held in Caracas.

[Morales] This is a very important meeting and it has begun with a great deal of activity. In the first place, I want to point to the speech made by Sebastian Alegrett, the permanent secretary of the SELA, at the inauguration ceremonies. He said -- and I believe that it is important to stress what he said -- that our region is experiencing very complex and difficult times. He added that in addition to the unresolved debt problem, we have the protectionist avalanche that is being generated in the large worldwide economic centers, which is deeply affecting the Latin American countries and the members of SELA.

Alegrett's word established the atmosphere of the meeting to prepare the next SELA ministerial-level council, which is to take place next October in Lima [as heard]. The topic of protectionism is one of the most controversial and important to all of the Latin American region because of the negative effects it has had on our economies, especially the protectionist measures the United States recently adopted. These measures affect our sugar, cereal, and steel exports at one of the most difficult moments for our region. Another issue that has caused displeasure at the meeting is the recent statement by the [words indistinct] that Peru has suffered attacks from the IMF, which has declared that country ineligible to receive new credits. This is an issue I am certain will be discussed at the meeting, and action may be taken in that regard.

[Martinez] Morales, we would like to know if there is a consensus among SELA members regarding confronting the protectionist measures, especially those implemented by the United States.

[Morales] That is an issue still being debated. We believe we will soon be able to analyze the possibility of confronting these measures in a coordinated manner. However, we are still in the process of doing this, and I believe that the Lima meeting will result in the adoption of important decisions in this regard.

[Martinez] Have the GATT multilateral trade negotiations been discussed at this meeting?

[Morales] What we have discussed is the coordination the region should carry out to participate in the GATT negotiations with a united and consolidated position. This will be done within the next few months to unify our region's position.

[Martinez] Can you give a general evaluation of the development and results of this preparatory meeting?

[Morales] It seems to us that the meeting will end on a very positive note, a very encouraging note. Basically, I can say that there has been a spirit of unity, and there is an increasing awareness of the need to achieve the true integration of our region. That is why I said at the beginning that this issue, this concern caused by the protectionist measures basically conducted by the United States against our region, and the reaction to the IMF's actions against Peru have characterized the meeting. All of this may lead to very important decisions at the meeting next October.

NETHERLANDS ASKED TO INVESTIGATE ESPIONAGE

FL231149 Bonaire Trans World Radio in English 1130 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] The Dutch Government has been asked to make a thorough investigation into possible Libyan espionage activities in the Netherland Antilles. The request by the Liberal Party faction in the lower house of Parliament cites an American Government report which calls an organization in the Antilles, the Islamic Cause Society, a cover for Libyan espionage.

The report from the U.S. also says that Libya is developing other activities in other parts of the Caribbean, including Barbados and Suriname, and that the Islamic Cause Society is meant to be used to support guerrilla movements in the region.

PARLIAMENT MEMBER FEELS 'UNWANTED,' LEAVES NNP

[Excerpt] St Georges, Aug 23, CANA -- Member of Parliament Phinsely St Louis said today he quit the ruling New National Party (NNP) because he felt unwanted.

St Louis charged that there was a deliberate attempt by elements within the leadership of the NNP to keep him out of the decision-making process.

For the 20 months since we have won the elections, I have found a complete rejection of opportunities for me to be involved in the decision-making of the party, St Louis told CANA.

His remarks followed Thrusday night's announcement at a public meeting organised by the NNP in his constituency that he had decided to leave the party. The NNP won a landslide victory in the 1984 general elections.

St Louis is the second parliamentarian to quit the party within the last four months. His departure now leaves the NNP with a 13-3 majority in the lower house. [passage omitted]

ALFONSIN ANSWERS TASS ON NUCLEAR ARMS RACE

PY252137 Buenos Aires TELAM in Spanish 1201 GMT 25 Aug 86

[Text] Buenos Aires, 25 Aug (TELAM) -- Argentine President Raul Alfonsin has stated that the most imperative task of all states is to prevent the outbreak of a nuclear war and the only way to save the world from this threat is to eliminate nuclear weapons.

This was Alfonsin's answer to Yuriy Rublevskiy and Isidoro Gilbert, correspondents of the Soviet news agency TASS, who interviewed Alfonsin at the request of the Moscow daily PRAVDA to discern his opinion concerning the eradication of atomic arsenals in general and the 18 August decision by the Soviet Government to extend the moratorium on all nuclear tests until the end of the year in particular.

Alfonsin said: In our joint declaration of 22 May 1984 and in the New Delhi Declaration of 28 January 1985, we (the heads of government of the "Group of Six") stated that the tests, production, and deployment of nuclear weapons and their carriers must cease and a substantial reduction of nuclear forces must follow immediately.

This is the course of action that we propose to use to put an end to the nuclear arms race and to achieve nuclear disarmament, he added.

He continued: In this regard we have been notified of the Soviet Government's decision to extend the moratorium on nuclear tests, and we must express our satisfaction over this measure.

Alfonsin concluded by saying that to take this measure a step further we recently proposed in Mexico the establishment of a suitable verification mechanism, and offered to General Secretary Gorbachev and President Reagan to arrange a meeting of experts from our countries (of the Group of Six) with Soviet and U.S. experts.

DEPUTY FOREIGN MINISTER ON TRADE WITH USSR

PY222334 Buenos Aires Domestic Service in Spanish 1600 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] Deputy Foreign Minister Jorge Sabato has stated that the Soviet Union will continue to purchase Argentine grain.

Sabato made this comment shortly after he arrived in Argentina from Moscow, where he went to make preparations for the visit President Alfonsin will make to the Soviet Union in October 1986.

Sabato emphasized the importance of Alfonsin's trip, adding that the agricultural crisis and the drop in petroleum and gas prices have forced the Soviet Union to adopt emergency measures.

Nevertheless, Sabato felt that these measures do not affect medium-term trade with Argentina.

Sabato felt that the Soviet purchase of grain subsidized by the U.S. Government will not harm Soviet-Argentine trade, adding that Argentina might receive some compensation.

Meanwhile, (Badi Orlov), who runs the Soviet trade office in Buenos Aires, has stated that in 1986 sales to the Soviet Union totaled less than $200 million. Deals have been closed for $180 million, and I do not believe that his figure will be significantly increased, (Orlov) said.

UNDER SECRETARY DISCUSSES U.S. RELATIONS

PY252126 Buenos Aires TELAM in Spanish 1415 GMT 24 Aug 86

[Text] Cordoba, 24 Aug (TELAM) -- Raul Alconada Sempe, under secretary for Latin American affairs, has stated that the international policy of the government is not guided by biased ideas or dogmas. He added: Within this framework we have many points in common with the United States.

Speaking to the local daily LA VOZ DEL INTERIOR, Alconada Sempe recalled that President Alfonsin has said in Washington and recently at a meeting of political parties that Argentina is a Western country. This means that its philosophical and political values are Western. These include respect for the individual, freedom, human rights, ideological pluralism, and universal suffrage.

The government official continued that this does not imply, however, that Argentina accepts the policy of military alignment with either the Eastern or the Western blocs. He added that the current Argentine government, unlike past governments which sought supremacy in Latin America, seeks only to use its political, physical, and economic capabilities to further Latin American integration. Alconada Sempe indicated that a policy based on autonomous social and economic development and on sovereign international action is compatible with dialogue with the United States. He stressed that the current Argentine Government is the first in many years to maintain an excellent relationship with the United States, while preserving an independent foreign policy and remaining nonaligned.

He stated that there are differences of opinion on many issues with the United States. Basically these focus on the situation in Central America and the payment of the foreign debt. He said that in this regard Argentina actively defends its positions through the Cartagena Consensus and added: I do not believe that this is the kind of attitude that Washington prefers.

Alconada Sempe concluded by saying that this is the best kind of relationship because it means we are equals and that there is mutual respect. He added that this attitude has achieved something that had been lost for many years: a frank relationship and dialogue between the Argentine and the U.S. Governments.

MADRID DAILY INTERVIEWS PAZ ESTENSSORO

PM221230 Madrid ABC in Spanish 21 Aug 86 p 36-37

[Interview with Bolivian President Victor Paz Estenssoro by Alvaro Vargas Llosa in La Paz; date not given]

[Excerpts] [introductory passage omitted] [Vargas Llosa] What is the status of relations between your government and the Peruvian Government?

[Paz Estenssoro] Our relations are cordial. Our governments have democratic roots; we of the National Revolutionary Movement [MNR] are a party whose ideological roots owe much to the ideology of the American Revolutionary Popular Alliance [APRA]. Now of course we have an economic policy different from that implemented by the Peruvian Government, but this does not prevent our maintaining cordial relations.

[Vargas Llosa] Your dealings with the IMF are very different, and so are the ways in which you handle your debts. Bolivia has an understanding with the Club of Paris and is renegotiating its debts -- totaling some 1.4 billion dollars -- with private banks. It has also reached an agreement with the IMF. Let us talk first about the Club of Paris.

[Paz Estenssoro] We are going to seek favorable conditions. Our position is not to disown the debt; we acknowledge the debt, but we can in no way repay it on the original terms because they relate to a value of our export products on the international market that is no longer current. Bolivia's borrowing capacity when it contracted the debt was not the same as it is now. We are going to modify the repayment terms both of the principal and of the interest in accordance with the present situation.

[Vargas Llosa] You have recently been negotiating with the IMF and unofficially it seems that the IMF insisted on going beyond that: It wanted a sharp devaluation, a pay freeze -- contrary to the Bolivian Government's proposal to introduce a rise in June -- and a gas price hike. Did you accept or reject those conditions?

[Paz Estenssoro] The negotiations with the IMF were not very problematic because we have introduced a monetary and financial policy of reducing public spending and other measures imposed by Bolivia's economic situation. So, anticipating the IMF's conditions, we have set the management of our economy in order. Now the IMF has made further demands, but during the latest negotiations between the IMF and Bolivian delegates who traveled to Washington we succeeded in avoiding these demands.

[Vargas Llosa] What are the tradeoffs? What is the IMF giving Bolivia in return?

[Paz Estenssoro] The tradeoff is that it is providing us with an immediate 50 million dollar loan, for which a contract has been signed with the IMF. All it needs now is the approval of the governing body.

[Vargas Llosa] What are the aims of your economic policy?

[Paz Estenssoro] To halt the process of hyperinflation that the country was suffering. We have checked this inflationary trend. So we have now achieved this: For the past 19 weeks the inflation rate has been virtually zero. The objective has been achieved. Now we must consolidate our monetary stability.

[Vargas Llosa] Are you going to introduce price control?

[Paz Estenssoro] Absolutely not.

[Vargas Llosa] Do you believe that market prices can remain fixed under present circumstances? Can a stable exchange rate be maintained?

[Paz Estennssoro] Yes, precisely because we will now enjoy a better supply of foreign currency, better reserves, as a result of our agreement with the IMF, together with a range of foreign resources possible thanks to the accord with the IMF. Our monetary stability will be consolidated by these foreign currency resources. This signifies the complete attainment of an objective. However, at the same time we must reactivate the production apparatus.

[Vargas Llosa] Where will this foreign capital come from, apart from the 50 million dollar IMF loan and other further credits from the same body? Where will the investments come from?

[Paz Estenssoro] In the immediate terms we have credits primarily from multinational bodies. Also bilateral credits, and a number of investments in the hydrocarbons field are being negotiated.

[Vargas Llosa] But you have another very serious problem: the sharp reduction in prices of tin and oil -- two of the country's major sources of income.

[Paz Estenssoro] We are formulating our economic policy on the basis of satisfactory parameters as far as tin and oil prices are concerned. The reduction in prices disrupted our timetable but we have taken appropriate measures. As for mining, we believe that Bolivia will continue to be a mining country but we are diverting our activities from tin mining to other minerals -- platinum, lead, and gold, for instance. [passage omitted on general impact of agrarian reform]

[Vargas Llosa] One of the major obstacles to your policy has been -- and will remain -- the trade union movement. How do you intend to confront the unions, who in recent years have attained almost as much power as the government in Bolivia, and sometimes more?

[Pas Estenssoro] Yes, we have had, and still have, a problem with the trade unions -- sometimes because of violent demonstrations, sometimes because of the use of the right to strike. But in Bolivia it is not simply a matter of a trade union movement making demands that are excessive in relations to our economic capacity: Under the previous government the state's real power was diminished and dual powers were formed in the country, the trade union movement being one of these powers. So our confrontation with trade union power is not just a social and economic confrontation but a sharply political confrontation. Trade union leaders do not want to lose the influence they had in the management of the state, whereas we want to restore the power to the state.

[Vargas Llosa] Will there be a decentralization?

[Paz Estenssoro] Decentralization.... For instance, we are transferring a number of firms having to do with neither oil nor mining that the state owned within the Bolivian Development Corporation to individual development corporations -- glass manufacturing, sugar refineries, edible oils, and so forth.

[Vargas Llosa] There has recently been a lively political debate on your proposed tax reform. What does it entail?

[Paz Estenssoro] The situation in Bolivia was that a number of taxes were introduced without reference to real conditions, together with a number of taxes on specific items. The fact is that despite the extensiveness of fiscal legislation very little was collected. Now we have reduced everything to one general tax and six specific taxes. The former is a once-only measure to tax fixed assets. This will be settled once and for all. There may be prior debts but we are giving an opportunity through this single tax for pending contributory obligations to be settled. The remaining six taxes are on capital transfers.

[Vargas Llosa] How do you view the political outlook?

[Paz Estenssoro] Well, it is very difficult to make political forecasts in Bolivia because the national situation influences political developments. If there is an economic success there will be a particular option; if not, there will be another. But there is one factor that could have a major influence on the future political situation, and that is whether or not there is a candidate who can unite the MNR. It is rather similar to APRA: Haya was the unifying figure and after Haya it seemed as though they would split. But a new candidate emerged and won the elections, uniting the party.

[Vargas Llosa] Would you support...?

[Paz Estenssoro] I would not support anyone. I would preside over faultless elections. That is another of my aims -- to institutionalize elections, electoral power. Starting now we are going to prepare for an honest election, using electoral rolls and computers.

[Vargas Llosa] What about the armed forces? To what extent do they share your aim? Are they aware of the need to institutionalize democracy?

[Paz Estenssoro] Not at the moment. I do not know whether they will....

[Vargas Llosa] Do they now support you resolutely?

[Paz Estenssoro] The Armed Forces are now inseparable from the practice of democracy. But this is why I said that you cannot make political forecasts in Bolivia: You do not know what the state of mind of certain institutions will be in the future.

[Vargas Llosa] Let us talk about foreign policy. How do you view Central America? Do you regard Contadora as a solution?

[Paz Estenssoro] It is a difficult problem to resolve because it is a very sensitive area for the United States. They will view it on the basis of national interests. We believe that Contadora could be the road to a solution. We are opposed to any intervention.

[Vargas Llosa] What about Sandinism's domestic policy?

[Paz Estenssoro] I will not express an opinion on that because it is another nation. We ask them not to express opinions about Bolivia's internal situation. We had a very bad experience with the Villaroel government in 1946: It was not recognized for 6 months.

[Vargas Llosa] What about relations with Chile?

[Paz Estenssoro] They still exist. We have made a political overture to Chile in the belief that we must find -- no matter how -- a solution to the problem of Bolivia's access to the sea that will, of course, not harm Bolivia's interests.

[Vargas Llosa] Mr President, let us talk about drug trafficking. It is not only an internal but also an external problem. What kind of solution do you envisage?

[Paz Estenssoro] It is one of the most serious problems now facing us, not only because it affects our international relations but also because it is affecting our population through their consumption. The trouble is that it is a problem that entails vast sums of money and it will take large resources to tackle it. Until consumer countries realize that coordinated action and large resources are needed I doubt whether any lasting success can be achieved. We must also coordinate our efforts with the countries where coca leaves are cultivated. We are also going to eradicate excess areas of cultivation -- that is, areas not required for traditional consumption. We have already identified these areas. It is an action that we are coordinating with the peasants themselves. We are also going to attack drug trafficking, though we lack sufficient resources to act decisively. Third, we are going to mount anticonsumption campaigns.

LIMA LA REPUBLICA INTERVIEWS FOREIGN MINISTER

PY260234 Lima LA REPUBLICA in Spanish 10 Aug 86 pp 42, 43, 44

[Interview granted by Bolivian Foreign Minister Guillermo Bedregal to reporter Alberto Brun during a stopover by Bedregal en route to Bogota -- Lima, date not given]

[Excerpt] Brun: All the media are asking about the antidrug operation in which U.S. troops are participating, contrary -- I believe -- to what is established in the Constitution and to the wishes of the Congress. Is President Paz's administration so servile as to accept that much military, financial, and political "understanding" from Washington, even though it knows the operation was a disguised exercise for the invasion of Nicaragua?

Bedregal: Do you think the Bolivian Government and the Bolivian president are fools?

Brun: (I remain silent without malice. The minister expects and seems to be thinking an answer). I realize that you want me to explain myself by saying: "basically no." There are even great minds...

Bedregal: Therefore, if we are not fools -- and I thank you for agreeing that we are not -- the answer is very clear: The police operation was agreed to by Siles Zuazo in 1982. It was a negotiation in which the United States made no specific commitment. Last year, after the anti-inflationary shock, we proposed that the United States help fight drug trafficking. We demanded serious action, but not the destruction of the agricultural regions. The peasants are not criminals.

The criminal group is in the "industries." If the peasant finds a market, he sells to the highest-paying purchaser. This is the law of the capitalist market. Adam Smith taught us this.

In 1984 we signed agreements to fight drug trafficking through a police operation for which the executive branch did not need to ask permission. Why did you and the others not show your disapproval when we started the joint operation with the U.S. Army in Bolivian territory in March? Why did we ask permission from the Congress? We have an overwhelming majority there.

What happens is that people want to confuse the issue of our struggle. It is an operation against the force of $2 billion, of which $600 million apparently stays in Bolivia.

You are going to laugh. I am laughing, too. The U.S. budget to fight drug trafficking in Bolivia is great -- $3 million -- and the U.S. Government has spent $1.5 million. How about that.

Brun: I am aware of your great imagination. Have you -- the members of the executive branch -- planned a good antidrug trafficking political maneuver to: 1. Soften the hard U.S. position regarding the debt and... 2. Obtain $100 million to sustain Bolivia's financial bankruptcy?

Bedregal: No. $100, 200, 300 million. You reporters are in some ways historians and sometimes not very good ones. You are doomsdayers. You prejudge a policy with bad intentions and in my case you even make satanic predictions. You even see the evil painted on the wall.

Drug trafficking is now even hurting our own population; I am going to give a deeper meaning to your question, you mean that we are blackmailing the gringos to get more money from them.

No sir. The most important aspect of the government of President Paz is its great seriousness. Paz is not a scarecrow or an irresponsible person.

He is living in current times. As Martin Heidegger said: "In Der Welt Sein" (to be with the times in the world).

[Brun] (Bedregal does not engage in the snobbism of English phraseology because he has cultural and linguistic knowledge).

Brun: But you are in the center of drug trafficking.

Bedregal: That is not true. The traffickers are in the United States. That is where the center of drug traffickers are in the United States. That is where the center of drug trafficking is. Drug trafficking and terrorism have world connections and are the worst ills.

Brun: But I would like to reiterate: 6 helicopters, 1 Hercules, another aircraft -- I do not remember its name -- 170 soldiers. This is more than a police force, it is an expeditionary force.

Bedregal: (laughing) You are again being prophetic! Just wait until the antidrug operation is over, then I can comment on your suspicion. [passage omitted]

COB'S LECHIN EVALUATES COMIBOL, FSTMB PLANS

PY251641 La Paz La Red Panamericana in Spanish 1130 GMT 25 Aug 86

[Text] The Bolivian Labor Confederation [COB] views with sympathy and hope the mediation role being followed by the Catholic Church in the effort to solve the mining problem. COB Executive Secretary Juan Lechin Oquendo had this to say:

[Begin Lechin recording] We view the intervention of the church not only with much sympathy but with hope. Thus far, however, no results have been achieved. This, is just a hope we -- all the workers -- are harboring, taking into account the weight of the church, especially in Bolivia, where the people have always expressed their Catholic faith. [end recording]

Radio Panamericana asked Lechin: What is the Trade Union Federation of Bolivian Mineworkers [FSTMB] proposing to the government to overcome this problem?

[Begin Lechin recording] The FSTMB has proposed its emergency program because the rehabilitation program proposed by Comibol [Mining Corporation of Bolivia] is very poor. In the first place, the Comibol talks about the implementation of a program at a time when there are no comprehensive plans in Comibol, only outlines. Outlines are not plans. (Of course, after the government has forced to conduct studies through non-governmental experts, it realized that the so-called program for rehabilitating the corporation was unfeasible.)

Nevertheless, the government does not want to accept the FSTMB plan, which has been discussed with the president of the republic. He suspended the meeting and called a recess because he could not properly grasp all the goals raised in the COB emergency program in just one meeting.

Unfortunately, the president has forgotten he was the one who suspended the meeting with the idea of continuing the discussions tentatively in late August. [end recording]

In Lechins opinion, to transfer the Comibol enterprises to cooperatives means to denationalize the mining sector.

FPMR RELEASES DOCUMENT ON SECRET GALVIN MEETING

PY251930 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0750 GMT 25 Aug 86

[By Fernando Rueda]

[Text] Santiago, 25 Aug (EFE) -- According to a document the Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front (FPMR) claims was found on Colonel Mario Haeberle -- whom it kidnapped and released last week -- General Augusto Pinochet might end his career with an "honorable departure" by choosing asylum in a safe and quiet place somewhere in the United States.

This possibility, which at first glance is completely at odds with the conviction of the entire Chilean opposition that the Chilean president wants to perpetuate himself in power, apparently is one of the hypotheses currently being considered by the Reagan administration. Pinochet's "honorable departure" reportedly was even proposed to senior Chilean Armed Forces officers during a secret meeting held recently in Santiago by General John Galvin, the head of the U.S. Armed Forces Southern Command.

This statement is contained in a document that the militant FPMR has delivered to several foreign press agencies in Santiago. The PFMR claims Chilean Army Col Mario Haeberle had this document.

This information has been completely ignored by the Chilean Government which has not even felt it advisable to deny the allegation. However, the U.S. Embassy in Santiago immediately released a statement describing the report as "completely untrue."

According to the FPMR -- which the government considers the armed branch of the Communist Party -- the document is a transcription of a "secret" meeting held at the U.S. Embassy in Santiago. During the meeting -- which was not attended by U.S. Ambassador Harry Barnes -- Gen Galvin made a clear and straightforward report on what Washington believes is the true Chilean situation and its short-term future. According to the report released to the foreign press agencies, those who heard Galvin's report were Army Generals Santiago Sinclair and Alejandro Medina, Vice Admiral German Guesalaga, and Brigadier General Carolos Desgroux, the top leaders of the Chilean Armed Forces after the Army, Navy, and Air Force commanders.

Gen Galvin reportedly stated that the U.S. Government noticed a gradual decline in the efficiency and a loss of command authority among Chilean officiers. In addition, Washington has noticed that during his 13 years in power, Pinochet has been unable to achieve his goal of ending communism. In Gen Galvin's opinion, the strong growth of the oppposition and the lack of appropriate correction by the government are favorable to communism and pose a clear threat both for Chile and for the United States.

Thus, according to the report supplied by the FPMR, the Southern Command reportedly is reviewing two possible hypotheses: first the honorable departure of Gen Pinochet, who would be received as a guest by the U.S. Government; or second, an escalation of the current situation into a civil war in which communism would take advantage of the break in discipline and fighting spirit among the Chilean troops.

According to Gen Galvin, President Reagan reportedly favors the first alternative -- but one must be prepared for all situations that may arise -- for which reason the U.S. Government has Rapid Deployment Force combat units in Central America, Paraguay, and Bolivia to support loyal forces and strengthen friendly governments.

In addition to a formal denial by the U.S. Embassy in Chile on the alleged secret meeting between Gen Galvin and the senior Chilean officers, other diplomatic circles have regarded the information with much [words indistinct].

ARMED FORCES REASSERT SUPPORT FOR PINOCHET

PY222022 Santiago Domestic Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Relay from Government House by Rosa Sanchez on 22 August]

[Excerpts] The full government, members of the Government Junta, Cabinet members, advisers and Chilean authorities today extended their cordial greetings and loyal support for President Augusto Pinochet on the occasion of his 13th anniversary as Chilean Army commander. Separate ceremonies for each group were held in different rooms of La Moneda Government House. [passage omitted]

At Government House, Pinochet went to a room where he was being awaited by Armed Forces officers, generals, admirals, and the general director of investigations. During the ceremony, Carabineros Deputy Director General Oscar Torres delivered a speech in which he extended the appropriate congratulations and noted the importance of the anniversary being commemorated. He said the task that has been carried out in the past few years will be remembered throughout history despite the fact some would like to vainly overlook it. [passage omitted] Gen Torres concluded his speech by reasserting to the chief of state that all future actions carried out by his government will have their whole-hearted support.

General Pinochet answered them in a very cordial manner saying the Armed Forces have already made the firm decision to be successful in the historic task with which the fatherland has entrusted them. He also noted that we are facing a difficult period in which we are fighting an enemy that uses all types of tricks.

[Begin Pinochet recording] We must understand that we are confronting a conflict in which we are not only combating against ideas but also against an enemy that resorts to all types of tricks, including biased information, lies, and treacherous attitudes, all of which are complemented by the most sophisticated terrorist techniques.

Only by acting vigorously and decisively, and by dedicating ourselves to our cause shall we be able to eradicate the communist threat looming over our fatherland. I am certain that each one of you will fulfill your commitment to Chile by using all your abilities to achieve a definitive victory over the enemies of this noble nation. [end recording]

After these greetings, Pinochet met at the Carrera Room with members of the government junta. Admiral Jose Toribio Merino spoke for junta members. In his brief speech, Merino told President Pinochet there is nothing more pleasant for the legislative branch [the Government Junta] than to reassert that the president's present and future actions are safeguarded by a group of men, who like himself, once gave their solemn oath to defend the fatherland above all things. He said that this is our intention and this is the destiny all five of us share.

In his response, Pinochet noted that these greetings -- particularly at a time like this -- represent the strong unity of all Armed Forces commanders, who have the lofty goal of establishing a solid and stable democracy in the country.

Later, Pinochet was greeted by the members of the Cabinet who met in the O'Higgins Room. Speaking in the name of all ministers, Interior Minister Ricardo Garcia noted the importance of the date being commemorated and added that Pinochet's Government has used the peace that has prevailed in the country to achieve an integral development serving as the basis of true institutionality. He added that although we may be experiencing what can be described as difficult times, there will always be people who are not deaf or blind and who will make correct decisions. [recorded passage omitted]

In his response Pinochet noted that the task undertaken 13 years ago was not free from sacrifices, but through it we were able to achieve social, institutional, and economic development for the Chilean people. He said you can be certain that my only interest is to serve the fatherland and the Army and to be loyal to our best traditions and values. [passage omitted]

The following are details of the ceremony that is now taking place at the military school. This ceremony is being presided over by the president who is being honored on his 13th anniversary as Army commander.

[Begin Relay] President Augusto Pinochet was decorated with the Collar of Peace, which was granted to him by the Army in honor of his 13th anniversary as Army commander for the role he played in the friendship treaty with Argentina. He was decorated by Army Deputy Commander General Santiago Sinclair. [passage omitted]

In his speech, Gen Sinclair said that once again the Chilean Army is expressing its unconditional support for its commander, and that it will not surrender in its struggle against Marxism-Leninism. [passage omitted] [end relay]

NEW SOCIALIST PARTY FOUNDED; WILL SEEK UNITY

PY260133 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1927 GMT 24 Aug 86

[By Luis S. Saavedra]

[Text] Santiago, 24 Aug (EFE) -- The Chilean Authentic Socialist Party was founded today amid criticism directed at the two other main factions of the Chilean Socialist Party. However, the new party wants to "attain the unity of the socialists."

The secretary general of the party, Juan Carlos Moraga, held a press conference for local journalists and harshly attacked the two other factions (headed by Nunez and Almeyda), which are the major factions of the Chilean Socialist Party. According to Moraga, one of the first tasks of the new socialist party will be to "seek the unity of all Chilean socialists and to take popular support away from the communists, as has happened in the past."

The creation of the new party was agreed upon at a convention of top leaders of the Socialist Front, and dissidents of Socialist Party factions led by Ricardo Nunez and Clodomiro Almeyda and of Manuel Madujano's historic socialism.

Moraga said Almeyda's socialism -- which claims to belong to the Marxist left along with the Communist Party (PC) within the Popular and Democratic Movement (MDP) -- "has lost its identity by living in the shadow of communism." Moraga added: "This faction has foresaken the tradition of the party by supporting the strategy of the PC, and by claiming to be Marxist-Leninist it has entered the Soviet sphere of influence."

As far as Moraga is concerned, by joining the Democratic Alliance [AD] (a coalition in which the Christian Democratic Party has supremacy), Nunez' faction "has mortgaged its future and has become a satellite of a policy which -- in the final analysis -- follows the directives of the U.S. Department of State and seeks to maintain the capitalist system in Chile."

The secretary general of the new Authentic Socialist Party stressed that his group "wants to attain power, is anti-imperialist, humanist and democratic, and proposes to use Marxism only as a method for interpreting history."

Moraga feels that "the communists are the only ones who work with the grassroots because the top and mid-level leaders of the other political parties are too busy drawing up political proposals." Moraga emphasized that the Authentic Socialist Party proposes to advocate seven urgent initiatives. He mentioned, among other things, the need to "support the National Accord for the Transition to Full Democracy," signed by 11 opposition parties, "the creation of a national congress before the arrival of Pope John Paul II scheduled for April 1987," and the "backing of constitutional reform that would enable direct elections for president of the nation."

Moraga explained that the other agreements reached at the unity-seeking congress of socialists were the "support for the struggle for the feedom of political prisoners and for the position of the Catholic Church and of Cardinal Juan Francisco Fresna."

The socialist party expressly condemned the use of any kind of violence for political purposes.

CEPEDA ULLOA GIVES ASSURANCE TO OPPOSITION

PA250408 Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 20 Aug 86 pp 1-A, 2-A

[By Jesus Medina S.]

[Excerpts] Last night the national government said that there are statutes that guarantee the opposition their rights, which are part of the Constitution and laws, and drew away from the pessimism that embraces the Conservatives regarding the future of the new political stage which has begun here.

In his debut in the chamber plenary, Government Minister Fernando Cepeda Ulloa rejected the theory that President Virgilio Barco had "wiped out the National Front by a simple stroke of his pen," and stated that this system has gradually been dismantled.

Cepeda also defended the president's right to name his ministers and governors, and reiterated that the government will respect the rights of people and the security to be afforded to the guerrillas' lives to allow them to reenter society.

Minister Cepeda Ulloa's speech was well-received among opposition representatives. He noted that the government will give respect to minorities for carrying out the opposition which they have declared against the Liberal administration.

In a clear exposition, Cepeda Ulloa outlined the government's attitude toward the opposition and recalled that President Barco had adhered to the national Constitution when he named three Conservative ministers, however the directors of that party did not allow their members to participate in the administration.

Cepeda Ulloa said: "President Barco's promise is serious, and he will keep his word in all aspects, but only if opposition is carried out with mutual respect and within legal parameters." He also said that the administration is not going "to become a booty for the winning forces, but government officials' work stability will be respected without considering political criteria, and to the contrary, it will be based on personal qualifications and professional capacity."

Cepeda Ulloa had been summoned by Conservative Representative Jaime Arias Ramirez, and answered questions put to him by Congressmen Fabio Valancia Cossio, Dario Ordonez Ortega, Elvira Cuervo de Jaramilo, Jorge Eliseo Cabrera Caicedo, and Braulio Herrera, militant of the Patriotic Union, who received his credentials last night. [passage omitted]

In replying to Valencia Cossio, Cepeda Ulloa said that he had the impression that the Conservative Party has not been able to agree on whether President Barco's government is "arrogant, imperial, or impotent," adding that "none of those descriptions apply, as the government respects the citizens' opposition."

Cepeda Ulloa said that President Barco believes that harmony should exist within the Liberal Party, but that he also feels it is necessary to have a strong, monolithic Conservative Party in the opposition. He added that the Patriotic Union's weak minority [minoria debil] will be respected.

In a firm tone, Cepeda Ulloa stressed that peace can be achieved with social transformations and with understanding, adding that signing peace agreements would be purposeless unless political channels are opened so citizens may have a means of protest.

"This administration does not see the peace process as a one man task, as a selfish attitude that excludes all the national forces from the dialogue," Cepeda Ulloa said. He added that the government is committed to reconstruction and reconciliation and the past accomplishments will be consolidated, thus recognizing the achievements of the Betancur administration.

The peace process will be coordinated with social and political programs aimed at promoting a reconstruction of the areas affected by violence. The reconciliation task is considered an enterprise for achieving peace, which will truly reflect a new concept of civic mindedness.

Cepeda Ulloa said emphatically that another requirement for peace is the proper administration of justice which, unfortunately, was neglected by Belisario Betancur's administration. [passage omitted]

Communist representative Braulio Herrera said that the Patriotic Union and the FARC are committed to restoring peace in Colombia, stressing that "the presence of former FARC fighters in the congress shows their desire to achieve national reconciliation."

Herrera called for the abrogation of Article 120 of the Constitution and for the lifting of the state of siege, as well as the elimination of the "sinister death squads that are currently killing Colombians in various parts of the country." [passage omitted]

Cepeda Ulloa said the government will guarantee the mechanisms that will enable the opposition to fulfill its role. He invited the political parties to collaborate in defining the rules of the game and the conditions that should prevail during this new phase, which begins with the dismantling [desmonte] of the National Front.

"The government will be respectful and tolerant of the opposition, will encourage them, and not manipulate the parties to undermine their position," Cepeda Ulloa stressed.

He added that a strong government requires a strong opposition, because the success of the Liberal administration depends largely on the opposition's behavior. "Therefore, the government wants to have a loyal, mature, honest, and even strong opposition, but within a legal framework. The opposition should be well-informed to maintain mutual respect, Cepeda Ulloa said. [passage omitted]

POLICE CAPTURE 'DRUG TRAFFICKER' SOUGHT BY U.S.

PA251943 Bogota Cadena Radial Super in Spanish 1730 GMT 24 Aug 86

[Text] Bogota -- the National Police identified a drug trafficker captured last night in the northern area of the city as Victor Eduardo Mera Mosquera. He is being intensely sought by U.S. authorities, having escaped from a New York jail.

When the well-known criminal was captured, he was posing as Ivan Gullermo Rodriqez Uribe. Mera, who is linked with the organization of hood Severo Escobar, was born in Bogota on 29 August 1953; he will mark his 33th birthday next Friday in jails of the Administrative Department of Security where he will be turned over by the F-2 [secret police] and the (DIJIN) in the next few hours.

PESO DEVALUATION ANNOUNCED FOR 26 AUGUST

[Excerpts] [Passage omitted] As of next Tuesday, one U.S. dollar will cost Colombians 200 pesos. U.S. currency becomes stronger, while ours is devaluing. [passage omitted]

In general, devaluations stimulate exports because our products are being sold in foreign markets. It is an incentive for foreign investors; capital that had left the country returns, and international reserves are increased. However, a devaluation is very negative for those earning salaries. [passage omitted]

The new administration has announced it will maintain the peso competitive against the dollar. This can only be achieved through a permanent devaluation.

CREATION OF NEW GUERRILLA GROUP ANNOUNCED

PA250214 Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 20 Aug 86 p 3-A

[By Pablo Guarin]

[Text] Puerto Boyaca, 19 Aug -- A new guerrilla alliance set down roots in middle Magdalena and in its first appearance blocked the Bogota-Medellin expressway, murdered a retired police officer, and blew up three pylons.

The new alliance is known as the Trilateral Guerrillas [Trilateral Guerrillera] and is comprised of the National Liberation Army, the Free Fatherland, and the Revolutionary Workers Party, which are also members of the National Guerrilla Coordinating Board.

The emergence of this group has the peasants alarmed, as they have dealt with FARC activities for 20 years.

The subversive elements have been distributing a well-edited, four-color booklet, in which they blame Belisario Betancur's government for the failure of the peace and democratic opening policy and practically declare war on the government of Virgilio Barco, as according to them it is a continuation of repression and misery for the people.

They invite the youths to join and to change power in order to take over.

In another turn of events there was a demonstration yesterday at Las Mercedes, Puerto Triunfo, Antioquia, where a spokesman for the leaders of middle Magdalena announced their decision to back the National Army: They declared themselves to be willing to supply all the information that would lead to the expulsion of the subversives from the region.

Nelson Lesmes Legizamon, president of the Middle Magdalena Peasants and Cattlemen Association, said he is sure those who are up in arms are FARC members who change names to pretend they are keeping to the truce.

'No Proof' of Peruvian Members

PA220417 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0045 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] Medellin, Colombia, 21 Aug (EFE) -- Colombian military forces have no proof that the Peruvian "Shining Path" group is part of the newly-formed "Trilateral Guerrilla Force" [trilateral guerrilera] in a northeastern region of the country.

Today, General Manuel Jaime Guerrero Paz, Armed Forces Commander-in-Chief of Military Forces said in Medellin: "We do not have that evidence."

On members of the Shining Path and rebels of other nationalities being in other zones of Colombia, the general said that there is evidence "of the presence of Peruvians in the so-called America Battalion in the southwestern part of the country."

The "America Battalion" is a group of insurgents comprising rebels from Colombia, Peru, Ecuador, Venezuela, Panama, and Nicaragua, who are fighting the regular Army in the mountains of the southeast of the country.

FARC GUERRILLAS STEAL TELEPHONE EXCHANGE

PA250426 Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 19 Aug 86 p 3-A

[By Jairo Cala Otero]

[Text] Bucaramanga, 18 Aug -- Military sources have reported that a FARC cell of the 10th Front stole a complete telephone exchange 2 weeks ago from Telecom which operated at Puente Sogamoso and linked that city with Barrancabermeja.

The source added that: "It is very costly equipment, but the most serious factor is the possibility that the guerrilla organization can now communicate with any part of the country, and worse yet, the danger that certain conversations can be overheard."

The theft of the equipment had been kept a secret, but became known during the investigation being carried out because of a recent ambush of a military convoy which left seven graduating soldiers dead.

IAPA, AIR DECLARATION ON FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

PA242349 Paris AFP in Spanish 2250 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] Quito, 23 Aug (AFP) -- Representatives of the IAPA and the International Radio Broadcasting Association (AIR), today issued an appeal for respect of freedom of expression in Chile, Paraguay, and Nicaragua; and condemned the violation of the people's freedom of expression in Cuba, it was reported here by the official media.

The IAPA declaration was issued during a seminar on humanitarian international law and the news media in Latin America, which was organized here by the International Red Cross this week.

The document was signed by Jaime Mantilla, regional vice president of the regional committee for freedom of press and Hector Amengual, AIR director.

The declaration states that human rights include "freedom of expression and information," and this is considered "the cornerstone for its enforcement and respect to benefit societies and enforce a real freedom."

The document states its concern for the situation being experienced by the news media in Chile. Referring to Paraguay, it also demands the reopening of "the newspaper ABC-COLOR, and an end to the harassment against Radio Nanduti, as well as the full enforcement of freedom of expression for all the media."

Likewise, the document demands the reopening of the newspaper LA PRENSA in Managua, and condemns the confiscation of radio and television stations in Nicaragua.

Similarly, it condemns the "prevailing situation" in Cuba concerning the full suppression of the people's right to freedom of thought, as well as the imprisonment of journalists for the last 20 years.

Furthermore, it deplores the fact "that the limitations to the freedom of expression still prevail in Haiti."

[Text] This morning militants of the so-called Alfaro Lives group kidnapped well-known newsmen to provide them with details of the rescue of their companero Leonardo Vera Vitera which took place last Tuesday at the Eugenio Espejo Hospital.

Guerrilla Vera Vitera, Nicolas Cerezo, the group's captain, and members of the America Battalion were present at this meeting. Cerezo said that the operation at the hospital was out of his control because the death of the three policemen could not be prevented. They also said their objective is not to shed innocent blood and that actions conducted in the future will be aimed at freeing companeros from jails throughout the country.

FOREIGN MINISTER DEPARTS FOR NONALIGNED SUMMIT

PY252225 Paris AFP in Spanish 1832 GMT 24 Aug 86

[Text] Lima, 24 Aug (AFP) -- Peruvian Foreign Minister Allan Wagner left at midnight on 23 August for Harare, Zimbabwe, where he will participate in a meeting of the Nonaligned Movement. At this meeting Wagner will seek to strengthen the drive for unity of the Third World countries.

Meanwhile, President Alan Garcia is working on the speech he will make at the opening of the meeting on 1 September before his counterparts and top representatives of the underdeveloped world. The Peruvian Congress has already authorized Garcia's trip.

The Peruvian foreign minister, who left for Zimbabwe with an entourage of 14 officials, is traveling via New York and London. His objective is to advocate political dialogue on the foreign debt issue, which he said is one of the most important and serious problems as far as the Third World is concerned. Allan Wagner said that the idea is to hold talks aimed at arriving at a broad and straightforward position on this issue and to submit it for discussion at the United Nations.

He said that at the Nonaligned Meeting, Peru will propose a meeting to discuss monetary and financial matters, seeking to amend the current unfair economic order.

Wagner stated that one must become aware of the current serious problems, such as the dangerous policies of the United States and the Soviet Union of making decisions without taking other countries into account. He also warned that the UN Security Council's role is greatly reduced by the veto of the five big powers, and this leads to a harmful paralysis of the UN decisionmaking process.

Speaking about the Central American situation, Wagner said that at the Nonaligned Meeting Peru will call for support for the peace initiatives of the Contadora Group and the Contadora Support Group.

President Alan Garcia is scheduled to depart Lima on 30 August at the head of a delegation. The number of members of this delegation is not yet known. According to government sources it is quite possible that at the meeting, Garcia will propose the integration of all underdeveloped nations to stand up to the International Monetary Fund.

Thus, we will fully participate in all GATT activities, including September's ministerial meeting in Punta del Este in Uruguay.

Mexico will get all the tariff concessions the member nations have negotiated since the GATT went into force in 1948 [date as heard]. Our country will be entitled to receive benefits due to its status as a developing nation. In addition, Mexico has taken these steps without compromising its sovereignty over natural resources and over the handling of its agriculture. In exchange, Mexico will grant tariff concessions to 373 actions [acciones] or types of products.

The country's entry into the GATT, which was subject to Senate approval, comes after a process that included consultations with the senate, the president's instructions for the negotiations, and the approval by the GATT's contracting parties.

FIRM REPORTS INCREASE IN FOREIGN INVESTMENTS

PA221644 Mexico City EXCELSIOR in Spanish 18 Aug 86 pp 1, 18-A, 19-A

[By Jaime Contreras Salcedo]

[Excerpts] A report of the Allen J. Lloyd Brokerage House states that the growth rate of foreign investment in Mexico has increased in the past 2 years, making evident that foreign investors have confidence in the country's future. The report indicates that in the first 7 months of the year, projects with more than $800 million in foreign capital have been authorized.

If this trend continues, the Lloyd analysts note, the amount invested in Mexico in 1986 could well surpass $2 billion because the Commerce Secretariat (head of the sector in the National Commission on Foreign Investments) is studying more than 200 projects. The decisions on these will be issued rapidly in line with presidential instructions.

In its analysis of the foreign investments, the brokerage house states that in July a "very beneficial" growth in foreign investment was recorded in diversified industrial areas which in part compensated for the negative effects of the multimillion dollar loss from the drop in the international petroleum prices and the payment of the foreign debt service and capital. [passage omitted]

With the exception of the chemical sector, which reports a drop of a little over 8 percent in investments, such sectors as commerce, food, industry, and manufacturing experienced increases of from 52.63 to 234.36 percent in investments.

Allen J. Lloyd Brokerage, which is headquartered in Guadalajara, said that 2 years ago the U.S. firms already established in Mexico invested a total of $750 million. The plans of those same companies for 1986 are for $1.56 billion, 108 percent higher than in the previous period. [passage omitted]

U.S. TREATY VIOLATIONS WILL BE PRESENTED IN HARARE

PA251540 Panama City EL SIGLO in Spanish 25 Aug 86 pp 1, 30

[By Gilberto Gomez]

[Text] Legislator Pedro Brin Martinez, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Panamanian National Assembly, has disclosed that during the nonaligned summit meeting Panama will denounce the United States for its constant violations of the Torrijos-Carter Treaties.

The legislator said that in Harare, Zimbabwe, "we are going to denounce before the whole world" U.S. violations of the commitments made in September 1977.

Brin Martinez said that with this action "we are going to renew our struggle at an international level" during the nonaligned summit meeting to be held from 1 to 7 September.

According to the treaties, the United States must give Panama the surplus income from the Canal's operations. In recent years, the surplus has risen to $70 million, but the Panamanian national treasury has not received that income.

The United States has legal dispositions which violate the treaties, such as Law 97-70, or the "Murphy law," passed by the U.S. Congress in 1979, giving the U.S. President and the secretary of defense powers greater than those established by the treaties which the two countries signed.

"The United States knows that by depriving us of income from the ocean passageway it is making us more dependent," the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee said.

The legislator interprets the failure to pay Panama as a neocolonialist action. He said: "If they do not pressure us with direct colonialism, or with the direct intervention of troops, they intervene with something called economic neocolonialism or economic pressure."

PCC BOARD CHAIRMAN LETTER ON MONEY 'ARROGANT'

[Text] Dr Carlos Ozores, Panamanian representative to the Panama Canal Commission [PCC] Board, has referred to the note sent by Victor Cianelli, chairman of the board, regarding Panama's request for the payment of owed sums.

[Begin Ozores recording] We can describe the letter as arrogant. In the letter that we sent him, we mentioned, among other things, the Panamanian Government's well-founded insistence in stating that the Canal Commission owes the national treasury $54 million. They insist this is not correct, and we have told them that in the next board of directors meeting we will show our U.S. counterparts our reasons for this assertion on the commission's debt to the national treasury. ARIAS ACCUSES NICARAGUA OF DISRESPECT FOR ICJ

[Text] President Oscar Arias has said that Nicaragua's accusation shows a lack of respect for the world's highest court of justice. He said this while participating at midday yesterday at the third National University graduation at the National Theater.

President Arias Sanchez said that Costa Rica will win at the International Court of Justice [ICJ] only because the truth always triumphs. He recalled that a group of attorneys will defend the fatherland's honor in the name of a virtuous and virile people. Arias expressed gratitude for the honorary doctorate conferred on him by the National University, which also honors the people of Costa Rica.

ARIAS ON U.S. DISTRIBUTION OF $300 MILLION

PA251541 San Jose Radio Reloj in Spanish 1200 GMT 25 Aug 86

[Text] A total of $300 million will be distributed among the Central American countries, but the U.S. Congress has not decided how to distribute it. That decision will actually be up to the U.S. Department of State. President Oscar Arias Sanchez made these remarks in commenting on a meeting he (?had) with members of the U.S. Congress.

Congressman Mike Edwards [title and name as heard] of California was not clear on the challenge that Central America, particularly Costa Rica, is facing. As I have said before, Costa Rica is the first country that has borders with a Marxist nation and does not have an army, President Arias said. He added: All the countries flanked by neighbors upholding the Marxist-Leninist ideology have alliances with [countries that have] huge armies, a great deal of security, and a strong defense. Costa Rica is the exception. The only weapon we possess is proving to the world that Costa Rican democracy can defeat underdevelopment and poverty, and to do this we need solidarity. There are two alternatives in negotiating our foreign debt. One is to negotiate it in such a way that we will pay less than we do now. The other is to increase capital revenue. This implies receiving more assistance from friendly nations. It is not known how the $300 million will be distributed, President Arias said in closing.

GOVERNMENT DENIES ENTRY TO 4 EUROPEAN VOLUNTEERS

PA240317 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 2046 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] Official sources reported today that the Security Ministry yesterday prevented the entry into Costa Rica of four Europeans who were volunteer workers in Nicaragua. The four European volunteers tried to enter Costa Rican territory at the Penas Blancas border post.

Government Minister Hernan Garron Salazar said that his office made that decision because he considered the presence of the Europeans in the country "harmful" and "because of the way they tried to enter, without respect for established rules." Garron Salazar identified the volunteers as Nerone Therri Pol, 24, (Belgian); Ernest Pensinger, 33, (Swiss); and Spaniards Alberto Curri, 24, and Luz Pilar Lopez, 39. The Costa Rican public security minister said that although the four volunteers had been warned that they could not enter Costa Rica as tourists, as they wanted, they tried to enter by force.

CASTILLO, REY PRENDES ON MEXICO MEETING

PA260247 San Salvador Canal Doce Television in Spanish 1900 GMT 25 Aug 86

[Text] The government delegation that attended a private meeting with FMLN-FDR representatives today reported that Sesori, in San Miguel Department, has been confirmed as the site for the third dialogue meeting on 19 September. The two delegations allowed for the possibility of changing, by common consent, the place and date agreed upon. A new private meeting will be held during the first fortnight of September to conclude the remaining aspects, such as security, mobilization, communications, logistics, and alternatives to implement part of the La Palma joint communique dealing with the development of mechanisms to have all national sectors participate in the search for peace.

[Begin recording] [Rodolfo Castillo Claramount, vice president and foreign minister] During its first stage, we, the government delegates, listened to their proposals. We were were informed about the views included in their proposals. We considered those proposals, and we presented our own on Friday. On the same day and after they requested two recesses to make consultations with San Salvador over the telephone, the final decision was made. This decision is the one that you are familiar with and that is described in the document.

[Julio Adolfo Rey Prendes, minister of culture and communications] Curiously enough, they speak about observers and say that they would like some people to be present at the meeting. But as soon as the three of us who attended the meeting arrived -- Ricardo Soriano, vice president of UNOC [National Peasant-Worker Unity], and us -- they objected to the presence of Soriano. They did not want Soriano in the meeting and argued that he was a stranger to the meeting. There is some contradiction. In public they mention the need for observers, yet they tried to prevent the presence of a workers' representative. We felt that, in addition to the presidential delegates, we could take representatives of other forces to this meeting. We agree somewhat that they can invite the UNTS [National Union of Salvadoran Workers] to the meeting as part of their delegation. This, however, was not agreed upon. In other words, we only talked, and this remained pending for the next meeting. I only wanted to clarify these points that seemed important to me. [end recording]

FDR's Ungo Views Talks

PA252131 San Salvador Radio Cadena YSU in Spanish 1800 GMT 25 Aug 86

[Report on interview with FDR President Guillermo Ungo by Carlos Marquez; date and place not given]

[Text] The new dialogue meeting to be held on 19 September in Sesori has triggered different reactions within the various Salvadoran sectors.

Government spokesmen have described the agreements reached in Mexico as a positive step. Meanwhile, the rebels have called on the people of Sesori to create conditions to facilitate the meeting. This morning FDR President Guillermo Manuel Ungo evaluated the meeting in Mexico as follows:

[Begin recording] [Ungo] I feel that the preparatory meeting to agree on specific, operational aspects for the third dialogue meeting was positive. I believe that we have made progress and that we should be satisfied in that regard. The selection of the site reconciles the position of the two parties, as it is located in the eastern region, as requested by Duarte's government, and Sesori was one of the sites proposed by us. So in this respect we believe that the interests of the two sides have been taken into consideration. As for the date, it is still tentative, as it will depend on other factors that are more important and [word indistinct] concerning the dialogue, and therefore it could be changed by mutual agreement, as very important matters are still pending for which we have agreed to hold a second preparatory meeting during the first 2 weeks of December [month as heard]. From the results of that preparatory meeting it will be determined whether the date selected -- 19 September, which was also proposed by us -- will be changed.

Regrettably, although the government sent a high-level delegation and although we met for 3 days, there were substantial and important operational points on which we reached no agreement and on which the government has not clarified its position. The first of these points is the agenda, as there is no point in setting up a meeting and deciding on the place and date without knowing the purpose of the meeting, or what will be discussed. Another important point on which no agreement was reached concerns security aspects, which depend to a large extent on the selected site. Other pending matters are communications, press, access to the meeting by the press and the journalists, and also mobilization. There is a point that remained in euphemistic language, which in reality concerns the participation in the meeting of the organized social sectors as observers. For example, a sector accompanied...[changes thought] In other words the FNOC [words indistinct] accompanied President Duarte's delegation.

There are, however, other social, professional, cultural, and political organizations that want to participate in the dialogue as observers. This stems from the La Palma efforts. Their participation has not yet been decided upon. Summing up, we could say that the Mexico meeting served to reach important accords, although other, also important accords must be reached to determine the coming meeting. We hope this meeting will be held on the date set, 19 September.

[Marquez] In view of the lack of an agenda, the people do not know the nature of the points to be discussed. Nevertheless, the government delegation that attended the Mexico meeting said during a news conference that it will propose the incorporation of rebels into the democratic process and the humanization of the conflict. What can you tell us about this proposal by the government delegation?

[Ungo] Unfortunately, they said this during a news conference and failed to mention it during the 3 days of the meeting. They did not want to consider this point. Should this be their posture, we also have our own proposal. All this could be included in the agenda: their proposal and ours. We agree that the humanization of the war can be included in the agenda. I view this as positive.

[Marquez] Little has been said about security aspects. The guerrillas now enforce a traffic and transportation stoppage. If Sesori remains the site for the meeting, it would be necessary for workers to restore service in the locality. What can you tell us about this?

[Ungo] As for the security, we have included a truce in the topics to be discussed. Our posture about this has been clear and positive. The government has adopted a negative stance. As of late, it has tried to (?so often) this negative stance a little. In a news conference in Mexico City they said they did not like the word [words indistinct]. Their position, however, was a little flexible. I would say that some near agreements occurred in Mexico City, some of them positive. No accords were reached, yet I would not be pessimistic about this. I feel it is fundamental to cease hostilities in the area of the meeting. The government will have to yield on this. I would say the government's position in Mexico about this was favorable, although no accord was reached.

[Marquez] Finally, Dr Ungo felt that the silent majority has already begun to speak up in the country because they regard dialogue as the only way to peace in El Salvador. [end recording]

CLANDESTINE RADIO VIEWS ACCORDS FOR MORE TALKS

PA250351 (Clandestine) Radio Venceremos in Spanish to El Salvador 0000 GMT 25 Aug 86

[Station commentary]

[Text] The preparatory meeting for the third round of talks held in Mexico City elicited strong national and international interest. This shows the importance of the peace question in El Salvador. Apart from the meeting's circumstances and the fact that it lasted longer than planned, the discussions [words indistinct] two things were obvious. One, the government's quote high level unquote delegation did not have the power to make decisions. This forced our delegates to spend most of their time waiting for the government delegation to consult with Napoleon Duarte. In turn, we suppose that he also had to consult with someone. Two, and the most important. For Duarte, the third dialogue meeting is not more important than the need to get more weapons for the war against the people. The meeting had hardly begun when Duarte hastened to say that his delegation was authorized to discuss only mechanical matters. This is to say, the delegation had no power to discuss anything about guaranteeing adequate security conditions for those participating in the meeting; to discuss anything about the participation of the most varied social and political sectors of the country in the meeting; or about the handling of the mechanisms to keep our people informed on the course of the meeting. Under these circumstances, the results of this preparatory meeting have been positive but limited. As we have reported to our people, already the government delegation accepted our two proposals on the place and date for this dialogue. In view of Duarte's adamant insistence that the meeting be held in the country's east because he is afraid the people will stage gatherings, and in view of his refusal to confront our stance in the eyes of all of the country's sectors, we proposed Sesori as the site for the third dialogue meeting. Sesori is a long-suffering city in the country's east. Duarte has agreed. This has proven our fronts' flexibility. This is, above all, a victory for the people. We have succeeded in getting Duarte to meet with us out of a garrison. Sesori is a city where the enemy does not have permanent positions. Sesori is a city that does not have a civilian defense. Sesori is a city without detachments of the repressive organizations. Sesori is not a highly militarized city. In a word, Sesori is not a barracks. Sesori is indeed one of many heroic cities in the north of the San Miguel Department. It is a city martyred by its most recent executioner, Colonel Staben, who heads the genocidal Arce Battalion. Staben has permanently repressed the people by murdering, persecuting, and kidnapping them in the north of San Miguel.

The FMLN-FDR feels that by proposing Sesori as the site for the third dialogue meeting, it will contribute to reducing the cruel repression that Col Staben has imposed on the people of Sesori during [words indistinct]. We know that the irrationality of the executioners of the people is boundless. Let us recall how the criminal Sigfrido Ochoa tried to take La Palma prior to the first dialogue meeting. It would not be a surprise if this other criminal Vaca Staben tries something similar. But a white flag flies over Sesori at this moment. This heroic city now has the honor of being proposed by its vanguard as another city of peace and justice. The eyes of humanitarian organizations, the eyes of the organizations that watch over neutrality in situations of war, and the eyes of the international community are already on this small city in the country's northern mountains. The workers of the country are ready to denounce and demonstrate against the repression and the unjustified detainment of the civilian population. Our rifles will go on defeating the imperialist plans, the military operations, and the genocidal plan "United To Rebuild." We appeal to the people of Sesori to begin to set the material conditions for the third dialogue meeting so that it will take place in an adequate framework. All of the Sesori people should set about to create the material conditions to make their city worthy of this event that entails so much importance for the people. Restore energy and telephone services. Restore the parochial church that has been damaged by the war. Keep the city clean. Our people move forward on all fields.

We are making progress in the field of a political solution. We have succeeded in setting a place and date for the third dialogue meeting and (?establishing) minimum conditions for such a meeting to be held. We want to set forth before our people that the FMLN and the FDR keep their unchanging position of establishing the conditions necessary so that the third dialogue meeting can be held. Therefore, important accords are still pending. These accords must be reached in the next few days during the coming preliminary meetings. If these accords are not reached, the accords already reached could be in danger. The FMLN-FDR, in the eyes of our people, moves forward, consistently and responsibly, toward the conquest of peace with justice, which our people demand.

BISHOP SCORES CONSERVATIVES OPPOSED TO TALKS

[Text] San Salvador, 24 Aug (DPA) -- Gregorio Rosa Chavez, auxiliary bishop of San Salvador, today scored the most conservative Salvadoran sectors, which have orchestrated a campaign of opposition to the dialogue between the government and the insurgents. Rosa Chavez scored those sectors during the Sunday homily and at an impromptu informative news conference following the mass, during which he asserted that "on behalf of peace we cannot allege constitutional rigidity or set up legal obstacles."

"Many have spoken on behalf of these people in the last few days. However, I am not sure that their opinions objectively reflect the aspirations of the huge number of Salvadorans whom some claim to represent," Rosa Chavez added. He then said: "Our experience as pastors clearly shows that the people are tired of war and want to see the end of so much madness as soon as possible. They want the end to arrive not through the force of weapons, but through methods more appropriate for human beings."

In his homily, Rosa Chavez discussed the dialogue and the agreement reached last weekend in Mexico by the government and the FMLN-FDR to meet in Sesori, north of San Miguel Department, in the east.

After it was announced that the meeting would be held in Sesori on 19 September, the most right-wing groups in El Salvador protested, as they feel that President Jose Napoleon Duarte has legitimized the rebels by holding a dialogue with them. Other sectors feel that that stand is contrary to the Constitution and should therefore be reconsidered. The Salvadoran military men have abstained from expressing a view, alleging that that matter concerns Duarte, who by constitutional mandate is also general commander of the armed forces.

In his homily, Rosa Chavez said today: "It is all right to demand that everything be arranged in accordance with the Constitution, but it would be even better to ask that peace be sought in accordance with the spirit of the Constitution, which on its first page acknowledges that man is the center and end of all state institutions."

As for the prior talks held for 3 days in Mexico City, the pastor said that "at last it was learned that both parties had decided to go to a third round of talks at a specific place." It could be that if many obstacles emerge, the meeting may not yet be held in Sesori, so other alternatives were mentioned, but there is no doubt that it will be somewhere in the east, the auxiliary bishop said.

Msgr Rosa Chavez told reporters that last night he spoke to Msgr Arturo Rivera y Damas, who would return to San Salvador this Sunday and was very pleased with the work carried out, even though he did not mention anything about the exchange involving Colonel Omar Napoleon Avalos. Avalos has been in the Salvadoran guerrillas' hands since 26 October 1985 and the release of over 900 noncombatant political prisoners is being requested in exchange for his release.

Msgr Rosa Chavez said today that Sesori, located 132 km east of the capital, has already entered history. "It is a small town that has suffered much due to the violence, a town close to Ciudad Barrios, the cradle of assassinated Archbishop Msgr Oscar A. Romero." The Salvadoran auxiliary bishop finally said today that during the week the subject of the dialogue had overshadowed other incidents of national importance in this country. To conclude, he said that 22 deaths had been reported last week as a result of political violence.

3. The terrorist threat is a propaganda action that violates all the Salvadorans' human rights, and violates the right to live, work, and be free.

GUATEMALA

SPANISH GOVERNMENT CLOSES CASE OF EMBASSY FIRE

PA240345 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 0231 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Excerpt] Guatemala, 22 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- Today, the new Guatemalan ambassador said that Guatemala and Spain have ended their differences that originated with the fire at the Spanish Embassy in Guatemala City where 39 persons died 6 years ago.

Danilo Barillas, former secretary general of the Guatemalan Christian Democracy Party -- which is in power -- and Guatemalan ambassador to Spain, reported that the Spanish Government was satisfied with the explanation over the incident which occurred 31 January 1980. The diplomat, who did not reveal the explanations given to Spain by his government, said that that country no longer demands imdemnification over the incident in which one of Spain's representatives lost his life.

The trouble started when a group of peasants and university students took over the Spanish Embassy in order to pressure the military regime of Romeo Lucas Garcia, "to free political detainees." At the moment of the takeover, the Spanish Ambassador Maximo Cajal y Lopez was meeting with former Vice President Eduardo Caceres Lehnohf, former Foreign Minister Adolfo Molina Ornates, and First Secretary of the Embassy Jaime Ruiz del Arbol. When the police intervened, by order of Minister of the Interior Donaldo Alvarez Ruiz, the embassy, which was located in the southeastern part of the Guatemalan capital, was set ablaze by "Molotov" cocktails. In the operation, which the Lucas government considered "antiterrorist," 39 peasants and university students died, as well as the Spanish diplomat Ruis del Arbol. Ambassador Cajal y Lopez was saved miraculously. [passage omitted]

NICARAGUA'S CALERO ARRIVES FOR SUPPORT

[Excerpts] Guatemala City, 24 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- The Nicaraguan anticommunist leader Adolfo Calero Portocarrero arrived in Guatemala "to seek the moral support of our Guatemalan brothers." Calero will meet "in private" with the leaders of Guatemalan anticommunism, represented by the National Liberation Movement, the leader of which is Mario Sandoval Alarcon.

During an informal news conference, the anti-Sandinist leader said: "Nicaragua is the only Central American country that does not have a democratically elected government." He added that all of those who oppose the Sandinist government "want a peaceful change," but that the Nicaraguan leaders' refusal to dialogue "leaves only one alternative, this is to say, the use of arms, as the contras have been doing."

According to Calero, the use of the words "contras" or "anti-Sandinists" is not proper because all those who fight in Nicaragua "are anticommunists who want a genuine democracy in the country." [passage omitted]

Regarding U.S. aid for the contras, Calero said that they (the anticommunists) are not concerned over who gets the aid but that "the adequate administration of this aid is what counts."

He also said he did not know exactly why Eden Pastora, Commander Cero, withdrew from the fight. Calero noted, however, that "the struggle is not of one man alone but of all of us who love freedom and democracy, which have been negated by a communist, repressive regime."

Finally, Calero said that "the Sandinists envy the Guatemalan Government because this government is the result of free and democratic election. The Sandinists also envy the other governments which share similar principles."

HONDURAS

PRESIDENT DECLARES WORKERS' STRIKE ILLEGAL

PA251338 Tegucigalpa Domestic Service in Spanish 0015 GMT 25 Aug 86

[Communique issued by President Jose Azcona Hoyo and Adalberto Discua Rodriguez, labor and social welfare minister, in Tegucigalpa on 24 August; read by Labor Ministry spokesman Jose Arturo Chavarria Sierra]

[Text] In view of the administrative measures adopted by the National Agrarian Institute [INA] to organize and expedite the implementation of the institution's program, the union of workers in that institution has been conducting illegal actions, such as the collective work stoppage and the occupation of state buildings.

Other labor organizations operating within important institutions that provide public services which cannot be interrupted have also agreed on and have carried out daily and progressive stoppages at their respective working centers. These actions began on 19 August and were to end with a total work stoppage on 27 August. In this respect, the unions involved have stated that these actions are being conducted to show their solidarity with Sitraina [Trade Union of National Agrarian Institute Workers] and to pressure the INA's executive director.

All these actions have been planned and coordinated by the United Federation of Honduran Workers, FUTH.

The Labor and Social Welfare Secretariat had previously warned the workers and their unions about the illegality of their actions, which violate specific norms contained in the Labor Code.

Upon requests by the directly affected autonomous institutions and also considering the soundness of the claims received from the most representative organizations of the private enterprises, unions, workers federations and confederations, and peasant leagues, and above all in exercising the state's obligation of complying with and ensuring compliance with the Constitution and laws and preserving domestic peace and security, the government of the republic has issued the following resolution:

Executive Branch

Secretariat of State for Labor and Social Welfare

Tegucigalpa, D. C., 22 August 1986

After analyzing the facts and based on the reports prepared on 14, 19, 20, and 21 August by the labor inspector at the working centers mentioned later on in this document, it has been established that the workers' unions in those centers have been conducting progressive collective work stoppages following instructions from the FUTH.

Whereas:

The union leaders have reacted negatively to the timely requests and calls issued by the labor adminstration authorities, and have announced that the progressive stoppages would continue and would end with a total paralyzation of public services to pressure the INA into replying favorably to the demands made by the Sitraina.

The workers are forbidden from intentionally slowing down their activities, illegally suspending their work, promoting sudden work stoppages, or inciting or maintaining such actions.

Unions are forbidden to promote work disruptions or stoppages, except strikes declared in accordance with the law.

The illegality of a collective work stoppage has been administratively declared, but in this case, the promoters of the stoppages have not failed to heed the calls.

Therefore, in accordance with Articles 98, clause 5; 499, letter E; 570 and 571 of the Labor Code, as well as Article 88 of the Code on Administrative Procedures, resolves:

1. To declare illegal the collective work stoppage conducted by the labor unions of the following social organizations: National Agrarian Institute, National Housing Institute, Institute of Professional Training, National Enterprise for Electric Power, National Children's Board, Honduran Social Security Institute, and National Water and Sewage Service.

2. This resolution along with the necessary instructions will be given to the managers of those institutions, and to the ILO for notification.

[Signed] Jose Azcona Hoyo, President of the Republic

Adalberto Discua Rodriguez, Labor and Social Welfare Minister.

The Government of the Republic states the following to the Honduran people:

It has no interest in destroying the labor unions, and the decision has been made within the framework of the country's labor laws with the purpose of preserving the nation's peace and tranquility.

Consequently, it orders the workers of the state's decentralized institutions who have participated in the illegal work stoppages mentioned in the resolution to return to work tomorrow, 25 August, at the regular hours.

The presidents, managers, and directors of those autonomous institutions are ordered to ensure their workers' strict compliance with their duties and to keep President Jose Azcona Hoyo informed of developments.

SANDINIST ASSEMBLY ISSUES COMMUNIQUE ON NATION

PA251308 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1300 GMT 24 Aug 86

[Text] The Sandinist Assembly's fifth meeting concluded at the Cesar Augusto Silva Conventions Center after being called to analyze the economic situation and aggresion which the country has been withstanding from U.S. imperialism.

The Sandinist Assembly, a consultative organization of the FSLN National Directorate, passed a resolution early this morning and stated that the country is living its most critical moments in the economic sector after 7 years of revolution. The war imposed by the U.S. Government, and the commercial and financial crisis which affects Third World countries, have had more negative effects; this is proved by, among other things, the acute problems in the production and distribution sector.

The final communique issued by the meeting adds: During the last 5 years, the U.S. Government has defined and carried out a policy which is aimed at destroying the revolutionary power which was achieved by the FSLN and the Nicaraguan people on 19 July 1979.

The U.S. Administration has invested more than $100 million in this counterrevolutionary project during the last 5 years as aid to the mercenary forces, and has given more than $5 billion to the Central American governments for their role as platform for the encirclement and attack policy against the Sandinist revolution.

Following the approval of $100 million and the arrival of advisers for the mercenary forces, plus the approval to the CIA so that it may act freely -- all this approved with the U.S. congressional vote -- the perspectives for a peaceful resolution of the conflict seem more distant; likewise, the interventionist attitude which has been favored by the Reagan administration in the military sector is thus strengthened.

The Sandinist Assembly states, upon conclusion of its meeting, that the low-key war is aimed at annihilating and wearing out the country's economy with the intention of changing the people's support of the revolutionary project, thus opening an internal political space that serves as the basis for the interventionist plans, which includes an eventual direct action by the U.S. Army.

Given the situation, the defense of the revolutionary power becomes a priority task and the main responsibility of the FSLN and the Nicaraguan people and government. The measures to counter the problems in the economic, production, and distribution sectors are of a secondary importance to this vital issue.

Based on this outlook, the FSLN National Directorate has discussed the problem with the Sandinist Assembly, given that it should be urgently countered with extraordinary measures that must be carried out immediately.

The defense of the revolutionary power demands the adoption of all the necessary measures to counter and control the crisis with our own resources and the use of external resources in the best manner.

The National Assembly also states that the rational distribution and use of our resources; the organizational measures in the political and production sectors, such as discipline in our work, efficiency, and unity; and the coherent implementation of the guidelines to defend the Sandinist poeple's power are necessary to face this crucial moment.

Based on the Sandinist Assembly's proposals, the FSLN National Directorate has outlined a series of measures to counter the country's financial crisis, distribution problems, and commerical activities, with the intention of recovering the government's organization and control of the country's economy.

UNO COMMUNIQUE VOWS NOT TO 'INVOLVE COSTA RICA'

PA250052 San Jose LA NACION in Spanish 18 Aug 86 p 25-A

[Communique issued by Nicaraguan Opposition Unity, UNO, Southern Front: "We Shall Never Involve Costa Rica;" dated 15 August]

[Text] The UNO-Southern General Headquarters and Regional Commanders that fight in the south and east of Nicaragua for the establishment of a democracy, address the free peoples of the world in connection with the approval of the $100 million aid to express:

1. Our satisfaction with the aid granted by the U.S. people and government to the Nicaraguans who fight for the freedom and democracy of our fatherland.

2. This aid will permit important advances in our struggle, as we have the people, we have the goal, we want freedom, and what we need are technical resources to reach a victory.

3. We will not let the Nicaraguan people down, nor the U.S. people nor the peoples backing us and who wish for the speedy liberation of our fatherland.

4. This aid renovates our willingness for sacrifices and strengthens the responsibility and maturity which as Nicaraguan, democrats, and revolutionaries we have with our people and with our history.

5. We publicly reaffirm to the people and Government of Costa Rica that our struggle and its advances are and will be in Nicaragua where 4,500 fighters move in 25,000 square kms, and we shall never use Costa Rican soil for our actions. Our struggle tactics of these 3 years have permitted us not only to be based in our territory, but also to be with our Nicaraguan peasants.

6. We say this clearly: We will not provoke any incident on the Costa Rican border, we shall never install anything military in Costa Rica, we shall never involve Costa Rica in our struggle.

7. What is more: As of now we announce that any border actions that try to upset the tranquility of the Costa Ricans will be the deed of communist groups or hoodlums that will try to discredit President Arias, his government, and his proclamation of neutrality, to which we reiterate our deepest respect.

Without Somozism Without Communism.

CONTENTS OF CASTRO LETTER TO U.S. CONGRESSMAN

FL251941 Havana Television Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 25 Aug 86

[Text] In his speech at the 26 July commemoration this year, comrade Fidel referred to the letters exchanged with U.S. Congressman Michael Bilirakis [R.-Florida]. The letters concerned the Cienfuegos nuclear power plant.

In his response, our commander in chief stated that the plant's technology is one of the safest and most used throughout the world, especially in the United States, where it was originally developed under the name BWR. When the plant is completed, it will have reactors of the type referred to above, and will have a total generating capacity of 1,600 eletric mgw.

The safety of the Juragua installations, the letter noted elsewhere, is guaranteed by very strict measures which include the plans, construction, assembly technique, and the future exploitation of the reactors. The plant will be equipped with modern and efficient systems, and is designed to withstand and mitigate serious damages without any consequences for the environment, including such unpredictable risks as the impact of an airliner against its buildings, an earthquake, or a tidal wave.

In his letter, Castro added that no neighboring country should worry or feel anxiety in this respect because Cuba, in a responsible manner, is observing and will continue to observe established regulations, will work for broadening and improving the current international safety systems, advocates greater cooperation and mutual exchange of information among neighboring states having nuclear power plants, and, from this moment on, adopts all foreseeable measures aimed at guaranteeing the safe exploitation of this energy source which is indispensable for the advance of the national economy.

FURTHER RADIO REPORTAGE ON U.S. ECONOMIC BOYCOTT

[Commentary by Mario Montes]

[Text] There are people in the world who never learn their lessons and who stumble repeatedly on the same stone. This is the case with the senile U.S. President, Ronald Reagan, who has just approved the reinforcement of the economic blockade imposed on Cuba nearly a quarter of a century ago. This reinforcement of the blockade aims at making our country activate the immigration agreement signed with the United States in 1984. This accord, which provides for the return to Cuba of a group of so-called Marielitos [alludes to the El Mariel port used to embark Cuban refugees to the United States] -- regarded as undesirables by U.S. authorities -- and the regulation of Cuban citizens' leaving for Yankee territory, was denounced by the revolution after an anti-Cuban radio station officially sponsored by the White House began operation. Of course, Reagan errs if he thinks that with this new decision and other additional measures he can make a dent on a people who have been waging a victorious battle since 1959 against the most important imperialist power. Cuba does not take orders from anybody or accept pressure of any kind. Otherwise we would not exist as an independent nation today. For Cubans, principles are worth more than any material benefit. This is a lesson that imperialism has not learned. If Reagan thinks he can impose his will on Cuba with ridiculous boasts, he is dead wrong. Whether Washington likes it or not, it will always be impossible to talk with the Cuban revolution from a posture of force.

It will be even more difficult to impose measures on Cuba or make this country change its stance with aggression and plunder. This is something that must be remembered by those who regard arrogance as the suitable weapon to deal with smaller countries. In addition, this is not new for Cubans, who are used to these particularly acute explosions of wrath from the current U.S. President. These outbreaks are much in accordance with his fascist-like vision of the world and international relations. Imperialist gentlemen, Cuba will not yield to blackmail or boasts. History has always agreed with dignity. This is why we are sure of our victory.

VIEIRA HAILS USSR'S DECISION FOR MORATORIUM

FL251359 Havana Radio Progreso Network in Spanish 1100 GMT 25 Aug 86

[Text] Cuban Vice Foreign Minister Jose Raul Vieira Linares has told the Soviet press agency TASS that the Soviet Union's decision of prolonging until January 1987 the unilateral moratorium of nuclear testing is a courageous and responsible step forward which responds to the recent call made by the Group of Six during a meeting held in Ixtapa, and to the outcries of world public opinion.

Linares said this decision demonstrates the Soviet Union's willingness to achieve real agreements on disarmament, to attenuate tensions, and to make it possible for the world to direct its attention toward problems of economic development.

FOREIGN MINISTER MALMIERCA ARRIVES IN HARARE

PA251602 Havana International Service in Spanish 1600 GMT 24 Aug 86

[Text] Cuban Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca arrived on Sunday in Harare, Zimbabwe to participate in the ministerial meeting prior to the eighth summit of the Nonaligned Movement, which will be held there.

On his arrival in Harare, Malmierca described as positive, the draft final declaration prepared by Zimbabwe. He stressed that the document has all the elements needed to achieve the Nonaligned Movement's objectives in the summit. Among those aspects, Malmierca said, are the peoples' struggles for peace, disarmament, and economic development, the need to eliminate the infamous regime of apartheid in South Africa; and the continuation of the efforts to obtain Namibia's independence.

GRANMA CITED ON U.S. TRAINING OF SALVADORANS

["What the Cuban Press Says"]

[Text] In its usual commentary section that the Cuban paper GRANMA entitles "New Paragraph" [Con Punto y Aparte], well-known newsman Juan Marrero analyzes the role of Salvadoran military men and the decisive aid given to them by the U.S. Administration.

The GRANMA commentary states that Central America has become real torture for President Ronald Reagan; everything he does there or tries to justify with propaganda schemes will strongly strike back at him sooner rather than later.

Several U.S. congressmen just revealed that the Pentagon, by a decision of the State Department, has been training Salvadoran soldiers known to be members of death squads who have been involved in thousands of murders. To dispel any doubts, the denouncers revealed names. Included in that list were Colonel Jose Dionisio Hernandez, officer of the Salvadoran National Guard; Lieutenant Colonel Julio Adolfo Medrano, intelligence chief of that same organization; and Mayor Baltazar Lopez, former chief of intelligence personnel.

GRANMA adds there are approximately 6,000 Salvadoran soldiers and officers who participated in antiterrorist training carried out in June and July in Washington and Arizona and in August in Louisiana. Iowa Senator Tom Harkin, one of the denouncers, said: We are training hardened murderers to be more efficient.

As if the mining of Nicaraguan harbors and the drafting of manuals on how to disturb order or the military and financial aid to Somozist contras were not enough, this incident illustrates how the Reagan government grossly makes fun of its own definitions of the struggle against terrorism with which it has tried to deceive the U.S. and world public.

In his interesting commentary entitled "More Efficient Murderers," Cuban newsman Juan Marrero adds that although we know that nobody in the world has more information about the Salvadoran military than the Pentagon and the CIA, the Reagan administration has trained well-known murderers in U.S. territory.

Nevertheless, Reagan is still speaking of moral principles and claiming legitimate rights in his struggle against international terrorism, GRANMA states. All that is totally fraudulent. The U.S. President does not care two hoots about moral and legal principles. He is only concerned that his freedom fighters agree with and are at the service of imperialism; that anticommunists oppose the USSR and Cuba, and that they be willing to [words indistinct] peasants, children, and women to prevent other peoples from achieving and consolidating a genuine independence.

The latter part of the GRANMA commentary states that the U.S. President does not care whether they are Somozist criminals; he does not care whether they are Salvadoran criminals, either. The Reagan doctrine specifies that if they are already criminals, the immediate objective is to make them more efficient criminals.

In sum, such a philosophy perfectly reflects the current and past behavior of U.S. imperialism, Marines, Green Berets, and Rapid Deployment Forces. A considerable part of such terrorism has been suffered and is being suffered today by Latin Americans.

On Approval of Contra Aid

PA251556 Havana International Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 23 Aug 86

["What the Press Has to Say" feature]

[Text] Journalist Jose Antonio Benitez titles a commentary published in a recent issue of the Cuban newspaper GRANMA "$100 Million to Kill Nicaraguans." Due to its importance, we will offer it as the sole item in today's feature.

If it were possible to take some counterrevolutionary ideas, some vices, some scourges, and some human degenerations in the same way that one mixes chemicals and minerals for a formula, and if one places them all in a test tube, in time we would end up with the U.S. Senate's decision to approve $100 million for the anti-Sandinist contras.

GRANMA adds: Nevertheless, a test tube was not necessary because with the same ingredients, the U.S. Congress approved the money for the anti-Sandinist assassins, for the mercenaries trained in the U.S. military camps, for the Somozists. The Republican-controlled Senate approved the money for the contras in a vote that Reagan described as historic and in favor of democracy. The Democratic-controlled House of Representatives had approved the funds in June.

Of course, the $100 million is not for humanitarian aid or for the education of the Nicaraguan children in Nueva Segovia, San Juan, Jinotega, or Matagalpa. It is not to build houses or schools in the countryside. It is not to be used for the Nicaraguan people's health. The $100 million is for killing Nicaraguans, children, women, men, and old people.

GRANMA adds that the money is for killing, like CIA mercenaries infiltrated from Honduras killed Antonio Rios and his wife in El Tortuguero in Matagalpa Department. They beat them and butchered them. The money is for killing: they murdered three 12-year-old girls near the Honduran border; they killed evangelist Jacobo Aguinaldo Mendoza who was beaten and cut into pieces which they threw into a river; they murdered children on El Algodon mountain; they have killed more than 15,000 Nicaraguans in recent years.

The Central Intelligence Agency, President Reagan's advisers, and a large number of the U.S. legislators have given these assassins the name of freedom fighters, whose fundamental motivation is their deeds, crimes, and terrorist operations.

The commentary by journalist Jose Antonio Benitez stresses that this is not the first time Yankee imperialism has invested money in its aggression against the Nicaraguan people. It has been charged, the commentary states, that the current U.S. President has made available almost $1 billion for this purpose.

One of the reasons for Reagan's desperation for Senate approval of the $100 million for the anti-Sandinist contras was to make its members accomplices of the White House policy against Nicaragua, as he had earlier done successfully with the House of Representatives.

The commentary published by GRANMA concludes: What Reagan, the U.S. Congress, the Central Intelligence Agency, the transnational companies, and the aid to the contras will not achieve is to defeat the 3 million Nicaraguans who are on a struggle and combat footing in the face of the threats of the enemy of mankind.

"OUR AMERICA" VIEWS CARACAS SELA MEETING

["Our America" commentary -- read by Norberto Hernandez]

[Text] The regional foreign debt and the commercial protectionism of the United States and the capitalist European countries are definitely smothering our nations. These two major concepts caused the greatest impact among the 80 delegates of 25 countries of the area who gathered in Caracas to participate in the preparatory meeting of the Latin American Economic System, SELA, which will be held in Lima in October.

A foreign debt of $400 billion, annual interest payments exceeding $40 billion, and the creditors' determination not to seek political solutions to this serious problem of insolvency are creating a situation of economic chaos of unforeseeable consequences.

The SELA meeting verified with concern that the industrialized West is not putting forth positive initiatives in this regard and in the last analysis is limiting itself to accepting minimal changes in the interest payments on some loans, provided that the purported beneficiary agrees to adopt the Draconian measures demanded by the IMF, which are tantamount to unemployment, the denationalization of assets, and a high cost of living.

SELA also attacked dumping [preceding word in English] and protectionism, which have become the favorite policies of Washington and the capitals of Western European countries. The agricultural policy structured by the EEC and implemented through subsidies for numerous agricultural and livestock products alarms nations that are chiefly exporters of agricultural raw materials.

As Sebastian Alegrett, SELA permanent secretary, said, Spain and Portugal joining the EEC seriously limits the traditional access of Latin American products to these two nations. The protectionist policy the United States has established deserves separate treatment. The tariff barriers imposed by Washington have affected 38 percent of the exportable agricultural products and 24 percent of the industrial products of undeveloped nations. The White House's yearly tariff revisions eliminated products worth $13 billion from the preferential system. Latin America suffered 35 percent of this figure, which translated into net revenue losses. Consequently, the participation of the area exports in the U.S. market decreased by nearly 3 percent over the past few years. Simultaneously, Reagan did not hesitate to apply the arbitary Yankee trade law that entails discrimination and exchange restrictions against nations like Brazil, which is intent on protecting its computer industry from U.S. penetration.

These factors have permitted those who met in Caracas to discuss in depth the true problems that affect the regional economy. Unity as a defensive weapon has begun to force its way through. Those who attended the meeting in Caracas are convinced of this. This means that the course of integration will surely become broader in Lima with more consolidated views.

NICARAGUA PROTESTS TO SHULTZ ON REAGAN REMARKS

PA241504 Havana International Service in Spanish 1600 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] The Nicaraguan Government has officially protested a statement by U.S. President Ronald Reagan publicly admitting that the objective of the aggressions on Nicaragua is to overthrow the Sandinist government. In a letter to U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz, Nicaraguan acting foreign minister Jose Leon Talavera said that Reagan's statements mean the situation is becoming increasingly grave and the U.S. policy for his country will eventually lead to a direct military intervention.

The note adds that the U.S. Government apparently has interpreted the U.S. Congress approval of $100 million to finance the counterrevolutionaries as an official permit to directly attack Nicaragua.

ORTEGA ON POTENTIAL OF U.S. INVASION OF NICARAGUA

PA240300 Havana International Service in Spanish 1600 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega said in Managua that the possibility of a direct U.S. military invasion of his ocuntry becomes greater every moment. Ortega warned that the decision by the U.S. Congress to approve the $100 million dollar aid to the counterrevolutionary gangs, considerably increases the danger of aggression.

The Sandinist leader noted that this increase in aggression is a new stage of confrontation with the United States. He called on all the country's patriotic forces to join existing military structures to defend the revolution. The Nicaraguan head of state made these statements during an EPS ceremony. At that ceremony, Defense Minister Humberto Ortega received the military rank of general and the Army.

H. Ortega: We "Will Defend"

PA242353 Havana International Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] Nicaraguan Defense Minister Humberto Ortega has said that his country is willing to suffer the loss of thousands of lives if a direct U.S. intervention occurs and added: U.S. troops will die by the thousands, too, because the invaders will bite the dust of defeat.

He made these remarks during the ceremony to confer new ranks on high-ranking EPS officers under the new military nomenclature. He also said that Nicaragua does not intend to see young Americans die for an unfair cause. He said: The Nicaraguan people do not want to fight anybody, but they will defend themselves.

MANAGUA WANTS TO HOST NONALIGNED SUMMIT

[Text] President Daniel Ortega said in Managua that the U.S. Government has been exerting pressure to prevent Nicaragua from being chosen as host of the ninth summit meeting of the Nonaligned Movement at the meeting that will be held in Zimbabwe. Ortega expressed his confidence that the countries of Latin America, Africa, and the rest of the Third World will support Nicaragua's nomination.

President Ortega left Sunday for Yugoslavia, on a tour to European and African countries, before and after attending the eighth summit meeting of the Nonaligned Countries Movement in Harare, capital of Zimbabwe.

DELVALLE DENIES CONTRAS TO TRAIN IN PANAMA

PA242312 Havana International Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] Panamanian President Eric Arturo Delvalle said in Panama City that his government will not permit its territory to be used to train Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries.

With this, the Panamanian head of state refuted newspaper reports that the U.S. Southern Command would soon train Somozist mercenaries on the shores of the Panama Canal. Delvalle pointed out that Panama, a member of the Contadora Group, seeks a peaceful solution for the Central American conflict and that his country will not let its soil be used to train forces that attack other, friendly countries.

DOMINICA

CHARLES ACCUSES ALLEYNE OF PLOTTING AGAINST HER

FL251638 Bridgetown CANA in English 1628 GMT 25 Aug 86

[Text] Roseau, Aug 25, CANA -- Barbadian-born gun-runner Sydney Burnett Alleyne has said that some people are bent on overthrowing the Dominica government, Prime Minister Eugenia Charles said today. She made the charge while addressing the opening ceremony of the fourth Caribbean Youth Conference (CYC).

She said that Alleyne had telephoned the Dominica mission in London last week, saying: I want to inform you that in fact proceedings are continuing here to continue the coup that took place in 1980-81.

Miss Charles told the conference: One doesn't always believe Sydney Burnett Alleyne. He is not known too much for his truthfulness, but of course one does not dare ignore the statement.

In March 1981, ex-Prime Minister Patrick John and senior officers of the now disbanded Dominica Defence Force [DDF] were arrested after the government said it had discovered a plot to overthrow it.

One month later, two Canadian and eight American mercenaries led by Michael Perdue were intercepted in New Orleans by United States federal agents as they prepared for an armed expedition to Dominica.

And in December of that year, defence force members stormed the police headquarters killing one policeman and injuring several others in what the government described as a coup plot.

The government linked these incidents to a reported plan to re-install John as Prime Minister. Alleyne had close links with John when he was in office. He was jailed in 1975 in Martinique after he was intercepted by French authorities while apparently heading for Barbados with arms.

Miss Charles said that Alleyne told the Dominica mission he was married to a Dominican and therefore he was not prepared to take part in the carnage that would take place when these plans are carried out.

The Dominican prime minister said the self-declared international mercenary rang the next day and asked for a special favour for a friend of his. Whether that was just a stepping stone to the favour he was requesting, or whether there is in fact any truth in it, we don't know, she said.

Miss Charles, who is also responsible for security, declared: I've always held that the only way to withstand coups and these sort of problems is to open it wide and let the whole world know what you know and, therefore, the secrecy is taken away from the whole plan. Nine of ten mercenaries arrested in 1981 were jailed in the United States.

John and the former DDF's second in command are serving twelve year sentences for their part in the plot. One of the soldiers involved in the December attack, ex-Army Commander Frederick Newton was executed earlier this month, and the sentences of five other army men sentenced to hang along with Newton were commuted to life imprisonment.

Alleyne Denies Plans

FL260112 Bridgetown CANA in English 2147 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] Bridgetown, Barbados, Aug 25, CANA -- Barbadian-born gun-runner Sydney Burnett Alleyne today denied telling Dominica's envoy in Britain there was a movement afoot to overthrow the Roseau administration.

I never said there was a movement for the overthrow of her (Dominican Prime Minister Eugenia Charles) government, Alleyne said during a telephone call to CANA's Barbados headquarters. He added: Those governments in the Caribbean have absolutely nothing to fear as long as they pursue a policy consistent with the evolution and dignity of the people they represent.

Miss Charles, addressing a regional youth conference in Dominica today, said Alleyne had phoned the Dominica mission in London last week, saying proceedings are continuing here to continue the coup that took place in 1980-81.

Alleyne said Miss Charles was a despicable dictator, adding that he also had no intention of overthrowing the Barbados government. Alleyne said Charles was effectively courting the British government to have him watched.

There is no intention on my behalf to overthrow the present government of Barbados. Barbados is a democratically-elected government. But he said he would continue to lead the national liberation movement and its armed forces.

Nothing is wrong with selling arms if it makes me rich enough to maintain my de facto government, he said.

Alleyne had close links with former Dominica Prime Minister Patrick John when he was in office. He was jailed in 1975 in Martinique after being intercepted by French authorities while apparently heading for Barbados with arms.

John and a former second in command of the Dominica defence force are currently serving 12-year jail terms for their roles in a 1980-1981 coup attempt.

GRENADA

REPORT SHOWS TOURISM ON 'UPWARD MOTION'

FL251448 Bridgetown CANA in English 1646 GMT 24 Aug 86

[Text] St Georges, Aug 24, CANA -- Grenada earned about 32 million dollars (one EC dollar equals 37 U.S. cents) from the tourist trade during the first half of this year, according to a report from the Department of Tourism.

An estimated 28 million dollars came from stay-over visitors while the cruise ship sector contributed 4 million dollars.

The department said that the first six months of 1986 have proven from a numerical perspective that tourism in Grenada is continuing its upward motion and indications are that it is well on its way towards meeting all projections for the year.

The report said that 14,257 stay-over visitors travelled to Grenada during the first quarter of the year with member countries of the Caribbean Community (Caricom) accounting for the largest number.

There were 8,308 stay-over visitors from Caricom with Trinidad and Tobago accounting for 5,591, while outside of Caricom the United States made a major contribution with stay-over visitors.

Tourism is Grenada's leading foreign exchange earner.

The report also said that there was a 55 per cent increase in cruise ship calls for the first quarter of the year when compared with the corresponding period last year.

Some 24,174 passengers arrived on the island during 85 cruise ship calls in the 1985 period compared to 38,937 this year, it added.

SELA COUNTRIES BACK PERU ON ELIGIBILITY ISSUE

PA240330 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0156 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] Caracas, 22 Aug (EFE) -- The representatives of the 25 SELA member-countries released a communique today identifying themselves with Peru and "urging" the IMF to revise its position.

The communique states: "In view of the IMF's 'ineligibility' statement that prevents Peru from obtaining new IMF credits, the delegations of the SELA member-states hereby voice their solidarity with Peru."

These delegations are in Caracas participating in the preparatory meeting for the 12th SELA Latin American council, to be held in Lima on 16 and 17 October.

In the note it is recalled that the ministers of the Group of 24 of International Monetary Fund in the context of their 33d meeting in Buenos Aires, advocated greater support for countries whose situation is similar to Peru's.

The communique included point 11 of the statement by the group of 24 that says: "We hope that the IMF and other multilateral agencies will devise new mechanisms to aid those countries which cannot pay their term obligations to these agencies due to unfavorable foreign factors."

The SELA delegates also pointed out: "The IMF's decision seriously harms a SELA member-state, which has been making every possible effort to pay its financial obligations in accordance with its true ability to pay and considering a very unfavorable international climate."

For this reason, SELA urges the IMF to revise its decision "so that Peru can continue to be eligible for further credits and can be accorded the proper treatment taking into consideration the social and economic requirements of the Peruvian people."

CGT BLAMES GOVERNMENT FOR ECONOMIC ILLS

PY270115 Buenos Aires BUENOS AIRES HERALD in English 26 Aug 86 p 11

[Text] (NA-DYN) The general Labour Confederation (CGT) made the government responsible for the "worsening of the social situation" in a statement released yesterday, which referred to the "absence of concrete measures to update the wage-earner's level of income."

The labour organization criticized the "parsimonious attitude" of the economic team, adding, in reference to recent Banco Central leadership changes, that "power struggles at the top" aggravate the situation.

The CGT document warned that social unrest would not be spurred by the "intransigence" of labour organizations but by the "inexplicable laxity" of the government, in obvious reference to possible protest measures.

The grouping also warned it would be wrong to interpret the end of labour hostilities as a sign of "weakness or acquiescence of the working people."

Greek labour expert Nikolai Valticos, invited by the government to participate in the normalization of the CGT, arrived yesterday. The former sub-director of the International Labour Organization warned the normalization would not be likely to prevent future labour unrest, but also voiced hope that an agreement between the conflicting parties would be reached.

Meanwhile, the textile workers' union (AOT) yesterday declared a "state of alert" and announced it will implement a "struggle plan" to prevent wage agreements from being weakened by inflation.

The CGT's Neuquen Branch yesterday requested the dismissal of labour ministry provincial delegate Ruben Ferreira due to the "irregular operation" of his office. The request to Labour Minister Hugo Barrionuevo also called for the firing of accounting aid Ana Maria Drisaldi de Mitjavila for "ideological persecution."

In other news, private bank workers will stage four-hour work stoppages as from today in order to press for new sector wage accords.

Finally, municipal workers will hold a 24-hour strike on September 5 to demand higher wages unless the dispute is settled beforehand.

PRESIDENT REMOVES FORCES TO LET MARCHERS PROCEED

PY262235 La Paz La Red Panamericana in Spanish 2200 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] The government has ordered the Armed Forces to withdraw and not prevent the mineworkers' march to La Paz. The government has likewise decided to accept the Catholic Church proposal to establish a dialogue with the mineworkers.

Planning Minister Gonzalo Sanchez de Lozada has been appointed to meet with Church authorities to organize a meeting with mineworker representatives at the Mining Ministry under church sponsorship.

Information Minister Herman Antelo reported to the media in recent hours that the president had ordered the withdrawal of the troops stationed in Patacamaya, and that the police watch over the mineworkers march be lifted. Antelo said the government is concerned about the marchers' situation. He reiterated the Executive Branch's will to establish a dialogue and to remove agitators from the scene. He said that the president ordered the withdrawal of military and police control over the miners' march.

Mines Closed Despite Strike

PY261750 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1503 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] La Paz, 26 Aug (EFE) -- The Bolivian Government has approved its mining-metallurgy policy and has decreed the closure of the San Jose, Huanuni, Bolivar, Unificada and Tasna mines as part of the Bolivian Mining Corporation (Comibol) restructuring plan. The decree was approved last night in spite of the fact that thousands of workers are marching on La Paz and that two departments are paralyzed as a result of strikes being held to protest against these measures.

The Cabinet, which yesterday held a 20-hour meeting, approved the decentralization of Comibol and the closure of several companies. It is against these decisions the residents and miners of the Oruro and Potosi Departments have adopted measures of force. The government decision comes as 8,000 workers, among them over 5,500 miners, are marching from Oruro, 230 km south of La Paz, with women and children, to protest against the government's mining-metallurgy policy.

According to union leaders, the demonstrators decided to march on La Paz to reject the government plan that will leave them without jobs and will make the areas into ghost regions. The march "for life" will arrive today at Patacamaya, 126 km South of La Paz, where the peasants and miners will sign a defense and solidarity act.

The 2d Army Division, based in Oruro, has deployed troops along the highway that links Patacamaya with La Paz while troops in La Paz have been deployed up to Patacamaya. Army Tanks and military troops from the Patacamaya Regiment have been blockading the highway for the past two days.

Miners Blamed for Derailment

PY270335 La Paz La Red Panamericana in Spanish 0000 GMT 27 Aug 86

[Text] Transport and Communications Minister Andres Petricevic has said that the miners march is not peaceful. He based his harsh comment on reports he received from the National Railway Enterprise. The minister said that the miners who are marching toward La Paz have derailed a railroad convoy.

Andres Petricevic told Radio Panamericana that he believes that the miners' march toward La Paz cannot be considered peaceful.

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON SARNEY'S U.S. VISIT

PY261719 Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 23 Aug 86 p 29

[Excerpt] Foreign Minister Abreu Sodre yesterday admitted that "this is the hardest stage" of the negotiations between Brazil and the United States on the informatics sector. Minister Sodre warned, however, that "Brazil has a law which will be respected and not modified."

The foreign minister said that all negotiations have easy and difficult moments, and that this is "the difficult stage." Sodre said that he is optimistic about the meeting between Presidents Jose Sarney and Ronald Reagan and believes that "negotiations bring about solutions." Therefore, he expects good results for both countries.

According to the minister, "It must be understood that there is more to the relations between Brazil and the United States than just the informatics question." He believes that there are dozens of other matters on which to agree in terms that fully favor both nations.

In Abreu Sodre's opinion, President Sarney's visit to the United States is the opportunity for a democratic dialogue. He believes that when two presidents meet they will seek feasible solutions, "because it is impossible for two presidents to hold talks without reaching a good understanding." [passage omitted]

FINANCE MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON ECONOMY, DEBT

PY262307 Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 24 Aug 86 p 56

["Text" of interview granted by Finance Minister Dilson Furaro to O ESTADO reporters Pedro Cafardo and Jocimar Nastari; date and place not given]

[Excerpts] O ESTADO: Sir, you are completing 1 year as finance minister. How do you evaluate your own work? Any self-criticism?

Funaro: I am completing 1 year in the ministry, and the Cruzado Plan is completing 6 months. The latter is important because the plan has changed our country's life. The 6 months preceeding the Cruzado Plan served to confirm the criticism that had been leveled at some aspects of the country's economic policy for years before I joined the government. The first 6 months showed that the economic policy had to take a different path. Inflation was handled through total indexation, and the ministers simply tried to coexist with inflation, causing serious social disturbances, despair, and misunderstanding.

I gathered from meetings I held abroad that nobody was taking Brazil seriously. With an inflation of more than 200 percent, it was difficult to convince anyone that the country could survive no matter how much one talked about indexation as a means to coexist with inflation.

But almost all the economists and men with government experience here and abroad believe that the Brazilian people had to go through some 2 years of recession so that inflation could be brought down from 200-250 percent to 100-50 percent. Everyone with whom I talked abroad told me the same thing. Only a relatively small group of economists believed that deindexation was needed. Many contended that the deindexation had to be made gradually; few believed that it could be made in a single stroke. With Planning Minister Joao Sayad and a small group of well-known economists we started to study the deindexation of the Brazilian economy at a single stroke.

We knew that the financial system, even if the plan were not implemented, could not hold up. There was the problem of the three banks: Comind, Auxiliar, and Maisonnave. It was then necessary to complete their liquidation 3 months before the Cruzado Plan was launched. Moreover, it was necessary to prepare buffer stocks of foodstuffs, to create the National Treasury Secretariat, and to eliminate the so-called movement account between the Treasury and the Bank of Brazil [a Treasury account at the Central Bank that was managed by the Bank of Brazil as the government's financial agent, with statutory authority to print money for that account, if deemed necessary]. In sum, it was necessary to pave the way for the Cruzado Plan with absolutely indispensable measures.

I took over the Finance Ministry late in August, with a 14-percent monthly inflation rate. It was necessary to work hard in order to establish the government's cash flow. Up until the day I took over the Finance Ministry, it was done this way: Accounts for each 1-month period were closed before verifying what had happened. The movement account represented a connection of accounts between the Treasury and the Bank of Brazil over which no one had control. It was not possible to have any control as long as the movement account remained open. With the creation of the National Treasury Secretariat, we began on 1 January to have monthly cash flow of payments on a day-to-day basis and a projection for the following 6 months. We thus learned exactly what the government needed in order to act properly in the financial system.

All these adjustments, including the adjustment of the foodstuff buffer stocks, were indispensable before the Cruzado Plan was implemented on 28 February.

O ESTADO: Do you have any self-criticism to make?

Funaro: I believe that we did quite well. To say that we could have corrected this or that before launching the Cruzado Plan is easy today, but we were going through difficult times. For instance, we could have readjusted the price of gasoline before. And we went so far as to announce that readjustment in the morning, but retreated in the afternoon. The problem was that people were getting acquainted with a new currency, and they were closing stores that overcharged. We did not have a crystal ball that would allow us to reduce some problems in the retail sector.

O ESTADO: The government has promoted an increase of interest rates. Isn't this a change of position?

Funaro: No. In some of our comments, we thought that interest rates should be positive in order to reward investments. At some time, this could have given the impression that some interest rates would be subsidized -- mainly because of the discussion of the inflation index. This impression caused great damage to the stability of the financial market. But an increase of interest rates does not mean that the rates have to be very high. [paragraph continues]

Without monetary correction, interest rates are determined partly by inflationary expectations and partly by real market interest rates. This is why some investors are talking of high inflation in order to justify high interest rates. But we expect a low inflation rate.

O ESTADO: Do you believe that progress has been made in the administration of the foreign debt? The problem still seems to be quite serious.

Funaro: The first problem was to stop the growth of the debt. When I took office, the internal debt was growing at a rate of 85 percent in real terms over 12 months. In July of this year, it was growing at just 7 percent. This means that we have slowed down the speed of internal-debt growth, which is indispensable to begin controling the nation's economy. [Passage omitted]

O ESTADO: Isn't the explosion of consumption a sign that the growth of the economy is running ahead of the Cruzado Plan projections.?

Funaro: We were expecting important growth. We knew very well that with the equal treatment given to wages and prices -- prices used to go up every day or every month while wages went up every 3 or 6 months -- the workers' purchasing power would increase considerably. We were fully aware that the increase in demand would be large. But we were expecting the demand to stabilize at a higher level, as is happening now.

The possibility of consuming more was important for some people. An example: The pharmaceutical industry is delivering 35 percent more medicine this year. A survey made by the laboratories shows that people used to come to drug stores with a prescription for two or three medicines and took only one, the least expensive. This means that the standard of living of the population has improved.

Food consumption has increased by 12-15 percent. Car sales, although cars are not an essential product, increased by 35 percent. Industry is manufacturing 52 percent more this year than last year, even considering the 2-month strike in 1985. Comparing the working months this year with those of last year, production is 35 percent higher than it was then. Still, demand cannot be met.

O ESTADO: To meet present demand, new investments are necessary. But some economists claim that the resources of the FND [National Development Fund] cannot guarantee the investments needed for the country to continue to grow at 7 percent a year.

Funaro: That's correct. The FND cannot finance the 7-percent growth -- it can only finance about 2 percent. The reduction of interest rates and spreads on our foreign debt, which we hope to obtain through negotiations, should contribute with 1.5 percent. In addition, resources from productive and profitable state-run companies should provide investments on the order of 2 to 2.5 percent of GDP. Adding these up, we would have a 5.5 to 6 percent growth, which is the minimum that can be achieved in terms of expansion of the public sector to maintain some infrastructure programs, such as the energy program. This year in fact, public sector investments should represent 4.2 percent of GDP. Of this, 2 percent is being financed with the FND and the remaining 2.2. percent with savings resulting from reductions in the servicing of our foreign debt. [Passage omitted]

O ESTADO: Are you convinced that we will reach an agreement with our foreign creditors on 5 September?

Funaro: Surely we will reach an agreement by 5 September. To reach that agreement is not just in Brazil's interest, it is also in the interest of the creditors, because the agreement will guarantee that Brazil will honor its foreign debt commitments with a spread lower than in previous years. After this agreement we will have to renegotiate the entire foreign debt package.

O ESTADO: Will that renegotiation begin in September?

Funaro: This is a ritual. First, we had to negotiate debts due in 1985 and 1986, because the deadline for their renegotiation was about to expire and we could not be left with Project 4 [interbank credits from foreign banks to Brazilian banks operating abroad] uncovered. There was an understanding with the Paris Club that we continue paying in installments. Now we have to renegotiate the entire foreign debt so that we will not have to negotiate every 6 months.

O ESTADO: Can you clarify your comment that Brazil will only send abroad 2.5 percent of its GDP? Is this a final position?

Funaro: We said in Buenos Aires that with international interest rates falling, Brazil's climbing GDP, and the reduction of the spread, we would be in a position to transfer abroad 2 to 2.5 percent of our GDP without impeding Brazil's development. This is an important precondition for not falling back into a recession and for bankers to have the assurance that the country with which they are negotiating will not have a crisis, like that of Mexico, for instance.

O ESTADO: Are foreign bankers inclined to strike a multiyear agreement with Brazil?

Funaro: We believe that the possibility exists. We have to discuss and negotiate. The Paris Club made some demands that we finally accepted. We started to pay and everyone is receiving payments. We will make an agreement under the same conditions as we did with the Paris Club. We believe that no demand can be made other than under Article 4 of the IMF charter. Under that article, the IMF can send a mission to the country, as it does to France or the Netherlands, to verify figures and make a report. [passage omitted]

O ESTADO: Until recently there were prospects of again receiving money through cofinancing with the World Bank. However, it seems that process has stalled.

Funaro: The bankers are always saying that the market is about to open for Brazil. They say so at every speech or luncheon I attend. But I prefer to wait and see when that will happen. [passage omitted]

O ESTADO: Will the administrative reform bring about great savings for the government?

Funaro: It will not save a great deal. There must be administrative reform because it is important to modernize the machinery of the state. It is important to modernize so that what happened in Sao Paulo does not happen again. We had to replace the SUNAB [National Supplies Superintendance] delegate in Sao Paulo, because there were so many complaints there that telephones had been disconnected. The government exists to serve the people and it has to perform its functions. [passage omitted]

SHIP INVOLVED IN ARMS SMUGGLING CAPTURED

PY270324 Santiago EL MERCURIO in Spanish 20 Aug 86 p C1

[Text] Security personnel have confirmed that a second fishing boat, which reportedly participated in smuggling arms to Chilean subversives, was seized yesterday. This action took place off Caldera in the 3d Region.

It was reported that the fishing boat -- the Chopalgue -- has characteristics similar to those of the fishing boat Astrid Sue which was captured a few days ago.

The reports state that one person was arrested during the action. The Chopalgue reportedly participated in an arms-trafficking operation on 14 July 1986, when it unloaded 30 tons of arms and explosives from Soviet ships, transporting them ashore to a site called Carrizal Bajo.

In addition, it was stated that the war materiel was consigned to the so-called Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front, an extremist organization which established its clandestine operation base in Corral Bay, in the 3d region in Atacama.

Security personnel reported that this second fishing boat was captured thanks to information provided by the terrorists arrested during the first action. They gave details about the ship -- which is equipped with sophisticated communications equipment -- and about its crew.

CAUCE PRESIDENT ARRESTED; 6 OTHERS SOUGHT

PY262149 Santiago Domestic Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] Three reporters of CAUCE magazine have been arrested for offending the Armed Forces and six more are wanted by military justice. The magazine's headquarters has also been raided.

The following people will be handed over to the military court in the next few hours: CAUCE President Jorge Ovalle, legal representative Gonzalo Figueroa, and reporter Claudia Lanzarotti. They have been charged with offending the Armed Forces in an article published in the latest issue of CAUCE. The article -- entitled "The Doubt About the Arsenal or the Doubtful Arsenal" -- evoked a reaction from the National Intelligence Center, which filed charges against CAUCE.

The three reporters are being held at the headquarters of the investigative police and are waiting to be sent before a military prosecutor, probably Major Lorenzo Andrade. At the same time, the investigative police received warrants for the arrest of six more CAUCE reporters identified as Juan Jose Faundez, Marcia Pineda, Manuel Poblete who wrote the article, Javier Mardones, Osvaldo Muray, and Eugenio Gonzalez. It has been learned in court circles that the six reporters will voluntarily come to court this afternoon.

In the meantime, in compliance with orders given by the military court in relation to the offense committed against the Armed Forces, the police raided the offices of CAUCE located at 454 Monjitas Street, Office 607. The raid was conducted around 1130 by special investigative police personnel. According to reports from the investigative police, the raid was conducted without problems, and the detectives only seized press material which will be handed over to the military court.

Regarding the finding of the arms cache in the north and central area of the country, 14 people have been handed over to the 2d Military Court in Santiago. These 14 people have already been questioned by prosecutor Andrade, who has begun the interrogation regarding their participation in setting up the arsenals in Carrizal Bajo. It has been learned that a total of 22 people have been arrested in this case. The remaining eight will be taken before the prosecutor after the current interrogation ends. The arsenals were discovered in several raids in the third region and in Santiago and its outskirts. About 60 tons of arms, ammunition and explosives were seized.

Dinacos on CAUCE Arrests

PY262223 Santiago Domestic Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] The National Social Communications Directorate [Dinacos] has released a declaration regarding CAUCE magazine's questioning of the origin of the arsenal found in the north. We have a report on this declaration from Rosa Sanchez:

[Begin relay] The Dinacos declaration says: CAUCE published in its issue of 25-31 August 1986 an article entitled "The Doubts About the Arsenal or the Doubtful Arsenal" by Ariel Poblete. The article says that last February witnesses say unusual military helicopter operations around Carrizal Bajo.

In the face of such distorted information regarding the arms cache found in the 3d Region and the Santiago metropolitan area by the National Intelligence Center, Armed Forces, and police personnel, Dinacos reports that during February 1986 -- on a date and hour which do not coincide with the ones given in the CAUCE article -- operations were conducted using Puma and Lama Army helicopters to supply the northern network of the Army Radio Station with natural gas.

According to the communique, to carry out this supply operation, 300-gallon bottles of gas, similar to the ones used in highrise buildings, were used. They were first transported by trucks on the Panamericana Norte highway, where they were picked up by the helicopters and taken to the radio station located on the mountain.

In conclusion, the communique says the Dinacos regrets that freedom of information and opinion was exercised to provide distorted information to the people about the seriousness of the origin, existence, and final destination of the military arsenal found this month.

This is the declaration released by Dinacos a few minutes ago in La Moneda Palace. [end relay]

Groups Support CAUCE

PY270234 Santiago Radio Chilena in Spanish 2300 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Excerpts] The Executive Committee of the Democratic Alliance [AD] today released the following declaration:

Regarding the arrest of CAUCE President Jorge Ovalle Quiroz, the magazine's director Gonzalo Figueroa, and several journalists, the AD Executive Committee categorically rejects this new action against this opposition magazine, and expresses its solidarity and support for those professionals whose public merits are well known.

The declaration says that the warrant for the arrest is reportedly related to the arsenals discovered in the northern and central parts of the country. The arrests indicate that articles published by CAUCE regarding the arsenals did not please the government. [passage omitted]

The National Council of the Chilean Journalists Association has strongly condemned the arrest of the directors and reporters of CAUCE magazine. In a declaration the association indicated the arrests are a new and violent attack on freedom of expression and of the press in Chile. The communique was released by the council's secretary general, Guillermo Torres. He said:

[Begin recording] The Chilean Journalists Association rejects this attack and expresses its solidarity with those arrested, especially with our colleague Claudia Lanzarotti and with the other journalists affected by the charges filed by the National Intelligence Center. The case is now under the jurisdiction of the 2d Military Court. The association also expresses its solidarity with CAUCE President Jorge Ovalle and Gonzalo Figueroa, the magazine's director and legal representative. We reject the efforts by the interior minister to manage the media during the difficult times the country is experiencing by trying to prevent Chileans from learning what is really occurring in the country. [end relay] [passage omitted]

Ricardo Nunez, the secretary general of the Chilean Socialist Party, sent a note to CAUCE Director Gonzalo Figueroa to express his solidarity with CAUCE personnel in the name of his organization. The Socialist Party reiterates its strong protest over the new attack on freedom of information and conveys to CAUCE personnel its total support.

NATIONAL ACCORD MEETS ARCHBISHOP, COMMENTS

PY260348 Santiago Radio Chilena in Spanish 2300 GMT 25 Aug 86

[Text] The signatories of the National Accord for the Transition to Full Democracy today met with Santiago Archbishop, Msgr Juan Francisco Fresno for more than 1 hour, and this afternoon the leaders of the National Accord issued a statement.

Among other things, the National Accord communique states: A year ago we signed the National Accord for the Transition to Full Democracy. This was done in response to a call for reconciliation of his eminence, Santiago Archbishop Msgr Juan Francisco Fresno. When we signed this accord, we undertook the commitment to achieve a peaceful solution for the country so that it could attain full democracy, and we promised to respect certain institutional, economic, and social principles capable of assuring an orderly future.

The communique adds: A broad consensus is necessary to overcome the crisis, and this consensus will not be achieved unless the nation can have free and direct elections to choose its authorities, meaning the president of the nation; a national congress with legislative, constituent, and overseeing powers; and municipal governments.

Further on, the communique of the National Accord released this afternoon says: In the quest for these objectives, we reiterate our willingness to comply with the terms of the accord and we reaffirm the need for the urgent implementation of the measures it proposes. We want to avoid confrontation and move forward toward democracy. However, in order to be able to do this, in keeping with the wishes of the majority of Chileans, exceptional laws must be abrogated, public freedom must be reestablished along with the autonomy of the universities, the government must promise not to implement the transitory Article 24 of the Constitution, there must be no more exiles, the political recess must be discontinued, and unimpeachable lists of voters must be drawn up.

CDT: Unity Around Accord

PY270124 Santiago Radio Chilena in Spanish 1700 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Excerpt] The Democratic Central Organization of Workers, CDT, has made a fervent call to all the signatory parties of the National Accord to sacrifice their natural sectorial interests and to work to make the document a real and effective government choice when the military regime ends. This statement is part of a public statement read by CDT President Eduardo Rios reiterating total CDT support for the National Accord for the Transition to Full Democracy.

[Begin Rios recording] The CDT recognizes Cardinal Juan Francisco Fresno for his permanent call for the reconciliation of all Chileans. Fresno's call has allowed this important document, signed by important political parties, to remain valid and very important during the difficult times the country is facing as a result of the growing political polarization and imminent civil war, which are due to the government's stubborness and wrong actions by the extreme left.

The CDT issues a fervent call for the signatory parties of the National Accord to sacrifice their natural sectorial interests and to support the aspirations of the social classes to reach an agreement so the National Accord can become an effective government choice for the Post-Pinochet period. JACQUET ON PLRA LEADER COMMENTS, U.S. AMBASSADOR

[Text] Justice and Labor Minister Eugenio Jacquet was asked yesterday why the courts did not worry about comments made by Carlos Romero [Pereira] Arza during a political meeting at the Metropolitan Seminary but demanded the arrest of Miguel Abdon Saguier, a leader of the Authentic Radical Liberal Party [PLRA], for statements he made. Abdon Saguier's arrest has been requested by Attorney General Clotildo Jimenez Benitez. Jacquet answered: "Do not be in such a hurry, the law must treat everyone equally, and the time will come for those who are up to the same tricks, those who are being guided and instructed to oust a legally constituted government."

As for the attorney general's request for the arrest of Saguier on charges of sedition, the minister said that Saguier has a record and that several other politicians have been tried and sentenced for the same charges, "that is, for inciting the people to take up arms. We must realize this attitude does not help preserve democracy. We must improve democracy through the civic education of the citizens. We must prepare the people to be protagonists of democracy."

Jacquet added that "to incite the people to take up arms and rebel against legally constituted authorities is not the proper way to educate them. If the government were illegal or unconstitutional such a method might be appropriate. However, our authorities have been elected by the people. Therefore, one cannot induce or urge the people to rebel against the authorities and overthrow them. This would be a rebellion. This is what we intend to fight, but we will do so within the framework of the law."

Jacquet continued: "If we shared the opinions of this politician, we would also take up arms and use them to fight him. However, being cultured, civilized and democratic people, the Paraguayans will not use this system."

Minister Jacquet was also asked to comment on remarks that U.S. Ambassador Taylor made during a program entitled "Youths for Peace," because these remarks were quite similar to those made by Miguel Abdon Saguier. Jacquet said that circumstances were not the same, "furthermore Ambassador Taylor's remarks in Coronel Oviedo were not referring directly to our government, while Saguier talked directly against a known and established government, legitimately voted for by the people."

Jacquet also said that: "Any U.S. diplomatic representative, or for that matter, any Western, democratic and Christian diplomat can suggest those means as a valid option for the restoration of democracy," he emphasized. "One presupposes that the main targets of the United States in this struggle are the communist, totalitarian and antidemocratic countries."

He added: "We must also bear in mind that the United States encourages armed rebellion to overthrow antidemocratic governments, the way it is doing now in Nicaragua. Thus, we can conclude that the words of the main speaker at that program had nothing to do with our politics or our status quo," Minister Jacquet concluded by saying.

MINISTERS REPORTEDLY SEEK FINANCING IN BRAZIL

PY252206 Paris AFP in Spanish 1855 GMT 24 Aug 86

[Text] Lima, 24 Aug (AFP) -- Manuel Romero, Peruvian minister for industry, commerce, tourism and integration, and Gustavo Saberbein, deputy economy minister, today left for Brazil on a key official mission whose objectives have not been revealed, according to official sources.

However, leaks indicate that in Brazil the high-ranking Peruvian delegation will pursue the economic negotiations begun by President Garcia's administration to obtain Brazilian financing for several development projects.

A government spokesman commented that although Minister Romero's trip was planned, Saberbein's departure appears to be almost unexpected and urgent. The reasons for this are unknown.

Meanwhile, Jose Caceres, deputy minister of the Presidency, today announced that even though the IMF has declared Peru ineligible for further loans, the Banco do Brasil has confirmed its willingness to continue negotiating the loan that Peru has requested for the second phase of the Tinajones hydroelectric projects in northern Peru.

Caceres recalled that 35 days ago, the Brazilian bank and Peru signed a letter of intent by which the former would provide 100 percent of the funds needed for the project. Under the agreement, Peru will be able to repay the loan in traditional and nontraditional export goods.

IDB, CAF Loans, Credits Granted

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Luis Alva Castro this afternoon presided over a ceremony during which the World Bank, the IDB, and the Peruvian Mining Bank signed a $27.5-million loan contract. [passage omitted]

In turn, according to information released by the CAF [Andean Development Corporation] -- which is headquartered in Caracas -- Peru has been granted CAF credits for $78 million out of the total of almost $115 million the CAF has lent so far this year. This means that Peru has contracted 66 percent of the loans granted by the CAF in 1986. As of August, Peru has received credits for $40 million for development projects and a $38-million loan for financing nontraditional exports.

APRA REJECTS DIALOGUE WITH SHINING PATH

PY262046 Paris AFP in Spanish 0418 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] Lima, 25 Aug (AFP) -- Armando Villanueva, secretary general of the American Popular Revolutionary Alliance [APRA] has ruled out the possibility of a dialogue between Alan Garcia's government and the Maoist guerrilla Shining Path as a way to end subversion in Peru.

My party does not maintain any dialogue with the Shining Path, Villanueva said. He added that under the present conditions it is impossible to talk with those who have chosen to kill Peruvians. Villanueva, who is also president of the Senate, said dialogue is founded on good will, which the subversives have not shown, persisting as they do with armed struggle and subversion. Villanueva said that the guerrillas are Peruvians on the wrong track and added APRA maintains the hope that the Shining Path will give up its attitude and stop subverting order and killing people.

In the past, Villanueva was convinced that dialogue was the way to appease the country, and he made continuous calls to the Shining Path leaders. But the Shining Path has never accepted the possibility of dialogue with the government, neither the one of former President Fernando Belaunde nor the present one of Alan Garcia. One of the Shining Path's main targets is the offices of the party in government, as an indication of its rejection of dialogue.

PUNO GROUP CONDEMNS ESCALATING VIOLENCE

PY270145 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1649 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] Lima, 26 Aug (EFE) -- The Catholic Church of Peru and the "Human Rights Commission" of Puno Department today released a document stating that this department could become "a new Ayacucho" due to the escalation of violence in the area. Puno is a department that borders Bolivia, where "Shining Path" activity is becoming more intense. This action is being opposed with repression, which causes more fear than the subversive action itself, according to Msgr Luciano Metzinger of the Peruvian Episcopal Conference "Social Action Commission."

After a few days of study in Puno -- under the theme "The People of Puno Want Peace" -- a document was signed by Bishops Augusto Beuzeville, Luciano Metzinger, and Jesus Barrueto, and by Father Gustavo Gutierrez, a Liberation Theology theoretician, and Martha Giraldo, president of the Puno "Human Rights Commission." The document states that the process of violence in Puno affects the institutions and the people of the department, with the emergence of paramilitary groups whose targets -- according to the document -- include the Catholic Church in the department.

The document adds that Puno is facing problems such as the negative action of nature, the historically bad distribution of the land, and the Shining Path's "senseless violence" to which the state responds with repressive violence "which does not differentiate the guilty from the innocent." The document adds that to this situation "is added the outrageous violence by alleged paramilitary groups." The document harshly criticizes the Puno authorities, pointing out "the discriminatory action of the courts, the often illegal and dominant action by the police, and the despotic and arbitrary activity of the local authorities."

The document concludes by saying that all this "can turn Puno into another Ayacucho," the department where the Shining Path began its violent actions 6 years ago, actions which have not ceased and which have led to a situation of continuous violence. This violence, according to ruling American Popular Revolutionary Alliance Deputy Alberto Valencia, of Ayacucho Department, is not committed solely by the Shining Path because there are groups that commit crimes and then attribute them to the Shining Path.

ECONOMIC MINISTERS APPROVE IMPORT BOND SYSTEM

PA251549 Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 21 Aug 86 p 5

[Text] The Central American Import Bond System [Derecho de Importacion Centroamericano] (DICA) was approved yesterday by ministers in charge of the economic integration of the area as a complementary mechanism to clearing houses and barter.

By means of the DICA, the Central American countries will be able to conduct commercial transactions through documents issued by central banks in local currencies that will be negotiable in third countries within the area.

The documents, which will be good for a period of 1 or 2 years, can be issued for an amount of up to 100 percent of the value of an import.

In order for this new system to go into effect on 1 October, the ministers asked the Central American Monetary Council to issue the rules of operation as well as to conduct a study of the necessary measures that must be adopted to reconcile the exchange rules that prevail in each country.

The ministers agreed through a resolution not to adopt unilateral measures that may restrict trade between the Central American countries and to make changes in the regulations that are presently in effect to avoid any discriminatory treatment for products coming from other Central American countries.

After the meeting, the economic ministers of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, Alejandro Martinez Cuenca and Luis Escalante, respectively, signed an agreement to reactivate the clearing house bilaterally with an amount of up to $6 million annually. Whenever there is an accumulation of $500,000, the clearing house will be closed. It will reopen when the deficit has been covered.

Likewise, Luis Fiallos, Nicaraguan deputy forestry minister [title as published], signed an agreement with private Costa Rican businessmen for timber exploitation in Rio San Juan and San Carlos. Central Bank representatives of Honduras and Nicaragua signed another agreement to renegotiate the debt between both countries. The Nicaraguan delegation also signed an agreement with Guatemala to renegotiate the debt and to open a clearing house.

The representatives of the Central American countries unanimously approved the resolution of the ministers, deputy ministers, and central bank presidents.

The Central American economic ministers participated in the event. They were Lizandro Soza from Guatemala, Ricardo Gonzalez from El Salvador, Luis Escalante from Costa Rica, Reginaldo Panting from Honduras, and Alejandro Martinez Cuenca from Nicaragua. The central bank presidents of those countries also participated in the event.

Authorities from the Secretariat of Central American Economic Integration (SIECA), the Central American Monetary Fund, the Central American Bank of Economic Integration (BCIE), and the Economic Commission for Latin American (ECLA) also attended the event.

DICA Called Blow to U.S.

PA252140 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1930 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] Foreign Trade Minister Alejandro Martinez Cuenca said today that recent agreements to reactivate Central American trade are a strong blow to the Reagan administration's policy. Martinez Cuenca was referring to the creation of the DICA, approved yesterday at the 26th meeting of ministers in charge of integration of Costa Rica, Honduras, Guatemala, El Salvador, and Nicaragua.

He explained that the fact that the five countries met to jointly discuss their own economic problems is a clear sign to Ronald Reagan that the military solution is not the way out of the regional crisis. He said that the $100 million in aid to counterrevolutionary groups, which he called the financing of terror, contrasts with the crumbs that the countries of the area receive from the United States in its efforts to make them accomplices to its illegal aggression. Martinez Cuenca said that the solutions offered by the U.S. Government to the recipients of these crumbs do not satisfy the financing needed to face the severe regional crisis. He recalled that in Central America only 40 percent of existing industrial capacity is being used, resulting in growing unemployment and other difficulties, in addition to reducing intraregional trade by 31 percent since 1980. He added that in this situation, measures are sought that can broaden the crisis [as heard], mainly those relating to methods of payment, like the DICA, which allows trade using the national currency of each of the countries of the area.

This agreement and others to jointly explore financing and new markets were described by the minister as positive, taking into account the very strong U.S. pressures which have always opposed these expressions of unification.

Guatemalan Minister Comments

PA251551 Guatemala City Radio-Television Guatemala in Spanish 0400 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] Economy Minister Lizardo Sosa Lopez confirmed today that the last meeting between Central American central bank presidents, which was held in Managua, adopted a new mechanism that will speed up the trade between Central American nations. The new mechanisms will be easier to handle by the private sector -- according to its interests -- to import merchandise and products without first submitting a list to get a permit. He said it is a document with an assigned value, which will be called a Central American Import Bond, which may be used as of 1 October of this year.

[Begin Sosa recording] The results are positive, because the main goal of the meeting between central bank presidents and ministers in charge of integration was to adopt or reject a decision concerning the creation of an additional form of payment for intraregional commerce. The resolution was adopted yesterday, approving the creation of a document that will be called a Central American Import Bond, or DICA, as of 1 October of this year.

DICA is a document that will be issued by the central bank in each country and will be payable -- only by that bank -- within a specific period of time. For example, if we want to import something from Costa Rica, using the DICA's, then we must find a Costa Rican exporter who is willing to receive the Guatemalan DICA. Then our local importer goes to the Bank of Guatemala, buys a DICA for an equivalent of $100,000, and sends it to pay for the imports.

Consequently the Costa Rican exporter keeps the DICA, and he may negotiate it in the stock market or with any other exporter in Costa Rica or in any other Central American country who wants to import Guatemalan products. [end recording]

In addition, the economy minister said that the central bank officials meeting in Nicaragua discussed the $190-million debt that the country has with Guatemala in the trade sector.

[Begin Sosa recording] We did hold some talks with the Republic of Nicaragua. It seems that we have reached an understanding, and this will be submitted to the monetary board as soon as possible by Mr Linares, president of the Central Bank. If the monetary board thinks that the terms of the agreement are acceptable, then we will be able to continue negotiating with Nicaragua concerning the eventual payment of their debt. As far as I am concerned, we talked with the Nicaraguan authorities about the possibility of reaching a trade agreement. In the meantime, we are trying to establish trade mechanisms for compensated commerce; in other words, they will buy as much from us as they sell to us. We had talked about $1 million per month, but this is subject to a consultation with the BCIE's national commission, which was recently created by the president of the Republic, and the president himself. If this is considered feasible, as I think it is, we might sign a trade agreement with Nicaragua in September. [end recording]

BLANDON CALLS FOR NATIONAL UNITY, EFFORTS

PA230342 San Salvador DIARIO LATINO in Spanish 21 Aug 86 p 9

["Excerpt" of speech by General Adolfo O. Blandon, chairman of the Salvadoran Armed Forces Joint Chiefs of Staff, at the Salvadoran Chamber of Commerce and Industries; date not given]

[Text] Perhaps never before have the Salvadoran people had to live in such difficult times as those we are experiencing now, after 30 years of war, during which over 99 percent of Salvadorans have been affected in one way or another: some of us have lost relatives, others have sought refuge in foreign countries, others have lost their property and others have been affected psychologically. All Salvadorans have experienced the consequences of the war in one way or another, because this is a special, modern war, stemming from the concept of classical war. This type of war is no longer the one through which people want to conquer territories; it is no longer the war through which the armies want to impose their will on the enemy.

We are dealing with the concept of vertical war [guerra vertical]. The concept of horizontal war [guerra horizontal] is going down in history. To win a vertical war we need not only military equipment and soldiers, but also the joint efforts of all Salvadorans who think that the democratic system is the best way of life.

The Salvadoran general staff has been working very hard in the past few months. We have been designing a new strategy, bearing in mind that this is not only a military war, but a political, social, ideological, and international one as well.

We cannot evade other countries' influence, and we all know that when a country experiences problems, several organizations begin to interfere. For example, when Nicaragua had its conflict, the Andean Pact came up. When the conflict spread over the region, the Contadora Group emerged. Another of those mechanisms was the French-Mexican statement. Thus, what can help us bring peace to the country? We have found only one way, and that is the unity of efforts by all good Salvadorans, including businessmen, workers, peasants, teachers, professionals, and the church. All of us have to make efforts to achieve peace.

In San Miguel I said that history put us in a critical situation, because we have an immense responsibility on our shoulders. What kind of country do we want for our children? A free country or an enslaved one? I am sure that none of us wants an enslaved country, and that is our great responsibility. Regardless of the battle, we are part of a generation that I call the generation of honor.

This is no time for quarrels or group differences. We must wear the Salvadoran uniform because that is the only way to take our country out of the conflict. The "United To Rebuild" plan was devised to favor those who have suffered the most in this war, to fulfill their basic needs, to allow them to return to their places of origin, and to make them produce again, because El Salvador has to produce much more than it does now.

That plan is not devised for a specific person or political party; it is for all Salvadorans, mainly for the most needy. For that reason, I am pleased to know that there are businessmen at this meeting. For the militarymen, that is very meaningful.

Perhaps, you, as members of the private sector, think and wonder about what you can do. Perhaps you have guidelines and are capable of putting together an efficient, active effort. I pray to God no one will politicize this plan, and I honestly admit that that is my main concern, because this is not a political plan.

Political parties should also support this plan if they really want peace in El Salvador -- a lasting peace, not an ephemeral one. We are looking for peace attained through work and love. We are experiencing extremely illogicial situations, because we are divided at a time when we need to be most united. We fight over trivialities and forget about the great danger that hangs over our country, because a confrontation is underway between two great systems, only a few kilometers apart, between Nicaragua and El Salvador: Marxism-Leninism in Nicaragua and democracy in our country.

Our unity will save the country. It is sad to see all the fights at the Legislative Assembly when it is time to be united. We, the militarymen, overcame that. People described us as an insensitive, incapable Army. They said we worked only from 0900 to 1700 and that we were interested only in looking after the interests of 14 families. Now we have earned a place in the people's minds and hearts, and we have also attained international recognition.

ZEPEDA VIEWS MEXICO TALKS, REBEL STRATEGY

PA220356 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 0145 GMT 22 Aug 86

[Text] San Salvador, 21 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- The Salvadoran Army stated today that the "rebels are using the dialogue as a propaganda maneuver" of their political-military strategy.

Colonel Orlando Zepeda, member of the Armed Forces General Staff and chief of military intelligence, analyzed the political and military strategy of the FMLN guerrillas during a meeting today with more than 200 Salvadoran businessmen.

Zepeda explained that the Salvadoran guerrillas have "divided their forces throughout the country into five kinds of units in an effort to wear out the Salvadoran Army." He described the operations of the "guerrilla units," which are comprised of four or five members [miembros] in charge of continually ambushing the Army; "mobile units," which are in charge of major military operations; the "special forces;" the "city commands," and the "expansion units."

"The guerrillas changed their strategy in the middle of last year; they went from large groups to small groups, because they were unable to face and wear out the Army," Col Zepeda explained. According to Zepeda, this new strategy engages the Army more frequently, and although the strategy has failed, "it has caused more than 2,000 casualties among our ranks since January."

Zepeda said that the guerrillas have other tactics, such as "destroying the economy, especially the country's most important products: coffee, cotton, and the electrical power infrastructure." He said that the guerrillas are also trying to disrupt the government, the Army, and political parties "by creating and promoting division among the political groups."

"The guerrillas want to make it appear that the Army belongs to the government, to a political party, to a person, something which is not true," Col Zepeda indicated. "The maneuvers and pressures in relation to the dialogue are other guerrilla tactics, an attempt to use the dialogue for their propaganda, so as to gain time in order to recover the strength they have lost," Zepeda said.

The leftist groups and representatives of Jose Napoleon Duarte's government held two rounds of talks in 1984, and representatives of both sides are discussing in Mexico now the possibility of holding a third round of talks. The aim of the talks is to humanize the war which for the past 7 years has been affecting El Salvador.

VENCEREMOS VIEWS PROPOSAL ON PRISONER RELEASE

PA231537 (Clandestine) Radio Venceremos in Spanish to El Salvador 0000 GMT 23 Aug 86

[Text] The government has offered to release 23 political prisoners in exchange for a solution to the problem involving Colonel Avalos. In this regard, we want to state clearly that for us the problem does not involve the release of 23 political prisoners. The problem is that there are currently more than 900 people unjustly serving jail sentences for no reason and without the benefit of a trial. Furthermore, the Army has seized mentally ill people in conflict-ridden areas, and they are being kept in penal centers today.

Hundreds of people who have never held a weapon in their hands are in the regime's jails. Many of them have no link with the FMLN; their only crime is fighting for their demands. It is very unjust to maintain this situation; 900 prisoners for no reason, with no evidence, without defined charges. Many have served years in prison in that situation.

In contrast, while jails are full of people, the justice apparatus released Colonel [Roberto Mauricio] Staben, a well-known chief of the death squads facing numerous charges.

We insist that the FMLN's objective is not the release of 23 political prisoners. In order to resolve the problem involving Col Avalos, we propose that the government show its goodwill by resolving the unjust situation affecting more than 900 Salvadorans held in prisons for no reason. The FMLN will ask the church for the lists provided by residents in conflict-ridden areas containing the names of relatives seized by the Army. Those lists contain the names of labor, guild, and humanitarian organization members who are serving prison sentences and whose release is being negotiated by the church.

GOVERNMENT FOREIGN TRADE MEASURES CRITICIZED

PA252317 Guatemala City Radio-Television Guatemala in Spanish 0400 GMT 25 Aug 86

[Text] On 21 August the government established severe rules of state interventionism that will control Guatemalan foreign trade. This action went completely unnoticed by the people, just like many other government actions which the citizens later regret. These measures, which tend to nationalize our trade with other countries, would only have to be complemented with a political decision by the government to buy all export and import products in order for a complete nationalization of foreign trade -- just as occurred in El Salvador approximately 6 years ago -- to take place.

In El Salvador this measure was accompanied by agrarian reform and the nationalization of banks -- actions to face a serious economic crisis, which nevertheless became even worse after these decisions of state intervention were implemented.

At the beginning of its term, the Guatemalan Christian Democratic regime decided to employ the services of the Swiss General Oversight Company, SGS -- the French acronym -- to oversee imports and exports. On 21 August this regime put into effect 29 measures that seek to control our trade with other countries in an unprecedented manner.

The measures seek to make effective the payment of duties to the government at a time when the administration's expenses have increased significantly. In other words, these actions are aimed at solving the government's problems even if this effort greatly affects the people, who will see that their ability to export will decrease. This decrease will result from the undeniable complication of having to go through more of the already existing bureaucratic red tape. Imports will suffer the same fate; this will result in fewer purchases of foreign products, meaning less quantity, less quality, and higher prices.

The people are to receive two blows, in the export and import areas, because a government that seeks to obtain bigger revenues -- as in the times of the best bonanza -- is stubbornly refusing to implement an austerity program demanded by the times and by common sense.

FOREIGN MINISTER ON NICARAGUAN ICJ SUIT

PA221628 San Pedro Sula TIEMPO in Spanish 21 Aug 86 p 5

[Excerpt] Tegucigalpa -- Foreign Minister Carlos Lopez Contreras announced yesterday that the government cannot yet establish the position that it will assume regarding the suit that Nicaragua presented against Honduras at the International Court of Justice [ICJ].

Members of the National Security Council met on Tuesday afternoon on the initiative of the foreign minister to evaluate the suit presented by Nicaragua against Honduras. They will meet again today to establish a position.

According to Foreign Minister Lopez Contreras, Nicaragua's suit "is based on Honduras' submission to the obligatory jurisdiction of the ICJ in The Hague through the court statute specified in Article 36 of the Bogota Pact, but Honduras made changes to that obligatory submission."

"Therefore," Lopez Contreras added, "a situation involving an obligatory submission by Honduras does not exist at this time in the face of any suit. Actually, we tried to limit the submission to essentially political conflicts, especially those related to the Central American situation." Lopez Contreras said.

Despite that, "the government has not yet made a decision as to what position it will assume in the face of that Nicaraguan suit, because, I repeat, the fact that Honduras has introduced a change on the issue of obligatory jurisdiction does not necessarily mean that it cannot -- should it wish to -- appear before the court to face the charges," Lopez Contreras said.

He pointed out that besides the possibility that Honduras could "appear before the court to face the suit, it could also present a countersuit," but we have not yet decided what we will do. [passage omitted]

Zimbabwe said that the United States should end all pressures against our country. Zimbabwe also condemned the recent escalation of ag ression threats against Cuba. It requests support for Cuba's just demand that the U.S. military withdraw from the Guantanamo naval base and compensate Cuba for the material damages we have suffered.

The draft of the final declaration being analysed shows concern over the imprisonment of Puerto Rican patriots in the United States and calls for their rights to be respected. [passage omitted]

ANGOLAN FOREIGN TRADE MINISTER ARRIVES

FL261855 Havana Television Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] Angolan Foreign Trade Minister Ismael Gaspar Martins arrived in Cuba before dawn today. Foreign Trade Minister Ricardo Cabrisas welcomed him.

Gaspar Martins told Tele-Rebelde the delegation he is heading will participate in the second meeting of the joint foreign trade commission which will discuss the development of this year's trade relations and the plans for 1987.

[Reporter] How would you describe the development of trade and cooperation relations in the area of foreign trade between our two countries?

[Gaspar Martins, in Portuguese with consecutive Spanish translation] As I said before, they are very positive. As you know, Cuba and Angola are facing an economic situation which is a result of imperialist manipulation of one of our basic products, oil. With the revolutionary and militant creativity we have, I believe we are here to find ways of going beyond these external difficulties which, naturally, have an impact but will never reduce the amount of trade or our commitement to strengthen our relations in the area of trade and economics. It forces us to be more creative in the search of these solutions. [end of recording]

'OUR AMERICA' ON CONTRA PRESENCE IN HONDURAS

PA251715 Havana International Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 22 Aug 86

["Our America" commentary, read by Norberto Hernandez]

[Text] Thanks to the proverbial kindness of Honduran President Jose Azcona, the members of three armies move freely throughout his country. They are the Honduran and the U.S. armies and the Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries.

The open and massive presence of thousands of Somozist mercenaries and Sandinist revolution traitors has resulted in an increase in crime, drug trafficking, and abuses against the Honduran population. The citizens of Honduras wonder how long they will have to endure the undesirable former guards and the paid CIA agents.

The Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries are everywhere. They are in and out of military bases. They go to shops and night clubs and roam the country to spend the juicy salaries they receive from the Reagan government.

Because of their servile attitude, the so-called contras like to change the names of Honduran towns, and now the town of Capire is being called Reagan City, and Cifuentes has been rebaptized as Kirkpatrick. Arenales is now known as Casey. These are allusions to Jeane Kirkpatrick, a former U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, and to CIA chief William Casey.

Although the presence of the freedom fighters -- as Reagan calls the mercenaries -- puts in doubt Honduras' sovereignty, the government of Jose Azcona remains indifferent to reports that the presence of the mercenaries has provoked the forced exodus of the indigenous population from more than 60 villages. Many of the displaced people are peasants, whose limited property has been plundered as Somozist and U.S. secure places are expanded.

But the contra business is too profitable to be abandoned by Honduran Government officials, some deputies, businessmen, military, and other elements of Honduran society.

Several of these elements have become part of the structure in charge of supplying food and clothing to the Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries in exchange for CIA dollars. Since their greed is stronger than their common sense, Honduran territory has become the site of intense struggles to determine who will receive the most profits.

In July an unidentified group attacked a house where a group of well-known Nicaraguan counterrevolutionary chieftains was meeting in Tegucigalpa, the capital of Honduras. Those who denounce this situation are terrorized. At the beginning of this month, a bomb exploded in the home of Rodrigo Wong, director of Radio America -- one of the most important radio stations in Honduras. Wong had criticized the deterioration of national sovereignty as a result of the presence of many foreigners.

As a result of the U.S. Senate approval of $100 million for the Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries, it is to be expected that rivalry among those in Honduras who assist the contras will increase.

Since greed is acute, government officials, politicians, businessmen, and military elements believe they have found an easy source of dollars, even at the risk of losing their lives in an immoral business where there are too many competitors.

COMMUNIST MARKET PROTECTION HINDERS SUGAR EXPORTS

PA260350 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0129 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] Santo Domingo, 25 Aug (EFE) -- The country is having problems selling sugar on the international market as a result of the communist countries' protection among themselves for purchasing sugar, Foreign Minister Donald Reid Cabral said today.

Reid Cabral explained that the country has not restricted its sugar sales for ideological reasons -- as has been said -- but it cannot sell its sugar due to that protection. This is the case of the USSR and other socialist countries preferentially purchasing Cuban sugar.

"We are in the free market, and anyone wanting to buy our sugar can do so freely," the foreign minister said, again rejecting charges that his country does not want to sell its sugar for political reasons.

This year the Dominican Republic produced some 45,000 tons of sugar -- 35 percent less than estimated -- due to a shortage of Haitian sugarcane cutters in its 1985-86 harvest and this production is enough to meet its international commitments and supply the domestic market.

The country normally brings in Haitian workers, from 18,000 to 20,000 annually to cut Dominican sugarcane.

MEDIA MANAGERS CONCERNED OVER FOREIGN INFLUENCE

FL231445 Bridgetown CANA in English 1316 GMT 23 Aug 86

[By Rickey Singh]

[Text] Bridgetown, Barbados, Aug 23, CANA -- Caribbean media managers have carried their deep concern about the negative influences of foreign television to Caribbean Community (Caricom) governments.

In a report prepared for the Caribbean Publishing and Broadcasting Association (CPBA) by current President Harold Hoyte, editor-in-chief of the Nation newspapers of Barbados, the CPBA proposed a three point action plan to tackle the issue. The report called for:

1. Joint Caricom action to establish a regional broadcasting and telecommunications authority to ensure that our airwaves are not used as an instrument of distortion, but rather as a force for regional integration.

2. The setting up as a matter of the greatest urgency, of a regional commission of men and women of integrity to examine the growth of media systems in the region with a view to determining the extent to which the control of the flow of information to our people is in the hands of Caribbean people; and to assess, on a territory-to-territory basis, how much information being passed on to our people is prepared for their specific consumption, and by whom.

3. The holding of a special meeting of Caricom ministers of information to specifically address the intra-regional flow of information and seek to arrest the penetration of foreign television and radio stations programmes by the establishment of a counterbalancing proportion of locally produced programmes of national and national supported radio and television stations.

The report which has been submitted to Caricom Secretary General Roderick Rainford for transmission to the 13-member states of the Community, is to be followed up with an indepth study later this year by a Canadian communications expert.

One aspect of the Canadian experts assignment for the CPBA will be to meet with a representative body of Caribbean opinion makers, including writers, academics, journalists, religious and political leaders, for their views on the particular needs of the region.

The choice of a Canadian communications expert, media sources told CANA, is related to Ottawa's own particular concerns, about the influence of television from neighbouring United States.

The intention is that both the Hoyte report and the follow-up report by the Canadian expert would have been carefully considered for the relevant action either before or at the next Caricom summit, scheduled for St Lucia in July 1987.

In expressing its general concerns, the CPBA, the umbrella organisation of the region's leading print and electronics media institutions, said that it was worried that in most territories of the Caribbean Community, there is a disproportionate amount of American-prepared television programming in relation to regional material.

In many cases, according to the CPBA's assessment, it is not possible to view more than thirty to six [as received] minutes of Caribbean-prepared material in any given day.

The CPBA says that it respects the right of free choice and freedom of the press, but that it regards the amount and nature of American television available to the homes of Caribbean people to be entirely out of proportion to the amount of Caribbean material that is offered.

The 11-page report, with various appendices, some reflecting the expressed concerns of some leading regional peraonalities, states on page five:

We are of the view that it is not good for our people to be subjected to this volume of foreign television material provided by those who through their size, strength and geography are well placed to make it available to the Caribbean at a relatively low price...

Neither our cultural identity nor our political sovereignty, nor indeed, our territorial integrity, the report continued, should be eroded by any foreign power as a result of our location or size...

Our examination of what is taking place quietly in the living rooms of thousands of Caribbean family units, as they sit innocently before their television sets, frightens us. It is a process of deculturisation which is painless, but also very thorough and long-lasting.

The CPBA report also makes the observation that alongside the rapid growth of U.S. television programming throughout the Caribbean is the expansion of Voice of America services.

It refers to a recent article in report on the America's on communications development in the Caribbean, which stated the VOA is currently working on a plan to spend as much as U.S. 50 million in the installation of at least eleven new transmitters in the region, including Belize, Antigua, St Vincent, Grand Cayman and Grand Turk.

All of this, said the CPBA, adds up to an unnecessarily easy access to Caribbean people from foreign, particularly American, sources and the eventual subversion of our culture...

We regard this domination as a challenge to the life-styles and value systems of a largely poor and vulnerable region. We anticipate that it can have the effect of threatening the orderly development of our societies, since it enforces in the subconscious false and unattainable goals and shatters the natural pattern of social and economic development of our dependent economies...

BARBADOS

ALLEYNE ON REGIONAL SECURITY SYSTEM PARTICIPATION

FL262012 Bridgetown CANA in English 1935 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] Roseau, Dominica, Aug 26, CANA -- The Barbados Government has agreed to participate fully in the regional security system, Dominica's Attorney General Brian Alleyne said today.

The RSS links the islands of the Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States (OECS) and Barbados mainly in coastline surveillance.

But after a change of government in May, new Prime Minister Errol Barrow expressed reservations about the security system.

However, Alleyne told the fourth Caribbean Youth Conference that Barrow had confirmed his country's full participation in the system.

The delegates and observers from 25 moderate political parties of 16 regional countries attending the conference applauded when the announcement was made.

The Dominican attorney general defended the role of the security system saying that the forces would not be used to interfere in a country's internal affairs, but would serve to protect the islands against external threats of aggression or from minority armed revolt against recognised legitimate authority within the islands.

Alleyne said the existence of such a relationship through a binding treaty among regional neighbours was a strong psychological disincentive to external aggression or unpopular revolt.

IMMIGRATION OFFICIALS EXPEL BELGIAN JOURNALIST

FL262357 Bridgetown CANA in English 2248 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] Kingston, St Vincent, Aug 26, CANA -- Vincentian immigration authorities have declined comment on the expulsion from the island of a Belgian journalist after only a nights stay.

Gert Declercq told reports he was working with Trends Financial magazine on an article on the operations of Owens Banks -- an off-shore bank with offices here.

Declercq said there had been allegations in Belgium that the bank was involved in a bad business securities deal.

The off-shore bank also has branches in the Turks and Caicos Islands where Declercq said he had already visited.

He said after being allowed to stay on Sunday night, immigration officers picked him up at his hotel in the capital early monday morning, took him to the immigration office where he was detained for about half an hour while his baggage were searched. He was then taken directly to the airport; and put on board the next available flight for Barbados.

Acting Police Commissioner Randloph Toussaint, who is in charge of immigration matters, declined to say why Declercq was deported.

CONGRESS SUPPORT OF U.S. TROOPS 'ASSURED'

PY271654 Paris AFP in Spanish 1517 GMT 27 Aug 86

[Text] La Paz, 27 Aug (AFP) -- The support of the Bolivian Congress for the presence of the U.S. troops -- to fight against drug trafficking in Bolivia -- was virtually assured today with the motion by the conservative Nationalist Democratic Action [ADN] deputies.

Despite having criticized President Paz for having allowed the U.S. Rangers to enter the country without Congress' approval, ADN Deputy Alfredo Arce Carpio said that we must put all the red tape aside and approve the fundamental issue, which is the fight against drug trafficking. Afterward, Deputy Mario Rueda Pena, from the Nationalist Revolutionary Movement of the Left [MNRI], was prevented from replying to Deputy Arce by shouts and insults coming from the officialist bloc, forcing the session to be ended.

Nevertheless, ADN and Nationalist Revolutionary Movement [MNR] votes together constitute enough of a majority to legalize the U.S. military presence.

The 170 U.S. soldiers and members of the Drug Enforcement Administration, DEA, arrived in the country on 15 July in a Galaxy airplane, which also brought six Black Hawk helicopters to help destroy dozens of cocaine factories, although they did not help arrest any important drug trafficker.

According to Waldo Cerruto, another deputy from the ADN, a political force led by former president Hugo Banzer Suarez (1971-78), congress will determine how long the U.S. troops will stay in Bolivia if they are needed.

President Paz' authorization provoked harsh internal criticism and prompted the creation of a national sovereignty defense council, as well as negative commentaries by the Peruvian, Colombian and Guatemalan Governments.

BARTHELEMY: SITUATION UNDER CONTROL, NO ARRESTS

PY280231 La Paz La Red Panamericana in Spanish 0000 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Text] Interior Minister Fernando Barthelemy has said that there are no people under arrest in the country and so far tranquillity prevails in the march for life being conducted by Bolivian mineworkers.

The minister praised the church call for dialogue and said the government has already established its position on the problem of state mines.

[Begin recording] [Barthelemy] I hope a solution can be found through dialogue, but the fact is that a response to the proposal for dialogue has already been received. A public response has been issued indicating that no dialogue whatsoever will be accepted if it is not what those political and union leaders want.

[Reporter] Is the government going to state its position?

[Barthelemy] No. The government has stated its position. It has been stated through a decree rehabilitating Comibol [Mining Corporation of Bolivia] which we believe is the only way to solve the problem. [end recording]

In conclusion, the interior minister said the situation in the country is under control and the government hopes that all pending conflicts will be solved with the understanding of all national sectors.

Miners Reject Decree

PY271423 Paris AFP in Spanish 2241 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] La Paz, 26 Aug (AFP) -- Miner federation leaders have categorically rejected a decree decentralizing the mining corporation of Bolivia (Comibol), charging that the decree, which was issued today, is genocidal and unconstitutional.

The leaders made this statement during a press conference in Patacamaya, 112 km south of La Paz, where over 5,000 miners, their families, and priests have arrived on a so-called march for life to demand that their jobs be preserved. The miners began marching on 22 August in Oruro and plan to end the march in La Paz, 230 km from Oruro. Organizations like the International Red Cross, the Human Rights Assembly, universities, political parties, and civic associations have supplied food and medicines to the marchers.

Miner leader Simon Reyes said the decentralization of Comibol will benefit private companies, which will seize the more profitable mines. He stressed that the miners will not abandon their jobs. Reyes added that the miners and the peasants of the region will sign a mutual defense pact, because peasants will also be affected since they will no longer be able to sell their products to the Comibol camps.

It was reported that the march for life will end in La Paz, where the government is seated, between 29 August and 1 September.

'STATE OF SIEGE' POSSIBLE TO DETER ARMS 'RING'

PY280317 Santiago Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 27 Aug 86

[Passages within quotation marks recorded]

[Excerpts] The government will adopt all proper measures to break up the extremist ring that has smuggled arms into the country: a state of siege is one feasible alternative, but its enforcement depends on the evaluation of events. Government Secretary General Francisco Cuadra made this comment today during a talk with journalists after a long Cabinet meeting that was also attended by Government Junta members and ministry under secretaries. The meeting was chaired by President Pinochet.

Cuadra said the main issue discussed was the discovery of the arms caches, in addition to the instructions issued by the president to each minister. The Cabinet also heard three reports. [passage omitted]

[Cuadra] "There was a detailed report on the present international situation, particularly regarding bilateral relations with border countries, and a specific briefing on the reports that have been issued at the international level by the Foreign Ministry through our embassies throughout the world, and particularly at the United Nations and the OAS, on background details regarding the arms caches found in the 3d Region and the metropolitan region." [passage omitted]

He also noted that the government is investigating everything that has happened.

[Cuadra] "[passage omitted] The government believes that there must be no hesitation nor contradictions on the part of citizen sectors and that they must be realistic so as to [words indistinct].

"The authentic responsibility [words indistinct] in our country is to isolate, eradicate, and confront all those sectors responsible for introducing an arms cache to promote violence, and chaos, and start a true civil war."

Cuadra noted that the government has called on the public to avoid social disagreement or secondary or inappropriate demands. He insisted that pertinent measures have been enforced from the very minute the arsenal was discovered in Carrizal Bajo in the 3d Region.

[Cuadra] "From the start of the investigations -- which led to the discovery of the arms caches in the 3d Region and later in the metropolitan region -- the government has been responding appropriately with what the situation demands.

"Therefore, each day we are evaluating the situation. The government believes it is not appropriate to accelerate certain situations if they are not truly justified by events."

Cuadra said measures appropriate to the situation will be implemented by resorting to all legal and constitutional means available.

Asked whether a state of siege would be imposed again, Cuadra said that this is a measure established by the Constitution and, just as has been noted by the defense minister, it is an alternative but that its enforcement depends on the evaluation of the situation.

He said the government believes some proposals made by Cardinal Fresno regarding an agreement between Chileans are interesting, but at present the government is mainly concerned with breaking up the subversive plan discovered when the arms caches were found.

[Cuadra] "In the press, we read the proposals made by His Excellency Cardinal Fresno. In this regard, the government finds that some proposals are quite interesting but our main concern at this time is to break up the entire subversive plan and its ramifications, among which are the arsenals found in the 3d and metropolitan regions.

"According to the information we have, there are weapons distributed throughout the country. These arms were part of the arms caches which have a high fire power and, therefore, can be used by terrorist groups. Our main concern now is to break up this ring."

Asked about Admiral Merino's statement about possible amendments to the Constitution, Cuadra said the government has always accepted the fact that in theory the Constitution could be amended because any law is susceptible to amendments. But he said the practicality of amending the Constitution depends on political, economic, and social circumstances and it has been noted that at present, this is not justified.

Asked about the government's opinion regarding the National Accord's proposal to hold free elections, Cuadra said although this proposal has not been studied in detail, he believes that the so-called National Accord has lost importance in view of the actions and statement made by its members.

Arms Transport Described

PY271603 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0344 GMT 27 Aug 86

[Text] Santiago, 26 Aug (EFE) -- The largest arms, ammunitions and explosives caches ever discovered in Chile during the 13 years of Pinochet government were brought ashore in fishing boats, according to a statement by the skipper of one of those boats.

Last night, the state-owned television station (Canal 7) aired the statement of Nelson Asencio Pardo, supposedly one of the 22 people arrested by security organizations in connection with the discovery of clandestine arsenals which -- it has been said -- were owned by the Marxist group Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front (FPMR).

In the account made public by the National Intelligence Center (CNI, political police), the military materiel found and seized weighed more than 50 tons, and was brought ashore in 2 shipments, one early this year, and the other on 27 July.

According to the Nelson Asencio Pardo's statement, he was in charge of the second shipment. He said he had become involved in the operation in May when a man, who introduced himself as "Pedro," offered to finance the purchase of a fishing boat that would be operated by Pardo to create jobs in the area of Coquimbo, a port located 460 km North of Santiago.

"Pedro" told Pardo he knew him since the 1960's when Pardo was a communist leader of a fishermen's union. "Pedro" then proceeded to give Pardo 6 million pesos ($30,000), with which the latter made a down-payment on the fishing boat Astrid Sue and agreed to pay another 2 million pesos ($10,000) later.

Continuing his televised statement, Pardo said that he -- as a brand new skipper -- went to see "Pedro" to give him "an account" after the fishing boat was acquired and the fishing operations had started with a crew, which was contracted for the purpose. At that time, "Pedro" revealed the real objective of the purchase of the boat: Transporting contraband arms.

In a broken voice, Pardo said that "Pedro" and his associates had forced him to accept the mission, threatening his family should Pardo refuse. They told me, Pardo asserted, that they were going "to burn my daughter." Then, on 22 July, associates of "Pedro" took over the fishing boat and at gunpoint forced the crew to go along with their plan. Next, they brought modern navigational and satellite communications equipment onto the fishing boat.

The boat under Pardo's command sailed off the coast and after approximately 26 hours, reached a point on the Pacific Ocean, presumably located out of the 200-mile zone, where it rendezvoused with a ship that appeared to be Cuban.

"When I boarded the ship, I saw a picture of Fidel Castro hanging on the wall of one of its compartments," Pardo said.

The skipper of the Astrid Sue recounted that it took about 10 hours to transfer the load of arms, ammunitions, explosives, and other materiel. According to Pardo, the load totaled some 35-40 tons, not counting the boxes that fell into the sea. The return trip was made in bad weather and so it took nearly 48 hours to reach the site chosen on the coast early on 25 July. The unloading was done over the next two days in the predawn hours, with the help of some 50 people on shore.

The skipper's testimony was aired by the state-owned television station on the same day the military prosecutor's office began to interrogate 22 suspected terrorists, who had been arrested in connection with the finding of the clandestine arsenals.

According to official reports, part of the materiel consists of: 3,115 U.S. M-16 rifles with almost 2 million rounds of ammunition; 114 Katiushka RPG-7 rocket launchers with 1,863 antitank rockets; 167 Law rocket launchers; approximately 2,800 kg of explosives; and other materiel.

11 Subversives Sought

PY280335 Santiago Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 27 Aug 86.

[Text] Eleven terrorists, who are under order of arrest for their connection with the gigantic arms caches recently found in the 3d and metropolitan regions, are still at large. The information about the existence of these 11 terrorists was reported by special military Judge Lorenzc Andrade, who is in charge of investigating the serious extremist plan. In a talk with the press, the military judge said he issued arrest warrants against 11 extremists. He also said that the 14 persons who were questioned yesterday afternoon -- placed under arrest and held incommunicado -- admitted their involvement in the arms caches case. The military judge noted that the 14 extremists have confessed they participated in the illegal introduction of arms to the country.

Regarding the 11 extremists at large, he said they are people who were involved in the arms caches discovered by security services in the Carrizal Bajo sector, about 90 km from the Vallenar coast.

He added that on 30 August at the latest, he will decide on the court proceedings to be undertaken against the 14 people who are under arrest and being held incommunicado at the preventive arrest center in Santiago Sur.

Investigations have established that at least two important offloadings were made from Cuban ships and, therefore, there might be more caches not yet detected. Judge Andrade has noted that orders were issued to carry out investigations in this regard.

Regarding the 14 people who are under arrest, the military judge noted two of those arrested have confessed they have participated in other violent activities.

Patrol System on 'Alert'

[Text] Captain Guillermo Aranda Pinochet, the commander of the naval garrison and maritime governor of Arica, has said: Our electronic warning system is on permanent alert, and permanent maritime patrols are being conducted. He made this comment in relation to the possibility that the large Soviet factory and fishing ships that operate 200 nautical miles off the Chilean coast might try to unload arms and explosives near Arica.

LANTERI CHARGES PROPAGANDA CAMPAIGN AGAINST ARMY

PY271608 Santiago EL MERCURIO in Spanish 15 Aug 86 p C-2

[Excerpt] Army Intelligence Department Director Brigadier General Julio Salazar Lanteri has charged that a propaganda campaign has been orchestrated to discredit the Chilean Armed Forces and the Army in particular. He added: "Marxist terrorism and its unconditional allies know very well that we are the pillar of our nation and our fatherland's most powerful moral reserve."

Salazar Lanteri stressed that if the Armed Forces remain united and committed to their duties, all attempts to create chaos will fail. "That is why we must keep on the alert against infiltration, which undermines patriotism and its foundations."

He said that the Army has been cowardly attacked and that several Army members have been treacherously murdered.

Salazar Lanteri made these remarks at a ceremony during which Ecuadoran military attache Colonel Miguel Eduardo Zaldumbide and Venezuelan defense attache Colonel Humberto Jose Nieto were awarded the medal of the "Star of the Military Order." [passage omitted]

BURNED STUDENT'S RELATIVES RELEASED AFTER ARREST

PY271337 Paris AFP in Spanish 0100 GMT 27 Aug 86

[Text] Santiago, 26 Aug (AFP) -- A military judge today ordered the release of a sister and brother-in-law of student Carmen Gloria Quintana, who -- according to witnesses -- was burned by a military patrol during a demonstration against the Pinochet government.

The 18-year-old university student was attacked together with Rodrigo Rojas de Negri, who died on 6 July of serious burns. Carmen Gloria is in critical condition with burns over 62 percent of her body at the Hospital del Trabajador in Santiago.

The military judge ordered the immediate release of Emilia Quintana and her husband, Sergio Fuentes, for lack of evidence. They had been arrested at their home on 25 August and accused of having helped construct a barricade when the two youths were set on fire.

Carmen Gloria's two relatives were confronted with the witness Pedro Martinez, who today was arrested at the order of the military judge for having admitted carrying two Molotov cocktails to set the barricade on fire.

The defense lawyers reported that another witness, who had blamed the military men for the incident, had been kidnapped for several hours by an unknown commando which threatened to kill him. The lawyers have requested a court injunction for this witness.

PS REPORTS KIDNAPPING OF THREE PARTY MEMBERS

PY272339 Santiago Radio Chilena in Spanish 1700 GMT 27 Aug 86

[Text] Nestor Ortiz, a member of the Socialist Party [PS], has reported the kidnapping and arrest of three PS members. He indicated that two of them were detained yesterday by unidentified individuals and the other was detained this morning. Ortiz said that the first kidnapping, yesterday at 1830 at 427 San Antonio Street, involved Gonzalo Fuentes and Miguel Acevedo.

[Begin Ortiz] Two party members were kidnapped by unidentified individuals at 427 San Antonio Street at 1830 yesterday. This is what happened: A man who identified himself as Lieutenant Fuensalida came to the office where Gonzalo Fuentes and Miguel Acevedo work to tell them he had recovered the car stolen 3 days ago. When the two party members went out to identify the car, they were forced into a car with license No CN6986. They are considered missing, since no one has claimed responsibility for their detention. [end recording]

Ortiz added that another PS member identified as (Freddy Cantino), who recently returned from exile, was also kidnapped by unidentified individuals at 0940 today. Ortiz pointed out that the kidnapping occurred at the same office at 427 San Antonio Street. He also said that Gonzalo Fuentes is currently the private secretary of PS Secretary General Ricardo Nunez. It was later reported that Gonzalo Fuentes, Miguel Acevedo and (Freddy Raul Cantino de Rios) were arrested on orders from the Interior Ministry, and that they were being held at the headquarters of the National Intelligence Center, CNI, in accordance with the law.

Jorge Molinas, the PS deputy secretary and member of the Democratic Alliance, has condemned the detention of the three PS militants by unidentified individuals. As we reported, Gonzalo Fuentes, Miguel Acevedo, and (Freddy Cantino de Rios) have been detained. The first two were detained yesterday, and the other one this morning. According to an official report, they were arrested on orders from the Interior Ministry, and they are being held at the CNI headquarters, in accordance with the law. Jorge Molinas indicated that after these people were detained, their homes were raided.

[Begin Molinas recording] We denounce the treatment received by many people in Santiago and the rest of the country. Their homes are raided under the pretext of searching for arms. They are detained by individuals who have no authority or warrants, and who do not indicate where the detainees are being held.

We are returning to the worst times of repression against Chilean people and homes. We believe that this is a maneuver to silence the (Documenta) Publishing House, which has the task of disseminating the democratic thoughts of socialism. The people who were detained are peaceful people who have never been arrested or in any violent incident. [end recording]

Molinas said this is the reason the PS protests the detention of its members and demands the disclosure of the exact locations where they are being held. The PS also wants to know why the government acts as it does.

CARABINEROS INVADE UNIVERSITY, ARREST 37

PY280213 Paris AFP in Spanish 1933 GMT 27 Aug 86

[Text] Santiago, 27 Aug (AFP) -- Reliable sources have reported that today the police invaded the College of Economics of the University of Chile -- the country's main university -- and arrested 37 students participating in a symbolic occupation of the college and supporting several demands.

According to student leaders, the students were dislodged by Carabineros -- the uniformed police -- at the request of college authorities in downtown Santiago.

The students of the College of Economics occupied the premises because of the silence of officials regarding their petitions, which include requests for student economic aid with limited resources, and for participation in the decisions of the college's Executive Board.

During recent months Chilean universities have experienced interference of university activity by General Augusto Pinochet's government.

He added that this fact, "has caused serious disunity among member associations of a traditionally united solidary confederation."

He finally announced that a national conclave will soon be called to decide what policy the confederation should follow. [passage omitted]

PRESIDENT BARCO SPEAKS AT ECOPETROL ANNIVERSARY

PA260345 Bogota Television Service in Spanish 0000 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] On the occasion of the commemoration of Ecopetrol's [Colombian Petroleum Enterprise], 35th anniversary, President Virgilio Barco and Mines and Energy Minister Guillermo Perry Rubio spoke about national conciliation and the current government's oil policy to be followed for the next 4 years.

In 1951, when the reversion occurred, only the Barrancabermeja refinery existed. It handled 22,000 barrels of oil daily. Today, we have two refineries capable of refining approximately 220,000 daily barrels of crude oil. At that time, only three products -- gasoline, gas, and propane -- were produced. Today, more than 60 products are offered in the market. The government's efforts will be aimed at restoring national peace and making possible the progress of alternate cities, President Barco said today in Barrancabermeja.

[Begin Barco recording] In my inauguration speech I announced that to consolidate what we had achieved and move forward in the way of reconciliation, an agency linked directly to the presidency would be created to direct and coordinate the political, social, and economic plans which contribute toward normalcy and promote the restoration of zones affected by violence. [end recording]

The president also said that, with Ecopetrol resources, regions that require the state's presence will be reached. President Barco returned to Bogota this afternoon. His public activities slated for tomorrow include a meeting with the Liberal Party's Central Political Commission headed by former President Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala.

Further on Barco Speech

PA260446 Paris AFP in Spanish 0053 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] Barrancabermeja, Colombia, 25 Aug (AFP) -- President Virgilio Barco demanded today the support of all of society to successfully complete the pacification and rehabilitation of the country.

At the commemoration of the 35th anniversary of Ecopetrol, Barco reiterated that to advance on a difficult path such as that of peace, "one needs determination, perseverance, goodwill, honesty, and loyalty in regard to commitments, procedures, and intentions."

After stressing that a new phase in the much needed reconciliation has begun, Barco noted that "it is a stage in which objectives and procedures are being institutionalized."

Outlining the policies that his government will follow to eradicate poverty, the president referred to the "alternate cities" [ciudades alternas] as a response to the isolation of rural areas.

"The alternate cities," he said, "will be centers of social and political modernization, as well as centers for the transfer of technology, including that which is applied to urban and regional planning and administration."

In conclusion, he referred to the administration of justice, emphasizing that the state will give the judges the instruments and protection needed to guarantee the impartial, effective, and prompt exercise of justice.

GOVERNMENT REJECTS U.S. OFFER OF RADAR

PA272000 Paris AFP in Spanish 0346 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] Bogota, 25 Aug (AFP) -- It was announced this evening that the government has stated its opposition to the installation of radar offered by the United States on the island of San Andres, located 115 miles from the Nicaraguan coast.

In an official bulletin the offer was rejected because the conditions placed by the United States "are not satisfactory."

This explanation comes after the publication in the latest edition of the U.S. magazine NEWSWEEK of an article that was later reported by an international news agency. According to the U.S. magazine, the radar -- which supposedly is for the purpose of controlling the air and sea activities of drug traffickers and illegal fishermen -- was really to "spy" on Nicaragua.

The press office of Narino Palace has issued the following communique: "The installation of radar on the island of San Andres for Colombian control of the air space and territorial waters of the San Andres archipelago has been a matter of discussion between the Colombian Government and U.S. ambassadors since 1983." The U.S. ambassador then was Mr Tambs. "When the offer was made," the communique adds, "it was determined that the radar was obsolete, that repair work was necessary, and that the installations of the plants and additional equipment would represent a high cost to Colombia."

"Following the visit to Bogota by U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz at the presidential inauguration (on 7 August) the U.S. Ambassador (C. Gillespie) made a new proposal, which this time involved modern portable radar equipment." the note adds.

The communique states: "Although this radar would allow the Colombian Government to improve the security of, and the control over, the territorial waters and the air space of the archipelago, it has been established that the conditions offered by the U.S. Government are not satisfactory because the radar must be the property of the Colombian Government and be operated by the military forces of our country."

It must be noted that Colombia, one of the most zealous members of the Contadora Group for peace in Central America, has had sovereignty over San Andres since 1928 as a result of the signing of the Esguerra-Barcenas Treaty, which established possession of this island, that recently has been repeatedly claimed by the Nicaraguan Government.

SUPREME COURT CHIEF CALLS MAGISTRATES 'HOSTAGES'

PA271352 Bogota EL SIGLO in Spanish 23 Aug 86 pp 1,3

[Communique issued by Fernando Uribe Restrepo, president of the Supreme Court of Justice; date not given]

[Text] I am very thankful to the president of the Republic; his secretary general; the government, defense, and justice ministers, and the high commands of the Army and national police for the efficient and appropriate manner in which they are fulfilling the most urgent needs of the Supreme Court.

The Colombian Army is willing to provide the special protection that the magistrates unfortunately need today, in view of the unprecedented attacks of which we are targets.

This determined and undoubtedly extreme action is only logical when one thinks that the constitutional code of laws must be defended with the same determination and zeal -- which we will have -- to defend the homeland's borders from enemy attack.

We, the magistrates of the Supreme Court, in some way, incredible as it might seem, are hostages in our offices, or politically persecuted inside our own country, because of the functions that the Constitution and the law assign us. Of course, we do not have a place to seek asylum.

In reference to the legal state system that has been in force for 100 years, it must not be forgotten -- as Daniel Webster said -- that without the Supreme Court, the Constitution would not be a constitution, nor would the government be a government.

OIL SELF-SUFFICIENCY EXPECTED TO CONTINUE

PA261511 Buenos Aires REUTER in Spanish 2328 GMT 25 Aug 86

[Text] Bogota, 25 Aug (REUTER) -- The new energy and mines minister of Colombia, Guillermo Perry, said today that the country will try to maintain its recently recovered self-sufficiency in oil until the next century.

Perry said that this goal demands that within the next 12 years, Colombia must find approximately 1.3 billion barrels of crude oil, which is equivalent to nearly one-third of the oil discovered throughout the oil history of the country.

He added this will entail drilling no less than 50 new wells per year.

Perry was appointed to the first Cabinet of President Virgilio Barco.

Speaking after the minister during a ceremony held in Barrancabermeja to commemorate the 35th anniversary of the Ecopetrol, the company's president, Alfredo Carvajal said that oil production amounts to approximately 340,000 barrels daily.

He did not give any export statistics, but an Ecopetrol spokesperson said that the petroleum products, including fuel oil, amounted to 8.91 million barrels in the first 7 months of the year, with a revenue of $184 million.

Some exports resumed this year, following an interruption of 10 years. The amount of 340,000 barrels daily is in sharp contrast with 108,000 barrels in January, and a goal of 390,000 barrels is set for late in 1986.

Carvajal, whose 18 months as Ecopetrol president will probably conclude next week when he is replaced by the newly appointed president, Francisco Chonna, emphasized that self-sufficiency and the resumption of oil exports will ease the trade imbalance by some $500 million this year.

ARMY NOTES RESULTS OF CLASHES WITH REBELS

PA270420 Hamburg DPA in Spanish 2012 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] Bogota, 26 Aug (DPA) -- The Army General Command reported today that during the first 19 days of President Barco's administration, 49 soldiers and 74 guerrillas died in armed clashes.

According to Defense Ministry reports, 30 military men, including soldiers and officers, were wounded during guerrilla attacks principally in the Departments of Antioquia, Cauca, Boyaca, Tolima, Valle, Cordoba, and the Arauca Intendancy, in the eastern part of the country near the Venezuelan border.

Military authorities reported today that 10 members of the Armed Forces died, and over 20 members of the so-called "America Battalion" were reported as casualties, as a result of bloody clashes which took place especially in southwestern Cauca Department, an area that covers the towns of Paez, Belalcazar, and Inza.

The Defense Ministry also reported that troops of the 3d, 9th, and 10th brigades are carrying out operations in Cauca Department. The brigades are using helicopter gunships and infantry units to repel the counterattacks of the guerrillas, who, commanded by M-19 Chief Carlos Pizarro Leongomez, have the support of Peruvian, Venezuelan, Ecuadoran, Panamanian, and Nicaraguan insurgents.

There are additional Army activities in areas such as Alto Sinu, on the border between the Departments of Antioquia and Cordoba, in the northwestern part of the country; lower San Jorge in Cordoba, Arauquita and Saravena in Arauta, Trujillo, and Roldanillo in Valle, and Tibu in northern Santander, where guerrillas of the Popular Liberation Army (EPL), the National Liberation Army (ELN), the M-19, and the pro-Indian group "Quintin Lame," ambushed military patrols causing a considerable number of military and rebel casualties.

Finally, it was learned that the military men wounded and killed in the clashes in Paez, Cauca Department, were transported by helicopter to the installations of the 9th Brigade in Neiva, southwest of Bogota, because that region is nearer Cauca, the scene of the clashes.

Regarding the ELN attack on the Army communication tower on La India Hill, Tibu Municipality, in northeastern Santander Department, it was reported that three guerrillas died and at least three soldiers were wounded during the attack.

PA261756 Quito Voz de Los Andes in Spanish 1130 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] The United Workers Front [FUT] has scheduled a 24-hour national workers strike on 17 September to protest against regime policies, especially the latest economic measures adopted by the Monetary Board. The strike will demonstrate the strength of the workers and general population and their rejection of the economic measures, the banking sector, and the international monopolies, said Edgar Ponce, president of the FUT. The platform of struggles established by the FUT, along with the call to the strike includes the following points:

Abolishment of the economic measures decreed on 11 August; freezing of the prices of staples, basic services, and rents; rejection of the increase of interprovincial and urban transportation fares; suspension of payment of the foreign debt; attention to the platform of struggles approved on 19 July by the FUT convention; the trial and dismissal of the finance, government, agriculture, foreign relations, and energy ministers; and the elimination of the executing units created by the government.

On 3 September there will be a march to the Parliament.

FOREIGN SECRETARIAT ON CORTEZ ARREST, INVESTIGATION

PA280418 Mexico City Red Nacional 13 Imevision Television in Spanish 0320 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Text] The Foreign Relations Secretariat has responded to the protest presented by the U.S. Embassy in relation to what it termed the illegal arrest and mistreatment of DEA agent Victor Cortez.

The Secretariat explains that Victor Cortez was assigned to the U.S. General Consulate in Guadalajara, and he was issued credentials for this purpose. It adds that his reponsibilities were limited to the exchange of information with the Office of the Attorney General in matters related to the struggle against drug trafficking. It notes that on 18 August Victor Cortez was arrested with Antonio Antonio Garate Bustamante, who had a criminal record and who had in his possession weapons reserved for the use by the Armed Forces. At the time of his arrest Cortez had neither his credentials nor his identification card with him.

In regard to the injuries and mistreatment, the Secretariat has ordered an investigation; it has been documented that he suffered only minor bruises. Moreover, the 11 people involved in the mistreatment of Cortez have been arrested.

The note confirms the firm intention of the government to strengthen cooperation against drug trafficking.

The U.S. Embassy has reported it views the beginning of legal procedures in this case as a positive event.

PERUVIAN PRESIDENT GARCIA TO VISIT IN OCTOBER

FL270328 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 0022 GMT 27 Aug 86

[Text] Mexico, 26 (NOTIMEX) -- Sources close to the Peruvian Embassy have reported that President Alan Garcia will visit Mexico the 1st week in October and will meet with President De la Madrid.

The sources said the invitation was made by De la Madrid when Garcia visited Mexico to personally present his country's assistance after the September 1985 earthquakes.

Garcia's visit was originally planned for this month; it was postponed due to the crisis Peru experienced after the assassination of the Sendero Luminoso prisoners.

The agenda of the meeting is not yet known, the sources said the conversations may include the foreign debt, bilateral relations, and strengthening Latin American unity.

The sources stressed that Garcia's visit is part of a diplomatic tour that includes attending the Eighth Nonaligned Summit in Harare, Zimbabwe, the UN General Assembly meeting, and a state visit to Egypt.

ESQUIVEL HEADS NONALIGNED SUMMIT DELEGATION

PA261946 Panama City LA REPUBLICA in Spanish 25 Aug 86 p 1

[By Luis Restrepo Rosas]

[Text] Vice President Roderick Esquivel will head the delegation to the Nonaligned Movement meeting taking place in Zimbabwe, Africa, this week.

The other members of the Panamanian delegation are: Deputy Foreign Minister Jose Maria Cabrera, alternate UN Ambassador Leonardo Kam, Major Luis Samudio of the Defense Forces, and PRD [Democratic Revolutionary Party] Secretary General Carlos Ozores.

Panama is a member of the Nonaligned Movement, which was founded by late President Tito of Yugoslavia along with Presidents Nasser of Egypt, Nehru of India, and Sukarno of Indonesia. In 1975 Omar Torrijos Herrera, who was then the head of the Panamanian Government, attended the Nonaligned Movement meeting held in Sri Lanka. It was at this meeting that he made the famous statement: "The missile that can destroy an ideal has not yet been invented," referring to the Panamanians' permanent struggle to recover full sovereignty over their territory.

At the meeting in Harare, capital of Zimbabwe, the delegation -- in which Vice President Esquivel will represent President Eric Arturo Delvalle -- will reiterate the effort to recover the Canal in accordance with the clauses of the Torrijos-Carter treaties, with the total fulfillment of the treaties within the time left for the interoceanic canal to be returned to Panama.

MATUTINO: U.S. AMBASSADOR DOES 'NOT FIT IN'

[Excerpts] Relations with the United States have not improved with the arrival of Ambassador Davis. On the contrary, there are reasons to believe that they are in fact deteriorating. Evidently, the ambassador's Paraguayan ways have not fit in well here.

Meanwhile, some officials in the U.S. Department of State and other U.S. Government agencies believe they are tougher cowboys than Reagan and that things can be done at gunpoint; this is causing friction.

CANAL ADMINISTRATOR'S POWER VIEWED AS THREATENED

PA262131 Panama City CRITICA in Spanish 26 Aug 86 p 1

[Article by Euclides Corro]

[Text] Talking to CRITICA, members of the Panama Canal Commission Board of Directors yesterday confirmed that there is indeed a U.S. "plot" to curtail the authority of the administrator who will be appointed in 1990 on behalf of our country to head that Canal company.

The Panamanian board members will discuss this situation and other violations of the Torrijos-Carter Treaties during the next meeting in October, "because we will not stand idly by in the face of these abuses," our source said.

He added that "indeed we are concerned over the fact that many directorates of the Panama Canal Commission are solely in the hands of U.S. citizens and that Panamanians are not being appointed or promoted to those positions."

He also confirmed that "on many occasions, the U.S. Administration preferred to eliminate the posts of deputy directors rather than appoint Panamanians."

Regarding the case involving the Marine Division, another of the directors noted that "it is advisable that Panamanians be trained so one of them may be appointed as deputy director as soon as possible, because that division handles the training of 'Panamanian pilots'."

At present, only 29 pilots out of 270 working at the Panama Canal Commission are Panamanian citizens.

It was noted that the attempt to grant autonomy to other directorates within the Canal Commission "could be a means to curtail the administrator's authority when a Panamanian takes over."

Another of the charges mentioned by the directors involves Section No 1106 of Law 96-70 which establishes the post and duties of a chief engineer with the same rank of a deputy administrator.

The U.S. President will decide the functions of this chief engineer, who is yet to be appointed. It is logical to think that the appointment will be made when a Panamanian administrator is appointed solely to curtail his authority.

In conclusion, they concurred that "on one hand, the goal is to have more executive positions for Panamanians, but on the other hand, every time there is a vacancy, instead of conducting internal examinations, U.S. citizens residing in the United States are given the opportunity to apply by announcing that they will receive a percentage additional to their wages, free utilities, housing, and trips for them and their families."

ARIAS DISCUSSES CONTADORA, CONTRA PRESENCE

PA272139 Paris AFP in Spanish 1907 GMT 27 Aug 86

[Text] Bogota, 27 Aug (AFP) -- President Oscar Arias said today that there are some 125,000 Nicaraguans in his country whom he considers an obstacle to the nation's social and economic stability. "These Nicaraguans, many of them contras, are probably the main obstacle we have in achieving the reactivation of our economy," Arias said in a telephone interview with the Bogota Emisoras CARACOL Network.

He said that [words indistinct] "a few of them are refugees who are being helped by public and private international agencies. The rest are undocumented people fleeing their country because they refuse to live under the Sandinist regime." Arias described these Nicaraguans as "people who cannot find a job, who are going hungry, and who are in search of new opportunities. That is why they cross the border."

"They are a serious problem for the Costa Rican people, and that is why we are interested, more than anyone else, in an end to the war in Nicaragua. We hope for the consolidation of Central American peace through dialogue in the Contadora Group," he said.

"Costa Rica reiterates once more that it rejects violence and hopes for the success of the Contadora talks to achieve a negotiated solution in the Latin American area," Arias said.

The Costa Rican president also said that his foreign minister, Rodrigo Madrigal, will visit Bogota this weekend to meet with his Colombian counterpart, Julio Londono, to prepare for a future Contadora meeting. "Costa Rica is pleased to find that it agrees on many points with Colombian foreign policy; we hope to continue the struggle to see if one day we can bring peace to Central America," he said.

Going back to the issue of the Nicaraguan contras, Arias said: "Any contra engaged in military activity will be expelled if captured. We have already expelled several of them," he said. "We have also removed from their jobs, no matter what their rank, those Costa Ricans who have cooperated with the contras in military activities that may threaten our democracy," he warned.

"Believe me, Costa Rica and President Oscar Arias have committed themselves to the entire world and especially to nine Latin American presidents to keep Costa Rica neutral and removed from the warmongering affairs of the region," he said. "We are in favor of democracy. We identify with the Western world's pluralism, and in the East-West fight we favor the West. Any other statement is unfounded," Arias said.

GARRON REPORTS U.S. ARMY ENGINEERS TO ARRIVE

PA270449 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 0035 GMT 27 Aug 86

[Text] San Jose, 26 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- Security Minister Hernan Garron Salazar said today that in January 180 U.S. military engineers will arrive in Costa Rica to participate in civic work. Garron said that the U.S. personnel will work with Costa Rican civilian police in the construction of two bridges in the region of Quepos, 200 km south of San Jose.

In addition, the U.S. engineers will carry out other civic works in the same area, such as the repair of schools and community installations. Garron did not mention the exact date of the arrival of the U.S. engineers or specify how long they will remain in the country.

Some 160 U.S. military engineers were in the southern part of Costa Rica between February and April 1986. During their stay they built a Bailey bridge and repaired another four bridges.

DUARTE STRESSES IMPORTANCE OF DIALOGUE

PA271456 Guatemala City EL GRAFICO in Spanish 26 Aug 86 p 5

[Text] In reference to the next meeting with guerrilla representatives in Mexico City, Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte has said that with this he is carrying out a peace policy of which dialogue is an instrument.

He said: This is why I cannot understand why the Nicaraguans do not want to talk with the contras, although they are their enemies.

He stressed that he will sit down and talk with the kidnappers of his daughter because he feels that dialogue is a necessary instrument in seeking peace. His efforts are aimed at this.

Duarte also said that no pact with the guerrillas exists and added: However, an honest proposal has been presented by the government, saying that El Salvador is undergoing a change, it has changed, and it will continue to change.

In order to achieve this, however, it is necessary for all sectors to join the democratic process wanted by all peoples. This is what Guatemala wanted, and this is why the people cast their votes, to change the country's situation.

Regarding some observers' descriptions of the government-guerrilla meeting as a partial success, President Duarte said that the fact that the dialogue will be held and that a date for it has been set defines the situation completely.

He said that this is the first step in the process. Another meeting will be held later to address details.

FMLN-FDR SAYS GOVERNMENT 'ENDANGERING' TALKS

PA280315 (Clandestine) Radio Venceremos in Spanish to El Salvador 0145 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Communique issued by the FDR Executive Committee and the FMLN General Command in El Salvador; dated 27 August]

[Text] Immediately following the agreement reached in Mexico City between our front and the Salvadoran Government to choose the city of Sesori, in San Miguel Department, as the place to hold the third round of talks, the following events have happened:

1. The government Army has militarized Sesori and is carrying out repressive actions against the civilian residents in the area;

2. The government's spokesman, Rodolfo Castillo Claramount, in contrast with the reasons we chose Sesori -- where there are no permanent Army positions, repressive forces, or organized civil defense groups -- as the venue for the third meeting and not Berlin, San Miguel or Gotera, has indicated that there can and undoubtedly will be the required and necessary military security to hold the talks in the places agreed upon and that this is the responsibility of the government and the Armed Forces;

3. The culture and communications minister, Julio Adolfo Rey Prendes, who headed the government delegation to the Mexico preparatory talks, has said that a definitive agreement was reached and that this agreement is not subject to the results of the upcoming preparatory meeting. This is not true, because we still have to reach agreements on important points such as the agenda, the truce, the participation of observers, and security in order to hold the third round of talks;

4. The government, with propagandistic intentions, is taking officials and the media to Sesori to review the community works that should be carried out. This is happening at this moment, when a national transportation stoppage has been decreed by the FMLN and when the government is also carrying out military operations in the area.

Based on the preceding facts, the FMLN states:

A) In the above described military situation, we believe that the propaganda and the press activities which the government is implementing in Sesori are not right and are very dangerous.

B) The date for the meeting is not definite until we reach an overall agreement, which should be discussed in the coming preparatory meeting to be held during the first 15 days of September. The place for the meeting is not confirmed until the government and the Armed Forces respect the demilitarization of the area.

C) The FMLN is maintaining its military operations plan. The national transportation stoppage will continue within this framework if the government's Army continues its military operations in several parts of the country. This situation will remain as it is until the two sides agree to a national truce that will permit the holding of the third round of talks.

D) The government's actions are endangering the Mexico City agreements and seek to hinder the third round of talks. Nevertheless, the FDR-FMLN reiterate their willingness to hold a dialogue and that they will attend the second preparatory meeting to review this entire situation.

BLANDON VISITS PERQUIN, MEETS REPORTERS

PA270450 San Salvador Radio Cadena YSU in Spanish 1948 GMT 25 Aug 86

[Report by Francisco Espinoza]

[Excerpts] YSU listeners, this is a special report from the eastern area of the country.

Today the Armed Forces carried out combined civic activities in Perquin, in war-torn Morazan Department. General Adolfo Blandon, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and other high-ranking military authorities were present for these activities. [passage omitted] The following are statements by Gen Blandon during a news conference with local and foreign correspondents in Perquin.

[Begin recording] [Reporter] The Armed Forces and the insurgents have been fighting over Perquin for a long time. What does your presence here represent? What meaning does it have in the development of the war or the development [words indistinct]?

[Blandon] This is an operation that is being carried out under the name of "23 October Heroes." This is the second phase of the operation. The first phase was carried out about a month and a half ago. It is part of a military plan drafted at the beginning of this year by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The plan is aimed at keeping the area of Perquin, which has endured constant terrorist actions, under the control of the Armed Forces. We undertook a very important tactical operation, and it has yielded very good results. The terrorist groups that operated in this area have been forced to disperse. According to the information I have received from the commanders, the terrorist groups have dispersed, and only small groups remain. These small groups are of no tactical importance in the operation we have undertaken in the area. The operation has yielded very good results, and we hope to maintain our presence in the area.

[Reporter] [Words indistinct] Joaquin Villalobos, one of the strongest Marxist leaders and a leader of the groups that are up in arms, held a news conference not far from where you are sitting. If the new round of talks is held and Joaquin Villalobos sits facing you and the representatives of the civilian government, will he have the same negotiating power he had last year when he held that news conference, or has there been a substantial change in the balance of power?

[Blandon] The balance of power has shifted substantially. I do not feel they now enjoy the same situation they enjoyed in Ayagualo or La Palma. They are weak. The number of terrorists throughout the country has decreased noticeably. They are facing deep ideological problems and serious problems with the [word indistinct] of their soldiers [efectivos militares]. Regarding their military situation in terms of this round of talks, I feel that militarily it is not good.

[Reporter] What is the Army's opinion of this? If you are winning the war and the situation is favorable for you, why would you sit down to negotiate?

[Blandon] Because we are a professional Army and a professional Armed Forces. We are men who have fought for more than 6 years. We are prepared for war. We are experienced. However, this does not mean that we are not reasonable. Our people have suffered and endured a 6-year war, and we must give them peace. We must do our share to give them peace. While Joaquin Villalobos is announcing that the war will be expanded throughout the country, the Armed Forces is announcing a peace plan for everyone. The Armed Forces is announcing the "United To Rebuild" plan, which is quite different from Joaquin Villalobos' plan that calls only for death and destruction. We are announcing a plan that will return the displaced people to their homes, rebuild the homes destroyed by violence, and return calm, peace, and work to all Salvadorans.

[Reporter] How much medicine did you distribute here today? Where did it come from?

[Blandon] I cannot say how much medicine we are distributing, not in amounts. This aid is coming from the various ministries and from international aid.

[Reporter] General, how long will the troops remain in this area?

[Blandon] That will depend on the development of the operation. I have not held a final meeting with the commanders leading the various groups. After this news conference I will meet with them, and we will decide on this matter.

[Reporter] General, there seems to be a trend [words indistinct] several proposals made by [words indistinct] leftist groups and lately also (?bombarded) by the Catholic Church. If the search should turn up obstacles, should a way to soften this [word indistinct] position be sought and [words indistinct] to hold a dialogue with the rebel groups? What is the Army's position?

[Blandon] That would have to be studied by the government. Domestic and international policies are directed by the president of the Republic. Therefore, to amend the Constitution it is necessary for two constituent assemblies to approve these changes. If other mechanisms are sought and the Constitution can be amended without going through this procedure, then the Supreme Court of Justice or any other government organization can amend it. [sentence as heard] Militarily, I cannot give you a specific answer.

[Reporter] [Question indistinct]

[Blandon] That is absurd, totally absurd. It is one of the positions that must be changed if they really have the political will for dialogue to achieve peace and reach a positive [word indistinct] through the dialogue.

[Reporter] [Words indistinct]. There are two positions: The government insists that the rebels must lay down their weapons, and the rebels speak of [words indistinct] two armies. [Sentence indistinct].

[Blandon] The president of the Republic was chosen by the people during an election you all witnessed. He was chosen freely, and the Constitution does not allow him to share power. It is totally illogical for an armed group to try to get a share of power through (?rifles) and [words indistinct]. If they want a share of power they must [words indistinct] in Perquin; they must fight us politically. The Constitution allows them to do this.

[Reporter] [Words indistinct] the FDN and the various groups fighting against the Managua regime [words indistinct] cut the flow of weapons coming from Nicaragua for the Salvadoran guerrillas. Has this ended [words indistinct]? Is there any truth to reports that the Salvadoran Army could help the anti-Sandinist guerrillas with training or advisers?

[Blandon] We have been enduring the effects of the Sandinist support for (?our terrorists) for more than 6 years. We all know that the terrorists have been trained, armed, [words indistinct] from Managua. However, the Salvadoran Army has not talked about how, at any given time, we could support (?a force) that helps the anti-Sandinists. [end recording]

AZCONA, DUARTE VISIT, VIEW C.A. SITUATION

PA270026 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 1950 GMT 26 Aug 86

[By Alberto Flores]

[Text] Guatemala, 26 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- In Guatemala today Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte and Honduran President Jose Azcona Hoyo talked about guerrilla activities and their consequences for Central America. The two presidents are in Guatemala to participate in a convention of the Pan-American Federation of Engineering Societies which began its working meetings today.

During a news conference, Duarte Azcona agreed that "the Central American conflict can be solved only by Central Americans with the political will to understand that peace can be attained solely through a democratic process."

The suit presented by Nicaragua at the International Court of Justice [ICJ], in which Nicaragua accuses Honduras and Costa Rica of supporting U.S. plans for intervention, was described by Duarte as "thoughtless and inadmissible." Duarte said: "Above all, this thoughtless attitude of the Nicaraguan Government is inappropriate, because at the Esquipulas summit on 24 and 25 May the five Central American presidents spoke frankly and decided to continue the dialogue."

Azcona Hoyo denied Nicaragua's accusation that "Honduras is occupied by U.S. military interventionist forces." President Azcona said that the presence of U.S. military advisers in Honduras does not represent intervention, because they have always been there, as they have been present in many other Central American countries and the rest of the world.

Asked whether Honduras is getting ready to match its forces with those of Nicaragua, Azcona said: "An arms race is not beneficial for the people, and Honduras is not involved in one." Regarding the number of soldiers in the Honduran Armed Forces, Azcona described the Armed Forces as "a very conscientious body, composed of some 15,000-17,000 men, including the police force."

He added that "this year, very few U.S.-Honduran military maneuvers have been carried out." He explained that most activities were limited to works to benefit the Honduran people, including the construction of nonstrategic roads.

In other statements to the press, President Duarte revealed that "5 years ago, Nicaragua gave 100 tons of weapons to the Guatemalan guerrillas to destabilize the military government of Fernando Romeo Lucas Garcia."

"The Sandinist government is subordinated to the interests of the communist countries, which want to expand their Marxist philosophy through all of Central America," Duarte said, adding: "The Sandinists are playing their East-West cards." Duarte asserted that "the Sandinists do not find a solution to their internal problems because they have a totalitarian, aberrant system, which permits no criticism." He gave as an example of this the closing of the Nicaraguan newspaper LA PRENSA.

For the Salvadoran president, the freedom of the press example is sufficient "when one compares the censorship that exists in Nicaragua with the free criticism that appears every day against the other area governments." Then he wondered: "If internally Nicaraguans are trying to blame the U.S. people, the Catholic Church, and all those who opposed their decisions, how will they reach an understanding with countries that want to consolidate a pluralist and democratic government?"

Duarte accused Nicaragua of being "a bridge for the support that the Guatemalan and Salvadoran guerrilla movements receive from the rest of the communist countries." He said that "so long as there is a communist government in Nicaragua, there will always be problems in Central America."

Duarte on Democratic Process

PA270403 Guatemala City EL GRAFICO in Spanish 26 Aug 86 p 2

[Text] Guatemala City, 26 Aug -- Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte has said: Only Central Americans can understand Central America's problems. With political willingness, all must understand that only through a democratic process is it possible to achieve peace.

He said that he is concerned about Nicaragua's puzzling actions and rash stance. Nicaragua does not seem to understand that only through the joint work of the five countries can a solution be attained.

Duarte added that for this reason Nicaragua's accusing Costa Rica and Honduras at The Hague International Court seems entirely improper to him. He said that this is particularly true after the Esquipulas meeting where the two sides spoke frankly about their continuing to talk.

Duarte also said that after all the efforts made by the vice presidents to create a Central American parliament, Nicaragua has now assumed an entirely thoughtless posture and has sued two Central American countries.

Duarte yesterday dismissed any possibility of combining his country's national Army -- to form a single armed body -- with the rebel groups that fight against his government, as the guerrillas have demanded to conclude a peace pact.

Duarte made these remarks in Guatemala City when attending the opening of UPADI [Pan-American Federation of Engineering Societies] 1986 convention.

The Salvadoran president described the rebels' proposal as "an absurd idea" and said that this was an insurgents' strategy to hold his government responsible for an eventual failure of the current negotiations. Duarte said that several factors determine his posture as opposed to the guerrillas' proposal. "They want a state within a state. This is impossible and unconstitutional."

Duarte Denies Trade Restrictions

PA270353 Guatemala City Radio-Television Guatemala in Spanish 0400 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte today dismissed the possibility of his government's imposing trade restrictions on Guatemala, as was reported some days ago.

[Begin Duarte recording] Vinicio Cerezo spoke to me over the telephone precisely about what you have mentioned. I told him that so far we had not given thought to any type of retaliation. We have been trying to solve problems. There are always problems, of course. We have always tried to solve them through understanding. This is why I told him to stop worrying; such a thing would not happen. We would not close the border.

I also told him it would be better if the economy minister and the Central Bank president met to discuss these matters that affect both Guatemalan and Salvadoran industries. The Guatemalan farmers who sell produce worth $90 million yearly to El Salvador would be harmed. We do not want this to happen. We want to achieve sensible solutions through understanding for the good of Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, and even Nicaragua. All these countries can try to find economic, political, and social solutions that lead to peace. This is the way to peace and understanding. [end recording]

AZCONA MEETS WITH U.S. OFFICIAL WALKER

PA271603 Tegucigalpa LA TRIBUNA in Spanish 27 Aug 86 p 7

[Text] Tegucigalpa, 26 Aug (AFP) -- President Jose Azcona and William Walker, U.S. deputy assistant secretary of state for Central America, met today to analyze the regional crisis, official reports have indicated. Walker's visit coincides with the arrival in Tegucigalpa of Arturo Cruz and Alfonso Robelo, the leaders of the Nicaraguan Opposition Unity (UNO), Frank Arana, FDN spokesman in Honduras, told AFP.

Walker is the assistant to Elliott Abrams, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, a key official in the U.S. approval of the $100 million for the Nicaraguan contras.

Along with Secretary of State George Shultz, Abrams also decided on the surprising removal of former Ambassador to Honduras John Ferch, because it was considered that he would not be effective for the implementation of the program for the anti-Sandinist rebels.

According to local news media, Walker reportedly contacted Cruz and Robelo, but Arana said that he was unaware of such a possibility. Meanwhile, a U.S. Embassy spokesman told AFP that he "knows nothing" about the alleged meeting between Walker and the UNO leaders.

Regarding the meeting between President Azcona and Walker, the spokesman said they discussed "bilateral topics," not mentioning any specifics. Walker said only that "we had a conversation on many topics," and when asked about the channeling of the aid to the rebels said only: "No comment."

On his part, a government house spokesman told AFP that during the dialogue they discussed "issues of national and regional interest." Walker's visit comes a few days after President Azcona and General Humberto Regalado, commander of the Honduran Armed Forces, said that they will not permit the training of contras in Honduran territory or the passage of the aid to the rebels through the country.

REGALADO COMMENTS ON CONTRA AID DISTRIBUTION

PA260427 San Pedro Sula TIEMPO in Spanish 25 Aug 86 p 2

[Text] San Pedro Sula -- General Humberto Regalado Hernandez, commander of the Armed Forces, has said that the United States will respect Honduras' sovereignty, as manifested by its decision not to allow the delivery of the military and economic supplies to the contras, and to prevent their training in [Honduran] territory.

Regalado had previously said that the Green Berets will not be allowed to train the contras in Honduras; the transit of supplies coming from the $100 million approved by the U.S. Congress for the Nicaraguan rebels will not be permitted, either.

Regalado refused to comment on the mechanism the Armed Forces will actually use to enforce this decision and to prevent the provisioning of the contras through Honduras.

He said: "This will not be allowed " "At least, we, the Armed Forces, are not willing to train the contras."

Regarding the possibility that the Reagan government may exert (economic) pressure to try to weaken the position of the government of [President Jose] Azcona and of the Armed Forces, Regalado did not say how they plan to face this kind of situation. "I do not believe that will happen. This would be an act against our sovereignty, and I believe that the United States will respect it," he said, but he admitted that it is possible this could happen.

Commenting on this possibility, he said: "This would be an act that would lead us to a situation similar to the one we had with El Salvador."

It was not possible to determine whether he was referring to the 1969 war or to later times, when U.S. advisers trained the Salvadoran Army in Puerto Castilla.

Moreover, Regalado reiterated that the Armed Forces "are concerned" about the conflict between the ASU [not further identified] and the National Agrarian Institute (INA) union and its director. He said this situation has its origins outside the borders.

"It is a movement supported by Nicaragua aimed at destabilizing the country. Nicaraguan Marxists have infiltrated the organizations," he said, adding: "Honduras represents a problem for them, because it is an example of democracy, and Nicaragua is determined to export its system to its neighbors."

TIEMPO asked Regalado if this situation could bring a change in the position of the Armed Forces regarding the contras.

He said: No, we support the decision the president has taken. Azcona Hoyo defines both the foreign and domestic policies, and if he believes it necessary to make any changes, the Armed Forces will support him.

Regarding the item published in the Armed Forces magazine linking newsmen and directors of the media to "subversion and communism," he said that the article was misinterpreted. What happened, he said, is that it was related to the case of Uruguay, where "the Tupamaros and the press were involved in subversive matters."

"The Armed Forces did not authorize the commander who wrote the article to write it, and does not share the views of the magazine." By the way, he said, "this magazine is not the official mouthpiece of the Armed Forces, and we do not believe that the local media are subversive or are being influenced by communism," he said.

MALMIERCA PRAISES NONALIGNED SUMMIT DRAFT

FL270226 Havana Television Service in Spanish 0000 GMT 27 Aug 86

[Statements by Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca; date and place not given -- recorded]

[Text] We have studied the documents prepared by Zimbabwe to draft the declaration of the Eighth Nonaligned Summit, and we have evaluated it as a very positive document that, in our opinion, unites all the necessary elements to allow the declaration to serve the principle goals of the movement. The document makes references, which we consider to be generally correct, to the principle problems of the current international situation and places special importance to the struggle for the deferse of peace, the need to link disarmament efforts with development efforts. It also lends special importance to the necessary struggle to eliminate the apartheid regime and achieve Namibia's independence. Reference is also made to practically all the current world situations. In the Latin American and the Caribbean section, there is a paragraph we believe correctly evaluates the situation in our area. In brief, we believe the draft declaration is a useful basis that will allow advancement at the conference.

Document Refers to Guantanamo

["Note," read by Norberto Hernandez]

[Text] The press has learned that the Eighth Nonaligned Summit, which is to begin shortly in Harare, will renew the demand that the U.S. Naval Base in Guantanamo be dismantled. For the past 25 years, since the birth of the Nonaligned Movement in Belgrade, each of the group's summit meetings have demanded the unconditional withdrawal of that Yankee military enclave, which is viewed as being highly harmful for territorial integrity and sovereignty. The paragraphs including the demand are part of a document which expresses opposition to all foreign military installations. The heads of state and government present in Harare will review this document. It will then be included in the conference's final declaration. In addition, the draft document rejects the economic embargo imposed by the United States on Cuba for almost a quarter of a century. It demands that Washington pay an indemnity for the material damage caused by this arbitrary action. These views, which aim to defend the fundamental rights of the Cuban people as well as the rest of the Third World nations in the face of imperialist arrogance, take on a special meaning following the report from Washington that the Ronald Reagan government has decided to intensify the economic embargo, and increase its watch on U.S. citizens who wish to visit here. The Nonaligned Movement's support for the Cuban demands -- prompted by the presence of Guantanamo base -- constitute a strong encouragement for our people. This indicates that reactionary forces are no longer able to handle international relations however they wish. Harare will be a new podium of solidarity with the nation that is hoisting the banners of dignity and revolutionary principles under the noses of the northern empire.

BOUTERSE DENOUNCES ATTACKS AGAINST PROCESS

FL251537 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 0142 GMT 24 Aug 86

[Text] Paramaribo, 23 Aug (SNA-NOTIMEX) -- Suriname's Commander of the Revolution Desi Bouterse has charged that the struggle of criminal bands is not against his Army but against the ideas of the revolutionary process and against the awareness that the people have begun to gain.

The revolutionary chief's denunciation was made following an attack against a military patrol on 21 August, during which four soldiers were killed, five wounded, and several disappeared.

During a meeting of the 25 February Movement, an organization which supports Bouterse, its members called for Prime Minister Pretaap Radhakishun to adopt measures directed at making the Governments of France and the Netherlands stop the aid being given by foreign forces to the Brunswijk band and to end the operations of the band on territory of French Guiana.

Crisis Team Considered

The national assembly is said to be considering the proposal.

GOVERNMENT DECREE ORDERS STATE OF SIEGE

PY281325 La Paz La Red Panamericana in Spanish 1130 GMT 28 Aug 86

["Text" of Decree 21,378 issued on 27 August; read by Minister Secretary of the Presidency Juan Carlos Duran -- live]

[Text] Whereas, after a careful socioeconomic analysis, which took into account proposals from several organizations, the government designed a plan to overcome the crisis caused by hyperinflation.

Whereas this plan establishes -- among other measures -- the unpostponable need to reactivate the state-owned mining sector, which has been affected by serious managerial imbalances and by a price slump, especially the unprecedented collapse of the tin market.

Whereas this unpostponable decision by the executive branch has been met by illegal general strikes, movements that paralyzed the cities of Oruro and Potosi, destruction of railroad tracks, assaults on state-owned property, seizure of mines, disrespect for the authorities, and threats to aggravate the conflict through the displacement of marchers to the city of La Paz.

Whereas the objectives of the march -- to which the government has agreed as it was initially supposed to be a peaceful demonstration -- as been distorted by the political maneuvers of extremist groups, which have promoted a violent insurrection to discontinue the Bolivian democratic process.

Whereas the situation violates the Constitution, jeopardizes social peace and tranquillity, and creates an atmosphere of violence of unpredictable consequences.

Whereas Articles 111 and 112 of the Constitution empower the executive branch to declare the state of siege to preserve order and social peace, the president of the Republic, with the approval of the Council of Ministers, hereby decree:

Single Article: The state of siege is hereby declared throughout the entire Bolivian territory. The interior minister shall enforce this decree.

Signed at Government House in La Paz on 27 August by Victor Paz Estenssoro and by the Cabinet members.

Arrests Begin

PY281457 Paris AFP in Spanish 1305 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Text] La Paz, 29 Aug (AFP) -- After a long meeting of Cabinet ministers and high-ranking military commanders, the government has declared a state of siege to counter the serious political and social crisis that is shaking the country. This has been officially announced in La Paz. The Information Ministry released today the text of Decree 21,378 whereby measures with which the government expects to secure social peace are adopted. The government asserts that public order is being disturbed by a march of 6,000 miners, women, youths, peasants, students, and politicians that is heading to La Paz.

In addition to declaring the state of siege, the authorities have ordered the arrest of labor and political leaders, journalists, and other personalities in the cities of La Paz, Oruro, Cochabamba, Santa Cruz and Sucre. Among the detainees are Aldo Flores and Jose Maria Palacios, leaders of the Bolivian Labor Confederation (COB); Andres Soliz Rada, leader of the Journalists Federation and AFP correspondent in Bolivia, and his colleagues Jorge Barrientos and Gonzalo Quiroga; and Jorge Abasto and Flavian Unzueta, leaders of the Factory Workers Union. The residence of Walter Delgadillo, COB Secretary General, was searched. However, since Delgadillo is out of town coordinating a 24-hour strike scheduled for tomorrow, he could not be arrested.

In the last couple of hours, police forces occupied the premises of the Greater University of San Andres and placed guards at public buildings. Military personnel, placed on state of emergency, are patrolling the streets of La Paz, while Air Force planes are making low flights over the city and the so-called March for Life and Peace that is now 100 km from La Paz.

Opposition congressmen told AFP that this executive branch decision is arbitrary, because it not only suppresses freedom of organization and assembly, but it also disrupts the ongoing democratic process.

In recent days unionists and politicians have organized marches and demonstrations against the government, which they blame for the closing of several mining centers and the dismissal of 14,000 workers, the tax policy, and the intervention of U.S. troops in Bolivia.

In the past few hours the Catholic Church proposed a meeting between government officials and labor leaders to seek a solution to the conflict. However, the government did not respond to the bishops' proposal.

Meanwhile, the human rights organizations have expressed concern over what may happen to marchers walking along the Oruro-La Paz Highway, since the state of siege forbids demonstrations, gatherings, and collective actions. The marchers are approaching important military installations.

Barthelemy: March 'Subversive'

PY290335 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0232 GMT 29 Aug 86

[Text] La Paz, 28 Aug (EFE) -- Bolivian Interior Minister Fernando Barthelemy today confirmed the arrest of 161 people as a result of the implementation of the state of siege since early this morning. The list disclosed by the minister during a press conference indicates the party affiliation of those arrested. They include mostly union leaders and members of the Communist Party and the Democratic Convergence.

The long list of arrests in La Paz, Potosi, Oruro, Tarija, Santa Cruz, Trinidad, Sucre, and Cochabamba also includes reporters, university students, one university rector, teachers, two seminarists and a member of the Methodist Church.

The minister said that there is also a list of people being sought for arrest, but he did not say how many.

He indicated that he was not aware if any of the people being sought have taken asylum in La Paz embassies.

Once the people under arrest have been interrogated and a determination made as to the degree of their participation in activities considered by the government to be subversive, they could be banished to places distant from the capital probably in Pando and Beni Departments.

Barthelemy explained that on the first day of the "March for Life ad Peace" conducted by miners from Oruro, which was stopped this morning by security forces, seven boxes of dynamite sticks with detonators and fuses were found and shown to the press. The minister also said that this morning a dump truck on its way to La Paz was intercepted. It carried 30 boxes of dynamite sticks, presumably, according to the minister, to be exploded when the miners arrived in the capital.

The minister also indicated that this morning the Armed Forces had to take control of the streets in Oruro and Potosi because of the chaotic situation and the absence of authority. He also referred to a demonstration "of a violent nature" that took place this morning in the city of Oruro, where a police officer and a university student were wounded. According to Barthelemy, a stick of dynamite exploded in the student's hands.

The determining factor that led the government headed by Victor Paz Estenssoro to decree a state of siege in the predawn hours yesterday was explained by the interior minister, who said that a change in the orientation of the miners march and been detected.

According to Barthelemy the "March for Life and Peace" in the last few days had become a movement that was being used by marginal and radical sectors who planned to arrive in La Paz to create disorders and to try to force--through violence--the resignation of the government.

The interior minister praised the role of the armed forces and police in the operations that they carried out during the first day of enforcement of the state of siege. He noted that civilian agents described as "paramilitary" have not taken part in Armed Forces operations.

About the blowing-up of an antenna and the destruction of Channel 13 television broadcasting equipment, the interior minister said that it is possible this action was perpetrated by agents of the "extreme right." He added that an investigation has been undertaken to determine the responsibility of this attack.

Regarding the situation of those who are participating in the march, Barthelemy noted that they are being gradually transferred in trucks to their places of origin.

He said that legislators, bishops, and members of the Red Cross have been able to cross the cordon that was installed by the armed forces at 0600 and that they have been able to speak with the miners.

Ministry Discovers 'Plans'

PY290355 Paris AFP in Spanish 0314 GMT 29 Aug 86

[Excerpts] La Paz, 28 Aug (AFP) -- Interior Minister Fernando Barthelemy today reported the Bolivian Government has discovered a subversive plan by which the miners from Oruro--after arriving in La Paz--would demand the resignation of President Victor Paz Estenssoro by holding hunger strikes, terrorizing the population and taking over churches. [passage omitted]

The interior minister did not explain how international leftist groups are connected to this plan, but he indicated that there are reports about their influence and about the links between the Shining Path and similar Bolivian organizations.

Asked about the arrests of political, union, civic, and university leaders, and about raids, on union headquarters, Barthelemy said these were preventive measure in the face of possible violence.

He said that there are 162 people under arrest in the country, that they are being held in Interior Ministry jails and that after they are interrogated some of them will be released but others will be banished in accordance with the law.

He indicated that there are warrants for the arrest of other people for their connection with the destabilizing plan that was discovered, and that according to the Constitution, the state of siege will last 90 days.

In relation to the presence of police in the universities the minister said that the police cordoned off the universities to prevent students from conducting demonstrations that might produce clashes and violence on the streets.

The minister also confirmed that the cities of Oruro and Potosi have been militarily occupied because they are out of control, and the legitimate city officials are virtually not recognized by the civic and union committees.

For his part, Information Minister Herman Antelo has said the state of siege is justified because of the destabilizing plans that were to be implemented.

Bolivian Labor Confederation (COB) leaders have announced from Underground that they will continue with the measures of force against the government, such as the general strike and the march for life and that they have requested the Catholic Church to mediate so that the dialogue that has been rejected by the authorities may start. They noted that the marchers have decided to continue their march on the capital and that if they do not, they will stand firm on the highway, in the heart of the Andean plateau.

They requested guarantees for their activities and they demanded the freedom of their leaders, who were arbitrarily arrested without any constitutional grounds.

The main COB leaders who have been arrested are: Jose Maria Palacios, Alfo flores, and Anibal Castanon, from the press federation; Andres Soliz Rada (AFP correspondent); Felipe Tapia, factory workers; Carlos Quiroga, from the Cochabamba Civic Committee; and Luis Fernandez Fajalde, from the Potosi Civic Committee.

Also under arrest are Jorge Trigo, the Cochabamba university rector; and former Education Minister Alfonso Camacho and former Mining and Planning Minister Horst Grebe Lopez.

Lechin Will Return Secretly

PY281737 Paris AFP in Spanish 1606 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Text] Brussels, 28 Aug (AFP) -- A military coup could be staged in the next few hours or days in Bolivia, predicted Juan Lechin Oquendo, Executive Secretary of the COB, in Brussels.

Bolivia, where a state of siege was cleared today, has seen more military coups than years of independence, Lechin said. He came to Brussels at the invitation of the International Conference of Free Trade Union Organizations (Icftuo) to report on the situation prevailing in Bolivia.

The Bolivian Labor leader said the state of siege is a first step, which could be followed by an Armed Forces intervention, and added he will return to his country clandestinely.

According to Lechin, the stage of siege was declared to prevent the arrival in La Paz of the March for Life and Peace being staged by 5,000 miners and their families and joined by priests, peasants, students, political and labor leaders. The marchers are expected to arrive in La Paz this Friday, 29 August, thus ending a 230-km walk from Oruro.

In conclusion, Lechin said that this measure -- which violates the Constitution -- is a blow to the nationals sovereignty and the pride of the people, who believe that the Bolivian Army alone should have been used in the antidrug operation. [sentence as received]

RURAL RADIO REPORTS ON MARCHERS' SITUATION

PY282239 Madrid EFE in Spanish 2141 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Text] La Paz, 28 Aug (EFE) -- Radio Siglo -- broadcasting from the town of Siglo Veinte, in Potosi Department -- has reported that there is tension and anxiety in the mining districts of Oruro and Potosi Departments because of the military cordon that, after the implementation of the state of siege, stopped the "March for Life" only 55 km short of La Paz.

According to reports broadcast by this radio station, the approximately 8,000 workers who were participating in this march have no food or water. This may have negative effects on their health, which in many cases is already impaired after 7 days of forces marched along highland roads.

The radio station reported that miners' wives committees have rejected the exceptional measure that the government approved yesterday and the women are planning to go to La Paz in solidarity with their husbands and sons.

Radio Siglo XX also reported the arrest of four workers of the Catholic Radio station Pio XII, who were reporting developments of the "March for Life" from the village of Calamarca, where the military carried out its actions.

Finally, Radio Sigo XX expressed concern over the silence of Radio San Jose -- a miners' radio station in Oruro -- which failed to respond to Siglo XX efforts to raise it. It is assumed that the Radio San Jose station has been occupied.

Meanwhile, labor movement spokesmen in cochabamba -- 400 km east of La Paz -- have reported the arrest of more than 25 persons and various outrages perpetrated by interior ministry agents today.

The headquarters of the Departmental Federation of Factory Workers was taken over by armed civilians, and several labor leaders were detained and interrogated about their labor activities, their work, and their family situation. Some of these leaders were later released.

The main academic authorities -- some teachers from San Simon University, and Carlos Quiroga, president of Cochabamba's Civic Committee -- are among the citizens of this district who have been detained by security organizations.

The detention has also been confirmed of at least 10 leaders, members of the Departmental Labor Confederation, teachers organizations, the state oil enterprise, the Confederation of Neighborhood Councils, the National Highway Service, the Factory Federation, and of the Permanent Assembly for Human Rights.

The labor leaders have expressed their fear that the detentions will continue, because, they said, they have learned of a list containing the names of 100 persons who are to be detained within the next few hours.

COB EXTENDS STRIKES TO SUPPORT MARCHERS

PY281100 Paris AFP in Spanish 0222 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Text] La Paz, 27 Aug (AFP) -- Bolivian Labor Confederation [COB] leaders today reported here that the COB has orderd a nationwide stoppage for 29 August when 7,500 mineworkers, peasants, housewives, priests and children who are partricipating in the March for Life and Peace will arrive in La Paz.

The march began last Friday in Oruro -- 230 km south of La Paz -- to protest the decentralization of the Mining Corporation of Bolivia (Comibol), which will result in halt of the 24,000 Comibol workers losing their jobs.

The government of Victor Paz Estenssoro ordered this step in view of the slump in tin prices on the international market where quotations fell to $2.50 per pound while the Comibol cost per refined pound is nearly $14.

The COB ordered that all the La Paz workers should receive the marchers who will be supplied with foodstuffs, shelter, and medicines.

It was reported that once the marchers are in La Paz, the mineworkers federation will hold talks with the government after the decree decentrailizing the Comibol is abrogated.

The government feels that the decree is esentially unchangeable for which reason only some details of the decree will be open for discussion after a mediation by the Catholic Church.

PINOCHET APPROVES PROGOVERNMENT DEMONSTRATION

PY280140 Santiago Domestic Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Relay from Government House by Rosa Sanchez]

[Text] President Pinochet today approved the holding of a demonstration in support of the government by saying that it will be a sign that Chile is defending itself from Marxism. Pinochet made this comment during an impromptu speech when he addressed hundreds of people who gathered this morning in front of the La Moneda Government House and who later entered the building at the Patio de los Canones requesting Pinochet's presence and shouting slogans in his favor.

Among those present were youths, professionals, workers, artists, intellectuals, sportsmen, and representatives of many unions such as the bakers union, the transport union, and the business union, all of whom acclaimed Pinochet when he appeared at the Patio de los Canones.

In his brief greeting, the president thanked them for their support now that the fatherland is experiencing difficult times, not only because of domestic problems but also because of a foreign aggression. He said that on the eve of the 11 September revolution anniversary, the government has discovered the extremist arsenals which were to cause a civil war and the deaths of many Chileans. He added that this thought means we must unite ourselves to capture these bad Chileans.

[Begin Pinochet recording] This thought means that we must unite ourselves and tell those bad Chileans [changes thought] corner all these politicians, [cheers, applauses, shouts of "Pinochet, Pinochet"] all these gentlemen who in one way or the other were (?linked) to those who brought the arms, many of which perhaps have been distributed and have not yet been detected. I wan to tell you that this unity -- this demonstration you are about to hold -- will be like a gag and will show that Chile defends itself when (?it wants to). [applause, cheers, slogans in favor of Pinochet] [end recording]

The president declined to specify the date on which this demonstration will be held, but he said he will discuss it with General Hernan Nunez, the director of the Civilian Organizations Office. The president ended his speech by reasserting that with this gesture, we will show the world that Chile is willing to confront Marxism just as it did in 1973 and it is willing to expel all those who want to attack our country.

President Pinochet worked the entire morning at his Government House office and held meetings with Cabinet ministers, advisers, and the top-ranking leader of the U.S. -Chilean Chamber of Commerce. At this time, he is lunching with union leaders from different sectors.

[Paris AFP in Spanish at 1812 GMT on 28 August 1986 reports in a 300-word item that Union Leader Manuel Contreras has reported the demonstraton in support for the government will be held on 9 September in Santiago throughout the Alameda (Bernardo O'Higgins Avenue -- the largest avenue in Santiago which is capable of holding hundreds of thousands of people.)]

CARVAJAL SAYS FPMR COMMAND 'VIRTUALLY DESTROYED'

PY282340 Santiago Domestic Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Passages within quotation marks recorded]

[Text] Defense Minister Patricio Carvajal today met with reporters and said that terroristm received great blow, more at the personal level than at the material level. Carvajal said this in reference to the arrest of 14 members of the Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front [FPMR] and the recently discovered arsenals.

The defense minister said that with the recent arrests the FPMR's command has been virtually destroyed and that based on available information this group will receive more blows. In this regard, Carvajal said:

[Carvajal] "There are others who were not arrested. We believe that some were able to escape aboard the Cuban ships, while others are in hiding because they have been identified in the pictures they took of themselves, and because of details provided by the people who are testifying. Therefore, I believe that terrorism received a harsher blow at the personal level than at the material level.

"I attribute more importance to the arrests, which have destroyed the FPMR's command, than to the discovery of the arms caches."

Carvajal said that, based on the background material available, the terrorists under arrest have provided important information, and we shall continue to clarify the arms issue. Despite everything, arms continue to be brought into the country, but in much lesser quantities.

[Carvajal] "I am convinced this has been a harsh blow to the FPMR, and it will allow us to continue to strike blows against the FPMR."

He also said that the Communist Party through its armed branch, the FPMR, is undoubtedly involved in the arms caches deal as well as in other attacks.

[Carvajal] "There is no doubt that among those who actively participated in all this are top-ranking Communist Party and FPMR leaders. Therefore, we have arrested very important people who have supplied much information thanks to which we have been able to learn the ramifications of these arsenals."

Regarding announcements regarding the holding of demonstrations at the beginning of September, the defense minister said that the proper measures will be enforced to guarantee order and the safety of citizens. He added that it is very unlikely that a state of siege will be imposed.

[Carvajal] "We shall use all the precautions that are normally enforced every year to guarantee safety and order. Of course, we shall intensify these measures on this occasion because we are aware that some of the arms [that were part of the arms caches] may have reached the terrorists. As for the state of siege, I have already said that this is a political issue that is pertinent to the Interior Ministry.

"In general, this is a legal tool that the government is reluctant to impose because it is unwilling to enforce any measure that will undermine individual freedom, but which is indispensable to maintain security."

Asked about the arms and explosives that were confiscated from terrorists, Carvejal said that these are now the property of the state, and they will become part of the Armed Forces arms stock.

Concerning the establishment of a parallel Army by Chilean terrorism, Carvajal said that this report is groundless. He said the terrorists cannot defeat the Armed Forces at the political and psychological level--as happened in Cuba and Nicaragua--because they lack the capacity to do so. They only have the ability to destroy, which is the intention of terrorist groups.

On the possibility of finding new arsenals, he said that terrorists were able to distribute arms that were part of the first arms cache, which was transported to the southern region of the country. He also said that smaller arms cargoes are constantly being brought into the country.

Links Caches to Plan

[Text] Defense Minister Patricio Carvajal has said that the extreme left is not prepared to oust the government. He said that the discovery of arms caches and the arrest of aboout 20 persons has been a harsh blow to terrorism. Following are details in this regard provided by Jose Francisco Contreras, who is at the Defense Ministry.

[Begin relay] Defense Minister Patricio Carvajal has noted that the extreme left is not prepared to oust the government because--despite the arms it has been able to bring into the country--it lacks the proper military training. The defense minister held a press conference to talk about the discovery of clandestine arms caches. He admitted that the U.S. Government helped the Chilean Government detect the illegal introduction of these weapons from Soviet ships. Patricio Carvajal said that it is very likely that the objective of these arsenals, as stated by one of those under arrest, was to impose a psychological and military defeat on the Chilean Army, to oust the government, and to install a Marxist revolutionary government. However, he added that he doubted this objective would have been achieved.

[Begin Carvajal recording] I doubt very much that they would have been able to achieve this objective because it is not enough to have arms and explosives. It is also necessary to have efficient troops. This requires many years of training, and the formation of cadres. Therefore, although these guerrillas may have received 1 month of training in Cuba, they lack the ability to oust the government. [end recording]

Defense Minister Carvajal added that terrorism received a much harsher blow through the arrest of 14 persons who were involved in the illegal introduction of arms to the country than through the confiscation of the arms caches. He said this is so because of the high rank of those arrested who, he said, are cadres who received training abroad.

The defense minister also noted that he wished that thousands instead of only 14 were under arrest, but he noted that those arrested have supplied valuable information that will allow the government to continue its investigation and arrest many others.

As for the Soviet ships, Carvajal noted that although they are not violating Chilean territorial waters, they are carrying out electronic espionage activities. He admitted the United States cooperated by providing information regarding the detection of the introduction of arms from Soviet ships. He said: We have been supplied with information from the United States; we are still receiving it, and it is welcomed.

Concerning announcements of a protest march on 4 September, the defense minister said there is always the possibility some groups may promote violence, but the government will take all necessary measures to safeguard public order.

Regarding the possibility of imposing a state of siege, he stated tht this is a legal tool that the government has available but that the government is reluctant to take steps to restrict public freedom other than those that are strictly necessary. He noted the state of siege can be imposed, but it is very unlikely that it will be. [end relay]

CAUCE JOURNALISTS RELEASED; CHARGES DROPPED

[Text] Santiago, 28 Aug (AFP) -- Three journalists and the editor-in-chief of the opposition magazine CAUCE were released today and all charges against them were dropped. The military court -- which 2 days ago ordered their arrest in Santiago de Chile -- has officially made this announcement.

Journalists Claudia Lanzarotti, Marcia Pineda, and Eugenio Gonzalez were arrested on 26 August along with attorney Jorge Ovalle after the National Intelligence Center (CNI) -- the military government's secret police -- charged the publication, which has social democratic leanings, with slandering the Armed Forces.

Military prosecutor Rodrigo Gonzalez freed the four, but he did not free CAUCE publisher Jorge Ovalle and journalist Ariel Poblete, who wrote an article that questioned official reports on the unloading and discovery of an arsenal intended for the groups who advocate subversion against the government of General Augusto Pinochet.

FOREIGN MINISTER BACKS CONTADORA PARTICIPATION

PA281605 Paris AFP in Spanish 0115 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Text] Bogota, 27 Aug (AFP) -- Today Foreign Minister Julio Londono Paredes said that we will continue to participate within the Contadora Group as long as the Central American countries wish. These remarks were made when explaining the country's foreign policy before a commission of the lower house of Congress.

The minister emphasized that as the situation in Central America directly affects Colombia, the country will be at all forums where the topic is discussed.

Londono Paredes reiterated Colombia's position of trying all peaceful means provided for by international law in the event that direct talks fail regarding differences with Venezuela over the limits of marine and submarine areas.

He also said: "When direct negotiations do not bring forth a solution to our differences, other peaceful procedures exist, as established within international law under Article 33: mediation, arbitration, and judicial order."

He also defended participation in the nonaligned meeting, stating: "It is not in the country's interest to be absent from these forums. Our presence at them is necessary."

Finally, and as a curious note, Londono Paredes disclosed that participation in Contadora during the last 4 years has cost $80,000 in travel allowances plus $87,000 in air fares to various meetings.

DEFENSE MINISTRY REPORTS ELN ATTACK, CASUALTIES

PA272009 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0355 GMT 27 Aug 86

[Text] Bogota, 26 Aug (EFE) -- The Defense Ministry here has reported that three insurgents and two soldiers were killed today during a guerrilla attack on a military communications network in Norte de Santander Department, in northeastern Colombia.

A ministry spokesman said that a group of at least 120 rebels from the National Liberation Army (ELN) attacked the guard post at a communications tower with long- and short-range weapons, grenades, and rockets.

The attack took place on Los Indios hill near El Tarra Corregimiento, Tibu Municipality. The rebels tried to dynamite the military communications network which links the central and interior areas to the Army brigades stationed on the northern coast and in the northeastern part of the country.

The 40 soldiers in the Army's 5th Brigade Maza Group, who were guarding the tower, repelled the rebels and thwarted the attack on the communications network.

The Defense Ministry reported that during the confrontation, at least three rebels and two soldiers were killed.

The ELN guerillas belong to the Domingo Lain and Camilo Torres columns, which operate in the northeastern part of the country, the source said.

Military reinforcements from Bucaramanga, Cucuta, and Ocana were sent to El Indio [as received] hill and surrounding areas such as Serrania de los Motilones on the border with Venezuela, an area to which the rebels usually flee, the Defense Ministry concluded.

HEAVY FIGHTING WITH REBELS CONTINUES IN CAUCA

PA261542 Bogota Emisoras CARACOL Network in Spanish 1215 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] Popayan -- Heavy fighting continues in eastern Cauca Department, where nine soldiers and one officer were killed in the last few hours in clashes with members of the National Guerilla Coordinating Board. The clashes took place in the area between the town of Inza and Paez and involved troops of the Army's 10th Brigade and guerillas led by the highest leaders of the M-19.

Cauca Governor Victor Gomez Gomez told CARACOL that the situation is difficult. He also confirmed the death of 10 soldiers and the wounding of 3. The governor added that the three wounded soldiers have already been evacuated to hospitals, where they are recovering.

The fighting is taking place in the same region where 15 days ago the guerrillas attacked the town of Belalcazar, in which the military actions to stop the subversive attacks have been centered. Forces transported by helicopters have been dispatched from other brigades to reinforce the operations in pursuit of the guerrillas in the zone.

Brigadier General Ramon Emilio Gil Bermudez, commander of the 10th Brigade, has promised that an official communique will be issued in the next few hours to report the number of casualties in the actions in which it is believed more than 10 guerrillas have been killed.

GUERRILLAS CLAIM ATTACK ON BOLIVIAN EMBASSY

PY281937 Paris AFP in Spanish 1554 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Text] Lima, 28 Aug (AFP) -- In a communique sent to a Lima newspaper, the People's Revolutionary Command (CRP), a guerrilla group, today claimed responsibility for a bomb attack against the Bolivian Embassy in Peru.

The Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement (MRTA), meanwhile, has claimed the bombings in the Peruvian Ministries of Economy, Labor, and Mines on 27 August. This information was published by another newspaper, which carried an MRTA communique.

The attack against the Bolivian Embassy -- which according to the authorities damaged only the building's facade -- occurred on 26 August and was staged to protest the Bolivian Government's decision to allow the presence of U.S. troops in Bolivian territory. The CRP communique said: The excuse now might be to fight against drug trafficking, later it could well be the need to stop the armed struggle. The CRP is a relatively new guerrilla group that intelligence agencies believes to be a splinter of the MRTA.

ARGENTINE 'ADVISERS' INVOLVED IN 1983 SLAYINGS

PY281654 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1930 GMT 27 Aug 86

[Text] Lima, 27 Aug (EFE) -- Peruvian Journalists Association President Juan Vicente Requejo has said that it is known there were Argentine Navy "advisers" in Ayacucho when eight journalists were murdered in the Andean village of Uchuraccay [in 1983], but that the information was not reported for fear of reprisals.

In statements to EFE today, Requejo said that even though the leftist newspaper DIARIO DE MARKA had already mentioned the issue, Ayacucho journalists confirmed the information, but did not report it because they were afraid of reprisals.

Requejo said the eight journalists and their guide, Juan Argumedo, were murdered because they learned about the presence of Argentine infantry "advisers." However, it is now known how many advisers were there or when they left, he added. He stressed that if the information had been reported, then-President Fernando Belaunde would have been in serious trouble because he would have been charged with violating the Constitution.

The Peruvian Constitution establishes that Congress must authorize the presence of foreign troops in Peru.

Requejo said that if the presence of Argentine "advisers," who were called because of their experience in the antisubversive war in their country, had been reported, the Peruvian Navy would have confronted a serious problem. He added that this is why he has insisted that Peruvian Navy Lieutenant Ismail Bravo Reid be questioned by the court to hear the Uchuraccay case. Lt Bravo was the first to arrive in Uchuraccay after the slaying of the journalists, and picked up their belongings, he noted.

Bravo Reid is not in Peru and the Navy has said he cannot appear in court because he is fulfillng a mission.

Requejo charged that the "Sinchis," the civil guard's antisubversive force, urged the Uchuraccay peasants to kill the journalists and that the "Sinchis" themselves may have participated in the slayings. He ruled out the presence of Argentine "advisers" in Uchuraccay, because "their physical characteristics would have made them too obvious."

SHINING PATH KILLS GOVERNOR, PEASANT IN HUAYHUAS

PY281851 Paris AFP in Spanish 1453 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Text] Ayacucho, 28 Aug (AFP) -- The Police reported here today that a provincial governor and a peasant had their throats cut in the presence of inhabitants of Huayhuas when a heavily armed Shining Path column occupied the village.

Some 50 guerrillas -- men and women -- carrying pistols, submachineguns, and explosives, occupied Huayhuas, Huanta Province, and, after capturing Provincial Governor Pastor Huaman and the peasant Adrian Retamozo, tried them before a people's court under the charge of being informers and traitors.

One of the witnesses said that the two men were forced out of their houses, stripped, and, while being beaten, taken to the Huanta-Ayacucho road. There they were tried in the presence of their relatives and other townspeople and sentenced to be killed by machete.

After the execution and before fleeing, the Shining Path guerrillas placed posters with antigovernment slogans on the bodies and threatened to return if the townspeople reported the killings to the military authorities.

Threats Prompt Resignations

PY291847 Madrid EFE in Spanish 2017 GMT 27 Aug 86

[Text] Lima, 27 Aug (EFE) -- It was reported today in Lima that the provincial governors of 10 Ayacucho towns in southern Peru have resigned after receiving death threats from the Maoist Shining Path group. The governors, who were posted in Vilcashuaman province towns, tendered their resignations to Francisco Ludena, the prefect of the city of Ayacucho.

Among those who resigned is San Juan Bautista Governor Clodoaldo Zaga, brother of the late mayor of that district, who was murdered a month ago by presumed Shining Path members.

This chain reaction of resignations, set off by alledged terrorist threats, is occurring at a time when confrontations between military patrols and groups of presumed Shining Path members have become frequent.

According to a communique issued by the Armed Forces Joint Command, on 26 August 12 Shining Path members died and 1 soldier was wounded in a clash between a guerrilla group and a military detachment.

Representatives of Chincheros province towns have told General Juan Gil Jara, the chief of the political-military command of the emergency zone, of the possible existence of common graves in seven towns. They also charged that the security forces rape their women and steal money and cattle from them.

In other places in Ayacucho, the so-called peasant "patrols" are receiving military training to fight against the Shining Path. In La Mar province, following a recommendation issued by the military, peasants are asking strangers to identify themselves.

Alberto Valencia of the ruling APRA [American Popular Revolutionary Alliance], a deputy for Ayacucho, has recently analyzed the deterioration of the situation in his department. He said that to discredit the guerrillas, the paramilitary antisubversive units that operate in Ayacucho commit serious crimes that are then blamed on the Shining Path. "These paramilitary groups belong to the Armed Forces, to the right, or to some influential groups. Yet all of them are close to the Army or the police," he concluded.

FOREIGN SECRETARIAT NOTE ON CORTEZ INCIDENT

PA281512 Mexico City XEW Television Network in Spanish 1300 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Report by Juan Manuel Renteria]

[Text] The Mexican Foreign Relations Secretariat has replied to a letter in which the U.S. Government protested the arrest of DEA agent Mr Victor Cortez in Guadalajara City.

A note sent to the Mexican Foreign Secretariat states that the U.S. agent was illegally arrested, interrogated, and tortured by police agents from Jalisco state. The Foreign Relations Secretariat replies:

1. By request of the U.S. Embassy in Mexico, the Mexican Foreign Secretariat issed credentials identifying Mr Victor Cortez as a member of the U.S. Consulate in Guadalajara.

2. The Mexican Government allowed DEA officials to join Embassy personnel to exchange information with the Attorney General's Office in the fight against drug trafficking.

3. Mr Cortez was arrested by the Judicial Police of Jalisco when he was in the company of a person who has a criminal record, namely Antonio Garate Bustamante, who Cortez described as a co-worker.

4. Mr Victor Cortez was driving a vehicle bearing a false registration plate. He was carrying prohibited weapons reserved for the exclusive use of the Mexican Armed Forces, and he had no identification on him.

5. The Attorney General's Office investigated the incident upon receiving the U.S. note.

6. A medical report from the Mexican Red Cross in Guadalajara City confirmed that Mr Victor Cortez suffered wounds in the shoulder and abdomen that are not life-threatening and will heal in less than 15 days.

7. The Federal Public Prosecutor's Office arrested 11 people involved in the arrest of the U.S. agent and charged them with allegedly inflicting injuries and with abuse of authority.

8. The Mexican Foreign Secretariat communique points out that the U.S. and Mexican Governments are definitely concerned, because DEA agents are carrying out actions other than those for which they are authorized.

9. The reply note also points out that the tension created between the countries due to the activities of U.S. agents is also a matter of concern.

10. Only Mexican authorities can carry out duties involving the administration of justice.

11. Attitudes and decisions negatively affecting cooperation in the fight against drug trafficking must also be avoided. The greater the tension and antagonism, the fewer the possibilities to act unitedly and efficiently against international drug trafficking.

[Excerpts] Mexican Attorney General Sergio Garcia Ramirez has said that drug trafficking has become a major problem for humankind with particularly severe characteristics for the American continent and, within the continent, for Mexico. "This is why we observe with interest how the U.S. authorities have begun the finest and deepest process of identifying the problems associated with the trafficking and use of drugs," the attorney general added. The attorney general also mentioned the demands for justice in the country.

These statements were made by the government official during a "closed door" meeting with Sonora Governor Rodolfo Felix Valdes. The meeting was held at the Palace of Justice in Hermosillo and was attended by judicial, federal, and state authorities. During the meeting, the implementation of the Northern Border Plan was announced. This plan is aimed at reinforcing, with human and financial resources, the national campaign against drug trafficking and addiction. [passage omitted]

During his work meeting with the governor of Sonora, Garcia Ramirez said that at times, the drug trafficking problem has threatened to turn into an issue of dissension between governments and there is no real reason for this. "It is a problem of the nations and peoples against the criminals, but never a problem of country against country. However, there are times when the criminals use the situation and provoke small or big tremors [sismos] and gaps that at a given time can break up the common front that the civilized nations and friendly governments have established against drug trafficking.

"We believe that the problem of drug trafficking, rather than creating a gap between our northern neighbors and ourselves, is becoming -- with some hard work, good faith, and good will -- an issue which we agree upon and which we are trying to stress," the attorney general said.

Garcia Ramirez also said that there is no one within the Mexican Government or its various sectors who approves of drug trafficking, "just as there is no one within the government of our northern neighbor who approves of this illegal action."

The attorney general added that the northern border plan implemented as part of the national campaign against drug trafficking and addiction is aimed at increasing actions against the use of drugs and international drug trafficking. "But nothing can be done if the bureaucratic and administrative decisions are only presented to and heard by the cabinet." [passage omitted]

FL282115 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 1603 GMT 28 Aug 86

[By correspondent Federico Gomez Pombo]

[Text] Geneva, 28 Aug (NOTIMEX) -- In line with measures taken by the Mexican Government to establish programs aimed at growth, the Basel Bank of International Payments today reported that it granted a $400 million credit to the Bank of Mexico in a transactidon made with the support of central banks of 10 countries.

The countries that are participating through their respective central banks are: Belgium, Canada, FRG, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Sweden, Switzerland, and the UK. This was indicated in a report issued by the Bank of International Payments.

The contingency support transaction is being done within the framework of Mexico's agreements with the IMF and the World Bank in connection with an economic program aimed at growth and to complement payments made by the two institutions, the Bank of International Payments concluded.

REQUEST MADE FOR $6-BILLION CREDIT PACKAGE

FL282350 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 2206 GMT 28 Aug 86

[By correspondent Roberto Gonzalez Perez]

[Excerpts] New York, 28 Aug (NOTIMEX) -- Mexico today urged its creditor banks to grant an approximately $6-billion financial package which would include deferred interest payments on its foreign debt.

The proposal was presented by Finance Secretariat officials at the opening session of negotiations with trade banks for a $6-billion financial package that Mexico requested for 1986-1987.

Bank sources in New York said that it is likely Mexico will receive the funds. [passage omitted]

Sources involved in the conversations said the Mexican negotiators, led by Jose Angel Gurria, public loan director of the Finance Secretariat, presented several ideas to confront the burden of the Mexican foreign debt including linking the payments of its current debt to oil prices. The bankers said they do not consider Mexico's verbal request a formal proposal and indicated the talks are only a preliminary exchange of ideas. [passage omitted]

NORIEGA DECORATED IN COLOMBIA; TIEMPO INTERVIEW

PA271538 Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 24 Aug 86 p 12-A [Report by Patricia Lara]

[Text] Panama -- General Manuel Antonio Noriega, decorated in Colombia by General Fernando Landazabal with the Jose Maria Cordoba Order, accused by the NEW YORK TIMES of trafficking drugs and arms, of laundering money, of suggesting and ordering the assasination of Hugo Spadafora, seems to be at peace; not a single muscle in his face twitches.

"I am not going to discuss drug trafficking," he said fearlessly, before beginning this interview held at the home of one of his friends. He arrived punctually, accompanied by his judo professor, Panama's ambassador to Taiwan, whose physical appearance and acent are more those of an oriental than a Panamanian.

This controversial Gen Noriega, 48, whose face is covered with traces of the acne of his youth, is agreeable, amiable, and very shrewd, he collects all kinds of ceramic frogs and keeps parrots at his mansion in the exclusive Altos del Gulf area. In his own words he is a Christian who believes "in the rality of the Psalms, in the laws of good and evil, and in a superior cosmic force that balances human life." Because of this, he reads the Bible every day before or after jogging and does aerobic exercises in the morning. Nothing can make him speak of things he does not want to speak of, and he only says what he wants to say....

Nothing can be done about this: His 12 years at the head of Panamanian military intelligence (G-2) have made him an expert of obtaining information and in misinforming, but never in saying what he should not say.

Regarding the murder of Spadafora, who was his enemy and also the enemy of others, and whose decapitated body was found near the Panamanian border with Costa Rica, the general said that soldiers Mario del Cid and Luis A. Cordoba, accused of participating in the crime, were investigated by the Attorney General's office, and that the Supreme Court -- "which is just as respectable as the Colombian Supreme Court" -- ordered the case closed due to a lack of proof. He suggested, but refused to confirm, Spadafora was an arms trafficker, adding that "on the black market, whoever tries to be smart and keeps the money or the arms, runs the risk of having his head cut off; this is my philosophical answer," Noriega said. He added: What if I were to ask "who cut off the head of John Doe in Medellin," or asked how many people are missing in Colombia?

Regarding the death of Cerafin Mittroti, president of the Rotary Club, the general said "that case is impossible to understand," and he spoke of "the problems that exist in every man's life," adding that "in Panama fantastic stories are invented," and that "the judicial system and the authorities cannot be blamed for the deaths."

Regarding drug trafficking, the general said that the U.S. banks have computers that register transfers and the management of funds, "so the laundering of money is a difficult task these days." He said that Pablo Escobar and the other drug traffickers who met with Alfonso Lopez Michelsen in Panama, entered the country with false documents because if they had entered with legal documents "there would have been a great scandal, or we would have detained them for at least 24 hours." He said the Defense Forces did not know that the meeting was going to take place and that it was "disrespectful to ask (Lopez) who he was going to meet in Panama." Noriega added that he agrees with the practice of anti drug operations carried out by the military, for example, the recent operation in Bolivia, "but by Bolivians," not Americans.

Regarding the other accusations against him, he insisted that they are part of a "campaign financed by bad Panamanians"; that this is a pattern of conduct they employ "when they want to bother someone or get something -- they go to the top of force it to yield." However, these are not "accusations or insults against one person, but against the nation's dignity. "He added that in Panama that little "game" is already known because "they did the same thing to Torrijos," whose brother was accused of drug trafficking.

Meanwhile, he said, the Defense Forces are conducting civic activities in the fields of health, education, and road construction in remote areas. The forces actively participate in the community, and because of this Panama is different. He added that other countries have tried to imitate this attitude, but they have been slow; this is something that must be done quickly. Noriega said that he is "a soldier of the new Latin American generation," just as are all of the "military leaders whose concepts transcend the borders of their countries." He said that Torrijos' death left a political but not a military void in Panama, "that for now" several ranking officers such as the second in command, Colonel [Roberto] Diaz Herrera, Torrijos' cousin, will not be leaving the Defense Forces as has been rumored; that he is aware of everything that goes on in Panama (even of the arrangement and annulment of marriage engagements), and that "in the intelligence field there is science and there is fiction." He said that in his case he will leave "a mystery" the determination of what is science and what is fiction. Regarding U.S. Vice President George Bush, a former CIA chief, Noriega said that "when he becomes a presidential candidate" he will be asked the same questions but that he, Noriega, is not going to be a candidate... [sentence as published]

This is part of the general's remarks. The remainder is taken from 3 hours of tapes:

[Question] What is this story that the drug trafficker Ochoa used to give gifts of horses to former National Guard Commander General Paredes, according to a book recently edited by the Panamanian Government?

[Noriega] I know nothing about that. However, it could emerge from the (Colonel) Melo case, because he was the military attache in Colombia, and I believe this is where he met one of these men.

[Question] General, the government admitted that Melo was involved in drug trafficking. Does this demonstrate that the corruptive power of drug trafficking has reached the different institutions?

[Noriega] God has created a little of everything. Last week I read that in Miami 50 policemen are on trial for involvement in drug trafficking. We have had one case, and when we became aware of it we demoted him and he lost his rights.

[Question] Why was Melo released?

[Noriega] We have arrested many drug traffickers here, however they have the capacity to evade justice.

[Question] Then Col Melo evaded justice?

[Noriega] I believe so. He received military punishment from us; however, he did not receive punishment according to civil law.

[Question] Do you have a military penal justice here, similar to the one we have in Colombia?

[Noriega] No. Here, we apply the military statute, which is disciplinary, not judicial in nature.

Here we cannot arrest a soldier, the civil court would have to judge him. Look, Panama has fought drug traffic: We discovered the laboratory-city in Darien through reports from the residents. We have arrested drug traffickers, like Suarez' son-in-law, who is the biggest Bolivian drug trafficker. We sprayed 100 hectares of marijuana, and that cost us $2 million. However, Panama has never received manifest or substantial support from the United States in the struggle against drug traffic...

[Question] After the attack on the Dominican Republic Embassy, Jaime Bateman proposed to meet in Panama with leaders from the several sectors of Colombia. He said that President [Aristides] Royo provided the Panamanian territory for that meeting. Afterward, he met here with negotiator [German] Bulas Hoyos. He used to come here frequently. He died during a flight on his way to Panama. What was the relationship between you and Bateman?

[Noriega] The Defense Forces have never dealt with Bateman. I never met him. What you are saying about President Royo refers to an action of his government. We believe that, in the case of bordering nations, to have this kind of contact could be seen as an unfriendly act. We maintain strict control in that respect.

[Question] The National Guard does not have relations with the M-19 or other Colombian guerrilla groups?

[Noriega] We have no relations or communication with them.

[Question] Are there any M-19 people here?

[Noreiga] There may be. When one is living clandestinely, that could happen. They are living clandestinely, even in Colombia, and no one knows about it.

[Question] It has been said that there are some photographs of an exchange of weapons for drugs, in the National Guard installations...

[Noriega] Negative. I have never seen photographs of that kind taken in Panama. I have seen one that is said to have been in Nicaragua, but none from here.

[Question] Then do you believe there is a connection between the guerrillas and the drug traffic?

[Noriega] The guerrillas have said no. All I can tell you is that drug traffickers use any means they have to introduce drugs.

[Question] And the guerrillas use any means to introduce weapons?

[Noreiga] Yes, of course, and it is logical: They live in a clandestine system, and theirs is a struggle for survival.

[Question] In 1981 there was an M-19 invasion of Narino. One of the people arrested said he had been trained in Cuba and was coming from Panama. Fidel Castro said that they had been trained in Cuba, but they had not been armed in Cuba. Were they armed in Panama?

[Noriega] No, we do not have the capacity to arm anyone. There is no arms factory here. The weapons seized from them were European, they were not manufactured in Panama. Look: in the open sea you can ship whatever you want: There are not enough ships to patrol the entire coast of Panama, or Colombia either.

[Question] How do you explain the story of the ship Karina, which sailed from Panama to Colombia loaded with arms?

[Noriega] Panama has two oceans. In a country without resources, like ours, that means inability to patrol. That inability also exists in Colombia, where they have to concentrate the naval resources in the Atlantic, because they cannot watch over such a long coast. The geographical configuration of the border between Colombia and Panama allows some situations to occur. For example, in Puerto Obaldia, located in La Miel in the Atlantic, there is trade between the Colombian and the Panamanian settlements. This is officially known as smuggling, but the residents call it trade. They evade the justice to survive. Likewise, arms traffickers, guerrillas, bandits, terrorists, seek protection along the coast. Thus, the story of the Karina, is the story of a ship that had the specific conditions to evade justice. Moreover, it is necessary to know how the Panama Canal operates: There is insufficient personnel to check all ships, and there is no legal obligation to do it. There has to be lawsuit, a specific action to be able to act. There is a maritime tribunal on the Canal shore to attend to those lawsuits. Furthermore, the Canal is controlled by the North Americans...

[Question] However, according to German Castro Caycedo's book, the Karina remained in Panamanian waters for a long time. It had a collision, it sailed to Colombia, returned to Panama, sailed back... Didn't the Defense Forces notice this?

[Noreiga] The book is a total fantasy. Even the main characters are farfetched. It is a book written to conjure speculation and to make money. It does not correspond to the reality in the military intelligence. The Colombian Armed Forces and the Security Forces know the truth about the Karina. The truth is not in the book.

[Question] And what is the truth?

[Noreiga] Perhaps later, some years from now, the Colombian Army will decide to reveal the truth... We know that they know the truth. I am not going to say it...

[Question] Is it true that Panama warned that the ship was sailing?

[Noreiga] No. There were some questions afterward and details were provided: That ship was anchored here so many days, did this, it was not called Karina when it passed through Panama, it had another name, etc. [Sentence as published] Look, the coast is so long that it allows them to smuggle arms into Colombia. Panama has nothing to do with that, and I abide by what the Colombian Armed Forces say. We are not the bridge for that traffic. We signed an agreement, in San Juan, Manzanillo, signed by General [Rafael] Samudio and by me. The agreement compels the Armed Forces of the two countries to arrest bandits who travel across the borders and to prevent and control the trafficking of arms and drugs. Had we not complied with this, they would have reported this already.

[Question] General, who was supposed to have gotten the weapons aboard Pia Vesta, which went all the way to Peru, returned to Panama, and were seized there?

[Noriega] These Soviet weapons carrying a German factory name included assault rifles and rocket-launchers of unknown caliber. They were not being sent to Colombia, as it was said... There were two manifests in the ship. They both stated that the cargo consisted of trucks and spare parts. One said it was consigned to Peru and the other to a Central American country.

[Question] Nicaragua?

[Noriega] No, it was not Nicaragua. These weapons were going to a Central American country. (laughter)

[Question] There is a report saying that the weapons were bought by the Peruvian Navy...

[Noriega] The Peruvian Navy denied that. They have Soviet weapons, and I do not see why they would have to deny it if the weapons were for them. The manifest that said the cargo was for Peru was false because the cargo was not left there.

[Question] But if the weapons were consigned to Central America, what were they doing off the coast of Peru?

[Noriega] We are still trying to find an answer to that question.

[Question] Were they for Central American guerrilla groups or for a government of the area?

[Noriega] That is the question. Who were they for? But I would ask another question: Could it have been an arms trafficking deal? Because it can be speculated that certain groups, knowing that there is $100 million available for weapons, wanted to be a step ahead and earn a few pesos by selling weapons ahead of time. I mean, this is speculation.... In any case, since nobody wanted to claim them, we kept them. Now these weapons belong to the Defense Forces.

[Question] General, it is said that Panama is an arms trafficking center. Ricardo Arias Calderon, leader of Panama's Christian Democratic Party, said that the Defense Forces at least tolerate this trafficking. What do you think?

[Noriega] That is a piece of political bravado. It is speculation that convinces no one, because there is no arms trafficking in Panama. If you are going to introduce weapons into Central America, why come to Panama if you have a more expeditious way, -- Europe-Havana-Managua -- why take them to El Salvador or Honduras? In the case of the weapons bought by Colombian guerrillas, the country's coast gives them a way to introduce them. Weapons are sold in Panama. It is violence which has prompted the proliferation of black markets. Greater violence yields a greater supply.

[Question] General, there were five presidents in Panama between 1982 and 1985. How do you explain this instability in the civilian sector?

[Noriega] These situations occur within the idiosyncracies of each country. In Colombia, for example, when General Rojas Pinilla was overthrown, the parties sought a formula: The Liberals and the Conservatives took turns in power.

This would seem strange in other countries, but under the circumstances it did not seem so in Colombia. Similarly, within Panama's idiosyncracy, he who is no good, leaves...

[Question] Who determines whether a president is good or not?

[Noriega] The people decide that.

[Question] But in his letter of resignation, President Ardito Barletta said: "When I arrived from the United Nations, I found that the UNADE [National Democratic Union] (the parties that made up the government coalition) and the Defense Forces felt that they could no longer work with my presidency..."

[Noriega] That is history. Ardito Barletta's resignation was due to a political problem. There was a lack of identification with the working rank and file, the businessmen, the political forces of his own party, and with the elements that make a president. However, the Defense Forces had nothing to do with that. They only felt the impact of the situation. When you lose the political springs, you either crash or leave.

[Question] In Panama it is said that you give the orders; you are called the strongman!

[Noriega] Foreign correspondents are used to seeing us through the prism with which they view other nations. There are no strongmen here. That does not work here. The president is the one who gives the orders here. Proof of this is that he signs the contracts and the appointments, and I do not even find out about it. I do not attend Cabinet meetings, and I do not know what the president does, that is his business. What I do know about, and I coordinate it with him, is that which pertains to the state security. I am a member of the National Security Council. But here, one must not say that General Noriega is the strongman, because it would be tantamount to insulting the president's hierarchy. The prism used to view Duvalier and Marcos cannot be used to view Panama.

[Question] But do not tell me you are not in command here!

[Noriega] Oh, yes. I am in command at the garrison. I sure as hell am in command! (laughter) There is no question that I am in command. But it is not an authoritarian, despotic, autocratic, and dictatorial control. These people do not put up with a dictator: You either control with affection or you leave. The only dictatorship allowed here is the dictatorship of love. And this is because we are different in Panama. At the 12 August rally there was a military parade in which each tank was ridden by a girl dressed in a pollera [the Panamanian national dress] throwing kisses at the people. In what other country do you see something like this? In no other. This is the unity between the Armed Forces and the people. In this country the weapons are in the hands of the people instead of those of the oligarchy. They will never be in the hands of the oligarchy.

[Question] But you do think that the oligarchy has been affected in Panama, don't you?

[Noriega] The oligarchy has had every right to get rich. Torrijos withdrew the political but not the economic power from it. Now, the oligarchy wants to use economic power to recover political power.

[Question] But it is said that you are a very wealthy man. General...

[Noriega] .Tell me where the money is so I can go get it! It is clear that you are influenced by the opposition. Do not make the same mistake made by the classic newsmen who believe we have only a single menu here: rice, kidney beans, and beef, and this menu is blamed for everything. This menu must be changed: Panama is a country where there is always peace, where there are no political prisoners, and where there are more government scholarships for poor people. Panama is a projection toward the year 2000. Panama is a geopolitical position. This campaign of accusation has been started by bad Panamanians who paid for this campaign.

[Question] They paid whom, General?

[Noriega] The lobbying system existing in the United States. When you pay for a "lobby" [preceding word in English] there, they seek a way to send you to heaven or hell, if you want to go. This we know: Someone paid for the job of discrediting the government for political purposes.

[Question] Who paid?

[Noriega] The Panamanian fifth columnists. But we are not interested in their names, because we are way ahead of them....

[Question] You have said that behind the accusations against you that were published in THE NEW YORK TIMES there is the U.S. interest in not returning the Canal in the year 2000. But there are still 14 years to go, General...

[Noriega] It seems like there are 14 years to go.... But in 1989, 3 years from now, the ratio of members within the Canal Commission will be reversed: There will be five Panamanians and four North Americans, and the administrator will be a Panamanian. It is just the opposite right now. In other words, we are at a decision-making stage.... And regarding the Canal, the outlook is dim. The Panamanian representatives are complaining that the accounting books are not being shown to them. They do not know how much the Canal administration is making, and thus they do not know how much Panama should get. The United States owes approximately $60 million to Panama in taxes. But they are showing this debt as if the Canal Administration owed it to firm X in the United States. In other words, instead of coming to Panama, this $60 million would go to the United States. In addition, the United States is not giving priority to the appointment of Panamanians to key positions, as stated in the Torrijos-Carter Treaty. This is a very dangerous complaint....

[Question] Is Panama prepared to defend the Canal in the year 2000, as stated in the treaty?

[Noriega] The 2000 Battalion, made up of 1,200 men, gathers the technology and the rules required to defend the Canal. And I must add, we are thankful to President Barco because his views prompted Shultz to make statements in favor of returning the Canal to Panama. And I want it to be known that our Defense Forces are friends of Colombia, that they have their roots in this country, and that Colombia's fate is also that of Panama. We share the same border and we have a great respect for the Colombian leaders and the military leaders.

[Question] You have said that Contadora must have military support, General. What does that mean?

[Noriega] Contadora seeks a solution for the war through the diplomacy. However, it has not found a solution that way. The negotiations table must receive the advice of military officers because the war is military. For example, there is talk about a reduction of weapons and the eradication of military advisers....

But what do diplomats know about that? Look, during the Esquipulas meeting in Guatemala, Nicaragua proposed as a solution that certain weapons be declared invalid. To the presidents of the area, Nicaragua's list seemed very satisfactory. However, when the military officers read it, they said: But Nicaragua does not have those weapons! Therefore, Contadora needs military advice.

[Question] Do you think that Contadora has any possibility of success?

[Noriega] There is a children's game called tag. When you are touching home base you are safe. In the same way, Contadora is the home base for the Central American war. If Contadora disappears, there is no home base....

[Question] How do you see the Central American situation after the U.S. Congress approved $100 million to help the contras?

[Noriega] The war strategy includes both action and deterrence. We believe the United States, which is a mature country and represents the center of power on the continent, is currently in the phase of deterrence.

[Question] Do you think it will go into action?

[Noriega] It depends on them.

[Question] General, it is said that your friend, General Galvin, the head of the U.S. Southern Command, and other people in the Pentagon are upset because Fidel Castro came out in your defense during a recent interview.

[Noriega] This is the first time I have heard that! Galvin has never mentioned that to me. On the contrary, I heard they were very pleased with the interview.

[Question] Why?

[Noriega] Because they saw a composed Fidel.

[Question] During that interview, Fidel Castro said that the charges against you published in THE NEW YORK TIMES were part of a premeditated campaign. He said this campaign had been proposed by a member of the U.S. Security Council and was endorsed by the White House, the CIA, and the State Department, although the Pentagon was initially opposed to it. What do you say?

[Noriega] I have not talked to Fidel Castro. I do not know the basis for his judgement. He has his own view, and his sources of information are not the same as mine. Thus far, we have been assured that that is not happening.

[Question] However, it is said the United States would like to have someone who is more manageable than you as head of the National Guard [name as published].

[Noriega] I will give my vote of confidence to the good judgement of the United States concerning professionalism.

[Question] For example, in the event of a U.S. invasion in Nicaragua, would you be opposed to U.S. planes taking off from bases in Panama, overflying Panama's air space?

[Noriega] The planes would not necessarily have to take off from Panama. They could do so from Honduras, or even without knowledge. Furthermore, the geopolitical conflict is over there, not in Panama. Panama's opinion is irrelevant.

[Question] It seems as though you do not want to fight with Reagan!

[Noriega] I do not see why I should fight with Reagan or with anyone. There is no reason for Reagan to fight with me, either. He has too many foes to come and fight with Manuel Antonio Noriega. He can put on his gloves to fight with someone else. I am not his enemy.

[Question] General, Camilo Gozaine, who is a member of the Panamanian National Assembly [president of the Legislative Assembly] has announced your presidential candidacy. Are you going to be Panama's president?

[Noriega] I am a military man! I heard someone say that just as the United States has its Jesse Helms, Panama has its Gozaine...

[Question] General Parades was also a military man, and nonetheless he ran for president...

[Noriega] Well, that's him. However, I am an active military man, who has many activities...

[Question] Are you busy with political activities, General?

[Noriega] I am a politician within the military discipline.

COSTA RICA

ARIAS: 'NO RUSH' TO NAME MANAGUA ENVOY

PA281800 San Jose LA NACION in Spanish 22 Aug 86 p 1-A

[Text] According to Costa Rican President Dr Oscar Arias Sanchez, there is no rush to appoint the head of the diplomatic mission in Managua. LA NACION asked the president who will replace Oscar Castro Vega, who resigned on 8 May when the previous administration ended. The answer was simple: "There is no rush." At first Alvar Antillo had been appointed, but he did not accept. Later, Nicaragua accused the Costa Rican Government at the International Court of Justice at The Hague of permitting activities in Costa Rican territory by rebels who oppose the Nicaraguan Government. According to government sources, the accusation was considered a "stab" in the country's back, because everything at that time seemed to indicate that the relationship between the two countries was returning to normal. Moreover, yesterday's official GAZETTE announced the appointment of Moises Valitutti as minister counsellor and the dismissal of Managua Consul General Carmen Rojas, who had held that post. In addition, Misael Diaz, Marco Badilla, Edwin Perez, and Jorge Arturo Monge were also dismissed from that diplomatic mission.

RIVERA Y DAMAS: MEETING IN MEXICO 'POSITIVE'

PA281530 Paris AFP in Spanish 0104 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Text] San Salvador, 27 Aug (AFP) -- Arturo Rivera y Damas, archbishop of San Salvador, today described as "positive" the preparatory meeting that took place last week in Mexico between the government and the guerrillas to disucss a third round of dialogue in El Salvador on 19 September. He maintained that although the negotiations are being carried out within the framework of the Constitution, it "must be amended" if need be, because "law was made for man, not man for the law."

In statements to the local media, Rivera y Damas said that "a problem as profound as the war cannot be resolved in one meeting, but preparatory meetings are very positive." Delegations from the government, the FMLN, and the FDR agreed in Mexico to carry out a third round of dialogue in Sesori, 153 km east of San Salvador, San Miguel Department.

Rivera y Damas, the mediator in the dialogue, said that "we can only promote meetings, discussions, and some actions." He added that "there will be other meetings prior to the Sesori meeting" during the first half of September, but "we still have to confirm the venue and date."

The archbishop said that the meeting in Mexico was characterized by "openness, flexibility, and a desire to prevent the failure of the initiative -- although, as is natural, occasionally there were opposing positions." The prelate said that President Duarte has no other option than to act in keeping with the Constitution; however, "he is obliged to promote peace within that framework."

He said: "I believe that should it become necessary to amend the Constitution during the dialogue process, then it must be done." He said that statements made last Sunday in this regard by Gregorio Rosas Chavez, auxiliary bishop of San Salvador, were misinterpreted.

Rivera y Damas added: We all think that the Constitution is a fundamental law, that any changes to it are subjected to rules. Rosas respects those rules, but he is defending an evangelical principle which states that the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath; law was made for man, not man for the law.

Meanwhile, the government and the guerrillas have reaffirmed their trust in Rivera y Damas' role as mediator in the dialogue process.

GUATEMALA

CEREZO, PAIZ EXPLAIN EXPORT-IMPORT MEASURES

PA262241 Guatemala City Radio-Television Guatemala in Spanish 0400 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Excerpts] Important private sector representatives today rejected the government's decision to establish strict state interventionist measures on Guatemalan foreign trade. The measures were opposed by the Guatemalan Export Chamber [Camara Guatemalteca de Exportacion] and the Corporation of Chambers of Commerce, Agriculture, Industries, and Financial Organizations, CACIF. These measures seek to completely control foreign trade and collect taxes for the government. In order to enforce these measures, the Swiss enterprise General Supervision Society [Sociedad General de Vigilancia], SGS, has been hired. This organization will supervise exports and imports. [passage omitted]

Guatemalan President Vinicio Cerezo has explained the purpose of the measures to be applied to foreign trade.

[Begin recording] [Cerezo] The funds to return to Guatemala from exports, research, and control are under supervision. No nationalization has been considered.

[Reporter] Would this increase the bureaucracy related to export and import of Guatemalan products?

[Cerezo] No, because we have hired an organization not at all related to the government. It is an independent concern, famous for its control ability and its experience in this field. The idea is that the proceeds of our sales abroad return to the country and pay the corresponding taxes. This is a very simple matter. We would only have to apply the law.

[Reporter] Are there any Guatemalan enterprises able to do this?

[Cerezo] Unfortunately, no. This foreign concern establishes mechanisms and procedures, but it is the state which applies standards and sets forth final controls.

[Reporter] Mr President, have any provisions been made to prevent contraband or tax evasion?

[Cerezo] Well, we are trying to establish control procedures at customs checkposts to attack corruption. SGS will control product invoicing abroad precisely to prevent tax evasions and so that the state can receive the proper taxes to be used for the good of the people.

[Reporter] Would these measures become an obstacle to the export of national products?

[Cerezo] Such measures have not hampered trade anywhere in the world. If people abide by the law, they do not have to fear the presence of an enterprise that will control invoices. Only those who have billed their products at prices above or below accepted prices need fear this type of enterprise. Those who do things correctly can remain calm. [end recording]

Guatemalan Finance Minister Rodolfo Paiz Andrade has said that the measures that have been announced should be seen as something that will permit free competition among exporters.

[Begin recording] [Paiz] The participation of this enterprise should be regarded as support for legal, loyal competition. In other words, those who export or import legally would have reason to be glad that there are now more efficient mechanisms to control product invoicing at prices over or under accepted values. We have hired this Swiss concern because we cannot do it ourselves internationally. Control is required, not only at Guatemalan customs or ports, but also at the ports of entry or departure for the products abroad. It is not exactly that we Guatemalans cannot do it, because I feel we can do whatever we set out to do. Yet, if there is an enterprise that is already organized and has offices in the ports of about 130 or 140 countries, it is best to use its services to check the prices, quantity, and quality of the products exported and imported. The SGS has not been hired to hamper exports and imports. We are committed to running an honest government. Past governments may have permitted the export or import of articles without applying law, but this government will not permit it. This firm will help us abide by the law. [end recording]

INA Executive Director Espinal made statements to HRN La Voz de Honduras after the agreement was signed. Let us listen to him:

[Begin recording] [Espinal] Yes, even during the meeting we had with the president, who proved [words indistinct] the availability [word indistinct] of the directorate, and to develop the most suitable reorganization structure. During the negotiations and the signing of the agreement, they told us that they will advise their personnel to follow the positions taken by the INA Executive Directorate.

[Reporter] Engineer Espinal, what agreements have you made with the union members?

[Espinal] Well, specifically, the direction of the INA administration by the Executive Directorate was recognized. In addition, they agreed that the implementation of the restructuring plan will come under my direction. Those who are dismissed will receive compensation in accordance with the clause established during the collective bargaining and those who participated in the movement will be respected. Finally, we agreed to maintain cordial, lawful relations.

[Reporter] Will labor unions be respected, Engineer Espinal?

[Espinal] Of course, the agreement established that. In addition, I want to tell you that [words indistinct] the [word indistinct] attended the negotiations and was pleased with the solution of the conflict.

[Reporter] Thus, no mine union leader has been dismissed?

[Espinal] No, definitely not. On 22 August we agreed to reincorporate them in their jobs, and we think that that measure contributed to the agreement reached today. [end recording] [passage omitted]

EX-ARMED FORCES CHIEF RESIGNS MILITARY

PA281515 Tegucigalpa Cadena Audio Video in Spanish 1130 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Report by Radio San Pedro reporter Tomas Arturo Che Medina]

[Text] Military sources have reported that General Walter Lopez Reyes, former Honduran Armed Forces commander in chief, was been discharged from the military. Lopez Reyes was Armed Forces commander in chief from April 1984 to February 1986. He had replaced General Gustavo Alvarez Martinez, who was unable to complete his 5-year term and now lives in Miami. Lopez Reyes was also unable to complete the 5-year term, which had begun in January 1982 with Alvarez Martinez and will expire in 1987.

In February 1986 Lopez Reyes was forced to step down and depart for the United States while a successor was named in Honduras. Upon his return after a 15-day absence, Gen Lopez Reyes announced that he had applied for retirement from the Armed Forces; this finally became effective last week.

Lopez Reyes was one of the Honduran Air Force officers who played an outstanding role during the war with El Salvador in July 1969.

NICARAGUA

ORTEGA IN BELGRADE, VIEWS NONALIGNED SUMMIT

PA280052 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 0000 GMT 27 Aug 86

[Text] Nicaragua has officially submitted its candidacy to organize the Ninth Nonaligned Summit, President Daniel Ortega has said in Belgrade, Yugoslavia. Ortega added that if the summit is held in Managua, the Nonaligned Movement will be promoted in Latin America and the world. The unity of the movement, he said, must be reinforced, and in this point we agree with the Yugoslav leaders. President Ortega also described relations with Yugoslavia as friendly and said that the dialogue between Yugoslavia and Nicaragua will have special significance because it is being held on the eve of the Eighth Nonaligned Summit. Both Yugoslavia and Nicaragua have agreed to defend the movement through the affirmation of its authentic principles, Commander Oretega said. He also accused the United States of implementing a systematic policy of aggression against Nicaragua, imposing an economic blockade, rejecting the decisions of international courts, and sending advisers to the Somozists.

A report from Belgrade indicates that President Ortega said that the U.S. Congress' decision to approve the funds for the mercenary bands shows the U.S. desire to crush the Nicaraguan revolution. The Nicaraguan president said that the current U.S. interventionist policy against Nicaragua is similar to that carried out against other sovereign countries before the shameful Vietnam war. Daniel Ortega condemned the U.S. policy of economic boycott against Nicaragua, and he indicated that as a result of that policy there is a difficult economic situation in the country.

HUMBERTO ORTEGA NOTES STRONG MILITARY DEFENSE

PA280432 Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 24 Aug 86 p 3

[Article by Gabriela Selser]

[Text] Army General Humberto Ortega, Nicaraguan defense minister, reiterated his confidence yesterday in the efforts that Nicaragua will make at the nonaligned meeting to promote detente in the Central American region and thus remove the threat of a U.S. intervention. During a ceremony to grant promotions and make changes in the EPS military hierarchy, he said: "But this confidence must be based on the military organization and on the general organization of our people in national defense tasks."

He noted that this political-diplomatic effort, which began today with the tour of President Daniel Ortega of various countries, must be "supported by a greater fulfillment of all the missions demanded by the revolution," in order to avoid a war of major proportions in Central America.

The defense minister spoke at the military ceremony after promoting Colonel Joaquin Cuadra to major general and granting the rank of colonel to Brigade Commanders Hugo Torres, Julio Ramos, and Leopoldo Rivas, in line with the new list of equivalent ranks.

He said that despite 7 years of bloody struggle against the U.S. agression, the strengthening of the military institution in Nicaragua -- the EPS and the Interior Ministry -- has not stopped and therefore the great strategic victory lies in the irreversible process of defeat now being experienced by the counterrevolutionary forces.

He recalled that the proposal on the revolution's military doctrine, approved by the government and the FSLN National Directorate in August 1985, is the result of the development of the people's fighting forces which, in the 1979 triumph, amounted only to a rebel army with approximately 9,000 or 8,000 rifles.

"We had a general idea about defense, but not a higher sense of the military art," he added, noting that by 1985, after 6 years of the popular struggle, a military doctrine based on a massive organization around the basic defense forces had emerged.

Ortega said that Nicaragua will continue its efforts to build a modern and disciplined Army with a solid and coherent structure to face any type of aggression.

"We are no longer the fistful of men who began the Sandinist struggle 25 years ago. We are no longer the army of fighters who waged the liberation war in 1979. We are a revolutionary Army with more skill and more organized men than General Augusto Cesar Sandino had in the thirties," he added.

The leader explained that although the revolution has been changing the country's economic-social situation, "we are still very far from achieving the changes our people want." Our people, he noted, have made it a priority to defend this process with weapons in their hands to guarantee a better future.

He said that despite the siege laid against Nicaragua, the people have confidence in the present and the future and that although a greater sacrifices will be made and to be free even more blood than was shed in the past century will be shed, "thousands of invaders will bite the dust of defeat here just as they did in the Sandino era."

He reiterated that Nicaragua seeks civilized relations with the United States and the avoidance of any kind of confrontation or bloodshed of foreign solders in this country. However, he warned, "we are ready to fight those who disrespect us."

What else can we do except to get ready to face a possible U.S. military intervention, Ortega asked, warning that if Nicaragua's efforts to avoid the war fail, "there will be no other path than that of a consistent struggle. This struggle will be headed by our generals, colonels, lieutenant colonels, majors, and other officers with their willingness to fight for peace with the weapons in their hands."

FSLN TO DISPLAY ALL WEAPONS 8 NOVEMBER

PA281616 Buenos Aires REUTER in Spanish 0150 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Text] Managua, 27 Aug (REUTER) -- The ruling FSLN announced tonight that Nicaragua will publicly display all its weapons on 9 November, During its largest and most historical celebration. Speaking to thousands of university students, Commander Carlos Nunez, president of the National Assembly, was applauded enthusiastically when he announced the rally and large military parade.

For the first time the people will be shown all the weapons available to defend the revolution, he said. Simultaneously, there will be a rally at the country's largest square in Managua, he added.

"It will be a challenge for the Sandinist organizers in Managua, because only people in the capital will participate; not a single bus will be used to bring people from the other provinces. This will demonstrate the FSLN's real strength in Managua," he stressed.

It will be a multipurpose celebration: the 25th anniversary of the FSLN's founding; the 10th anniversary of the combat death of its main founder, Commander Carlos Fonseca; and the 50th anniversary of Fonseca's birthday. "It will be such a solemn act that there will be guests from all political parties with which the FSLN maintains relations. The invitations are being handed out by Commander Bayardo Arce's delegation at the German Social Democratic Party meeting and during his European tour, as well as by President Ortega's delegation during his trip to Harare," he said.

Nunez also said that "the workers and peasants are complying with their duties by increasing production." What we must do now is prevent the bureaucrats from wasting the citizens' time with bureaucratic restraints and have them treat the public more pleasantly.

FOREIGN NEWSMEN CLAIM HARASSMENT BY GOVERNMENT

PA261543 San Jose NICARAGUA HOY in Spanish, Issue No 72, 23 Aug 86 pp 1, 4

[Text] Managua -- The Association of Foreign Correspondents in Managua [Asociacion de Corresponsales Estranjeros en Managua] has reported that Sandinist military personnel in the Atlantic area have confiscated photographic material from foreign correspondents and have arbitrarily arrested them.

The foreign correspondents in Managua issued a communique on 14 August reporting that "in the past few months correspondents have encountered increasing problems in their news coverage of the Atlantic area. We now find it almost impossible to conduct our professional duties as foreign correspondents in Nicaragua."

The press communique notes further: "Some correspondents have even been arrested, although they were invited by the Sandinist government or its representatives in the area."

According to the communique: "Foreign correspondents should be alert and careful when they go to the Atlantic coast."

A source close to the foreign correspondents' group, who asked not to be identified, said that the Sandinist government arrested newsman Scott Wallace of NEWSWEEK and Jose Saldivar of JORNADA as part of the "systematic restrictions imposed on foreign correspondents."

The source added that the newsmen were held for 2 days in Puerto Cabezas until they were released through the efforts of the newsmen's association which, however, could not prevent the confiscation of film and video cassettes taken in the Rio Coco area.

According to the source, colleagues Wallace and Saldivar were arrested 2 months ago. The incident, however, was not revealed until last week, after long deliberations among members of the newsmen's association.

Many of the approximately 60 foreign correspondents registered in Managua concurred that "our situation has worsened since the Sandinist government decided to close the opposition newspaper LA PRENSA indefinitely."

Among the international newsmen in Managua, there are several nationalities from the press, radio, and television. Most of them are from the United States.

Prior to this charge, two U.S. newsmen were deported after being questioned for almost 9 hours in the secret cells of the State Security corps.

BARBADOS

PRIME MINISTER CONTRADICTS ALLEYNE ON RSS

FL281804 Bridgetown CANA in English 1623 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Text] Bridgetown, Barbados, Aug 28, CANA -- Barbados today described as inaccurate a statement by Dominica's Attorney General Brian Alleyne that the island had agreed to participate fully in the Regional Security System (RSS).

Prime Minister Errol Barrow, in a statement issued to CANA through his press secretary, Don Norville, termed Alleynes Declaration inaccurate and said there have been no conversations between Bridgetown and Roseau on the subject.

...Mr. Barrow said today he had had no discussion with Mr. Alleyne or anyone else in Dominica on the Regional Security System, said the statement. The statement added that the question of the RSS was discussed with the government of St Vincent and the Grenadines. The two governments decided not to support the treaty, but allow the Memorandum of Understanding to remain with such reservations as had been expressed before, the statement concluded.

Alleyne told a Carribbean youth conference in Dominica on Tuesday that Barbados had confirmed the country's full participation in the system.

Barrow has frequently criticised what he considers as foreign efforts to militarise the region through the RSS. A formal treaty to govern the four-year-old RSS has been proposed. Following is the text of the statement from the Office of the Press Secretary of the Prime Minister:

Barbados Prime Minister Mr. Errol Barrow today described as inaccurate a statement allegedly made by Dominica's Attorney General, Mr. Brian Alleyne, regarding Barbados' position on the Regional Security System.

A CANA report from Dominica last Wednesday stated that Mr. Alleyne had told delegates at the Fourth Caribbean Youth Conference, being held there, that Mr. Barrow had confirmed his country's file participation in the system.

But Mr. Barrow said today he had had no discussion with Mr. Alleyne or anyone else in Dominica on the Regional Security System. He said, however, that the Government of Barbados had discussions with the government of St Vincent and the Grenadines and the two governments decided not to support the treaty but to allow the Memorandum of Understanding to remain with such reservations as had been expresed before.

GRENADA

DEMOCRATIC LABOUR CONGRESS PARTY CREATED

FL280053 Bridgetown CANA in English 2307 GMT 27 Aug 86

[Text] St Georges, Grenada, Aug 27, CANA -- Grenadians are launching another political party -- the Democratic Labour Congress (DLC) Friday.

There has been no official announcement of the party's hierarchy, but informed sources said the leader is ex-Junior Education Minister Kenny Lalsingh. Lalsingh resigned from the ruling New National Party (NNP) earlier in the year after being accused of misappropriation of government cement. DLC members, said the sources, include WInston Whyte, the leader of a number of defunct political parties, and Neville Rennie, an unsuccessful candidate for the Christian Democratic Labour Party (CDLP) in the 1984 general elections. In a statement issued today, the party was said to comprise like-minded Grenadians who intend to loosen the millstone that hung for decades and still hangs around the necks of Grenadians.

JAMAICA

MANLEY CALLS FOR RESIGNATION OF SEAGA GOVERNMENT

FL280014 Bridgetown CANA in English 2338 GMT 27 Aug 86

[By Paget de Fritas]

[Excerpts] Kingston, Jamaica, Aug 27, CANA -- Opposition Party leader, Michael Manley, today demanded the resignation of the Edward Seaga government.

He made the call in the wake of what he said was the government's abandonment of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) programme which was the centre-piece of its economic strategy during its campaign for power in 1980.

I call on the government to resign now and come to the people with what has happened and let them decide on what our future should be, Manley told journalists.

Manley, whose Peoples National Party (PNP), swept last month's municipal elections here, said that the IMF issue was only one factor which by itself would be grounds for a self respecting government to call a national poll.

He referred to the municipal election which the PNP turned into a confidence vote on the government, as well as last week's announced collapse of a large government/Israeli-owned high-tech farm for which no accounts have been published. The PNP leader stressed that the IMF issue was particularly critical.

Central Bank and government officials here have remained mum on the deep problems between Jamaica and the IMF, but reports from Washington say that the island has fallen behind by U.S.70 million dollars to the fund, making it virtually impossible for the island to reschedule debts and receive further support from external creditors. [passage omitted]

Claiming that the PNP had independent verification of the impasse, Manley said that now that the programme had failed, the government wanted to default in secrecy. It is a total betrayal of your obligation to the Jamaican people, he declared. With the government default, he said, the situation had moved from the arena of principle of the level of crisis. Manley said there was no basis for the PNP to join with the government to deal with the IMF on the broad national front. The government has run an arrogant and autocratic show, he charged.

The Dutch Government was also advised to call back the mercenaries. The demonstrators further demanded that Dutch Government end all interference in the internal affairs of Suriname and that accomplices who live in Holland must be arrested forthwith.

In a delcaration, which the demonstrators presented to the government and national assembly, they requested that the Dutch Government be condemned internationally.

Bouterse Speaks to Protesters

FL282245 Paramaribo International Service in English 1730 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Text] The relation between Holland and Suriname has to be evaluated. This was made known yesterday by government leader Desi Bouterse when he addressed demonstrators at the Monument of the Revolution. The demonstrators were protesting the involvement of the Dutch Government in the internal affairs of Suriname. Bouterse noted that the Dutch Government did not arrest Dutch nationals although these people were found to be preparing actions against Suriname on Dutch territory.

Speaking yesterday at the Monument of the Revolution, government leader Desi Bouterse expressed appreciation with the United States of North America for arresting 14 mercenaries who were on their way to Suriname to overthrow the government.

The commander told demonstrators that Holland is the mouthpiece of the Brunswijk gang because video tapes with Brunswijk and his gang were being reproduced on Dutch television. Bouterse called on the people to exercise some patience with regard to the Brunswijk affair. He said that Brunswijk is only a bank robber who is being used by other people. He explained that the Brunswijk gang is supported by the Dutch Information Service and that their actions are aimed at creating disunity among the people of Suriname.

PAZ ESTENSSORO EXPLAINS STATE OF SIEGE

PY300318 La Paz Radio Illimani Network in Spanish 0020 GMT 30 Aug 86

[Speech to the nation by Bolivian President Victor Paz Estenssoro from Government House -- live; broadcast in progress]

[Text] That is not the right way to resolve the pressing problems we are enduring. Self-styled civic (?actions) and painful mass marches bearing flashy labels such as "March for Life and Peace" will not help us resolve the basic issues that worry the great Bolivian family.

The [words indistinct] labor and the so-called civic organizations do not realize the extent to which our economy has shrunk. They do not care that the refined tin we produce at an average cost of $10 per pound is being sold on the international market for $2.45 per pound. They do not ask themselves, and they do not try to figure out who pays the difference. Their concern and their studies do not go to the extent of telling the minewowrkers -- for whom I feel strong sympathy in their plight -- the truth about the [words indistinct] consequences that this [difference between cost and price of tin] has for all Bolivians and especially for the working class.

It would seem they are not worried about the nation's plight. In the final analysis, they have only one objective: to remove the current government.

In my latest message to the National Congress, I stated that the refusal to abandon fiction and face reality as it is, has led to the situation we must now endure. I cannot understand how anyone can fail to realize that all the enterprises of the Mining Corporation of Bolivia [Comibol] are losing heavily, and that these losses cannot be absorbed by the economy -- which is experiencing a severe crisis -- without unleashing once again the hyperinflation that used to punish the people cruelly, especially the working class.

The structural changes of the Comibol are not intended -- as certain radical labor and political leaders who distort the truth would have us believe -- as a step backward, but rather as a heroic attempt to preserve what is left of a mining industry that cannot remain afloat under the present conditions.

This program, aimed at maintaining and making profitable the operations of Comibol, has unleashed an irrational reaction from all levels of the mineworker's leadership. This, coupled with regional problems and with the help of many disgruntled politicians, has led to a provocative adventure called the "March for Life and Peace," in which thousands of humble people who are obviously experiencing problems caused by the severe crisis we are experiencing were enrolled for a long march designed to make the government back off from its project to rescue Comibol from disaster.

[Words indistinct] that the marchers were being sacrificed for a utopian social and economic proposal and a political endeavor of clear-cut insurrectional connotations. As days passed, the mechanism plunging us toward an unfathomable social commotion was being activated.

The media coverage the march received and the [words indistinct] of the Bolivian people showing the large mass of people marching toward Government House in order to submit petitions, created an atmosphere of commiseration within which the pilgrims were shown as heroes and the government was depicted as a stubborn [word indistinct].

Nothing could be farther from the truth. No one wants Conibol to disappear. On the contrary, the idea is to save whatever positive aspects are left of the state-owned mining industry and to lay the foundation for the adjustment of this industry to the current conditions of the international metals market by directing attention to other minerals like silver and lead, not just tin.

The objective of the march initially represented a legitimate right to make a petition, although the method employed implied intolerable pressure exerted by those who thought the excesssive political power of the labor unions was in trouble.

The paralysis of two departments caused vast harm to the national and local economy and threatened to plunge us into a state of social upheaval of unfathomable consequences. Economic and social considerations forced the government to lay the state of siege in keeping with the express stipulations of the national Constitution. The implementation of this state of siege will mean curtailing the individual rights only of those who are persist in the endeavor to destablize the democratic regime.

The government is not unfeeling toward the hardships of the working class because of the economic crisis. After the economic reorganization measures currently in effect, the government plans to implement very soon public projects and settlements to new lands, thus employing the inactive labor force. It will also search for other means to alleviate the situation of the [words indistinct].

I would like to make a fraternal call upon all Bolivians, without regard for political position, to get the country on its feet, to be generous enough to think about the nation as a whole and not just about partisan interests. Let us take the path of serving the supreme interests of the nation and let us enter into a pact to save the fatherland.

When I talk about this land of ours, I definitely include the people of the working class who certainly deserve a better future. We shall spare no effort to make this come true. Help me raise this country from the rubble. Let us not allow ourselves to be defeated by these problems so we will be worthy of being called Bolivians.

Police, Demonstrators Clash

PY020311 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0244 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Text] La Paz, 1 Sep (EFE) -- A serious clash between police and demonstrators, protesting the reinstatement of the state of siege in Bolivia, took place today a few hours before Congress met to analyze the government's decision.

According to initial report, 1 guard died, 10 people were injured, and about 50 demonstrators were arrested by security forces after a clash that took place in Cochambaba, 400 km east of La Paz.

The demonstration was organized by the Cochabamba University Students Federation: to protest the reinstatement of the state of siege in Bolivia; to demand the release of the arrested protesters; to support regional demands; and, to request the withdrawal of the U.S. troops stationed in Bolivia since 16 July.

In turn, the cabinet today attended a congressional session during which Foreign Minister Guillermo Bedregal read an official report on the reasons and purposes behind the state of siege, which he qualified as an "emergency" measure the government was forced to adopt. Bedregal said the Mining branch should be well aware of the miners' problems, and read a detailed summary of the development and conflicts of this sector.

He said that the Mining Corporation of Bolivia [Comibol] -- a state company in charge of managing all the nationalized mining districts -- was created by the Nationalist Revolutionary Movement [MNR], which is currently in power, and that, therefore, it is up to the MNR to also define its future.

The analysis of the state of siege measure will continue tomorrow and must conclude either with the ratification or rejection of the government decision.

COB: End of State of Siege

PY020242 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0143 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Text] La Paz, 1 Sep (EFE) -- The Bolivian Labor Confederation [COB] has decided to demand that the government lift the state of siege as a precondition for holding talks to try to solve the current social crisis.

A document released today by a clandestine COB leadership states that it is necessary for the executive branch to comply with this demand and to allow authorities of the Catholic Church to mediate so, "the workers' voices will be heard," and to leave aside "authoritarian and haughty positions."

The COB communique also states that it will remain in a state of alert. It demands the immediate release of all the arrested labor leaders, as well as an immediate solution to "the problems of all the Bolivian workers, mainly those of the mineworkers."

It also states that in order to find "the pact to save the country" -- mentioned by President Victor Paz Estenssoro in his last message -- it is necessary: to withdraw the U.S. troops; to annul the tax reform law; to suspend the foreign debt payments; and, to cancel the immigration of 5,000 Chinese families to Bolivian territory.

The document terms the military cordon imposed on the "March For Life" of more than 8,000 mineworkers as "a war declaration by the government on the Bolivian nation." It adds that the "war materiel is financed with the mineworkers and the Bolivian people's efforts should never be pointed against them. On the contrary, it should be used to protect the country," and "the people in order to allow their voice of protest to be heard in fact of the inhuman conditions to which they have been submitted."

In conclusion, the COB communique asserts, "the Bolivian workers will continue to struggle without fail for the restitution of their sectoral and national achievements, which have been trampled on, by concentrating on the national mining and metallurgic sector problem and the defense of the state economy sector."

MARCHERS TO RETURN HOME, TENSIONS DECREASING

PY291611 La Paz Radio Panamericana in Spanish 1430 GMT 29 Aug 86

[Excerpts] [Broadcast in progress] [Enrique] ... the tension of the past few hours, we want to report that, well, the tension (?caused by) the state of siege has decreased. We also want to say that according to Interior Ministry sources, the situation is totally calm, particularly in La Paz.

[Reporter] Right Enrique. We can also report that school activities are normal.

[Enrique] An official congressional delegation headed by Deputy Gonzalo Valdas went to Patacamaya [words indistinct].

[Reporter] I think it is Calamarca, right?

[Enrique] Right. The delegation went there to become acquainted with [passage indistinct].

[Begin Valdas recording] [passage omitted] The FSTMN [Trade Union Federation of Bolivian Mineworkers] and the leaders of all the miners unions have made a key decision. They have decided on the orderly return of marchers in view of the situation caused by the state of siege and the military cordon around the marchers. Pursuant to this objective, two [words indistinct] convoys are approaching Calamarca. Also, (Penta) buses will be provided for transporting the miners. I must say that the congressional multiparty commission and the church have greatly helped settle the situation and obtain from the Armed Forces the promise to keep calm while the marchers begin their orderly return this morning. Arrested Marchers Isolated

[Text] La Paz, 29 Aug (EFE) -- Defense Minister Luis Fernando Valle today reported that those arrested during the first day of the state of siege -- which was decreed by the government yesterday -- will be sent to isolated tropical areas in western Bolivia.

The Interior Ministry has confirmed the arrest of 161 people, among whom are union, political, and journalist leaders, while human rights and union organizations have asserted the number of arrested surpasses 270.

Del Valle said: "Those arrested who were involved in disorders will be sent by Air Force planes to isolated areas." He added: "We shall not make the same mistake we made last year when we confined people who were not directly responsible for the disorders, while others who were responsible for promoting conflicts were set free."

In September 1985, the government decreed a state of siege to confront a general protest against its economic policy, and ordered the arrest and confinement of hundreds of persons. Puerto Ruco, in Pando Department, and Magdalena and Ixiamas in the Beni Department -- where the U.S. support troops in the stuggle against drug trafficking are headquartered -- were the places of confinement at that time.

Defense Minister Valle also said that since early this morning, workers who took part in the "March for Life" have started to return to their places of origin aboard vehicles provided by the police and the Armed Forces.

Over, 8,000 workers, including women and children, have been cordoned off by the Army since the evening of 28 August and they have not yet received any supplies or medicines. Legislative and church commissions tried in vain to break through the Army barrier to bring water and food to the marchers.

The Bolivian Church today expressed its concerns over the atmosphere of fear and tension resulting in the enforcement of exceptional measures by the government, while La Paz Archbishop Jorge Manrique has charged the authorities with flagrant human rights violations.

AFP CORRESPONDENT RELEASED AFTER 3 DAYS

PY302245 Paris AFP in Spanish 2101 GMT 30 Aug 86

[Text] La Paz, 30 Aug (AFP) -- AFP correspondent in Bolivia and Executive Secretary of the Federation of Bolivian Press Workers [FTPB] Andres Soliz Rada, was released here today after being under arrest for 3 days in Interior Ministry offices.

Soliz Rada was released after labor leaders from his sector met with Interior Minister Fernando Barthelemy. They asked the minister to allow national and foreign journalists to carry out press activities normally throughout the country.

The AFP correspondent was arrested on 28 August in his home after the government decreed a state of siege. The state of siege was a result of the march of 7,000 workers from Oruro to La Paz, and a general stoppage in the mining departments of Oruro and Potosi. There was solidarity throughout the country for the march.

National and foreign journalists organizations requested that President Victor Paz Estenssoro's government free Soliz Rada, given his position as a journalist and press sector union leader.

PY291837 Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 28 Aug 86 p 21

[Communique issued by the Planning Ministry]

[Text] The Planning Secretariat of the Presidency of the Republic [Seplan] has received with great astonishment a report from the UPI news agency datelined Tokyo quoting a brief statement by Mr Takao Akabane, spokesman for the Japanese Economic Planning Agency. According to the report, Mr Akabane said that Brazil is allegedly forming a common front with the debtor countries to confront the IMF. The report even said that Mr Reischstul allegedly is renegotiating Brazilian debts with Japan and mentioned other totally unfounded details about negotiations.

Regarding this subject Seplan must clarify:

1. Mr Henri Phillipe Reischstul is a member of a Brazilian mission that has the objective of increasing the technological cooperation between the two countries. This mission has never contacted Japanese companies or organizations with the purpose of renegotiating Brazilian debts.

2. Mr Reischstul has carefully studied the news agency report, denied its contents entirely, and denied knowing its origin.

3. Given the seriousness of Mr Akabane's statement, Seplan Minister Joao Sayad has invited Mr Koichi Komura, Japanese Ambassador to Brazil, to his office in the Seplan to express the Brazilian displeasure at Mr Akabane's statement. Ambassador Komura said he would clarify the incident with this government to prevent further misunderstandings stemming from this report.

The Japanese ambassador said that he will contact his government so that this piece of disinformation is not spread further.

PY020202 Santiago Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 1 Sep 86

[Text] An arsenal containing home-made weapons was found at the Metropolitan University. The discovery of such an arsenal on the premises of the Metropolitan University of Education Sciences -- the former Teachers Institutes -- caused the Metropolitan University of Education Sciences to issue a communique, which states the following:

The Metropolitan University of Education Sciences deems it their duty to denounce to the university community and the public this situation promoted by a violent group which -- although it is a small group -- uses all destructive means against people and property, regardless of the loss of human life, to wreak havoc and disrupt order and tranquillity.

The Metropolitan University of Education Sciences reasserts its commitment to safeguard the very essence of the university and to guarantee the fulfillment of its institutional goals which seek to [word indistinct] interests foreign to its activities, unquote.

UP CONGRESSMAN KILLED 30 AUG IN BARRANCABERMEJA

PA311920 Paris AFP in Spanish 1812 GMT 31 Aug 86

[Text] Bogota, 31 Aug (AFP) -- A member of the Colombian Chamber of Deputies, Leonardo Posada of the Patriotic Union [UP], was murdered last night by two unidentified individuals in Barrancabermeja, an oil port in the north, the police reported today.

The attack took place in the city streets after Posada had attended a political meeting.

The murderers fired several shots at Posada: he died of a bullet wound in the head 1 hour after the attack.

Posada, 36, was active with the Colombian communist youth from the time he was very young; he held several posts within the party. He was a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Colombia [PCC], a representative to the Chamber of Santander Department, and a council member for Barrancabermeja.

His party, the new Political Movement of the Left, sent him to Barrancabermeja to conduct proselytizing activities in this important oil port.

The PCC Central Committee told AFP that it was angry over the murder of their leader Posada. It also said it renders homage to this new martyr in the struggle against militarism and in favor of a vanguard democracy. It demands that President Virgilio Barco adopt a strong action to unmask the enemies of the peace process, as well as promptly investigate this serious attack.

It emphasizes that "we reiterate our firm will to continue struggling until there is a democracy that will respect the rights to human life, work, and progress of society."

National Strike Called

PA012326 Hamburg DPA in Spanish 2229 GMT 1 Sep 86

[Text] Bogota, 1 Sep (DPA) -- The pro-Soviet FARC announced today it will uphold the truce signed with the government, but warned that, through its political movement -- the UP -- it will call for a national civic stoppage.

The announcement was made from the "Green House" camp in the mountains of the eastern range of the Andes by the FARC ideologist, Jacobo Arenas, following a talk with UP coordinator and former presidential candidate Jaime Pardo Leal.

The strike called by the FARC and the UP is to reject the fact that several UP political leaders have been murdered since the 9 March legislative elections.

Two UP congressmen have been murdered in the last 48 hours. Leonardo Posada Pedroza was murdered Saturday night in the Barrancabermeja river port, and Senator Pedro Nel Jimenez Obando was murdered today by unidentified individuals in Villavicencio, east of Bogota.

Leaders To Demand 'Guarantees'

PA012157 Bogota Emisoras CARACOL Network in Spanish 1215 GMT 1 Sep 86

[Text] The leaders will meet today with Government Minister Fernando Cepeda Ulloa to demand more guarantees for their militants. The UP has charged that the murder of alternate represemtaive Leonardo Posada Pedroza on Saturday in Barrancabermeja brings to 13 the number of their spokesmen in public institutions who have been killed in recent months.

The UP warned that the truce with the FARC is also jeopardized by the military operations being conducted in 12 of the 27 fronts of that organization. The UP leadership said that Congressman Posado Pedroza had received several threats which the UP had reported to the government and requested protection for him.

Posada Pedroza was also a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Colombia [PCC]. The PCC asked President Barco Vargas to adopt strong measures to unmask the enemies of the peace process and order a prompt investigation of the murder.

The leaders of the Liberal Party in Santander, such as Senator Horacio Serpa Uribe, have said Posada Pedroza was a leader who strongly influenced the peasants in the middle Magdalena area, where his participation was important in achieving the atmosphere of peace that has prevailed in the area since mid-1984.

Leonardo Posada Pedroza's body lies in state in the National Capitol and will be buried today in Bogota.

FEBRES CORDERO ASKS PRIVATE SECTOR TO SACRIFICE

PA010426 Quito Voz de los Andes in Spanish 1230 GMT 31 Aug 86

[Text] President Febres Cordero has stated that the private sector, particularly industry, must assume with fervor, determination, and without any reservations its quota of sacrifice within the common and great effort to overcome the crisis caused by the drop in the international oil prices and to preserve the wonderful outlook of economic and social progress.

He made these statements during a solemn ceremony to commemorate the 50th anniversary of Guayaquil's Chamber of Industries.

Referring to the country's economic crisis, he said the dilemma is clear and there is no way out. Either private enterprise will nobly and actively assume the biggest share of the solution -- because it is not acceptable that this burden is borne most heavily by the poor -- the most serious difficulties will be overcome, and a big area for the activity and expansion of all the sectors will be opened, or it will selfishly and narrowmindedly refuse to give its patriotic contribution, which is indispensable, the difficulties will increase, and, amid all this whirl of a crisis, freedom, justice, and the private sector will sink.

The president also said that according to the Constitution, the laws, and logic, the executive branch must establish and implement the country's economic policy.

NEW GROUP CLAIMS ESCAPE OPERATION CREDIT

PA281600 Quito Radio Quito in Spanish 2300 GMT 27 Aug 86

[Text] A new subversive organization, the self-styled International Revolutionary Commandos [Comandos Revolucionarios Internacionalistas] has claimed responsibility for an operation in which criminal Kleber Gia Bustamente and two other inmates escaped from the Garcia Moreno penal center.

The organization affirmed that Gia Bustamente's escape has no relations to the Alfaro Lives terrorist group or to an escape conducted at the Eugenio Espejo Hospital that claimed the lives of three young policemen.

The police have no clues that could lead to the recapture of the escaped criminals, and are amazed at the tactical manner in which a tunnel was dug toward the sewers.

PA010345 Quito Voz de los Andes in Spanish 1230 GMT 31 Aug 86

[Text] Guayaquil -- The air and naval power that Ecuador has to defend its territory, as well as the high degree of scientific and technical training that its officers and troops have in the art of war, was undoubtedly shown during the "Blue Horizon" and "Unitas" exercises that are being carried out jointly with North American troops.

FAE [Ecuadoran Air Force] members under the command of Brigadier General Marcelo Salvador showed their great courage and expertise in sonic [sonico] flights almost at ground level, the interception of enemy aircraft, and the tactic firing exercises showing the correct precision and altitude in air attacks.

BOMB EXPLODES IN SHOP OWNED BY SOVIET CITIZEN

PY312154 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1849 GMT 31 Aug 86

[Text] Lima, 31 Aug (EFE) -- Six Soviet sailors, who were injured during a terrorist attack perpetrated yesterday at a shop in El Callao, Lima's port, were not sent to their country today because of their serious condition.

A spokesman for the Soviet airline Aeroflot and the guide of the sailors, who worked on small Soviet fishing boats operating in Peruvian territorial waters, have said at Lima airport that the sailors will presumably leave for the Soviet Union next Tuesday.

Both sources confirmed that one of the injured sailors, who lost both legs and his right arm as a result of the explosion at the shop is fighting for his life. They also said that a total of six people were injured during the bomb attack.

Four of the injured sailors, among them the one who lost his legs and his arm, are hospitalized at the San Juan de Dios Hospital in El Callao and the other two at the San Felipe clinic in Lima.

The shop, which is owned by Oller Bilinskiuna, a Soviet citizen, and is usually frequented by Soviet and Polish sailors, is located very close to the Callao provincial police chief's office of the Peruvian Investigative Police (PIP) at Lima's port.

The preliminary investigations conducted by the police indicate that the explosive device was planted under the shop's counter.

Zulema Ramos, the owner's wife, who was also inside the bazaar with her husband at the time of the explosion emerged unharmed. She said that a young woman came in asking prices, and left without buying anything.

The left-wing newspaper LA VOZ today reported receiving a telephone call yesterday in which someone representing the subversive group Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement [MRTA] denied that that group perpetrated the attack. "The attack was perpetrated by some right-wing group," the caller said.

The Soviet Embassy has not as yet made any statements on this case.

Soviet Embassy Condemns Attack

PY010228 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0210 GMT 1 Sep 86

[Text] Lima, 31 Aug (EFE) -- The Soviet Embassy in Peru today condemned a terrorist attack of 30 August which left six Soviet sailors wounded, and conveyed its belief that the attack was perpetrated by "enemies of normal relations between the two countries."

In an official communique, the Soviet Embassy refers to an attack perpetrated at the Najodka shop, in El Callao, where a bomb wounded six Soviet sailors. According to the communique, one sailor is in serious condition.

The communique adds that a group of Soviet citizens was at the shop when the explosion occurred and the Peruvian police are investigating the attack. The communique concludes by voicing hope that the Peruvian authorities will clear up the incident.

Commenting on the bloody attack, War Minister Jorge Flores stated here today that terrorists "are seeking to create problems between Peru and the Soviet Union." Flores described the attack as "condemnable," and voiced his opinion that the attackers were members of the Maoist Shining Path which, he said, "is seeking to create problems and is attacking everyone indiscriminately."

[Text] The military maneuvers carried out by the Brazilian and Venezuelan Navies on the coasts of Margarita and the Los Roques archipelago were a success. The Brazilian ships that participated in the maneuvers were the destroyer Mariz E. Barros and the frigate Liberal, while Venezuela utilized the frigates Mariscal Sucre, General Soublette, and General Salom, the submarine Caribe, and patrol boats Constitution and Patria.

During the maneuvers there were firing practices, fuel, water, and light cargo transportation practices. The Brazilian officers were pleased with the results of the joint maneuvers, the fourth conducted between Venezuela and Brazil.

Brazilian commander Captain Luis Hernandez, and his Venezuelan counterpart Diego Munoz Castillo, feel that these joint maneuvers are very useful. Brazil and Venezuela have already begun plans for future military maneuvers, which will be aimed at developing better defense systems and updating their naval knowledge.

LEPAGE RESIGNS, NEW MINISTERS NAMED

PA020157 Caracas Television Service in Spanish 0000 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Excerpts] Venezuelan Interior Minister Octavio Lepage resigned his post irrevocably today to run as the Democratic Action Party's presidential candidate during the 1988 electoral campaign. [passage omitted]

His two page resignation addressed to the president explains the reasons for his resignation. He first announces his presidential aspirations and justifies them as a genuine objective. He continues that he feels fully entitled to continue to serve the country in the presidency. His letter concludes: This would be the climax of a life devoted consistently to the struggle to establish and consolidate democracy in Venezuela. Lepage says that, despite his resignation, he does not regard as convenient -- either for the government or his party, or the country -- an anticipation of an internal struggle. He reiterates that the campaign should be postponed. Finally, he says he regards as possible an agreement among all candidates for an accord without any subterfuge. The letter also describes Lepage's solidarity with the government's initiatives to cope with the crisis and notes that the president has succeeded in effecting the risky transition from a country that lived in opulence and dilapidation to an entirely different one.

Lepage has been replaced as interior minister by Jose Angel Ciliberto, who was minister of development until today. Ciliberto was sworn in this afternoon by President Lusinchi. Gustavo Miraval Bustillos will become the new minister of development and will cease to be governor of Miranda state. [passage omitted]

DE LA MADRID ADDRESSES FOREIGN POLICY ISSUE

FL012145 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 1819 GMT 1 Sep 86

[Text] Mexico City, 1 Sep (NOTIMEX) -- Mexico's foreign policy principles were ratified today by President De la Madrid when he repeated resolute support for the Contadora Group and for the initiative of the Group of Six on peace and disarmament.

Foreign policy is an essential bulwark for the defense of the fatherland, De la Madrid stressed in his fourth government report. He reiterated the continued use of diplomatic channels for solving differences and controversies. There must be political dialogue and not the use of power.

The president said all countries should reinitiate the struggle in favor of a new international cooperation order which will include the legitimate aspirations of our countries. It is essential, he stressed, to do away with the prejudice that a new international economic order represents a quest for more demands exclusively for developing nations.

Mexico has insisted on the fact that there can be no real peace without consistent development. A world of peace will only be possible to the degree that very old needs and historic denials are satisfied, the president noted.

President De la Madrid also referred to the last meeting of the Group of Six, of which Mexico is a member. During the meeting, he said, Argentina, Greece, India, Sweden, Tanzania, and Mexico had reaffirmed the need for the nuclear superpowers to end the irrational arms race and to agree, as soon as possible, on a process of general and irreversible nuclear disarmament.

With respect to the Central American conflict, he said the Latin American governments which are members of the Contadora peace-seeking process and its support group have not ceased in their efforts to promote a dialogue and negotiations to safeguard the legitimate interests of the countries in the region and safety in the area.

He said Mexico believes it is essential to strengthen and deepen the process of diplomatic negotiations as the best alternative in the face of a generalized war, but that this depends on the political will of the sides in conflict.

Regarding the two rounds of talks he held with U.S. President Reagan, De la Madrid said these meetings were aimed at making possible a dialogue and communications, in addition to activating and strengthening the relations of bilateral cooperation.

More on Government Report

FL011924 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 1924 GMT 1 Sep 86

[Text] Mexico, 1 Sep (NOTIMEX) -- Upon presenting his fourth government report to congress, President Miguel de la Madrid has warned that it would be a serious historical error to allow domestic and foreign pressures to risk our national well being.

We have serious problems in 1986, he said. Nevertheless, he continued, the nature of the problems is not the same as that of 1982 and if the drastic fall in oil prices had not occurred, this year our economy would have continued its growth and inflation would have been reduced.

Last year we experienced pressures, criticism, foreign deception (asechanzas externas), and because of this, we have had to make an effort to prevent our country's independence and sovereignty from suffering, De la Madrid said.

In addition, De la Madrid denounced the existence of minority groups which try to take advantage of the country's difficult situation to overturn the system derived from the Mexican revolution.

Because of the economic crisis, the enormous social transformation, natural adversities, and foreign attacks, a feeling of uncertainty has developed which, because of naivete, ignorance, or bad faith, has been exclusively blamed on the government.

Because of this, the president called for avoiding facades which appear to the rest of the world to be expressions of contentment and confidence.

The current crisis does not exclusively belong to Mexico, he said. We live in the midst of a world with serious threats and difficulties, stressed De la Madrid. He stressed that these are times of change which require wisdom and decisive action and society should make an effort to be objective and evaluate problems, actions, and results.

The president said serious problems occurred on 1 September 1985 which aggravated the difficulties we are confronting. He referred to the earthquakes and falling oil prices which complicated the situation.

Nevertheless, he said, the revolutionary regime has always had a response for change, and because of this, the current government is capable of confronting the situation efficiently as well as the difficulties creating pressure.

The president again strongly rejected the claims that only the will of the president exists in the country and that Mexico either stands or falls in a six-year period. Under the new guidelines, said De la Madrid, the government is acting serenely and bases its actions on law.

He then demanded reinforcing the certainty of our convictions and the will to continue national projects. He expressed his certainty that we have not fallen into the temptation of overturning our achievements using political pretexts or the crisis as an excuse to damage freedom.

The economic solution requires work and effort, he said. Policies require responsible pluralistic participation, said the president. He reiterated his goal of maintaining and strengthening pluralism and democratic political development as part of our changing society.

CUBAN EXILES SEEK DELVALLE'S HELP TO GO TO U.S.

PA261816 Panama City EL SIGLO in Spanish 26 Aug 86 p 22

[Text] Cuban exiles stranded in Panama with transit visas staged a public demonstration yesterday outside the installations of television Channel 5. They demanded that President Delvalle grant them social protection and exert his influence before the U.S. Government so that they may be allowed to enter the country.

The Cubans took to the streets 1 week after they requested the president's assistance in obtaining jobs, and educational and health aid, from authorities.

In what appears to be the beginning of a major internal crisis prompted by the indiscriminate flow of Cubans in transit from Panama into the United States, anti-Castro activists participated in the demonstration to ask President Delvalle to obtain 20,000 U.S. visas for them.

Our reporter, Alex Gongora Torres, went to the site of the demonstration and noted that the Cuban exiles are asking for almost the same things which are in short supply in Panama: jobs, and medical and educational assistance.

The demonstrators later went to the U.S. Embassy to explain their situation; the Reagan administration maintains its stance of banning the entry of Cubans from third countries into the United States.

With the support from the Cuban community in the United States, that government will soon implement harsh restrictions to curb the entry of more Cubans into the United States.

At publication neither the Presidency of the Republic nor the General Immigration Directoraate of the Defense Forces have commented.

COLOMBIAN DRUG TRAFFICKER OCHOA SOUGHT HERE

PA271938 Panama City EXTRA in Spanish 27 Aug 86 p 1

[Text] U.S. DEA officials here have requested their Panamanian counterparts from the Special Anti-Narcotics Forces to begin a search throughout the country for Colombian drug trafficker Jorge Luis Ochoa Vasquez.

Ochoa, who was extradited from Spain to Colombia some weeks ago, disappeared from Colombia after a judge released him illegally on a $10,000 bond.

The drug trafficker's release has angered U.S. authorities who had sought Ochoa because of his attempts to introduce cocaine and marijuana into the United States.

DEA has now "recommended" Colombian and Panamanian authorities begin a man hunt for Ochoa.

Jorge Luis Ochoa has many contacts and friends here, especially with people linked to horse racing activities to whom he has sold thoroughbreds and pacers.

There was a rumor that an Ochoa group called "The Clan" had murdered Panamanians Cesar "Captain Poison" Rodriguez and Ruben Dario Paredes Jr in Medellin, Colombia.

The strong ties between Ochoa and top Panamanian personalities were proven when General Ruben Dario Paredes held a secret meeting with one of the members of the group which denied its participation in the assassination of Cesar and Ruben Jr.

It is currently believed that Jorge Luis Ochoa may have entered Panama illegally. However, there are no official reports on this.

OFFICIAL DEPLORES U.S. 'ATTITUDE' ON RAILROAD

PA291815 Panama City LA PRENSA in Spanish 29 Aug 86 P 1A

[By Jose Quintero de Leon]

[Text] Yesterday the Embassy issued a communique on the controversial subject of the Panama Railroad's operating condition, denying allegations that the U.S. Government turned it over in a dilapidated condition, as the government has been charging lately. The Embassy communique notes that a stock of spare parts worth over $500,000 was also turned over.

In the afternoon Major Fernando Quezada, military administrator of the railroad, released a 1976 report on the condition of the railroad, which he said had been "concealed" by the United States during the negotiation of the treaties. He said that he deplored the fact that his U.S. military colleagues are playing into the hands of those seeking to hurt Panama.

The U.S. Embassy bulletin notes that during fiscal years 1971-1979 the maintenance expenses (repairs of locomotives, rolling stock, signals systems, rails, and railroad structures) of the Railroad Division averaged $1.47 million a year and markedly increased during the fiscal years immediately preceding the turnover to the Panama.

The report says that during this last period a substantial number of ties were replaced and old rails were exchanged for new heavier rail. It stresses that almost all ballast was replaced and the ties were tamped down along the length of the railway. It notes that a total of $1.02 million was invested in major projects connected with the railroad during fiscal years 1971-1979.

To confirm this, the communique notes that two consulting firms hired by the Panamanian Government (a French firm in 1978 and a British firm in 1979, following the entry into force of the Treaty) reported that "even though it was old" the railroad had been maintained in good condition.

A very important point in the document states that transfer of the railroad's assets and equipment on 1 October 1979 included -- at no cost -- ties, spare parts, and other inventory items that were made available by the cancel organization for the railroad. This inventory was worth approximately $500,000, of which $180,000 were ties.

Regarding the training of personnel, the communique states that to provide for an easy transfer of the railroad, the Panama Canal Commission [PCC] made available the services of 22 key employees of the Division (mainly locomotive engineers, dispatchers, and maintenance experts) to give an opportunity to the new railroad employees to acquire the necessary training and on-the-job experience.

The document notes that this does not include a number of people who were trained in inventory procurement and supply procedures by experts of the canal organization immediately after the treaty went into effect.

Maj Quezada called a news conference yesterday morning, which included a train ride to Colon, to counteract recent warnings by the PCC and the U.S. Southern Command against use of the railroad.

Standing under a large sign reading "Nobody Is Surrendering or Budging Here, Dammit", Quezada said he deplored very much the fact that his U.S. counterparts have begun playing the game set up for them by some Zonians who are still left on the PCC and have joined the campaign orchestrated in the United States against Panama, which is groundless and only intended to misinform the international public opinion to continue violating the treaty and not to turn over the Canal in the year 2000.

Quezada charged that the attitude of the U.S. Armed Forces is one of expiation and guilt because they have not been using the railroad for 2 years. He said they have always known how unsafe the railroad is because they turned it over in that condition and, not the least of all, the Armed Forces have contributed to the deterioration of the railroad by contracting their military cargo for the port of Balboa and not the port of Cristobal, thereby reducing the amount of cargo handled by the railroad and its revenues.

The PCC also came under attack by the military administrator. Referring to the bulletin warning PCC employees about the risk of using the railroad, Quezada said that the PCC's attitude is more serious and irresponsible because when the railroad was discussed during the treaty negotiations, an important 1976 report on the condition of the railroad was kept secret. He described this as a fraud at the negotiations table.

COSTA RICA

NICARAGUAN DEPUTY MINISTER MAKES SHORT VISIT

PA011508 San Jose Radio Reloj in Spanish 1200 GMT 1 Sep 86

[Text] Costa Rican Foreign Minister Rodrigo Madrigal Nieto has announced that our country's diplomatic relations with Nicaragua will continue at a very low level following the meeting in San Jose of the two countries' deputy foreign ministers.

Nicaraguan Deputy Foreign Minister Jose Leon Talavera arrived unannounced on Friday at the Penas Blancas border post, from where he traveled in a vehicle with diplomatic license plates to San Jose. The Sandinist official then requested, by means that have not been disclosed, a meeting with government officials. The request was honored immediately. Deputy Foreign Minister Carlos Rivera met informally for 2 hours with his Sandinist counterpart. Each party upheld his stand in an unofficial manner.

It was reported that the Sandinist official reiterated all of his government's charges against Costa Rica, including the charges before the International Court of Justice for allegedly providing support to the counterrevolutionaries. Rivera said he told Talavera that Costa Rica has not ruled out the possibility of filing a countersuit against Nicaragua at the ICJ. In addition to bilateral issues, the two officials discussed other political issues such as the Central American crisis, U.S. aid, the counterrevolution, and the alleged U.S. aggression against Nicaragua. Managua's ambassador to San Jose, Claudia Chamorro, attended the meeting; however, she has made no comments whatsoever on the meeting.

Some sources have interpreted this sudden visit by the Sandinist envoy as an effort to improve relations, which are currently at a low level, between the two governments. Relations have undergone difficult moments as a result of repeated violations by the EPS into our territory, as former President Luis Alberto Monge, and the current President Oscar Arias Sanchez, have charged. Some 4 months after Arias' inauguration, the Costa Rican Embassy in Managua is still officially vacant.

Communique Issued on Talks

[By Wilfredo Chacon S.]

[Text] San Jose, 30 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- The deputy foreign ministers of Costa Rica and Nicaragua conferred in this capital "in a completely informal atmosphere" to exchange views "in a general way" about various topics, it was officially reported today.

After a full day of secrecy about the visit by Jose Leon Talavera, the Sandinist deputy foreign minister, Costa Rican Foreign Minister Rodrigo Madrigal Nieto decided that there was no reason "to cover anything up in that regard." Madrigal Nieto, who returned yesterday from a visit to Colombia, where he was decorated by President Virgilio Barco, said that the meeting had been requested by Talavera.

In a communique released today, the Foreign Ministry asserts that Talavera arrived yesterday in this country "without prior notice, on a strictly personal and private trip."

According to the communique, during the course of the day the Nicaraguan diplomat "expressed interest in meeting with a Costa Rican Government official." It was then that Carlos Rivera Bianchini, Costa Rican deputy foreign minister, was selected to be his interlocutor.

As for the meeting itself, the venue of which was not disclosed, the official communique underscores that "it was devoted to a very general exchange of views on various foreign policy issues." Despite the official silence on the matters broached by the representatives of San Jose and Managua, generally well-informed sources have reported that the chief topic was the suit filed by the Sandinist government at the International Court of Justice in July against Costa Rica for alleged complicity with the "contras."

The same sources said that Rivera Bianchini expressed Costa Rica's concern over the falseness of the charges and the repercussions such an action might have on bilateral relations as well as the fact that "the Sandinist suit undermines the peacekeeping efforts of the Contadora Group," which is composed of Mexico, Panama, Venezuela, and Colombia.

Minister Madrigal Nieto did not elaborate on the subject of the Rivera-Talavera meeting but asserted that "it in no way changes the position we maintain regarding Nicaragua." The Costa Rican foreign minister said that relations with the Managua government "will continue at a minimum."

Four months after having assumed power, the administration of President Oscar Arias has not appointed an ambassador to Nicaragua. Relations between the two nations have been affected by numerous border incidents caused by the presence of anti-Sandinist groups along the border.

Talavera arrived in Costa Rica on Friday through the Penas Blancas border checkpoint, where he was met by personnel of his country's embassy in San Jose. He was accompanied by his wife and a small group of members of his personal guard and stayed at an undisclosed place outside San Jose. Talavera often visits Costa Rica, where he lived for some time and pursued part of his studies.

DEFENSE MINISTER, PRESIDENT COMMENT ON BOMB

PA291445 Guatemala City Radio-Television Guatemala in Spanish 0400 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Text] Defense Minister General Jaime Hernandez Mendez accepted the possibility that subversion might reemerge in urban areas. Hernandez Mendez said this when consulted in connection with the explosion of a propaganda bomb yesterday afternoon on La Reforma Avenue. This is the first terrorist bomb to explode in the capital since the Christian Democratic regime took power.

[Begin Hernandez recording] There have been different cycles of subversion on previous occasions. Subversion started in the countryside; it failed there and then came to urban areas. It was fought in the urban area and returned to the rural area. It is possible, therefore, following that cycle and according to our calculations that they are nearing urban areas for the purpose of destabilizing the government. I understand yesterday's bomb incident was a protest against the $100 million in aid to the contras approved by the United States. Also, there is the backing of PGT [Guatemalan Labor Party] forces in favor of Nicaragua. We are prepared for this. When the time comes to give support to the Government Ministry, we have plans already worked out to be able to collaborate and control the capital city, and thus give proper security to the people of Guatamala. This gives us a guideline to start working on the urban area and to see how we and what we have to do. [end recording]

President Vinicio Cerezo commented on yesterday's terrorist explosion in just a few words.

[Begin Cerezo recording] The interior minister will have more to say about this, but, well, that is the way some organizations contribute toward peace in Guatemala -- by ruining it. [end recording]

In another turn of events, Defense Minister Jaime Hernandez Mendez commented on rumors that circulated a few days ago in connection with Sandinist military units which had entered other Central American countries, including Guatemala.

[Begin recording] [Hernandez] At this moment, what you say is not exactly happening. Anyway, we are prepared for this because we believe that the Nicaraguan Government may increase subversive actions in the Central American area, possibly as a consequence of the approval of the 100 million quetzales, pardon me, dollars, on the part of the United States in favor of the contras.

[Reporter] Is there any mechanism that can avoid an incursion on the part of Nicaraguan soldiers?

[Hernandez] We have our operational areas -- all our borders -- as much as we can with our own limitations, under certain control. We cannot give 100 percent assurances that we have control over the border. However, our intelligence services are working, and we are up to date in trying to keep ourselves well informed regarding that possibility. [end recording]

GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCES CABINET CHANGES 29 AUG

PA291545 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 1514 GMT 29 Aug 86

[Text] San Salvador, 29 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- The Salvadoran Government officially announced today that the heads of the economy and foreign trade ministries are being shuffled in order to make the ministries' efforts more dynamic.

According to President Jose Napoleon Duarte, the new economy minister is Jose Ricardo Perdomo. He will replace Ricardo Gonzalez Camacho of the Democratic Action (AD) party. Perdomo was private secretary of the presidency.

Gonzalez Camacho, who represents AD, which signed a social pact with the Christian Democratic Party in 1984 to form the government, will replace Julio Rivas Gallont as foreign trade minister.

The two officials will be sworn in today during a special ceremony at Presidential House. According to unofficial reports, other lesser officials will also be shuffled.

Further 'Routine' Changes

[Excerpts] San Salvador, 29 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- Today, Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Durate swore in seven members of his cabinet and requested their "maximum cooperation" in their new posts. [passage omitted]

Luis Lopez Ceron was appointed as public works minister. He will fill the vacancy left several months ago by Roberto Meza, who is now the Salvadoran ambassador to the United Nations.

Durate appointed Pedro Perez Guillen as deputy public works minister and Remo Bardi as deputy housing [as received] minister.

Marcelo Suarez was appointed as the new president of the Executive Port Commission and Mauricio Choussy was appointed as the first vice president of the Central Reserve Bank.

After he took the oath of the new government officials, President Durate said that these are "routine changes to improve the cabinet."

FMLN ANNOUNCES END TO ROAD STOPPAGE 1 SEP

PA010029 (Clandestine) Radio Venceremos in Spanish to El Salvador 0008 GMT 1 Sep 86

[Text] Attention. The FMLN General Command informs drivers and all the people that the order to stop land transportation on all of the country's major and secondary highways comes to an end on 1 September. We repeat: The FMLN General Command is decreeing a suspension of the land transportation stoppage as of the early hours of Monday, 1 September. Drivers and all of our people may use all of the country's highways as of Monday, 1 September. The successful nationwide transportation stoppage ends.

It has constituted another demonstration to the dictatorship of the level of our people's organization and combat readiness which has kept the murderous enemy forces hiding in their lairs. Organization and combat readiness have deepened ever further the policy of attrition on the war economy of Napoleon Durate's puppet regime. We salute all the revolutionary forces which participated along with our people in the enforcement of this victorious campaign.

GOVERNMENT NOT TO DEMILITARIZE SESORI AREA

PA300041 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 2355 GMT 29 Aug 86

[Text] San Salvador, 29 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- Today, the Salvadoran Government clearly reasserted that it will not demilitarize Sesori, the seat of the third round of the dialogue for peace.

After swearing in several government officials, Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Durate stressed: "I have to fulfill my duty and provide the corresponding protection." Durate added: "I will maintain total protection in the area, and in the meetings that we have with the up-in-arms sectors."

The Salvadoran president emphasized: "We will establish the way in which the commanders will arrive in Sesori, because I am going to offer them all the necessary security for that."

The Salvadoran Government and the guerilla movement agreed to resume the peace dialogue, interrupted in November 1984, on 19 September, in Sesori, located in the conflict-ridden eastern region. However, the FMLN-FDR guerrillas said that the militarization of Sesori, carried out by the government 2 days ago, endangers the new round of talks.

With the mediation of the Catholic Church, the government and the guerrilla movement are trying to meet for the third time in order to put an end to almost 7 years of war in El Salvador.

President Durate said: "Our work is serious, and if the rebels made a mistake in proposing Sesori as the site for the conversations, that is their problem, but we are not willing to play at making changes." Duarte added: "We will not change the place or the date; and even though it is not written in any document, I personnaly promise to provide all the necessary security, with the support of the Army."

Meanwhile, General Carlos Eugenio Vides Casanova, who was ratified as defense minister by President Durate today, said: "Yes indeed, the high command of the Army ordered the militarization of Sesori." Vides Casanova added: "The rebels feel insecure, and that is why they request the withdrawal of the Armed Forces from Sesori, which is under Army control."

Today, during a news conference, Salvadoran Deputy Communications Minister Roberto Edmundo Viera said: "The security in the area of Sesori will be provided by the government. We do not accept the joint security plan; the Armed Forces will provide security in the area where the dialogue will take place."

The government's spokesman for the dialogue said that the second private meeting with the guerrilla movement, which will take place in the first 15 days of September, will discuss the mechanics of the dialogue, for example, the way in which the commanders will come down from the mountains and the place by which the diplomatic group will enter the site of the dialogue.

Viera said that the government will not allow the guerrilla movement to use the dialogue as a mechanism to weaken the military power in the country and to strengthen theirs, because "dialogue cannot be used as an instrument of struggle to attain power."

NICARAGUA

CIA 'PLANS' TO OCCUPY PUERTO CABEZAS 'THWARTED'

PA302153 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1930 GMT 30 Aug 86

[Text] According to official reports, the CIA's plans to occupy Puerto Cabezas and mount an attack against the Sandinist revolution from this port suffered a new setback. In addition to the recent defeat suffered by a mercenary organization, concentrated 40 km from the small coastal city of Northern Zelaya department [as heard], and the dissolution of the command in charge of capturing this city, 11 plans to destroy and occupy the city have been thwarted in 5 years.

Sandinist military leaders have asserted that due to the geographical features that make this region nearly inaccessible from the Pacific, the region's low population density, the existence of a port on the Atlantic, and a landing strip, the CIA chose this area to establish a beachhead and install a puppet government.

The command that invaded the country from Honduras on 20 August tried to duplicate an operation planned by the CIA in December 1981, described as Red Christmas. At this time, the CIA's goal was to have the Indian communities rebel against the Sandinist authorities. According to official sources, the targets to be sabotaged included the fuel storage tanks in Puerto Cabezas. Had this been accomplished, the entire town of 15,000 people would have been set on fire because their honmes are typically wooden and stand on piles. The sources also said that the attacking commandos carried 80 kg of C-4 explosives -- which are manufactured at CIA laboratories only -- to destroy the landing strip at Puerto Cabezas facilitating the further action of 150 counterrevolutionaries who would enter the town from the northwest.

The documents seized from 9 of the apparent 11 members of the commando unit, led by one of the local contra leaders, Wilfredo Hitler, made it possible for the joint forces of the EPS and the Defense Ministry in the region to plan an effective counterattack. Surprised and demoralized, the mercenaries suffered 15 dead and 30 wounded in their disorderly escape to Honduras, taking with them as hostages all the inhabitants they encountered. These hostages have begun to return to their places of origin, Sandinist military spokesmen added.

CASTRO DELIVERS ADDRESS AT NONALIGNED SUMMIT

PA012003 Havana International Service in Spanish 1716 GMT 1 Sep 86

[Speech given by Cuban President Fidel Castro at the Eighth Nonaligned Summit in Harare, Zimbabwe on 1 September -- recorded]

[Text] Esteemed Prime Minister Robert Mugabe, distinguished chiefs of state or government, Messrs members of the delegations, distinguished guests:

On meeting today in militant Africa and under the presidency of one of its authentic guides, to celebrate the founding in Belgrade of the Nonaligned Movement some 25 years ago, it can be confirmed that the objectives that led a small group of Third World countries to group together to defend principles linked to their own existence, and which were essential to guarantee their future, have dramatically survived almost intact for 25 years.

The danger of nuclear war -- condemned by the founding countries, which at that time called for avoiding this danger via the sole and irreplaceable path of negotiations -- has become more grave. The number of nuclear weapons has increased; they are now more destructive. Methods of delivery are many and more accurate. The arms race has accelerated and efforts are being made to extend this stage of the military confrontation to space.

The regional centers of conflict have increased and the intervention of imperialism in them is now greater and more direct. The inequality in international economic relations that [words indistinct] the action program established by the underdeveloped countries which met there, has become more unbearable for our weak and underdeveloped economies. The foreign debt bears down like an intolerable burden and makes impossible the crystallizing of the efforts and sacrifices for development.

The purchasing power of our products and raw materials is now less than at that time. Misery is now hitting our peoples harder; disease and lack of culture, the monstrous results of economic backwardness, are afflicting Asia, Africa, and Latin America.

However, just as evils and dangers have increased, our ability to resist, our strength, and our struggle have grown stronger as well. This also gives validity to our memories. We were 25 countries in 1961; we now number 101 on the eve [as heard] of the Eighth Nonaligned Summit. Many countries meeting with us today were showing a combative and resilient attitude in their attempts to gain independence 25 years ago.

Robert Mugabe, who presides over us with his experience and serenity, as well as other distinguished heads of state who are with us today, participated in summits of our movement as representatives of a desire to achieve independence, that desire is an encouraging reality today.

Not only have we grown in the size of our forces, and now constitute an absolute majority in the United Nations and the international community, but history has confirmed the accuracy of our program, the justness of our aspirations, and the need to achieve our goals to ensure that the world will have a more secure and happy future.

In 1961, we emerged as the result of a national liberation process of a large number of people against colonialism.

The indestructible link between that historical battle against colonialism and the peaceful aspirations of the peoples was established as the first postulate of the Belgrade conference, where we maintained that to create a lasting peace in the face of a struggle between the old structure and the new emerging nationalist forces, it was necessary to create a world in which the domination by colonialism and imperialism in all its forms was radically eliminated.

The first summit established unmistakably that to eradicate the sources of conflict is to eradicate colonialism. Likewise, when our movement was founded, it proposed the immediate, unconditional, total, and definitive abolition of colonialism, and a concerted effort to end all kinds of neocolonialism as well as imperialist domination in all its forms and manifestations.

When Paragraph 21 of the Declaration of Belgrade called for the elimination of the economic inequality inherited from colonialism and imperialislm, it outlined the bases of a program which the movement consolidated several years later when it set forth the need for a new international economic order, and acquired the charter of rights and obligations of states as its own.

Nothing is better proof of the far-reaching and insightful vision of Tito, Nehru, Nasser, (?Nkrumah), and other founders of the movement than the confirmation of those ideals, today developed and updated, and contained in the draft declaration of Harare, which we will discuss.

No homage to their memory would be more fitting as we meet here in Harare -- then a colony, and today a symbol of the Africa still threatened by colonialism and its most repudiable instrument, the racist and fascist South Africa -- than the power, prestige, and current influence of this powerful group of nations, with diverse systems, heterogeneous points of view, but united on the essential principles of the movement: peace, independence, development, and the struggle against imperialism, colonialism, and racism, and its most ominous manifestation, apartheid.

The fact that 25 years after its founding and despite our triumphs over colonialism, we are still only beginning to achieve that just and mobilizing plan which confirms that which was set forth several years after Belgrade, at the Second Summit in Cairo: The forces of imperialism are still strong and they do not hesitate to resort to the use of violence to defend their interests and preserve their privileges.

We are still threatened by the arms race and cosmic war; Namibia continues to be occupied by the racist South Africans; all of the Front Line countries are being attacked; the Palestinians are without a state to which they are entitled; Nicaragua is forced to face the aggression, which despite the efforts by the Contadora and Support Groups, the U.S. Government stubbornly refuses to end. In Harare, the basics of the Belgrade program are still before us.

Our 25 years of struggle has led to tangible results. The always remembered President Tito insightfully stated in 1974: With its progressive action in the joint struggle with the socialist countries and other forces, the Movement has become one of the most important factors in the correlation of present day forces. If we unite, no decision that fails to take us into account will be possible in the United Nations or in the international community. The unity of our power with the power of those who in Europe, Japan, and North America itself oppose any decision leading to war will enable us to neutralize those who attempt to unleash it. The military pacts that divide the most powerful nations in antagonistic blocs are, as knowledged, an anachronism that must be eliminated. We have been called to the Eighth Nonaligned Summit to do this.

Upon addressing this gathering at the honorable request of the delegates of the sister nations of Latin America and the Caribbean, I wish to state that our peoples share these noble ideals: the unification of our lands, much pondered by Simon Bolivar on the eve of their independence and dreamt about by Jose Marti at the close of the last century, finds presently new reasons for its full crystallization. The Malvinas war reminded the Latin Americans that the freedom of their countries cannot depend on a powerful neighbor who hovers over them, but must instead be sustained through necessary combative unification. Cuba was the only Latin American nation that signed the delclaration of Belgade, where Bolivia, Brazil, and Ecuador acted as observers. Now 17 Latin American and Caribbean countries are members of the Movement. Together with the nine observers from our area, it is safe to say that the Nonaligned enjoy the growing approval and support of the countries in our area. Upon reaffirming that support, we do so with the assurance that a nuclear holocaust will be prevented; means will be found to ensure that the definitive elimination of nuclear tests -- to which one of the parties is already well disposed -- will give way to a valid and profound negotiation to end the arms race; reduce conventional weapons to a minimum level; enable man to eliminate nuclear weapons from the face of the earth; and make sure that they do not instead eliminate man from the face of the earth. We are sure that the backwardness and poverty resulting from the economic inequality that is plaguing us will be defeated through joint actions. That is the goal which was inspired in us 25 years ago. We will honor this date by being faithful to the principles that bring us together in this historic meeting in Harare.

Thank you very much. [applause]

Meets With Garcia in Harare

[Text] Reports from Harare, Zimbabwe, note that Fidel Castro and Peruvian President Alan Garcia, have held a meeting. The two exchanged views on various topics related to the Government. It has also been reported that the Eighth Nonaligned has approved the members of the presiding table, as had been proposed by the ministerial meeting, and the vice presidencies formed by 23 countries representing Asia, Europe, Africa, and Latin America. The participants in the Eighth Nonaligned Summit also approved a Declaration on the anniversary of the movement. The document ratifies the nonaligned principles and notes that the movement has become a world factor in international relations.

MALMIERCA ON PULLING TROOPS FROM ANGOLA

MB311307 Umtata Capital Radio in English 1200 GMT 31 Aug 86

[Text] Cuba says its troops may soon pull out of Angola. Cuban Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca predicted a swift withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola but he did not give a date. He said it depended on the Nonaligned Movement Summit hastening the demise of the South African Government. South Africa has always called for the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola before it would pull back its troops from Namibia. Mr Malmierca was quoted as saying he believed the presence of Cuban fighters would not continue for very long. He reiteratea Cuba's arguments that the 25,000 troops deployed in Angola for the past decade were necessary to repulse aggression from South Africa.

CASTRO DEDICATES CARDIOVASCULAR SURGERY CENTER

FL1261853 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 2209 GMT 25 Aug 86

[Speech by the President Fidel Castro at the inauguration of of the Cardiovascular Surgery Center of the William Soler Pediatric Hospital in Havana City -- live]

[Text] Comrades: We were going to have the ceremony outdoors but a rainy afternoon -- which is not bad at all, we need the water and plenty of rain -- has forced us to improvise the ceremony here. The dais had to be set up inside and you will have to make yourselves as comfortable as possible under these circumstances.

Recently, much has been written and said by our media concerning project. The truth of the matter is that there was a large number of construction workers here busy as bees trying to complete this cardiovascular center.

This center is a part of a program for the development of cardiovascular surgery in our country. It is a part of this program, but a very important part. I have brought some information on this program. First of all, it provides for the strengthening of services in cardiovascular surgery of the Cardiology Institute and the Luis Diaz Soto Military Institute to make it possible for an increase in the number of major surgeries maintaining blood circulation with equipment, which average between 250 to 500 cases yearly. This would also make it possible for training professional and technical personnel.

This was one of the first steps taken. I should add that cardiovascular surgery was practically nonexistent in our country. There were some small groups of physicians with some experience in this field who would perform such surgery prior to the revolution's triumph. Most of them left the country after the revolution's triumph.

Cardiovascular surgery developed after the revolution and continues to develop. Another point of the program was to create new services. As a result of many efforts, new cardiovascular surgery services were started at the Hermanos Ameijeiras Hospital, at the Saturnino Lora Hospital in Santiago de Cuba, at the Villa Clara Provincial Clinical-Surgical Hospital, and at the William Soler Pediatric Teaching School here.

Another point of the program was to implement a prevention plan for congenital and acquired cardiopathy. It is not correct to do surgery all the time, but it is important to do preventive work when possible. This prevention plan is the cornerstone of the program's success. It includes antirubella vaccinations, an anti-smoking campaign, a push toward increasing physical activity, nutrition education, etc. With respect to smoking habits, you all know there is an ongoing intense campaign and, according to research statistics -- this is being discussed at the Budapest Oncology Congress, where 8,000 specialists are in attendance -- a relatively high number of nonsmokers are dying from second handsmoke. In other words, a high number of persons are dying from cancer because they inhale the smoke of those who smoke. This can be seen in cases of married couples. It can also be noted in the articles published by the daily Juventud Rebelde, concerning cigarette smoking consequences, even in the cases of pregnant women -- women who smoke or who have to inhale the husband's smoke. The consequences that this has on the pregnancy, the babies; all this was published.

I believe all this information can contribute to create an awareness in favor of preventing diseases and in defense of human health.

Other activities conducted as part of this program are the selection and training in Cuba and abroad of the group of physicians, nurses, and technicians assigned to the six for maintaining equipment. The total number of personnel services, as well as support personnel that has been trained in Cuba is 237 and 105 for abroad. Another activity is determining the payroll in accordance with the minimum number of personnel needed to initiate the develop each service.

Another is the acquisition of equipment needed by this program. Approximately $5.8 million was spent in medical equipment, expandable material, and medicines; $1,532,556 for non-medical equipment, for a total of $7,332,678. Please note I said dollars because I am referring to foreign currency that has been assigned to the development of this service of cardiovascular surgery. Nine new cardiology centers have been built. First of all, we have one with a budget of 4.5 million pesos; the one in Santiago de Cuba, which is almost completed, at a cost of 1.62 million pesos; and the cardiology center in Villa Clara at a cost of 860,000 pesos. The latter has been completed.

The study program for residency in cardiovascular surgery has been prepared; this program lasts 6 years. The selection has been made and the residency courses of study have begun. At the present time there are 17 students in residency. The essential bibliographic information for personnel training has been provided. The oranic nature of the new cardiology centers in the context of hospital regulations has been defined. The setting in motion of the new services has been organized. The action plan and table or organization with periodic control measures of the progress of the development plan has been established. Some objectives have already been attained in the past 5-year period.

For example, in 1981 there were 199 cases of surgery involving blood circulation in which equipment was used. In 1982 there were 127. In 1983 there ware 284. In 1984 there were 330; in 1985 there were 544; in 1986, as of 31 July, there were 450 cases of this type of surgery. Much has been done in the treatment of children with confenitial cardiopathy. The methods of treatment following surgery in cases of iscahemic cardiopathy have been improved, and heart transplantation techniques have been stabilized.

Through August this year, 12 heart transplantations had been performed. It is anticipated that by the end of this 1986-90 period the number of operations with extracorporeal circulation will match the disease's rate of occurrence. During that period of time it is expected that 7,900 operations of that type will be made.

If by 1990 we can perform some 2,000 operations yearly, the incidence of the heart condition here would have been exceeded, inasmuch as the estimate is 1,600 cases yearly. This will make it possible for us to offer part of our services to other countries in the Third World. So far, I have been referring to the program in general.

The director of the William Soler Hospital has given extensive information on this cardiology center. This center is a part of the William Soler Hospital.

As he said, since the dengue epidemic, this hospital has been considerably expanded. At that time, it had 17,000 square meters of space, and now it has more than 32,000. The polyclinic for specialties was built on one side, and now this cardiology center has been built. The investment plan was made in 1983, and 3 years ago, in August, ground breaking for the center began.

The project was prepared in accordance with recommendations made by the most experienced Cuban specialists as well as foreign specialists who were invited to contribute as advisers: specialists from Czechoslovakia, Sweden, and other countries. This project is considered to be one of the largest installations in the world for children's cardiovascular surgery. As such, it has been highly valued by specialists of high international prestige who have recently visited.

As the director of the hospital, Comrade Dotres, explained, this building has 3 operating rooms, 14 intensive and intermediate care beds, and 38 hospital beds, for a total of 52 beds for children with a heart condition. In addition, it has 22 beds for polyvalent therapy--in other words the hospital's intensive care unit is also in this same building. It is debatable whether it is the best way, which I have discussed with several doctors. The hospital's library has remained in this same building. I asked the doctors if all personnel in need of information from the library would necessarily have to come to this building, that perhaps the library would have been more conveniently located in another place. Another question was if it is was necessary that the hospital's intensive care unit patients be here. I believe that at this time, it is the correct thing to do because a number of beds are gained for the area. It will take a few years to attain the full capacity of exploitation. I am referring to the operating rooms and these installations.

Perhaps in the future we will have to look for a place to install the polyvalent therapy room, that is the hospital's intensive care unit for other patients not having cardiopathy problems. Then we will have to assign all these beds to the children having a heart condition and cardiovascular surgery. Later, I will refer to this problem.

There is something else in the papers I brought with me. The papers note it is believed that at full capacity some 400 operations could be performed yearly. That is a very conservative figure, which I feel is questionable. I inquired about this; with 400 operations we would not solve the problems. This is due to the fact that every 1,000 births, according to international statistics, between 8 and 10 children are born suffering from congenital cardiopathy, that is a heart condition which requires special attention and, almost unavoidably, requires surgery.

More than 150,000 children are born here every year. I do not know exactly how many were born in 1985. Perhaps someone here knows that information, (Teja) or someone else, but I believe it was around 170,000 in 1985. I believe it is more than 150,000, but let us say 150,000 and assuming it were 8 children for every 1,000, we would have 1,200.

[Unidentified person] 182,000.

[Castro] Well, 182,000. This would mean it would be around 1,000...5, we have to multiply 8 by 8, it is 64 [pause] what?

[Castro] No, 48. Yes, it would be around...almost 1,500 cases, 1,000 plus 400 [pause] 8 times 8, I cannot figure it out correctly.

[words indistinct by unidentified persons]

[Castro] What? What did you multiply it by? Eight times 8 is 64 plus 800. It is 1,440. I am using the most conservative figure, 18 cases out of 1,000 and not 10 out of 1,000, because if it were 10 cases out of 1,000 it would be 1,800. But each year, without taking into consideration those cases accumulated from previous years, we have a minimum of about 1,500 children who are born with congenital cardiopathy. To congential cardiopathy we must add the acquired cases which also require surgery. There are, I believe, cases of rheumatism, what are the main causes?

[words indistinct by unidentified persons]

[Castro] Oh, rheumatic fever causes different types of cardiopathy in children between the ages of 5, [corrects himself] or between 1 and 14. I do not know at what age...between 5 and 14. I believe that the statistics I saw quoted 21 out of 1,000 which is the equivalent more or less of 1 out of each 5,000 children between the ages of 5 and 14. Imagine how many children fall in this category. Out of every 1,000 is more of less the amount of children who contract this illness, rheumatism, repeat it, fever what?

[unidentified persons answer] Rheumatic fever.

[Castro] Rheumatic fever. Those are added to them. For the purposes of this cardiology center we are mainly interested in congential cardiopathy cases. Those are the ones in which we have to intervene during their first year or years of life. In many cases it has to be during the first year of life because if not they will die. For some, surgery is needed to survive and possibly later a second surgery will have to be performed. That is, there are some remedial surgical solutions for them which allows them to survive the first year of life. Maybe in the future as this science develops, instead of performing remedial surgery, a final surgical procedure will be performed, reconstructive surgery, I believe specialists call it.

Of course, all those surgeries will not be performed in this center. This center will handle the most complex surgeries in children under three. Especially, surgery for children under one will be performed in this center in the future. In the rest of the cardiology centers, that will open in Villa Clara, Sanatigo de Cuba and others; some of the children who are born with congential cardiopathies will be handled. But I really believe that, according to calculations and the available data, that all the needs will not be filled with the 400 surgeries a year which will be performed in this center. Some specialists were telling me that an infamous Honduran doctor visited Cuba. He is considered one of the most skilled specialists in the child congential cardiopathies area, and of course works at a U.S. hospital inasmuch as that country has been conducting a brain drain. He was saying that a center like this could perform up to 1,000 surgeries.

There are 3 surgery rooms and if they are properly used, if we have all the needed trained staff, I believe we could perform -- I do not know if 1,000 -- over 400 surgeries, maybe the ones our country needs. Under those circumstances the 22 beds which will now be used for polyvalent intensive care of the entire William Soler Hospital will be needed, even though they may not be cases of child cardiologies, [corrects himself] child cardiopathies that is, so I adhere more to medical terminologies.

So we already have to set a goal of surpassing this figure of 400 surgeries a year because it is clear that it is needed.

I remember that talking with the also reputable Czechoslovak doctor...

[words indistinct by unidentified person]

[Castro] (Chamanek) who has helped us greatly in the development of these ideas, he was explaining to me -- in addition to the statistical data of the 8 or 10 out of every 1,000 he gave me -- that it has been figured that a center like this one is needed for approximately every 6 million people. This figure should take into consideration the birth rate because sometimes a Third World country could have 6 million people producing as many children as a population of 12 million in a developed and industrialized country. I remember he talked about 6 million and I was not curious enough to ask him if he was referring to 6 million in the Third World or 6 million in the industrialized world, how many would need a center like this one. But since then, I have been thinking that someday we will have to build another Child Cardiosurgical Center in Santiago de Cuba, in the eastern part of the country. But because of this, we will have to do our best with the six hospitals we have and especially with this Cardiology Center, which is the only Child Cardiovascular Surgical Center we have. Other places will perform child [cardiological] surgeries but the most complex cases will come to this center.

This is why I say that a special effort and intense work are needed to fulfill our domestic needs in this center. Some requests are always added. We already have some requests from some Latin American countries that have told us about some cases of children who can only be saved with money from foundations. They have asked us if we can treat some of the cases. Of course, it is impossible to think that some commitments will be made each year. With such a request regarding children believed to be dying, they do not get care and there is no place to obtain it, we will have to agree to accept some of those requests. Therefore, I have no doubts that this center has to develop considerably and that a similar institution will have to be built in the future in the easter part of the country. I believe it should also be part of -- I believe it should be the right way to do it -- a children's hospital and in that case neither the library, because past experience should always count for something, nor the polyvalent intensive care service should be in that new center. Out project is almost perfect but it is not perfect yet and life always teaches you how to do things better.

Around $2,572,000 have been invested in medical equipment. Of course, this very sophisticated equipment does not come out of the blue. It is purchased with many sacrifices. We invested $690,870 in nonmedical equipment. That is worth over $3 million -- and I say dollars because we are talking about foreign currency invested in this center. This is why we have very sophisticated and very modern equipment.

I do not say they are ultramodern because that equipment changes so fast that they are obsolete in 1 or 2 years. That is, they become obsolete because more advanced techniques are developed. We intend to be up-to-date in this center and will do everything humanly possible to obtain the most advanced techniques.

At the beginning, 21 medical specialists, 80 nurses, 23 technicians, a psychologist, and an electronic engineer will work in this hospital. Of course, the electronic engineer is essential because almost all of that equipment is electronic and perhaps one engineer will not be enough. But for now, one should be enough.

I asked the director how they were doing with the staff. He said we are doing fine. And I asked if fine meant that they are not over-staffed and he said they have the minimum. Anyway, 124 people are the ones who are going to begin operating this cardiology center. Experience will tell if we have either not enough or too many people. Experience has shown us that there is a surplus everywhere. What we do not have is efficient utilization of the so-called work shift. There is a lack of efficiency. There is no multiple-skilled work. We do not have many of the things that we need to begin introducing efficiency. If we do not, we are going to run out of personnel and everything becomes more expensive, such as transportation, dining rooms, everything.

The hospital is planning to begin operating this center at the end of the next month. It already has beds, the surgery room is ready, it has everything. They need about a month before operating it. I believe they are going to achieve this. That is, the completion of the project and the operation of the institution will be almost simultaneous.

The staff is being trained. Part of them are still being trained. Part of them are already trained. Another one is being trained, and training will have to continue. They will have to make a selection among the most outstanding specialist, among the most promising youth, and encourage the development of this field of medicine in our country. I believe that all of these concrete steps are the ones that will really turn our country into a world medical power.

The yankees are annoyed. They are infuriated each time they hear that Cuba is on the way to becoming a world medical power.

This is why they even sabotage every medical exchange of information between Cuba and the United States. They sabotage the possibilities of purchasing equipment produced there or purchasing abroad medical equipment that has yankee components. It irritates them, it exasperates them. Of course, the yankees will have no other choice than to stew in their own juices.

As we were saying, Sancti Spiritus, which was a Cinderella province, today has a better infant mortality index than the United States. We also have a better literacy index than the United States. We can also add that Sancti Spiritus and other provinces -- with a life expectancy of 75.4 years -- have a higher life expectancy rate than the United States. We are not a medical power yet, but we are in better shape then they are.

But we will have to struggle because we are not in a contest. Our purpose is not to compete. We refer to these figures to respond to their ill-intentions and their blockade plans.

But we are mainly struggling for the well-being of our people and we cannot be satisfied with the infant mortality index of 15. We will have to struggle to reduce it to 14, 13, 12, 11, 10 and below 10 if possible, to have the conditions of the most developed country in that field. We are struggling to prolong the life expectancy. It has been said that the man's genetic potential is 120 years and life is shortened due to many reasons. We are not going to be satisfied with a life expectancy of 74 or 75. We will strive to reach 80, 85 or whatever is possible.

The decisive factor of this struggle is a general health plan. I believe that the antismoking campaign may be held and with everything that may [interrupts himself] I have authority to talk about this subject because it has been a while since... ah, it will be a year tomorrow. [applause] tomorrow, tomorror, [repeats himself] 26 August it will be a year without taking a puff. [audience laughs] I am calm. I do not miss it. Now I feel better about this antismoking campaign and I believe we have to conduct it for those who have not had the willpower so that they are encouraged little by little. I believe it will bring results because with all that data resulting from research work and what scientists are saying, a lot of women will fight with their husbands who smoke because it has been scientifically proven that the smokers are not only killing themselves, they are killing their family and their children. They can even kill or harm them while they are in their mother's womb. So, I believe that the dissemination of information regarding these matters will help a great deal in the campaign to increase life expectancy. We have to mention this campaign family doctors are conducting against sedentariness by encouraging everyone to walk, jog, and exercise. I believe the area of plaza has made a lot of progress in this matter. Recently, I was told that there were over 1,000 old... I am not going to say old people, people over 60 or 70 years old who were systematically exercising. The struggle against obesity will also be a factor which will really play a role in life expectancy. Medical care by itself will no longer be considered. Even if we can have the best hospitals in the world, the best specialists, the best equipment, if we do not struggle against those factors we will not increase the life expectancy in the future. We have increased it a lot during these last few years by struggling against illnesses that cause many deaths. Among the illnesses that cause a lot of deaths are accidents. They cause childeren's death. They are also considered in the indexes and are also taken into consideration in our population's life expectancy. We have no doubts that we are going in the right direction.

I do not want to forget during a day like this to make a special acknowledgement to the construction workers. On 1 July we inaugurated a project which was not completely finished. They said 4 or 5 percent had to be completed but scientists [as heard] struggled for 45 days trying to get the center started. Finally, part of it is operating now. When one of these projects is being built, one has to check if there is water, if the tank does not have leaks, if it is built well, if the pipes do not leak, if gas pipes work properly, if air conditioning pipes are working properly, if the air conditioning system works. All those details. They had not been able to check all those things because the project was inaugurated in a hurry. The kitchen had been completed. Many details had to be taken care of. Many construction workers are still working there to finish up those details. They will be there for weeks, even months. That day I said I will not inaugurate another project that has not been totally completed. Unless they specify it is the first phase of a factory or something like that, it can be done. But a complex of this type should not be inaugurated until it is completed finished and checked.

Because there is a lot of enthusiasm to finish, it is not completed. But what happens is like what happens to one who runs a marathon of many kilometers for many hours and is discouraged -- it is not easy to motivate the construction workers again.

That is why on 13 August, when this project was supposed to be completed, we found out there were some rough spots and we told the comrades of the construction ministry, it does not have to be completed by the 13th, it can be completed 10 or 12 days later but the work must be completed and tested.

That is why this cardiology center is being completed today, 25 August. Not only has it been completed today, but it is already in operation. It has the main equipment, the beds, everything. It is a job well done, with great quality. It has functional quality, aesthetic quality, such as the marble and tiles used in its construction. Not only is it functional but it is a beautiful project with landscaping and fish tanks. Let us see if those small fish can survive here. Hopefully they will make it through the inauguration. Otherwise, we will have to give them a cardiovascular-therapeutic treatment. [laughter in the audience] That will prove that this center functions well and is a good health center.

Now we have to find a way to make this a model institution, a truly model institution. This is the principal request we can make from the 126 staff workers of this cardiology center. That will be the initial number of workers on the payroll. Possibly that number will grow when they have additional equipment for the specialists.

Another lesson we can learn here and from the genetic engineering center dedicated on 1 July is that we should not set dates for completing the projects. We should prepare a schedule and work hard from the beginning at a good pace so that we do not have to make that final effort. That is an experience gained here.

When we have to make a final effort, other projects suffer. For example, the architectural projects construction enterprise [ECOA] No 7, which built this magnificent project with the assistance of other enterprises, is given the task of constructing hospitals. Of course, there was not a setback here. However, the intense work here hurt other projects. It led to setbacks at the Julio Diaz [nor further identified]. The same thing happened with the genetic engineering center which delayed other projects. This one has also caused delays at the Tropical Medicine Institute. I do not know if it will cause delays at the Naval Hospital, or the Finlay Hospital which is moving quite well. That one is moving fast; they are working hard over there. You are working there; the ECOA No 7 is also working at the Naval and Finlay Hospitals, both of them. Those two projects are doing well.

They are working in other hospital projects. They share the work with another brigade. [Castro addresses someone] which is the other brigade that is going to help build the Miguel Enriquez? [someone responds that it is another brigade of the same enterprise] You too? The Julio Trigo is being built by you, I know that. Are you working in the Marianao Pediatrics Hospital? You are doing the assembly portion of the work. Once in a while I see a crane moving there, but not very frequently.

What I wanted to say is that we have to prepare a schedule for each project and avoid the intense work to complete it, because this causes delays.

We have seen that in the last two projects we have dedicated. We also have the Optic Lens Workshop which has suffered a bit from the completion of the Genetic Engineering Center. Now that brigade is working at the Frank Pais Hospital at a good pace. This brigade has recruited qualified workers from other enterprises and from other projects. I believe that from now on we should work with the maximum intensity possible without setting completion dates, whether we complete the Julio Trigo on 10, or 15, or 20 November, or 5, or 10, or 15 December.

We should not set completion dates. It would be preferable if there were setbacks, I mean that, even if there are delays of 15 days, 1 or 2 months. That way we work at the same pace and there is no need for those intense efforts, concentrating many workers in one project from other sites. The only way to avoid delays is by to follow a schedule.

There is a very ambitious program in the field of hospital construction for the next 2 1/2 years. It is a very ambitious program. The Naval Hospital is being expanded. This hospital provides services for a large population to the west, is also being expanded. Remember there are persons in Marianao who live in the Lisa suburb and other suburbs and their general hospital is located in Cerro, on the other side. The Salvador Allende Hospital services many of those patients.

This situation tends to create a formidable need or a hospital toward the area of Old Marianao, which has a population of some 400,000 inhabitants. They need a pediatric hospital -- one is under construction. They need general hospitals because, even after the Finlay Hospital is expanded, it will not be able to provide the needs of all that population. In the future we are planning to build a clinical-surgical hospital west of Havana and another east of Havana.

Meanwhile, these expansions made to the Naval and Williams Hospitals, with over 300 beds each, allows us a little more time to build other hospitals. Also, the conversion of the Julio Trigo premises into a clinical-surgical hospital will be very helpful. The buildings that are in the back, connected to the ones being worked on now, will make room for 990 beds in the Julio Trigo Hospital. This hospital is being remodeled -- it was the former tuberculosis hospital, later it housed a research institute and now it is being converted into a clinical-surgical hospital.

The Albarran Hospital beds will be doubled from 390 to 600 beds, the Miguel Henriquez Hospital beds will almost be tripled. A new hospital will be built. It is greatly needed in that area of Havana. The Julio Diaz Hospital is also being expanded. Its bed capacity is also being tripled. The Marianao Pediatric Hospital is going to be completed and the Calixto Garcia expansion is going to be started. This is a program which will increase the number of beds in Havana by almost 50 percent. It is a very ambitious program which requires Havana construction workers, especially those from the ECOA No 17 [corrects himself] Ecoa No 7 and of other brigades, to perform organized and intense work. Because we are planning to conduct this program I have mentioned that, except the Calixto Garcia, we are determined to complete them by 1988. That is, we have 2 years and 4 months to complete that program. It will require an intense, serious, disciplined, constant effort from these brigades. This is going to be a difficult challenge, a difficult challenge. [repeats himself]. Let us see [what will happen] when the time comes for the completion of the Trigo [hospital] and I repeat, no final time frame should be set -- what really is important is to] work very hard there the same way it is done in other projects and to estimate the exact date so it can be completed in the same way this project has been completed.

This does not mean that a great effort does not need to be made. It means the effort has to be made in such a way that other projects are not affected and that each one of your groups and each one of your forces where you work make the biggest effort to fulfill the timetable. If at the end, one of them falls behind schedule we should not leave the other ones to complete this one because is brings us disorganization and decreased work productivity. So this is the policy we should follow nevertheless, we are going to check the progress of the hospital projects on which you are working. The Construction Ministry, the people's government, and various other organization are working on this.

There are some hospital projects such as a group of polyclinics which are going to be built by the people's government. The family doctors home/consultation offices are being built in the same way. I believe this is a good example of a good program with the participation of all the sectors which has been completed or is being completed in a record period of time. Only in Havana, 506 quarters have been created for family doctors. Those doctors are going to greatly help all the hospitals in the capital because the people do not go to the hospital's emergency on-call medical staff if they can go to see a family doctor. Usually, when they go to the general hospital their family doctor comes along with them. That is the solution. I believe there is no better and more comprehensive solution for the country's hospital network than the family doctor concept. Because the clinical-surgical hospitals and hospitals in general are not intended to revolve around the emergency on-call medical staff, they have to almost devote themselves to the popular emergency on-call medical staff. The family doctor will alleviate some of this demand. Over 500 family doctors will begin working in Havana this year. Counting those already working, there will be a total of over 700 family doctors. Within the next 6 years, in 1992, 1993 at the latest, the entire capital will have the services of family doctors. I believe that is going to greatly contribute to health and life expectancy, especially to the extent they help educate the people. The comrades of Havana's People's Government are already checking each one of the areas where the family doctor consultation office will be located. From 1988 on, we are also planning to build not only doctors' houses but also nurses' houses. With this, this health program turns into a housing program where thousands of doctors and nurses will have their housing problem solved. This project is being considered.

This program began in a garage. It continued in a small consultation office that looked like a toy house, like a toy. It was expanded into a larger consultation office and this year the project we developed was the house/consultation offices. Others will be built in 1987, some will be experimental. I hope that in 1988 all house/consultation offices will not only include doctors but also nurses who play a very important role in this task.

We beg nurses not to think we had forgotten about them or discriminated against them but at the beginning we were experimenting and testing to see how these ideas developed. Actually, they have progressed very rapidly.

I believe everything we have been talking about regarding the need for discipline, quality of work, productivity, and maximization of the work shift was put into practice in completing this project. We hope construction workers will put it into practice -- especially the brigade that has finished this center and construction workers in general -- put into practice [repeats himself] these ideas which can be very fruitful.

In Sancti Spiritus we talked about how much the revolution has done, but I said I was convinced that we could have done things better and more extensively if we would had been more efficient, if we had been better workers. Undoubtedly, a completed project like this one brings satisfaction to all, it brings happiness, encouragement, enthusiasm. This hospital is great news for all families in our country.

It is excellent news. This center will mean that thousands of children's lives will be saved each year. Without these services they could not be saved. During these years we have sent the children [with cardiovascular illnesses] abroad who had problems that we did not have the resources to handle. Now it is not only a matter of cardiovascular surgery centers but of the national network of specialists in each municipality who are capable of detecting the illness, diagnosing it, and refering the child to the adequate place. This center will mean that the lives of hundreds of children will be saved.

At the end of each 5-year period we will be able to say that this center and the other ones created by this program will save the lives of thousands of children. I believe that construction workers, doctors, specialists, engineers, and technicians will be greatly satisfied by the fact that their work is translated into such humane, noble, and useful results for our people, for all the families of our country, without exception. It is not necessary to have a sick child to benefit from it; a healthy child today may not be healthy tomorrow. A perfectly healthy child today, because of one of those rheumatic fever episodes, could need the services of a center such as this one. Not only children but also the unborn. All the families expecting a child [could need these services]. All the grandmothers, parents, uncles, cousins, and siblings will feel much safer with the opening of this center. In this way, each hospital project brings the people a sense of security, to those who are ill and those who are healthy. All these new services being developed in our country, such as the pediatric hospitals' intensive care units, provide all the families a great assurance because they know that children will have the same treatment -- as we have said before -- as the one they could receive in the best U.S. hospital, where they treat the bourgeois, the great millionaires. Those hospitals will not be able to provide a better service than the one received by our children in pediatric hospital's intensive care units. Thousands and thousands of children's lives have been saved. We do not know how many. Some day statistics will have to be compiled because hospitals have the statistics of those who have been admitted and the ones they have saved. They would have not been saved without those services. I remember that recently the San Miguel Del Padron Hospital sent me an album with the photographs of the children who had been saved there. Those were very critical cases which would have not been saved since those services were created. They collected the photographs of those healthy children with great pride and satisfaction, because they were lives taken away from death. I believe that the over 30 intensive care units could do something similar and make an inventory of all the lives they have saved since these services were created.

It was precisely with the dengue epidemic, when our country had only one intensive care unit at the Borras [hospital] -- which only had three or four beds and did not even have separate cubicules for infectious cases, that the idea of developing intensive care units in every pediatric hospital came about. Since then, fortunately, we have saved tens of times more lives than the ones saved during that epidemic which was deliberately introduced in our country by imperialism because we still have not found any other explanation for it.

This is why all these hospital projects are received with acknowledgement and happiness by our people and with deep appreciation toward the laborers who built them, toward doctors, technicians and specialists, who provide their services.

I believe I have already talked enough, comrades, in these special circumstances. I do not see many of you. To end I simply want to say the following : We hope the workers of this cardiological center make efforts so that it is not only said that it is the largese children's cardiological surgical center in the world but that one day it can be said that it is the best in the world. Fatherland or death, we will win! [applause]

NATIONS DISPUTE NONALIGNED DRAFT BEFORE SUMMIT

F1301626 Bridgetown CANA in English 1448 GMT 30 Aug 86

[Text] Harare, Aug 30, CANA-REUTER - Latin American and Caribbean delegates today continued a heated argument over the non-aligned movement's radical draft statement on Central America, which is due to be approved by next week's summit meeting.

Several Latin American countries associated with the Contadora groups peace initiative in Central America were trying to tone down the draft's heavy praise of leftist Nicaragua and its criticism of the U.S. - backed governments in Honduras and El Salvador, conference sources said.

Colombia, Jamaica, and Belize were also trying to eliminate many of the six-page documents, critical references to U.S. policy in Latin America and the Caribbean, they added.

Communist Cuba and Nicaragua, on the other hand, were pressing for denunciation of Washington's Central American policies in the strongest possible terms. It is basically a discussion of whether to go further than we did in New Delhi, one senior delegate said, referring to the Non-aligned movement's last statement on Central America in India three years ago.

A decision on Nicaragua's controversial bid to host the next non-aligned summit in 1989 has been referred to the six-day heads of government meeting which begins here on Monday after the Latin American and Caribbean group failed to reach a consensus on it, the sources said.

Although a two-day preparatory meeting of foreign ministers ended yesterday, officials were continuing to meet over the weekend to hammer out the summit's final declaration on a wide-ranging series of political and economic issues.

Heads of government from over half the 101 member states of the Non-aligned Movement are expected to attend the Zimbabwe summit and the first, including Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, arrived today.

From Latin America and the Caribbean, the presidents of Nicaragua, Cuba, Argentina, Peru, Guyana, and Suriname are expected.

Meanwhile, delegates are working in regional groups and in two plenary commissions to thrash out the working of the summit's final declaration.

Delegates said the economic commission, chaired by Peru, was bogged down in procedural wrangles despite a general consensus over the draft text prepared by Zimbabwe.

Last night, discussion had only reached paragraph nine of the 171-point economic declaration, which calls for a better deal for the third world in trade and financial flows.

Delegates said Peru has yet to present its own amendment to the document, calling for the recognition of every country's right to freely determine its economic policies.

The Peruvian proposal also calls on the International Monetary Fund (IMF) to create a special mechanism for helping heavily-indebted countries to continue economic growth while rescheduling their external payments, they added.

GRENADA

LALSINGH TO HEAD NEWEST DEMOCRATIC PARTY

FL301640 Bridgetown CANA in English 1525 GMT 30 Aug 86

[Text] St Georges, Grenada, Aug 30, CANA -- The Democratic Labour Congress (DLC), Grenada's newest political party, was launched at a press conference last night. It is headed by member of parliament, Kenny Lalsingh, who resigned from Prime Minister Blaize's ruling New National Party (NNP) in May.

In addition to Lalsingh, the DLC has three other foundation members -- Michael Pitt, Neville Rennie, and Terrance Griffith.

Pitt, 40, has lived in Toronto for the last 15 years. He has told reporters he had been involved in West Indian community work in the Canadian city.

Griffith, 24, was a member of the youth arm of the leftwing New Jewel Movement which won power in a coup in 1979 and ruled until it was itself ousted in 1983.

I believe in the democratic institution, he said, and that is why I dropped out of the NJM.

Griffith said he has studied theology and history and is currently writing a book, "Grenada - The Road To Holocaust."

Rennie, 53, was a member of Sir Eric Gairy's Grenada United Labour Party (ULP) for 20 years and was an unsuccessful candidate of Winston Whyte's Christian Democratic Labour Party (CDLP) in the December 1984 general elections. Following the 1979 coup, he spent nearly two years in Richmond Hill Prison as a detainee. Rennie said he was a qualified land surveyor and an experienced farmer.

Rennie said CELP has decided to merge with the DLC but was not sure whether CDLP political leader, Winston Whyte, is a DLC foundation member.

This party is interested in pulling together good citizens who are progressive, Griffith said, so we will invite anybody who has a like mind.

If Winston Whyte is a progressive gentleman and if he believes in the principles of the DLC, then certainly he is welcome as a member.

Lalsingh was asked what his approach in parliament will be now that there are three members of the opposition benches following the recent resignation of Deputy Speaker Phinsiey St Louis from the NNP.

Taking over this question from Lalsingh, Griffith said that while opposition in the House is important, DLC was more concerned with the broad mass of the people.

People don't go to parliament to listen to these fellows talk, he said. At the sittings, you will see five or six people in the gallery. We are concered with the people in the country, not the Mickey Mouse democracy that Blaize and these fellows participate in parliament.

The press conference was chaired by Grenadian Barrister, Len Walker, who was not introduced as a DLC foundation member but said he had been invited to chair the conference.

NAVY DENIES INVOLVEMENT IN 'AYACUCHO MASSACRE'

PY291423 Buenos Aires DYN in Spanish 2334 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Text] Buenos Aires, 28 Aug (DYN) -- The Navy today denied that Argentine Marines had participated in the "Ayacucho massacre" in 1983, in which eight Peruvian journalists, who apparently were mistaken for subversives, were beaten to death by peasants. A Navy source described as "ridiculous" the report recently disseminated by Peruvian journalists, stating that it did not deserve an official response.

The Peruvian Journalists Association has asked the courts to investigate whether its eight colleagues were massacred because they possessed information on the Argentine participation in local antiguerrilla operations. At the time they were killed, the journalists were investigating a number of reports of illegal repressive excesses in the struggle against the "Shining Path" subversive group. On 26 January 1983, the eight journalists and their scout were attacked in the town of Uchuraccay, Ayacucho, beaten up, and killed. In 1983, rumors circulated in Peru about the alleged presence of an Argentine military advisory team in Peru operating under the orders of the then de facto authorities.

The killing, later called the "Ayacucho massacre," was investigated a few months later by a commission headed by writer Mario Vargas Llosa. The commission concluded that the peasants had mistaken the journalists for subversives. Afterward, the courts intervened and were able to retrieve photographic rolls from one of the murdered reporters from which one can see that talks were held with the peasants who were initially blamed with massacring the journalists. The Peruvian courts will continue investigating the case.

GAS EXPLOITATION AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH ITALY

PY300005 Buenos Aires TELAM in Spanish 1622 GMT 29 Aug 86

[Text] Buenos Aires, 29 Aug (TELAM) -- Argentina and Italy signed an agreement at the Argentine Embassy in Madrid to exploit natural gas deposits in Loma de la Lata in Neuquen Province, Argentina.

The agreement was signed by Argentine Energy Secretary Jorge Lapena and Energy Planning Under Secretary Alfredo Storani, and by Italian Energy and Hydrocarbons State Company [ENI] Foreign Relations Director Lucio Lussu and the Latin American Area Manager Michelino Loizzo.

According to EFE, the Argentine Energy Secretary and his group ended, with this agreement, a series of negotiations over natural gas projects carried out during their stay in Spain, where they arrived on 24 August. They also negotiated with the Spanish Company Cogasco, to which the Argentine State Gas Company owes a debt.

The agreement, signed in the presence of Argentine Ambassador Hugo Gobbi, and Argentine State Gas Company President Carlos Bechelli, establishes cooperation between the Energy Secretariat and the ENI to undertake economic and financial feasibility studies and to carry out projects to obtain byproducts from the natural gas in the deposits. EFE reported that the project also includes the production of byproducts such as mibe [as received] and methanol, and separate transportation, distillation, storage, and shipment installations.

U.S. TROOPS MOVE INTO SANTA CRUZ DEPARTMENT

PY021551 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0054 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Text] La Paz, 1 Sep (EFE) -- According to unofficial sources, U.S. forces sent to Bolivia to fight drug trafficking, today entered the region of San Javier, Santa Cruz Department, where they will continue to fight drug trafficking, after being idle for nearly a month.

Santa Cruz authorities refused to comment, but eyewitnesses say the U.S. troops have moved from their headquarters in Josuani, Beni Department, to Santa Cruz. The U.S. troops have been seen in the region of San Javier, near Santa Cruz. This is the first time that U.S. forces have entered this department, southeast of La Paz.

The joint Bolivian-U.S. actions against drug trafficking began on 16 July in Beni Department, northeast of this capital.

The carrying out of this plan known as "oven buster" caused a wave of protests that was joined by neighboring countries. According to the Committee for National Sovereignty -- comprising more than 21 political parties and popular organizations and 27 labor unions -- "the U.S. Army raid in Bolivia has the purpose of establishing a military base that will threaten national security and the security of the neighboring countries."

The campaign against drug trafficking was suspended nearly a month ago because of unfavorable weather conditions in the Beni region that prevented the helicopters from flying.

The U.S. forces have moved throughout the Beni region and northern La Paz Department with sporadic air raids in eastern Cochabamba Department.

Umopar Claims Troops Decreased

PY030017 La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 22 Aug 86 p 7

[Text] Trinidad, 21 Aug (PRESENCIA) -- General Guido Lopez, commander of the Umopar [Mobil Units for Rural Areas] operations, headquartered in Trinidad, has stated, "the number of U.S. military troops supporting the Antinarcotics Police actions has decreased." In remarks to PRESENCIA, the Umopar commander last night denied the report that the number of U.S. troops has increased. He said: "I know, for example, that the relief group (of last weekend) consisted of a reduced number."

Asked about the opposition cricicism to the presence of foreign military troops in the country, Lopez stated: "The ideal thing is to continue with the operation until we are free of this problem. But if aid is suspended we will lose, because drug traffickers could reestablish themselves again."

He reaffirmed the government report that as a result of the control, "activities involving the cultivation and preparation of the cocaine hydrochloride has been reduced to a minimum, which is positive."

Regarding rumors that civilian agents of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency [DEA] have reportedly received threats, the Umopar commander said that he is not aware of any official report.

Employees of the hotel where the civilian DEA agents are staying have revealed that Departmental Police have thoroughly checked the building, and that they have been maintaining a strict control on the main entrance since yesterday. The U.S. agents are occupying two of the three stories of the hotel, and they are conducting research activities, using among other things three "Aircommander" planes fitted with sophisticated equipment.

DEMONSTRATORS CLASH WITH POLICE IN COCHABAMBA

PY021254 La Paz La Red Panamericana in Spanish 1130 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Excerpt] Demonstrators and police clashed in Cochabamba last night. One person was killed and several were injured. This was announced last night by Interior Minister Fernando Barthelemy but because of its importance we are going to repeat it.

[Begin Barthelemy recording] I would like to report to the country that despite the state of siege, students from San Simon University tried to go into the streets to conduct demonstrations. The University Council met in the morning and passed repressive measures to force students not to take exams and to go into the streets and engage in violent demonstrations. A demonstration took place, and about 1 block from the university -- when police tried to stop it -- a guard, Cirilo Mamani, was shot probably with a .45-caliber weapon that fired an explosive bullet. The bullet wounded one person and then killed the guard instantly. Another guard, Justo Pajarito, was also wounded by a Molotov cocktail that was thrown in his face.

The police reacted energetically, and as a result of this action, we have learned that university student Wilson Metano Flores received a rubber bullet wound in the face. Anoter person, Entia Lobo, a woman employee of San Simon University, received a minor cut.

The clash lasted for about 2 hours until the university students moved back toward the university campus and the police continued to drive them toward the university. When the police entered the campus, they found an arsenal. [end recording]

Interior Minister Fernando Barthelemy also reported the students had a considerable amount of dynamite, Molotov cocktails, kerosene, and other materials. This proved there was a clear intention to provoke violence. The minister added that the students' goal was to create chaos in the city and to adequate conditions for an environment of subversion throughout the country.

He reported that the rectors of the Cochabamba and Potosi Universities have been released on the condition that they remain in La Paz. He added that the rectors were arrested for political activities and not because they are officials at state universities. He pointed out that a decision was made to cordon off San Simon University in Cochabamba. [passage omitted]

Shining Path Involved

PY022136 La Paz La Red Panamericana in Spanish 1700 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Text] Guido Nerubia, the Interior Ministry under secretary, has announced in Cochabamba that agents of Peru's feared Shining Path group have infiltrated student groups of the San Simon University. This information was reported to La Red Panamericana by its correspondent in Cochabamba and is undoubtedly a very serious report which has taken the Bolivian media by surprise.

[Begin relay] The Interior Ministry and security (?organizations) of the government have detected that the political (?unrest) in Cochabamba and the interior of the country is connected to Shining Path activities. This was disclosed today by Interior Ministry Under Secretary Guido Nerubia during a press conference a little before noon.

The Interior Ministry official came here to report that yesterday's disturbances -- which resulted in clashes and the death of Civil Guard Cirilo Mamani and the injury of university students -- were promoted by infiltrators among the San Simon university students.

Nerubia added that those who have been agitating university students have been identified. Among them he named: (Xavier Baptista), (Gabriel Parra), and others who will be arrested and brought to court within a couple of hours. [end relay]

GOVERNMENT, MINERS START CHURCH-SPONSORED TALKS

PY022225 La Paz La Red Panamericana in Spanish 1700 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Relay by Cristina Corrales]

[Text] The first meeting between the government and miners has just ended. They have decided that negotiations will be held every day from 1100 to 1300. These negotiations -- which are being held between the government and miners at the Episcopate Conference building -- are aimed at ending the miners conflict.

Government representatives, and miners leaders today met at 1100 through the mediation of the church. The press have been following the meeting closely to see if any agreements were achieved this morning but this morning they only achieved progress about the holding of the negotiations, and no solutions have yet been achieved. Simon Reyes, Filemon Escobar and Oscar Salas, who were the miners representatives at the meeting, have reported pressure is still being applied in the mines while the government has said that it is firmly maintaining its position regarding the restructure of Comibol [Mining Corporation of Bolivia]. Nevertheless, the Catholic Church hopes that an agreement will be achieved within a couple of hours. Today's meeting represents a great step forward, but this dialogue should have occurred before the enforcement of the state of siege. [end relay]

The Catholic Church was able to achieve the dialogue between the government and miners but the situation in the mines is serious. Since activities have not resumed, the Siglo XX miners have declared a fast to the last consequences.

Miners leader Simon Reyes, who was interviewed a little before the start of the negotiations, will talk with four ministers appointed by the government. The top-ranking miners leader was really not very enthusiastic about the outcome of the dialogue which the Catholic Church is promoting between the miners and the government.

For his part, Filemon Escobar, Trade Union Federation of Bolivian Mine Workers [FSTMB] secretary [words indistinct], told La Red Panamericana that the sector that he represents is at a disadvantage and that, based on this point of view, the dialogue, although necessary, will hardly solve the problem that is affecting mine workers.

Escobar said that we are participating in this dialogue under the pressure of the enforcement of the state of siege.

CONIN APPROVES SOFTWARE COPYRIGHT SYSTEM

PY272123 Brasilia Radio Nacional da Amazonia Network in Portuguese 1000 GMT 27 Aug 86

[Text] The National Informatics Council, CONIN, has approved a copyright system applicable to computer programs. The decision was made yesterday in a meeting with ministers of the economic and military sectors. [Begin relay] Communications Minister Antonio Carlos Magalhaes, who attended the meeting, commented on the decisions that were made:

[Magalhaes] Very important problems were solved, and I believe there was a complete consensus among all members of the CONIN, and an important decision was made concerning a solution for copyright rights. This is an important question because all developed countries in the world already have copyright systems, and now Brazil is following suit. This is very important for the country's domestic and foreign policies.

[Reporter] [question indistinct]

[Magalhaes] This problem will be examined by the president. Several suggestions will be channeled to the Planalto Palace, because copyright rights for other sectors are protected for 60 years. Evidently, this cannot occur in the technological sector. Therefore, these questions wil still have to be analyzed. However, it has already been decided basically that the solution to the problem of software lies in a system of copyrights. Based on this decision -- which is also in line with the guidelines issued by the presidency -- CONIN members have to reach an accord concerning other aspects of the issue.

[Reporter] Foreign Minister Abreu Sodre, who also attended the meeting, believes that this decision will make infomatics negotiations with the United States earlier.

[Sodre] As always, when we negotiate with the United States, we have a conciliatory interest, and we are not interested in increasing gaps. During the CONIN meeting, we made a decision which does not discriminate against anyone, and it is in the best interest of our country.

[Reporter] Foreign Minister Abreu Sodre also said there were disagreements during the CONIN meeting yesterday, but that they are normal in this kind of negotiation. [end relay]

IRAQ COMPLAINS ABOUT FAULTY AVIBRAS MISSILES

PY212308 Rio de Janeiro VEJA in Portuguese 20 Aug 86 p 51

[From the "Radar" column]

[Text] The Iraqi Army has complained to Avibras [Brazilian Aerospace Industry] about the poor performance of the missile Astros III, which was said to have a 70-km range, but actually has a range of only 45 km. The Iraqi Army attributed some losses in battle to that discrepancy which caused the missiles to fall short and land in Iraqi territory instead of reaching the enemy. Concerned about its best customer, Avibras identified the problem as a deficiency in the missile's propulsion system, and has already committed itself to correcting the problem in the next shipment.

CARVAJAL: U.S. SATELLITES SOURCE OF INFORMATION

[Excerpts] Defense Minister Patricio Carvajal today confirmed the United States supplied the information that helped the Chilean Government detect the illegal introduction of weapons from Soviet ships. He said the extreme left does not have the proper training to overthrow the government. The defense minister went on to say that the arrest of 14 persons involved in the arms traffic is an even harsher blow to the terrorists than the discovery of the arms.

The minister held a press conference at his office to discuss the arms caches and other issues that have to do with his sphere of action. He acknowledged that -- thanks to satellite surveillance and agreements in effect --the United States has supplied the information that led to the discovery of the weapons brought into the country illegally. When the minister was asked specifically about reports that the United States has helped Chile discover the arms, the minister answered: That it is no secret and should not be looked upon as something strange because Chile has cooperation agreements with the United States in this field. He mentioned the agreement with NASA as an example. The minister said in keeping with these agreements, when the satellites detect movements of Soviet ships they report it, and Chile has received such information.

[Begin Carvajal recording] Whenever there is a gathering of Soviet or other communist trawlers, the satellites report it. We have received this kind of information and we are still receiving it, and it is welcome. [end recording] [passage omitted]

Journalists Protest Statement

PY312329 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1754 GMT 30 Aug 86

[Text] Santiago, 30 Aug (EFE) -- The Association of Foreign Journalists in Chile today protested a statement recently released by the Chilean Government Social Communications Agency [Dinacos], blaming a news agency for a report concerning statements made by the defense minister.

In a note, which was only broadcast by two local radio stations, the Association of Foreign Journalists in Chile states that the news agency's report publicly questioned by the military regime, originated from a report made by the government-owned national news agency, ORBE.

The foreign journalists stated that --- according to the report made by that news agency concerning the findings of alleged extremist arsenals in northern Chile -- Vice Admiral Patricio Carvajal stated: "Information concerning the arms chache has been received and is being received from the United States and it is welcome." The foreign journalists in Chile added that in view of this news, they asked ORBE and Dinacos to confirm the text, which remained completely unchanged.

In the opinion of the correspondents, this issue makes necessary a request "which we have repeatedly made; to be authorized to enter various government agencies and to be allowed to have more contact with top government officials."

JUDGE ORDERS SUSPECTS HELD INCOMMUNICADO

PY290237 Santiago Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Text] Judge Advocate Rodrigo Gonzalez, who is in charge of the case involving the discovery of arms chaces in the Santiago metropolitan area, has reported he ordered seven terrorists arrested and held incommunicado. He said that these extremists admitted their direct participation violent activities and their connections with the banned Communist Party. According to the judge advocate, nine extremists were brought before him by the security forces and two of these persons were released.

[Begin Gonzalez recording] Following the discovery of arms caches near Santiago, the National Intelligence Center [CNI] brought before this court nine persons: five on 25 August and four on 26 August. All these persons testified before the court which ordered that seven be arrested and held incommunicado. [end recording]

The judge advocate explained that there are women and men among the extremists. He added that a man and woman were released on 27 August for lack of evidence.

Asked whether the case involving the arms caches found near Santiago could be linked to the investigation that special military Judge Lorenzo Andrade is conducting into the discovery of the arsenals found in the northern part of the country, Judge Rodrigo Gonzalez said this is something that will be determined later. Gonzalez went on to say that as far as investigation is concerned, it has to do with the arms and material discovered in La Quintana, Penaflor, and Paine. In conclusion he said no new arrest warrants have been issued.

[Begin recording] [Gonzalez] No new arrest warrants have been issued.

[Unidentified reporter] Any more arrests?

[Gonzalez] No, no other warrants have been issued. The only prisoners we have are the ones brought in by the CNI.

[Reporter] Is there anyone wanted?

[Gonazalez] None so far in this case. We are evaluating initial information and will see the extent to which this case is linked to that of Special Judge Lorenzo Andrade. We shall see if the links allow us to attach this case to that one. [end recording]

Meanwhile, it was reported that by 30 August Judge Advocate Rodrigo Gonzalez will probably decide whether or not to indict the seven extremists who were involved in the arms caches found near Santiago. It was also reported that he might declare himself incompetent to deal with the case. Should this happen, Gonzalez' case will be attached to the case involving the discovery of arsenals in Carrizal Bajo in the Third Region that Judge Lorenzo Andrade is investigating.

Regarding the latter investigation, the 11 extremists against whom Judge Andrade issued arrest warrants are still at large. These subversive criminals have ties to the 14 terrorists who are being held incommunicado at various metropolitan detention facilities.

STUDENTS, CARABINEROS CLASH; 80 DETAINED

PY030218 Paris AFP in Spanish 0129 GMT 3 Sep 86

[Text] Santiago, 2 Sep (AFP) -- The Chilean police today detained approximately 80 students who were staging a demonstration against the regime of General Augusto Pinochet 48 hours before the 4 September national stoppage called by the opposition.

According to police sources, the most serious incidents occurred at the University of Santiago (the former State Technical University) where several dozens of students erected barricades and hurled stones at the police.

The police used tear gas, rubber bullets, water cannons, and chemicals to disperse the demonstrators, who were shouting slogans against the military regime and were urging the people to join the stoppage. Student leaders said 50 students were detained by the policemen, who stormed into the university spraying large amounts of gas while beating a professor who tried to stop them.

Thirty-five students of the Chilean-German Industrial school were also detained by Carabineros when they were occupying their school in support of the 4 September opposition stoppage called by the leftist Popular Democratic Movement.

The police also dispersed a peaceful demonstration staged by students of the School of Medicine of the Chilean University who were celebrating the departure of a dean appointed by the government.

PY010032 Madrid EFE in Spanish 2314 GMT 31 Aug 86

[Excerpt] Santiago, 31 Aug (EFE) -- Before reaching the newsstands copies of the latest issue of the magazine CAUCE -- which is published in Santiago -- were confiscated today by orders of a judge advocate. A few hours earlier, CAUCE Chief Editor Juan Jorge Faundes was detained by orders of the Interior Ministry on charges of having violated the state internal security law.

According to Sergio Faundes, a brother of the CAUCE's chief editor, his brother was detained at approximately 0230 today in Santiago.

Juan Jorge Faundes, who also works as a staff editor of the EFE office in Chile, was walking near some people who were writing on a wall when he and the group were detained and taken to a Carabineros station.

CAUCE President Jorge Ovalle also announced the confiscation of the latest issue. He said that at approximately 0500 today judge advocate Rodrigo Gonzalez -- accompanied by Carabineros personnel -- went to a printing shop to confiscate copies of the latest issue of CAUCE.

At noon, Ovalle said, police personnel also confiscated all copies of CAUCE issue no 90 which was to be released tomorrow. No reason has been given for the confiscation of the magazine. [passage omitted]

ANALISIS Confiscated

PY020145 Paris AFP in Spanish 0036 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Text] Santiago, 1 Sep (AFP) -- Complying with orders from a military court, personnel of the Chilean Investigative Police today confiscated the latest issue of the magazine ANALISIS, the second opposition publication.

This morning, 25,000 copies of the social democratic magazine CAUCE were also confiscated by orders of a judge advocate who is trying CAUCE director Gonzalo Figueroa and editor Ariel Poblete on charges of having offended the Armed Forces.

ANALISIS, a leftist magazine, is openly critical of General Augusto Pinochet's regime and was scheduled to appear on 2 September, 48 hours before the national stoppage called by the Popular Democratic Movement (MDP). The stoppage has been endorsed by the Christian Democratic Party and by other political sectors. Judge Leonel Bereaud ordered the suspension of ANALISIS for 3 weeks and plain clothes policemen searched the ANALISIS office to confiscate the latest issue.

ANALISIS coordinator Roberto Celedon said he did not know the reasons for this measure. He said: We are completely unaward of the reasons prompting this decision, but we are absolutely certain it is an arbitrary, illegal measure which is part of a harrassment campaign against democratic media organizations.

OFFICIALS EXPRESS VIEWS AFTER DEATH OF UP MEMBERS

Barco: 'Conspiracy' Against Peace

PA021722 Bogota Emisoras Caracol Network in Spanish 1215 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Text] President Barco said that the murders of the two Patriotic Union [UP] parliamentarians was carried out by those who seek destabilization of democratic institutions. The president said this to leaders of the Communist Party [PCC] and the UP with whom he met with minutes after learning of the murder of the senator for (El Meta), Pedro Nel Jimenez. [PCC Secretary General] Gilberto Vieira said that president Barco is convinced these events are very grave, as they are part of a conspiracy against his government's peace policy.

Mr Barco said this was a conspiracy directed at destablizing the country's political situation, according to the story told to the press by UP President Braulio Herrera.

In an official communique, the government minister said there is no doubt these condemnable events have been produced by those who are interested in affecting the democratic process of change and reconciliation that the country yearns for, and that the government is bent on continuing its policy as a priority goal.

Jimenez Gomez Blames Security

PA310319 Madrid EFE in Spanish 2135 GMT 30 Aug 86

[Text] Medellin, 30 Aug (EFE) -- Carlos Jimenez Gomez, Colombia's attorney general (top prosecutor), has reiterated that people "are killed, tortured, and made to disappear" here. He accused the state's security bodies of the crimes.

According to the high-ranking official, "this is done by people who have authority, state security agents, soldiers, and policemen." Jimenez Gomez reiterated his charges last night at a "national forum" on missing people held in Medellin. According to Jimenez Gomez, only the chief of state's "firm and personally exercised" presidential authority can serve as a guarantee in the prevention and repression of such violations.

Jimenez Gomez, who in the next few weeks will leave the post he has held for the last 4 years, asked those present, and Colombians in general, "to join the ranks of humanism, to worry about the future, and to prevent those evils they can prevent."

On several occasions he has charged the Army, the police, and other state security bodies with torture, deaths, and disappearances, eliciting controversies here, where, according to his office, "more than 300 people are missing."

UP Blames Paramilitary Groups

PA021650 Bogota Television Service in Spanish 0000 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Excerpts] In the past 72 hours, 2 legislators of the Patriotic Union [UP] were assassinated in the country, in Barrancabermeja and Villavicencio, and the country's public order situation is worsening.

While the wake for Representative Leonardo Posada was under way at the Capitol's Elliptic Room, Senator Pedro Nel Jimenez was being shot to death in the streets of Villavicencio. [passage omitted]

Twenty members -- leaders, councilmen, deputies, and parliament members -- of the UP and the PCC have been assassinated between the 9 March elections and today. [passage omitted]

UP and PCC members went to the Government Ministry to deliver a memorandum to Minister Fernando Cepeda Ulloa. According to this memorandum, the defense minister knew about the death threats against Posada and took no steps to protect him.

[Begin Cepeda Ulloa recording] This is a very worrisome situation. We hope that, with the help of the UP, we can restore confidence, which is essential right now. [end recording]

This sector of the opposition, composed of the UP and the PCC, suggested that a court of civilian judges be formed to investigate these assassinations and that armed facilities be provided for them.

[Begin PCC Secretary Gilberto Vieira recording] We are going to ask the government if there are two different powers in Colombia: the civilian power, which offers guarantees; and the military power, which goes against the lives of Colombians. [end recording]

While this was occurring near the Government Ministry and Narino Palace, UP Senator Pedro Nel Jimenez was assassinated in the streets of Villavicencio.

[Begin recording] [UP leader Jaime Pardo Leal] We are going to ask the national government and the president to purge the Colombian Armed Forces and meet with the FARC [Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia] Secretariat because the total failure of the peace policy is just around the corner.

[Reporter] You are directly blaming a group of generals or the military command of... [interrupted by Pardo Leal]

[Pardo Leal] We know they are covering the paramilitary groups. There have been clashes with the EPL [Popular Liberation Army], the M-19, and the ELN [Army of National Liberation], but there has never been any fighting with the MAS [Death to Kidnappers]. There is not a single MAS member in jail. Why? Because they are people who are sponsored and promoted by the military, by at least a sector of the military forces.

Senator Jimenez was killed because yesterday he identified the killers of Deputy Rafael Reyes. They are two B-2 agents. In addition, he reported to the country that a military patrol executed companero commander Alvaro Fayad here in Bogota, on the banks of the Bogota river. [end recording]

There are some who disagree with the explanations that UP leaders offer for the assassinations of their members. Others believe that the crimes were committed by active members of the FAR, ELN, and EPL who have decided to take revenge on those who had abandoned the guerrilla armed struggle to sell themselves to the system.

This afternoon, President Virgilio Barco told UP leaders that whoever is responsible for these killings wants to hamper the peace process in our country.

According to UP leaders, more than 300 UP people -- including militants and leaders -- have been killed in various parts of our nation.

CONSERVATIVES VOW TO REJECT GOVERNMENT POSTS

PA312348 Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 27 Aug 86 pp 1-A, 7-A

[Article by Jesus Medina S.]

[Excerpts] The Conservative Party will not accept mayoralities, ambassadorships, governorships, or technical positions during the current administration. Moreover, it will not vote in favor of constitutional amendments the Liberal Party may introduce in Congress until the government agrees to seek the means to repeal Article No 120 of the Constitution.

The Conservative interparliamentary board, the advisory organ of the National Directorate [DNC], approved that decision at a meeting held yesterday in Bogota.

The proposal was approved with 74 votes in favor and 18 votes against, imposing the "hard-line" policy led by Caldas Senator Omar Yepes Alzate.

The same document asks those who belong to boards of directors of state agencies that are linked to the executive branch to resign immediately.

The Conservatives went along with a proposal by former President Misael Pastrana Borrero of not accepting mayoral appointments. They extend that stance to cover all other administrative posts, including technical institutes and embassies.

The decision by the interparliamentary board is not binding on the DNC, but owing to the level of representation of that board, its recommendations must be accepted as the party's official policies.

Based on that decision, the Conservative Party begins to adamantly oppose the government of President Virgilio Barco Vargas. Until now, that government has appointed ministers and governors of the Liberal Party because the Conservatives refused to participate in the government.

President Barco Vargas has announced his willingness to appoint mayors who belong to the political sectors that won the elections in different municipalities. However, the Conservative Party's decision not to accept those appointments will radically change the president's plan.

Besides refusing to accept those posts, the Conservatives turned down posts in technical institutes and embassies. The Conservative presence during the current administration will be reduced to lower-ranking posts.

The Conservative Party also announced that it will vote against amendments introduced by the Liberal Party which, judging by the announcements President Barco Vargas has made on the subject, will be numerous. [passage omitted]

The Conservative Party feels that repealing Article No 120 involves the creation of a statute of guarantees for the opposition. One of the central aspects of this statute would include access to the state's news media and the actual implementation of the administrative career to give job stability to public employees. [passage omitted]

OFFICIALS INVESTIGATING OCHOA CASE THREATENED

PA311827 Bogota EL SIGLO in Spanish 26 Aug 86 pp 1, 3

[Text] The two officials appointed by the attorney general of the nation to investigate why Cartagena Customs Judge Fabio Pastrona Hoyos Vasquez decided to release Jorge Luis Ochoa -- charged with being a narcotics trafficker and smuggler of fighting bulls -- have received death threats, sources from the Attorney General's Office have disclosed.

The delegate of the attorney general in Cartagena, Elsa Saavedra de Guette, said she has received threatening phone calls from men.

She told Radio Cadena Nacional that one of the anonymous callers told her: "Keep getting involved in this, and you will see that we will screw you."

She said she has no special protection and the judiciary police guards she had at her office have been withdrawn.

It was also confirmed in Bogota that another investigator of the Attorney General's Office, Carlos Antonio Osuna, has received death threats.

The investigation of Judge Pastrana Hoyos was ordered when the Justice Ministry reported it had instructed the judge to keep Ochoa detained, as his extradition had been requested by the United States on charges of narcotics trafficking. Pastrana Hoyos was removed from his post last week by the Customs Superior Tribunal. Another request had been made by the 11th District criminal judge of Medellin.

It was officially learned in Bogota that Carlos Antonio Osuna, special agent of the Attorney General's Office in charge of reviewing the case of the customs judge, has received death threats.

Likewise, it was proven that the dossier of the smuggling charges against Ochoa Vasquez does not include Official Notes Nos 14511 and 14567 dated 17 July 1986 from the Justice Ministry that notified the judge he should not release the alleged narcotics trafficker, as his extradition had been requested by the U.S. Government.

Likewise, it was learned that Judge Fabio Pastrana Hoyos sent an official note to the 11th district criminal judge of Medellin requesting background on Ochoa Vasquez and information on whether he could be released, but surprisingly enough, this note and the reply were all processed in a record and unusual period of time, only 2 days.

OFFICIAL SPOKESMAN SAYS STROESSNER ALIVE, WELL

PY022335 Madrid EFE in Spanish 2313 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Text] Asuncion, 2 Sep (EFE) -- Anibal Fernandez, the official spokesman for President Alfredo Stroessner, said the president "enjoys iron health." According to foreign news media, the Paraguayan president who is 73 years old is ill.

A Mexican TV channel today carried a "flash report" that "Paraguayan President Alfredo Stroessner had apparently died," providing no further details.

Fernandez, presidential under secretary of information, stated that "this is the umpteenth piece of absurd, irresponsible and malevolent information about President Stroessner's health and its only objective is to distort Paraguay's image."

He added: "Paraguay enjoys peace and tranquillity thanks to President Stroessner's iron health; government affairs can therefore be conducted without concern."

The presidential spokesman recalled that on 1 September President Stroessner dedicated the new Baptist Hospital facilities in Asuncion and today dedicated a new hotel in downtown Asuncion.

Other official circles asked about the president's health confirmed that "Stroessner enjoys good health, is in good spirits and takes long walks every morning before going to his office."

JAMMING MAY CAUSE RADIO STATION TO CLOSE

PY262033 Paris AFP in Spanish 1803 GMT 26 Aug 86

[Text] Asuncion, 26 Aug (AFP) -- Paraguayan journalist Humberto Rubin, owner of Radio Nanduti, told AFP today that he may have to close his radio station due to the government's unrelenting jamming of its programs.

Speaking during one of the long breaks caused by jammed Radio Nanduti programs, Rubin said: I cannot understand how high-ranking government officials can continue to talk about democracy while constitutional rights are being systematically violated.

He said he is on the verge of bankruptcy after sponsors, who have been also under government pressure, rushed to withdraw their commercials.

Nervous and tired by the daily jamming, Rubin said that it is not possible to work in this manner and the government should close his radio if it is so irritated by it. The government prefers the strong jamming to slowly kill the radio, he said.

Reports on exiled Domingo Laino and on the official suspension of the Ypacarai International Music Festival are particularly maddening to the person who is jamming the station. Whenever we try to talk about these issues, he seems to suffer an attack and he jams our programs for 10 to 30 minutes, Rubin added.

The jamming began in May, a few days after the radio was attacked twice by gangs of intoxicated people who chanted slogans in support of President Stroessner. The attackers, among whom Rubin identified several high-ranking officials, shattered glasses and destroyed the doors of the transmitter building.

The jamming ended for 20 days in July, during a brief visit by Robert Gelbard, U.S. deputy assistant secretary of state for American republic affairs.

PLRA LEADER GOES UNDERGROUND TO AVOID ARREST

PY291911 Asuncion Cerro Cora Sistema Nacional Television in Spanish 1600 GMT 29 Aug 86

[From the "Court Report" section by Atilio Viera]

[Text] A spokesman of the Authentic Radical Liberal Party [PLRA] has announced that PLRA leader Miguel Abdon Saguier, against whom a criminal judge has issued an arrest warrant, will go underground. The spokesman said Saguier has no intention of appearing before a Paraguayan court.

The spokesman noted that Saguier will not turn himself in to face the charge brought against him by the attorney general for having violated Law 209 on the defense of public order and Article 39 of the Constitution [which describe the crime of sedition].

EXILED LABOR LEADER RETURNS AFTER 28 YEARS

PY282031 Asuncion EL DIARIO in Spanish 22 Aug 86 p 14

[Text] Julio Etcheverry, one of the secretaries general of the Paraguayan Confederation of Workers [CPT] in exile, returned last week after 28 years in exile.

EL DIARIO interviewed Etchevery, 58, who said that "we have not come with a gun under our poncho. We have come with what we believe is the truth. We intend to present it openly and frankly to the workers and the national institutions so we can really help to find a democratic solution for our country."

[Reporter] What steps did you take to come back?

[Etcheverry] I am returning to the country by my legitimate right under the Constitution. Article 56 establishes that all Paraguayans have the right to freely enter or leave the country.

[Reporter] But didn't the governmet oppose to your entry?

[Etcheverry] I wrote to the Justice and Labor Ministery saying I was coming and the ILO wrote to the national government, and here I am.

[Reporter] Have you tried before?

[Etcheverry] Yes, we tried before. We met with the former labor minister, but we never obtained an answer. This time I did not ask for permission. I came in directly and there was no oppositon.

[Reporter] What is the reason of your presence in the country?

[Etcheverry] Apart from the fact that I have always wanted to return to my country, I am carrying a document as the secretary general of the CPT in exile. It was prepared by our organization and covers all aspects of our national life. We are deeply worried about the political, social, economic, and labor situation of the country. We believe that the time has come for the Paraguayan people to be honest with themselves. We believe that the time has come to calm down and seek a solution to the very serious problems confronting our country. We want to present our point of view to all sectors of society in the hope of attaining the well-being that we all want. We dream of a free labor movement in Paraguay.

[Reporter] Can you tell us what the proposals are?

[Etcheverry] I prefer to wait for a few days, perhaps until Monday or Tuesday, to release them in a meeting with the press.

[Reporter] Tell us about the CPT in exile.

[Etcheverry] We belong to a group of labor leader that went into exile after the workers' strike of 1958. The general secretariat has been functioning for 2 years now. It was in Uruguay before. We have auxiliary organizations in various parts of the world. They are staffed by fellow Paraguayan workers who suffered the same misfortune.

[Reporter] Do they also think of coming back?

[Etcheverry] Of course. We all want to return to our country permanently and work for a free and demoncratic labor organization as a developing factor of our society.

[Reporter] How do you view the present Paraguayan labor organization?

[Etcheverry] It is disastrous and complex. Disastrous, because here we must start from zero if we want to have a free and democratic labor organization. Labor here looks as if it were coming out of a war.

[Reporter] Tell us about your background as a labor leader.

[Etcheverry] I started in the labor struggle when I was a worker in the Censi and Pirotta sugar mill in my home town of Benjamin Aceval. I obtained my first experience there. I became a delegate to the CPT which I helped to begin in 1951. In 1953 I became member of the Executive Board as press and propaganda secretary and editoir of La Voz del Trabajo and held those positons until I went into exile. Later I worked for the free and democratic continental labor movement. I was secretary general of the ICFTU for 5 years in Mexico, andrepresentative of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT) in several countries of the world.

[Reporter] Will you work actively in the labor movement here, and, given the circumstances, would you accept a nomination to head a labor union?

[Etcheverry] I will probably be active in labor but I have no aspirations. I believe that young Paraguayan workers have the right to work their way up to leadership.

WAR MINISTER DENIES NAVY PRESENCE IN PERU

PY022359 Madrid EFE in Spanish 2042 GMT 31 Aug 86

[Text] Lima, 31 Aug (EFE) -- Peruvian War Minister General Jorge Flores today said he "categorically" rejects the allegations that Argentine Navy "advisers" were in Ayacucho when eight journalists were murdered in the Andean Village of Uchurajay.

Flores stressed that the Argentine presence was not possible because previous authorization from Congress is necessary for the Navy advisers to enter the country and the authorization was never granted.

He argued that the Armed Forces took political and military control of the Ayacucho emergency zone at the end of 1982, only a short time before the brutal murders of the journalists, which occurred in January 1983. The Minister repeated: "There were no foreigners present in Ayacucho."

The presumed presence of Navy "advisers" in Ayacucho was reported on 27 August by Peruvian Journalist Association President Juan Vicente Requejo, who added that the eight journalists were assassinated because they had found out about the "advisers." Raquejo said he received confirmation of the foreign military presence from a journalist in Ayacucho.

The minister added that the president of the Journalist Association should prove his accusation before the Court investigating the deaths of the journalists at Uchurajay. He also said no military personnel are involved in the case of the arms contraband transported by the Danish ship Pia Vesta.

The U.S. arms trader, David Duncan, told the Peruvian press the arms were bought by the Army and Navy.

Flores stressed the allegation was not true and the Peruvian military personnel have nothing to do with the case. He said he was "worried and hurt" because the country's press "give credit" to an arms trader who is trying "to cover up his wrong doings." He added he knew there is a retired Peruvian captain nammed Coppo, apparently working with Duncan, but he has nothing to do with the Peruvian Armed Forces at the present time.

COLOMBIAN DRUG TRAFFICKERS HIJACK SMALL AIRPLANE

PY012134 Paris AFP in Spanish 1546 GMT 1 Sep 86

[Text] Lima, 1 Sep (AFP) -- The police today reported in Lima that two Colombian drug traffickers yesterday hijacked a small aircraft which was on its way from Uchiza to Tarapoto in the Amazonic San Martin Department. The hijackers forced the pilot to change direction and head for Leticia in Colombia. The attempt failed when the airplane ran out of fuel.

Using assumed names, the two presumed drug traffickers -- whose real identities were not revealed -- rented a small airplane from the Aerotaxi Iberico Company at Uchiza airport to go to Tarapoto.

However -- 15 minutes after take off -- the pilot, Jorge Lopez, was forced to change direction and head for the Colombian border toward a presumed clandestine airstrip near Leticia.

After flying for 3 hours, the pilot warned he had run out of fuel and would have to make an emergency landing on one of the Amazon river banks between the towns of Nauta and San Fernando, 10 minutes from Iquitos, the capital of Loreto Department.

When one of the drug traffickers left to get fuel, the Peruvian pilot managed to escape and reported the situation to the local authorities. The police then chased the hijackers who managed to flee into the jungle, the source stated.

GC CHIEF CRITICIZES POLICE REORGANIZATION

PY021153 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0108 GMT 1 Sep 86

[Text] Lima, 31 Aug (EFE) -- Civil Guard (GC) Director General Carlos Barreto has openly criticized the reorganization of the police forces carried out by the Peruvian Government. He leveled the criticism in a speech which some news media regarded today as a "challenge" to the government decision.

In the speech -- delivered last Saturday in Lima to mark the 113th anniversary of the Civil Guard -- Gen Barreto said that "the Civil Guard approved the loss of identity," but that the unification should not have been conducted by "authorities foreign" to the police.

Gen Barreto made these comments in the presence of Peruvian First Vice President Luis Alberto Sanchez, who is the acting president during the absence of Alan Garcia, who is currently in Zimbabwe participating in the summit of the Nonaligned Movement. Also present at the ceremony were: Interior Minister Abel Salinas; Senate President Armando Villanueva; and, Chamber of Deputies President Fernando Leon de Vivero, all of whom are members of the APRA [American Popular Revolutionary Alliance], the ruling party in Peru.

According to press reports, Barreto addressed Sanchez, stating: "Mr President, let no one believe that by speaking this way I am violating the Constitution. I have served the institution for more than 36 years, and I have the duty of giving an opinion on police issues, because a policeman also has brains."

Sanchez, also a senator, had only a few hours earlier assumed the presidency ad interim. He responded in his speech that although it is true that everyone has a right to express an opinion, "it must be expressed in a proper way and fashion and at the proper time." Sanchez stressed that the government aimed to unity the police forces because the country "is not an archipelago of isolated institutions but an iron unity."

The GC director general also said: "Subordinates must obey their own chiefs and not people foreign to the institution," adding that administration autonomy is necessary.

According to comments made by the interior minister, the three police forces -- namely the Civil Guard, the Republican Guard, and the Peruvian Investigative Police -- will merge, and 12 police districts will be established throughout Peru under a single chief.

Luis Alberto Sanchez stated that there is no animosity against the GC and that the reorganization decision was based on functional criteria.

POLICE STATIONS ATTACKED IN LIMA, OTHER CITIES

PY310150 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1739 GMT 30 Aug 86

[Text] Lima, 30 Aug (EFE) -- Subversives last night hurled explosive devices against two police stations in Lima and against another in the neighboring town of Chosica. A weighing station for trucks was also attacked in Lima. Several other attacks took place last night in Lima, especially against police posts. The attacks caused damage, but no casualties.

Meanwhile, in a Lima neighborhood the police detained an alleged former member of the Colombian guerrilla group "M-19."

An intensive shoot-out took place during the attack on the police station in Yerbateros, and the police reported that two of the attackers were arrested.

According to reports received today in Lima, presumed "Shining Path" members attacked a gas station on the outskirts of Huanta, in Ayacucho, early yesterday morning. The bomb attack destroyed four gasoline pumps and the guard post, but there were no casualties.

According to the government newspaper LA CRONICA, in an operation in "Villa El Salvador," a popular district in Lima, the police detained sociology student Erneseo Soto, alias "Comrade Pablo." According to the newspaper, some letters addressed to the "M-19," the "Alfaro Lives" detachment of the "American Battallion" were found on him. According to this report, Ernesto Soto has been a member of the "M-19" for 13 months, and several types of firearms were found in his house.

Soto is related to two Peruvians expelled from Colombia for seditious activities: Herbert David Vicanco and Laureano Chocano, the government newspaper reported.

According to LA CRONICA, the police also detained nine other terrorist suspects in the so-called "red zone" in southern Lima. The newspaper LA VOZ reported today about an operation carried out in Lima's Zone of Collique, in which "hooded members of the military raided houses." The military thoroughly searched the houses, apparently looking for evidence of the presence of terrorists.

In the city of Lambayeque in northern Peru, six hooded and heavily armed presumed members of the Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement, entered the "Pedro Ruiz Gallo University" and "gave a 1/2 hour lecture" on terrorist activities, the newspaper HOY reported today.

SANGUINETTI PROPOSES AMNESTY LAW FOR MILITARY

PY290315 Montevideo Radio Carve in Spanish 0000 GMT 29 Aug 86

[Address to the nation by President Julio Maria Sanguinetti on 28 August -- recorded]

[Excerpts] The executive branch today submitted to Congress a pacification bill that is complementary to the one approved in March 1985.

It is essential for people to understand that in keeping with its commitment the government has worked so the country may achieve a (?peaceful transition) and continue to do so. (?We shall strive to achieve this goal) by rebuilding democracy and by achieving the development of the country through peaceful means without allowing ourselves to be disturbed by past passions. [passage omitted]

Many say that it is unjust to grant amnesty to the military and policemen when subversives have paid dearly for their crimes. But I say that we are confronting the issue now, and that it must be resolved now, because we must restore democracy now. We are discussing the issue now but if we continue discussing things of the past we shall never be able to build the future.

I add that this argument for apparent justice is not valid either, because when we granted amnesty to subversives we closed investigations on numerous crimes that were perpetrated by them, crimes for which no one was ever sent to jail. There are still 22 homicides, horrible crimes, that have not been solved. [passage omitted]

It is clear then that many people were not punished. But it is even clearer that the issue under discussion now is that we must look forward, that we must pacify the country as Uruguayans have traditionally done. Uruguay has always had amnesties to end these situations. We must turn the page. This is what Uruguay has done since 1825, at the end of each war, at the end of every confrontation, at the end of every coup d'etat, each of which was filled not only with confrontations but also with beheadings and attacks. This is part of our history, a history that says there was also an (?amnesty enforced). Was not this what Spain did after Franco, after a war, and after 40 years of a harsh dictatorship? This is what Spanish Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez told us here on Uruguayan television when he said that there comes a time when we must turn the page or the country will continue to (?live in the past). [passage omitted]

Before ending this speech I would like to allude to my triple condition as president of the Republic, commander in chief of the armed and police forces, and a simple Uruguayan citizen.

In my capacity as president, I inform all of you that I regret not having the legal power to resolve this situation, but I nonetheless assume my entire moral and political responsibility. We are not acting recklessly. We are acting after profound reflection, after many discussions and much thinking. We are aware and are convinced that today this is the safest path and the one that offers the least risk to the country. This is what truly matters, because this is the first responsibility of any government. A government is not in power to do what it wants or to do simple and easy things but to do what it must and above all to safeguard the peace of the country so freedom may truly prevail. I hereby assume complete responsibility for this decision.

I ask only that political parties discuss this issue in a noble manner and act without partisan selfishness. I ask each legislator to assume his responsibility. This is a national issue. It is not a partisan affair. There is no reason to dogmatize the situation in a political confrontation. We are only trying to find a path to the future.

As commander in chief of the armed and police forces I tell you that I am at peace with myself and that I am proud to be leading the same Armed Forces, which as a political leader I confronted in past years. Today I have obtained only disciplined subordination from the Armed Forces and above all a decisive spirit to support the democratic outcome.

To those who try to divide the Armed Forces or to undermine the morale of these forces, I assure them that I will struggle with all my power so they will not succeed in their objectives and will always be ready to act if the (?situation demands).

To those who still have fears about the future attitude of the Armed Forces, I assure them that the Armed Forces are demanding only tranquillity and that a pacification law will simply make them more willing to continue dedicating their efforts to their professional activities. In the name of the Armed Forces and of the executive branch, I assume responsibility in this regard. [passage omitted]

The government is doing its duty at this time. We propose a solution in a decisive manner, with faith, and with calmness. We are proposing a change, a clear path, a firm path, that although controversial, is a clear and firm path along which we know we shall be able to achieve a future filled with peace and tranquillity.

We trust and we are confident that all of you will also support this proposal so that no one will have regrets in the future or experience again the unfortunate things we have already experienced, at a time in which we are touching with our hands a different, free, and respected Uruguay, one that is opened to the world, a Uruguay that is (?clean) and has a culture that is alive; a peaceful Uruguay that has many possibilities of achieving a better future.

VIEWS ON ANTIDRUG CAMPAIGNS, DEA ACTIVITIES

De la Madrid: 'Progress Evident'

FL012258 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 1819 GMT 1 Sep 86

[Excerpts] Mexico City, 1 Sep (NOTIMEX) -- The progress made in Mexico's fight against drug traffic is evident, President Miguel de la Madrid said as he noted that the activities being undertaken by the government are increasingly greater and proportionally superior to those of other countries.

De la Madrid said that in so doing the country fulfills its share in this bitter struggle in which the activities of drug trafficking are being financed and carried out by well organized international criminals.

Nevertheless, Mexico has been the target of diverse pressures from abroad because the actions we have been undertaking are not sufficiently efficient to combat these illegal activities. [passage omitted]

In this struggle, he said, the people are paying with their lives because, since "Operation Condor" began, the army has suffered 392 casualties. In 1985, 10 agents of the federal judicial police were killed, a sacrifice which constitutes an example of honesty and valor. [passage omitted]

The president announced that on 28 May of this year a federal law aimed at preventing and sanctioning torture had been enacted, an action which demonstrates the political and juridical will of rejecting practices that harm human dignity and offend society. [passage omitted]

De la Madrid said the office of the attorney general works in coordination with the federation's states, which is consistent with the requirements of fast and expeditious justice and with the policy of decentralization of national affairs.

He indicated that the Armed Forces guarantee domestic security and the defense of integrity, independence, and sovereignty of the nation so that development may be attained in different areas. [passage omitted] The Armed Forces continue developing their technology to avoid foreign dependence.

Attorney General on Campaign

PA292216 Mexico City Red Nacional 13 Imevision Television in Spanish 1955 GMT 29 Aug 86

[Text] Attorney General Sergio Garcia Ramirez said in Monterrey, Nuevo Leon, today that the campaign against drug trafficking has yielded very positive results. He reported that 4 and 1/2 tons of drugs have been confiscated during the past 8 months. Such results had not been achieved in the past 10 years. He said that this illustrated the current administration's efforts against drug trafficking. He also said that the program against drug traffic and dependence being executed in the border zones is to be included in the campaign for the rest of the country. The program, in which the federal and municipal governments and the general public participate, aims at preventing Mexican youth from involvement with this social vice.

Referring to the incident involving DEA agent Victor Cortez, Garcia Ramirez said that this event will not harm the good relations between Mexico and the United States because a respectful and valuable relationship exists. He said that in this struggle against drug trafficking, each agency will operate in its own territory and within its own responsibilities.

Garcia Ramirez was interviewed after a ceremony in which the attorney general's office delivered four aircraft to the Finance and Public Credit Secretariat's general customs directorate at the Monterrey airport.

'Pretext for Intervention'

PA292022 Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 27 Aug 86 p 5

[Editorial: "Drug Traffic -- A Pretext for Interventionist Practices"]

[Text] For some time the drug traffic problem has gone from being the topic of newspaper headlines to becoming a national and foreign policy issue. Some of the reasons for this change are the increase in the drug use in the United States -- the main world market for these products -- and the proliferation of such illicit as well as profitable businesses in the United States and in several countries in Latin America -- as well as in the world in general -- which currently produce and export various drugs. The increase in the international traffic explains the international efforts to fight it.

The reason drug trafficking has become a political issue is that the U.S. circles of power want to use drug trafficking as a weapon of political pressure against the Latin American countries. In this way, they have gone beyond the bounds of police work, trying to justify their interventionist actions under the legal cover of halting the illegal traffic.

The meddling by U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency police agents in various Latin American countries, violating their national sovereignty, falls within that area. This type of action has been cause for scandal on two occasions. The first occurred with the death of agent Enrique Camarena a few months ago. Camarena's death was used as a pretext for the so-called interception action at the U.S. border. The second occurred in the last few days with agent Victor Cortez' charge that he was tortured by Mexican policemen in Jalisco State.

Independent of the police investigation into the treatment of any citizen of Mexico or of any other country, Mexicans view the intervention of foreign police agents in the national territory as inadmissible. From the legal standpoint, the Mexican Constitution, the country's highest law, explicitly establishes that the Attorney General's Office and the Judicial Police are in charge of pursuing crime in the national territory.

From the political viewpoint, President De la Madrid has clearly stated that Mexico can, on its own, act against the crimes committed within its territory and that it does not need any other country's help in fighting the drug trade.

The issue deserves an in-depth investigation because the Senate, which is responsible for reviewing international treaties, has reported there is no agreement with the United States that permits U.S. policemen to act in our territory. According to reports from abroad, the practice of granting diplomatic visas to such agents is an inherited one.

Nevertheless, it is time for the matter to be investigated carefully. The public must be thoroughly informed. Any action which damages national sovereignty and which is carried out for interventionist reasons must end.

Sepulveda on DEA activities

FL012330 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 2004 GMT 1 Sep 86

[Excerpts] Mexico City, 1 Sep (NOTIMEX) -- The administration of justice belongs solely and exclusively to the government, Foreign Secretary Bernardo Sepulveda noted in response to a question on the activities of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration. In an interview at the Palace of the Legislature, where he attended the Fourth Presidential Report, Sepulveda said the agreements with the United States on drug trafficking deal solely and exclusively with the exchange of information. He said the agreements exclude any type of police activities on the part of DEA agents. [passage omitted]

The foreign secretary said the President will clearly outline the government's internationalist theses in his address before the UN General Assembly on 24 September.

Sepulveda Amor announced that the president will pay official visits to Japan and the People's Republic of China next November. [passage omitted] He also confirmed that he will meet with eight foreign ministers of the Contadora group and its support group in New York on 22 September. He added that the reason for the meeting is to design a scheme of cooperation in the pacification of Central America as well as cooperation among Latin American countries.

Columnists: 'Expel' DEA

PA282019 Mexico City EL UNIVERSAL 25 Aug 86 p 6

[Article by Sergio Iracheta: "We Found the DEA!"]

[Text] The most unconstitutional presence of the oft-mentioned DEA in our (we still believe, independent) country has soured approximately 80 million people.... Moreover, it has perplexed our secretary of foreign relations and our attorney general.

While we feel our stomach turning because of the big fuss over such a flagrant violation of our national sovereignty, the foreign secretariat coolly states that there is no agreement between Mexico and the United States allowing gringo police units to operate here, and the Attorney General's office said that the Mexican drug agents can handle their job without the help of any foreigners. At any rate, the DEA is definitely not authorized and, of course, not needed... but, it is here.

After having to endure the disgusting presence of vermin like "tortured" Victor Cortez, our authorities now tell us they found out that the DEA should not be operating this side of the Rio Bravo. The only thing lacking to reach the pinnacle of bureaucratic bungling would be if Tlatelocan [tlateloca] Bernardo Sepulveda Amor were to ask Sergio Garcia Ramirez if the DEA officials in question are his guests, and if Sergio were to answer that he tolerated them simply because he thought they were Bernardo's buddies.

The situation calls for a remedy, even if it is belated. It is urgent that we place the oft-mentioned DEA agents on the border and give them a good kick on their behinds so they land on the other side... where they never should have left. But, let us do it now.

DUARTE UNWILLING TO CHANGE PLACE, DATE OF TALKS

PA310437 San Salvador Radio Cadena YSKL in Spanish 2100 GMT 29 Aug 86

[Text] Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte today said that he is not willing to change the place or date of the third round of talks in the dialogue process. He said that Sesori was proposed by the insurgent representatives and accepted by the government commission. The president said he pledged to provide security for the rebel commanders and facilitate their arrival at Sesori.

[Begin Duarte recording] The truth is that we have not changed or played around. This is serious. We have proposed a meeting to discuss and define our search for peace. They proposed Sesori, and we accepted it. If they made a mistake and have now decided that they chose an unsuitable place, it is their problem. We are not willing to play around and change the proposal. We will stick to Sesori as the meeting place. We will also stick to the agreed date. The meeting will be held on 19 September. Keep in mind that the document [words indistinct] I said it must be of common accord by the two sides. We do pledge -- and this is absent from the document -- personally and backed by the Armed Forces, to provide all the necessary security so that we can meet at Sesori on 19 September to search for peace. [end recording]

Regarding remarks by San Salvador Auxiliary Bishop Msgr Gregorio Rosa Chavez that the Constitution might constitute an obstacle to the dialogue process and that it would be necessary to revise it, President Duarte said:

[Begin recording] [Duarte] They must join the democratic process. As soon as they have done so, we can do all that is necessary, not only change laws or grant amnesty or whatever, but make all those amendments that the Constitution indicates. The Constitution even describes how amendments are to be effected. Amendments can be effected in two ways: one, by introducing motions during the first assembly. Once they have been approved at the first assembly, a second constituent assembly is convened. Amendments can then be approved by 45 votes. [passage indistinct] Two, I think Msgr Rosa's view is morally right. May I stress this. He thinks about peace. He thinks that the value of peace is above any other values. This, however, jeopardizes the country's institutionality and all the efforts that we have made for 12 years to make progress in the democratic process.

Do you feel that what we hear at this moment would have been heard in 1978 or 1979? In front of the presidential palace, some workers shout and even insult the president. Do you think that this would have been possible in 1978, 1979, or a number of years ago? It is possible today because the country is changing, because the democratic process is transforming the country. This has cost the Armed Forces and people blood, lives, and suffering. It is unfair for human rights to be destroyed. The defense of the democratic process is linked to the defense of the Constitution. I am the president of the republic because the Constitution so establishes and because the nation wants it and democracy permits it. The moment constitutional law is broken, I would cease to be president. Therefore, no dialogue could take place because there would be no one to talk to. This is why I feel that, in practive, Msgr Rosa Chavez is mistaken.

[Reporter] [Words indistinct] amnesty considered for political prisoners. As for international relations, you said last week that the government could back the cost of the U.S. aid for [words indistinct].

[Duarte] In the first place, I want to tell you that, right up to this moment, I have not received the corresponding document from the monsignor. This is not his fault, however. He told me he would speak to me the day before yesterday. But I was scheduled to attend five meetings simultaneously on the same day to discuss problems. But I have not been asked. I wonder why the Salvadoran reporters are not concerned over the drought that the country is suffering from. This phenomenon is much more serious than anything else. We have a full plan to tackle this problem, but I have not been asked about this. I have asked the monsignor to let me make some arrangments amid all my appointments and see if I can make some time in order to talk. I have not had the time to talk to him. This is why I am not aware of the proposal. Once I have received the proposal, I will consider it and give an answer.

On two consecutive occasions, the Armed Forces commanders have fully backed the president of the republic in the search for a solution to this problem.

[Reporter] Regarding the amnesty for the political prisoners and the aid for the counterrevolutionaries?

[Duarte] I have not had the time for this. I was supposed to release [words indistinct], but I have not had the time. If you wait for me here, I will send for her [not further identified] to deliver her to her relatives and you. I would do it very gladly. This government's mind and strength lie in its genuineness, respect for law, and the concept that liberty and justice are above all other objectives. We have been reviewing all pending cases. Whenever I encounter a case in which the inmate can be released despite some measure of guilt, the person is released to show our tolerance. [end recording]

PRESIDENT ALLUDES TO POSSIBLE HELP FOR CONTRAS

PA300222 Hamburg DPA in Spanish 2249 GMT 29 Aug 86

[Excerpt] San Salvador, 29 Aug (DAP) -- According to President Jose Napoleon Duarte, El Salvador could help Nicaraguan rebels, although he did not clarify what this support could be. The Salvadoran president was questioned at midday today by reporters when he attended to the swearing in of three new cabinet ministers for the posts of public works, economy, and foreign trade.

Duarte said: "El Salvador has never given the contras support and will always continue to seek peaceful ways for Nicaragua to reincorporate itself in the democratic process of Central America." Duarte added: "El Salvador does not agree with the training of 'contras' on its territory, unless Nicaragua does not understand, but we shall continue to do everything possible."

He said that, on the other hand, the Sandinists continued to provide a "sanctuary for the Salvadoran guerrillas, for all the insurgents, and also support these movements in every sense." [passage omitted]

FMLN'S SAMAYOA INTERVIEWED ON MEXICO TALKS

PA311907 (Clandestine) Radio Venceremos in Spanish to El Salvador 1430 GMT 31 Aug 86

[Interview with FMLN leader Salvador Samayoa, member of the FMLN-FDR delegation to meeting with government delegation in Mexico City, by unidentified reporter; date and place not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Reporter] Companero Salvador Samayoa, what were the government's arguments regarding the topics the FMLN-FDR regarded as fundamental in the preparations for the third round of talks, particularly the argument they used to reject the proposal to hold the third dialogue meeting in San Salvador?

[Samayoa] The objection of Duarte's envoys to the Mexico City meeting regarding the FMLN-FDR proposal to hold the meeting in San Salvador was ludicrous. Their argument was that the mobilization of popular sectors that would take place if the meeting was in San Salvador would lead to a confrontation between the groups supporting the government and those supporting the FMLN-FDR. They argued that the people are very near the point of frustration regarding their expectations about the dialogue and peace in El Salvador, and that holding the meeting in San Salvador would create a climate of heightened expectations, political pressure, and popular mobilization. They concluded that if no results were obtained the people would be frustrated. Those were the two basic arguments of the government delegation.

That position is untenable and ludicrous. To argue that the Salvadoran workers will clash over the dialogue meeting shows bad faith or that the Duarte administration has no grasp of workers' aspirations or of their political awareness and maturity. There may indeed be segments of society that are [words indistinct], but they do want peace and dialogue. The working class would have supported the meeting if San Salvador had been chosen as the site for the meeting. The workers would have participated in it, and they would not have committed the mistake of clashing as a result of that meeting. That argument is preconceived, ill-intentioned, and untenable. The argument that the Salvadoran people are close to frustration in connection with the dialogue is also untenable; it is the reverse. There has been a process of growing political awareness, mobilization, and support among all popular sectors, among broad segments of Salvadoran society. Not only the workers' organizations, but also the political parties, including the moderate right-wing parties, and social organizations of various political and ideological orientation have closed ranks over the past several months to support the resumption of the dialogue and the struggle for peace.

The government's position was totally defensive. This is understandable, because they want to prevent large-scale concentrations of workers, mobilizations, and political pressure at all cost, because they know the workers would make demands on the government, which has done nothing for the people in the 2 years that Duarte has been president. All it has brought is more unemployment, hunger, poverty, economic, social, and political crises, more dependence on the United States, and a dialogue that has been interrupted for almost 2 years The government knows that all the measures it adopts are unpopular. That is why they are afraid and panicky in the face of a popular mobilization. That is the real reason they do not want the dialogue to take place in San Salvador. There is a greater concentration of people and more organization in San Salvador.

[Reporter] The government delegation refused to discuss important topics regarding the dialogue preparations. They only sought agreement on the date and place of the meeting Why did the Duarte delegation refuse to discuss the agenda?

[Samayoa] The agenda is a key factor in the dialogue because it outlines the topics of discussion in the meeting. The Duarte administration knows that its stance on the possible topics for discussion is also untenable and ludicrous. They maintain that they want to discuss the incorporation of the FMLN-FDR into the democratic process. There is no democratic process. There is a situation of duality of power in El Salvador, in which the FMLN holds power through military, popular, territorial pressure. It is ridiculous that the government try to tell the FMLN-FDR that it must turn in its weapons and join a democratic process that does not exist. At present, there is less democracy than ever in El Salvador. By maintaining the position that only that topic be discussed, it is natural that they refuse to discuss other agenda points.

They know that the FMLN-FDR is striving to achieve a political solution to the armed conflict, to attempt to reach peace in El Salvador with justice and dignity. However, the government does not share that goal. At no point has Duarte sought to end the war with peace and dignity. All he wants is to make time for political purposes, putting out false propaganda about the alleged democratic process. Therefore, they refuse to discuss any topic other than the incorporation of the FMLN-FDR into the so-called democratic process. Duarte's envoys were unyielding. They said they were not authorized to discuss the agenda. That is a political position that does not really want peace or discussion of solutions to the conflict in which the Salvadoran people and the FMLN-FDR are engaged. They want to impose a political model on our fronts and on the people in which only the Christian Democrats, the Army, and the Yankees adopt decisions in El Salvador.

We have made it clear that every day we deal sharp blows to the puppet Army of which Napoleon Duarte claims to be commander in chief. How do they intend to achieve at the negotiating table what they have not achieved on the battlefields or by political means? They have never acquired a political and social base of support for their government. Far from it. The little political support they had has been dwindling over the past 2 years. Therefore, the government's stance of refusing to discuss the agenda shows the lack of true goodwill in the Duarte administration to work to find a just resolution to the Salvadoran conflict.

[Reporter] It is quite reasonable to call a truce during the peace meeting. The FMLN has called truces whenever it has held negotiations with the government. How important is a truce for the holding of the third round of talks? Why is the government so adamant in refusing to discuss this? How important is the demilitarization [of the meeting area]?

[Samayoa] The truce is vital to holding a high-level meeting between the government and our fronts. A meeting of that nature cannot be held unless military actions are suspended, at least during the duration of the meetings. It is inconceivable for the government delegation, our companero commanders, and the companeros who head the FDR and who would attend that meeting to move through large sections of the Salvadoran territory [words indistinct] local and foreign reporters who would cover the event. How would the popular sectors, workers organizations, and social groups who want to and should attend the meeting, move amid a climate and state of generalized warfare, in which military actions are taking place throughout the country and on all the highways? It is absurd. The meeting cannot be held under those conditions. That is why our fronts demand a truce during the days of the third round of talks. However, the government, in a new demonstration of its lack of goodwill regarding the dialogue and the participation of the various interest groups in the meeting, has refused to discuss a truce.

To us, the truce is important for two reasons. Basically, it is a security problem for the participants in the meeting, including the government and rebel delegations, for the people who will attend, and for newsmen as well. It also has political implications. A truce would be a demonstation of goodwill by the two parties, proof that they want to create appropriate conditions for the holding of a successful third round of talks. It is also important because it would serve to test the government's and the rebels' true control over their military forces. We have no problem in that regard. All of our military units and commanders immediately respond to the directives of the FMLN General Command. [Words indistinct] totally different. On many occasions the Duarte administration and Duarte personally have made commitments to hold a truce, and the military commanders, particularly those in the east of the nation, fail to abide by those directives. They obstructed a truce last Christmas, the evacuation of our disabled war companeros, and of the mayors who were exchanged last October. They obstructed the visit by Msgr Rivera y Damas [words indistinct], particularly his last visit to Perquin, in early August. Therefore it is a common occurence. The military commanders in the east customarily override the decisions that Duarte is allegedly empowered to adopt.

In refusing to call a truce Duarte is in fact showing that he lacks real power over the military. That is why he does not want to make a commitment on something that everyone, both in El Salvador and abroad, agrees is imperative for holding the dialogue meeting. Duarte's refusal to call a truce and to discuss it shows a lack of goodwill toward the search for peace and the holding of the dialogue meeting. It shows a lack of political competence and of real power over the Army.

They are also attempting to reject the demand for a demilitarized zone. This is essential for the meeting. If the meeting is to take place in Sesori -- and this is still subject to discussion, but let us assume the meeting will be in Sesori or any other comparable place -- the area must be demilitarized. This is a territory in dispute. There have been intense clashes in northern San Miguel [words indistinct] Sesori. The FMLN units permanently move through the Sesori area. The Army also moves through there.

[Samayoa] The FMLN rearguard is nearby. [words indistinct] How can the meeting be held in Sesori unless it is agreed to demilitarize the zone? One thing that could happen -- and this would be extremely dangerous and a grave irresponsibility on the part of the Duarte administration -- is that armed clashes could take place between the FMLN military units and the Armed Forces. That is why we proposed that the area be demilitarized within a radius of perhaps 5 or 10 km. When the La Palma meeting was held, an agreement was reached on delimitarizing the area. [words indistinct] Duarte is going from bad to worse. He had some power at the time of the La Palma meeting regarding this possibility. However, he is placing all kinds of obstacles in the way of the Sesori meeting. He is not creating appropriate conditions to hold the meeting. This also has political implications, because if the area is not demilitarized, and on the contrary, [words indistinct] government Army troops, this would obstruct the mobilization of the popular sectors and workers organizations that want to go to the place of the meeting. They would find roadblocks, perhaps clashes; government forces would intimidate them to discourage them from approaching the site of the meeting. These are political implications [words indistinct] popular participation [word indistinct] Duarte's refusal to demilitarize the area.

[Reporter] The government, through its propaganda, has tried to portray this as if all the efforts to coordinate the third meeting have been arranged. The FDR-FMLN has sustained that these agreements are still subject to discussion, that they are of a temporary nature. Could you explain [words indistinct] this situation to us?

[Samayoa] This is very important. I believe that everyone should clearly understand that Duarte and the delegates he sent to Mexico to meet with the FMLN-FDR never had the power; moreover, were not truly interested in discussing all the problems that should have been discussed to prepare the third round of talks. During the first journey, the first day of the meeting, that is on Wednesday, 20 August, we only worked 3 hours because the government delegation said it had to withdraw for consultations. The 2nd day of the meeting, the same thing happened: We worked only 3 hours for the same reason, and we reached the 3d day of meeting and practically the night of the last day, and we had not been able to reach agreements on any of the proposed points. In the end, the government only showed interest in choosing a place and a date, but with all the irresponsibility in which we [as heard] have been talking, it refused to discuss all the aspects regarding the security during the meeting, the agenda for the meeting, the coordination of a truce, it refused to discuss the demilitarization of the area and also refused to agree on the participation of the several sectors of the national life in this third round of talks.

Thus actually almost everything is still pending agreement. The place and the date are just two among many points and may not be the most important among the points on which we had to agree. This should be absolutely clear, and this has been stated in the report by Msgr Arturo Rivera y Damas: All matters regarding the security of the meeting, the mobilization, travel of the FMLN-FDR delegation to the place of the meeting are still pending. All questions related to the participation of the other sectors are also pending. The FMLN-FDR proposed vigorously, with great emphasis, with much fairness, because it was the people's general desire that there should be observers from the workers organization, observers from the political parties for this meeting. The government refused to agree on this, so this is also pending.

[Samayoa] We believe this is a maneuver they planned from the beginning. That is, they have acted with evil intentions by going to Mexico with only the goal of obtaining an agreement on the location and date, with no intention of discussing the rest of the matters that should have been prepared.

Our people have all the political maturity and consciousness to understand that the FMLN-FDR will not jeopardize the lives of its highest leaders, by surrendering or putting their security in the hands of the government's Armed Forces. We all know that we cannot trust the goodwill of these people to fulfill the agreements. The people also have all the political wisdom and political consciousness to defend the subjects that would be discussed in the third round of talks in case Duarte refused to discuss them in advance. If this happened, we would be going to the dialogue not knowing why we were going there. We would be attending the dialogue without having the subjects that would be discussed, and we would probably be going there to spend half of the time agreeing on what subjects would be discussed in the meeting. This would be absurd.

Moreover, it should be clear to the people that we also proposed that the third round of talks should be a meeting that lasted a minumum of 2 days, but Duarte stubbornly insisted that the meeting should last a maximum of 1 day. Therefore, if the meeting last only 1 day and we are going to spend half of the day discussing the agenda for the meeting, then it would be a failure and the government is to be blamed for this.

We already know that the pending points -- namely, the discussion of the agenada, the discussion of the military truce, the demilitarization of the area, the participation of the political and the social sectors -- are the main points that should have been discussed in a preparatory meeting, and practically all of them are pending for discussion. This is why the agreement on the location and date are not and cannot be definitive. This is why, in Msgr Rivera y Damas' report of the meeting, it is stated that the location and date are subject to modifications, obviously, independent of whether or not an agreement is reached on all the pending points. They are pending because the government did not want to discuss them. This is why a second preparatory meeting has been scheduled, to try to reach an agreement on all the pending points. Obviously, needless to say, in case we do not reach an agreement on all the pending points [words indistinct] to the celebration of the third meeting.

[Reporter] There was a [words indistinct] in this preparatory meeting held in Mexico which surprised our people, which was the participation of Mr Soriano, a member of the (?unions). Could you tell us, Companero Samayoa, what was Soriano's participation all about, and what was his stand during the meeting?

[Samayoa] Duarte sent MR Soriano to Mexico as a member of his delegation. He sent us a (?mockery) to make us believe that in his way he was permitting the participation of workers and their organizations in the dialogue. This was a lie because this man, as the workers organizations have publicly stated in El Salvador, does not represent the working class or the people's struggle and aspirations. Everyone know the ties of Mr Soriano with the Institute for the Development of Free Unionism, one of the worst institutions of Yankee imperialism. We all know that this institute has played an ill-fated role in its task to weaken the labor organizations and infiltrate and divide the workers' struggle. Mr Soriano is very close to the imperialist instrument: the counterinsurgency struggle.

The workers organizations [words indistinct] reported this when it was announced that Soriano was to be a member of Duarte's delegation to Mexico.

From the very beginning of the meeting in Mexico, the FMLN-FDR questioned this gentleman's presence in the meeting. To us, it was obvious that the government delegation had to be comprised of government officials who had the authority to enter into agreements on behalf of the government just as the FMLN-FDR representatives had to enter into agreements on behalf of our (?fronts') leadership. As far as I know, Mr Soriano is no government official and, therefore, he had nothing to do in that meeting as a government delegate.

However, it became evident that Mr Soriano and probably the clique he belongs to and represents are linked with and help -- a link and cooperation that is now barefaced and was unmasked -- the counterinsurgency plans of U.S. imperialism and Duarte himself.

Now, what was the nature of this man's participation? They tried to use him so that at a certain moment in the meeting he would speak on behalf of the Salvadoran workers. They tried to use him to argue against the FMLN-FDR demand to hold the meeting in San Salvador. They tried to use him to argue against the FMLN-FDR demand concerning the participation of the people's sectors. Regarding this issue, Soriano played an ill-fated role which became known to all workers because Soriano was used to defend Duarte's position that the workers organizations and all the country's political and social sectors must not participate in the dialogue. In other words, he played a role that is completely opposed to the just and legitimate aspiration and demand of all the people, which is to participate in the dialogue process and in the process to seek peace.

Mr Soriano was unmasked. His ties have been established. We do not think he can continue to claim that he represents the worker's rights. Napoleon Duarte's maneuver was also unmasked.

[Reporter] You have talked about the people's participation during this interview. What message can you send to our people [words indistinct]?

[Samoyoa] The message to our people is that we must intensify the political struggle. But it must be a fighting [combativa] political struggle to demand the participation of all the workers and of all the people in the dialogue process, and, particularly, the participation of [words indistinct] El Salvador in the third dialogue. It is very important that the workers organizations send observers to the meeting so they can directly witness the political [words indistinct] positions of the Duarte government and the political [words indistinct] of the FMLN-FDR.

Therefore, all the workers and the people can clearly identify who is seeking peace with justice and dignity [words indistinct] and who is obstructing the peace process.

This is a struggle that must be intensified. [Words indistinct] for several weeks and publicly. But this struggle must be intensified now to make Duarte accept the workers' participation, which is legitimate. All the people must know that the FMLN-FDR will continue to fight to make the participation of all sectors a reality.

In addition, the people must intensify the political struggle to demand that the Duarte Government implement the military truce and demilitarization of the area where the meeting must be held [words indistinct] by Duarte's Armed Forces. The people must also demand the publication and discussion of the agenda that will be studied at the dialogue meeting. [Words indistinct] of general interest. Everyone must know what topics will be discussed in the third dialogue meeting. After knowing the topics to be discussed, the people can reach their own conclusions about the political views. The people can and must demand that the Duarte government [words indistinct] FMLN-FDR those topics that can lead to a just political solution and a peace with justice and dignity for all the people.

This is the message: Let's increase the combative struggle in all areas and demand that the Duarte regime take the dialogue seriously, discuss all the pending topics, made commitments concerning the participation of all the sectors in the dialogue, make commitments concerning the security that must be agreed upon for this meeting, and make the commitment to discuss, at the third dialogue the realistic and just way to lead the process toward the search for peace.

JORGE VILLACORTA REVIEWS BASES OF DIALOGUE

PA290420 (Clandestine) Radio Venceremos in Spanish to El Salvador 0000 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Interview with Jorge Villacorta, member of the FDR-FMLN delegation to meeting with government delegation in Mexico City, by unidentified reporter; date and place not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Reporter] It can be said that the preparatory meeting for the third dialogue lasted too long in comparison with its results. Can you give us the reason for this?

[Villacorta] Actually, we feel that the reason for the excessive length was in part that these people lacked a real [word indistinct] spirit of responsibility. I remember they were late the 1st day and we did not begin the meeting until 1700 and worked only 3 hours. We had to adjourn it at 2000 to [word indistinct] when we had just begun discussing formal aspects such as [word indistinct]. However, the main element was that. [Words indistinct] We had agreed that [word indistinct] news conference the next day. They told us they would not participate in the news conference because this was something the ambassador should do. They [words indistinct] arriving late at the meeting. The result was that we worked only 3 hours and 15 minutes again. In fact, the first 2 days should have presumably represented 16 hours ot two 8-hour shifts. In practice, these 2 days represented only 6 hours and 15 minutues of work.

The last day [words indistinct] 1300 in the afternoon, when they had a position already. The suspension on the 2d day was strictly for consultations. That is, one can surmise that these people had very little leeway to make decisions. They wanted to reduce the agreements and actually expressed surprise at the aspects we [words indistinct]. Our proposal called for discussing five major areas, which included security, the agenda, participants in the dialogue, and formalities, such as the place and date as well as the participation of the press and the remaining social forces. The said they were surprised and we found this strange because this was not our first meeting. We were seeking agreement on a third meeting. Consequently, this same [words indistinct] to agree to hold the meetings in La Palma and Ayagualo. Therefore, they could not claim to be surprised. At the bottom of this there was weakness on the part of the government. [Words indistinct] its inability to conclude agreements.

[Reporter] What was the position of the government and the FDR-FMLN during the discussions to select the venue of the meeting?

[Villacorta] The real objectives of the dialogue began to fall into focus at this stage. The government wants to keep the dialogue removed from public knowledge and devoid of participation by the various sectors. Their objective is to hold the dialogue in an isolated place. Why? They said it very clearly in July -- so the dialogue is not surrounded by a spectacular atmosphere -- which they call a show -- the spectacular atmosphere that it requires. The possibility that the national sectors will know what is being discussed frightens and terrifies them. It worries them to the extreme to have to reach agreements in front of witnesses or observers who can point out later that they are not fulfilling the agreements.

Their first objective is to hold the dialogue at a location that is totally inaccessible to the people. Their second objective is to hold it in a (?militarized) area, in an area under their absolute control so that, as they put it, the security of our leaders will be completely under the Army's control. The security is a problem for us as forces [words indistinct] out leaders [words indistinct]. They want to hold the meeting in a totally controlled and militarized place. That is why they have rejected the proposals to hold it in San Miguel (?or) Goteras as (?they) had suggested. Our proposal, instead, calls for holding it in wide open places where the people can be present and learn of our proposals. This was San Salvador. We insisted on San Salvador and they rejected all proposals we made with regard to San Salvador.

In view of this, we then suggested the possibility of holding it in eastern Salvador, in the area of Sesori, because [words indistinct] the security aspect even though it meant that the participation aspect would be sacrificed somewhat. In this sense, Sesori is located in an area where there is a permanent [word indistinct] of FMLN fighters. There is constant fighting in that area and it has an (?immediate) rearguard. The town is not under military control. It was not under military control at that moment. Therefore, this allows our forces to be present there and to provide (appropriate) security to out leaders. In other words [words indistinct] presence of the FMLN's forces. This is the other aspect we took into account.

We also feel that mechanisms could be established for better communications, for a better possibility of developing [words indistinct] the FMLN definitely insists on the indispensable principle of meeting the demand made by various sectors of the community. They want to participate in the dialogue as observers. We are going to insist on this, because it is something which different sectors are seeking. We definitely believe it will be beneficial to the dialogue, to the agreements, and to see that the agreements are complied with by the government, which usually does not live up to its commitments. For this reason we feel that to overcome some communication problems, we must have observers.

We also feel that it is necessary to have a truce and the demilitarization of the zone. To militarize the xone will only jeopardize the third round of talks. Sesori was accepted because of the conditions it offered. It was a demilitarized zone [words indistinct] I repeat, to militarize the zone and to have [words indistinct], which is what they are doing, is to destroy the few favorable conditions for the dialogue.

We must not forget that the site where the dialogue will be held is not definite yet; it could be changed.

[Reporter] Soriano was among the members of the commission who participated in the preparatory meeting in Mexico City. Soriano is a member of the Trade Unions Federation of Construction, Transportation, and Related Industries, Fesinconstrans, and of the National Union of Christian Workers, UNOC. Could you tell us under what conditions did he participate in the meeting?

[Villacorta] There were some contradictions regarding his participation. We wanted to know under what condition was he participating. [Culture and Communications Minister Julio Adolfo] Rey Prendes said that they were member of a delegation representing the president of the Republic, and that he chose the members of the delegation. Therefore, he had been sent by the president of the Republic. When he was given the floor, Soriano said he had been sent by the labor organizations he represented. Here, we had the first contradiction. He was contradicting what the head of the official Salvadoran delegation had said. According to what he said there, he was not Duarte's representative, but of the [words indistinct].

He participated a couple of times when [words indistinct]. Definitely, Soriano's participation was mainly that of an observer, invited by the government. There is an interesting aspect to this. The government with the presence of Soriano was clearly indicating the need for various sectors to participate in the dialogue. Of course, he was there because the president invited him, and this is itself is not favorable to him. Instead, it disqualifies him as a workers representative. I think this is an aspect on which we must insist, the need to have observers. Soriano's presence has confirmed it. Unfortunately, his participation was somewhat dubious, because he was a labor representative appointed by Duarte, to serve as an observer, but most probably at the service of the government. His participation was very poor. However, if it serves to stress the need to have observers during the dialogue, this could be the only positive aspect of his participation.

[Reporter] Companero Jorge Villacorta, what is your message to the people, now that they are demanding their right to have a just peace?

[Villacorta] We must be alert, because during the preparatory meeting, it was obvious that Duarte's regime has limited space to make agreements for a true negotiated political resolution of the conflict. Therefore, it is indispensable to be on the alert, to insist on a national dialogue to exert pressure on the government. We do not want to hear such simpleton demands asking us to put down our arms and to join an alleged democratic life. Such a demand is absurd and unrealistic. I insist that we must pressure for a negotiated political resolution of the conflict, which is the only alternative.

We have to be alert, because the government is using the dialogue as a maneuver, as another tactical move, but with no real desire to hold a dialogue. This has been shown in many ways, with its propaganda on the location where the dialogue is going to be held. What makes things worse is that the place is being militarized. This is definite and clear proof that there is no real desire to reach agreements and significant policies during the dialogue.

However, I think that what is most important is for the people to be on the alert to demand their participation, because the only real guarantee of advancing toward a negotiated political solution is the presence and participation of the different sectors of our society, disregarding their social and economic level and their ideological beliefs. What is important is to know who wants peace. Those who want peace should unite.

What we must insist on is that the agenda includes issues which allow for real progress for a political resolution. The people cannot simply accept the discussion of human rights. It is important, but more important is to reach political agreements and political solutions to the conflict. In this regard, only the various social sectors can make demands through real participation as observers in the dialogue.

ICJ JURISDICTION IN NUCARAGUAN SUIT CHALLENGED

PA301724 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 1531 GMT 30 Aug 86

[Text] Tegucigalpa, 30 Aug (ACAN-EFE) -- The Honduran Government has informed the International Court of Justice [ICJ], headquartered in The Hague, Netherlands, that it will challenge the court's jurisdiction in a preliminary action filed by Nicaragua. Foreign Minister Carlos Lopez Contreras traveled to The Hague to tell the ICJ that, based on its declaration of 22 May 1986, his government has decided not to recognize the court's jurisdiction on such matters as the Nicaraguan suit.

Nicaragua filed suit against Honduras in late July on the grounds that it is violating international law by allowing counterrevolutionaries to maintain camps in its territory with support from the United States.

Lopez Contreras also tole the international judges that Honduras rejects the charges and appointed Mario Carias Zapata, Honduran ambassador to The Hague, as its representative before the court.

Nicaragua filed the suit 3 weeks after the ICJ ruled in its favor in a similar suit against the United States.

AGREEMENT WITH NICARAGUA SETS PAYMENT CONDITIONS

PA021930 Tegucigalpa EL HERALDO in Spanish 1 Sep 86 p 3

[Text] On 28 August the governments of Honduras and Nicaragua signed an agreement at the Office of the Director of the Honduran Central Bank to acknowledge and pay debts.

Jaime Valdivia Arguello, Nicaraguan Central Bank vice president, and Gonzalo Carias Pineda, Honduran Central Bank president, participated in the signing.

Under this agreement, the Nicaraguan Central Bank acknowledges owing Honduras $58.7 million from debts involving liquidations in the Central American Compensation Chamber, as well as other debts.

The conditions for the payment of such debts specify a repayment period of 10 years, with at grace period of 3 years, during which interest will be capitalized under the same conditions agreed on for the total debt.

Amortizations will be made at the end of each year for $7 million, the 4th and 5th years for $8 million, the 6th and 7th years for $9 million, and the amortization for the 8th and 9th years and the balance plus interest corresponding to the previously mentioned payments will be made at the end of the 10th year. The Libor [London interbank offered rate] will be applied to a 6-month period beginning with the payment plus 1 and 1/2 percent per year.

The signing of the renegotiation agreement with Nicaragua is important to Honduras because it successfully documented a portion of the debt that was still pending. It also refinanced the portion that was already documented.

CONTRAS MAKING 'SPY FLIGHTS' INTO COUNTRY

PA300010 Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 29 Aug 86 p 5

[Text] The establishment of counter revolutionary groups in Costa Rican territory near the Nicaraguan border is being accompanied by spy flights from Costa Rica which carry out reconnaissance and supply missions.

These flights, which violate our airspace, have been carried out continuously since May. They cover the areas of Rio San Juan, Nueva Guinea, and Bluefields.

In May and June, helicopters from Costa Rica overflew the border sectors of La Penca and La Pinuela -- the latter is located in the area of central Zelaya.

Similarly, a C-130 plane was detected in the area of El Chile Creek, in Nueva Guinea.

Subsequent to that, two Cessna planes overflew in a threatening manner the areas of San Miguelito and San Carlos, both located in the special zone of Rio San Juan.

Finally, reports indicate that four plans of unknown type overflew Bluefields, and then headed into Nicaraguan territory.

The reports reveal that these are reconnaissance flights and supply missions for the contra forces located in the interior of the country, which have been hit hard by the EPS in the last few months.

FRENCH EMBASSY DENIES MEDIA ACCESS TO BOFILL

FL301610 Bridgetown CANA in English 1440 GMT 30 Aug 86

[Text] Havana, Aug 30, CANA-REUTER -- The French Embassy has refused journalists access to Cuban dissident Ricardo Bofill, who entered the embassy compound Wednesday and refuses to leave. The 52-year-old former Havana University philosophy professor, who has spent almost a decade in jail since 1968, has been told he may not emigrate and join his wife in Miami.

Embassy officials have turned down requests by foreign journalists for interviews with Bofill and, according to a French source, have banned him from telephoning journalists.

In Paris, a French Foreign Ministry statement confirmed that Bofill was refusing to leave. In April, 1983, Bofill refused for several hours to leave the French Embassy but did so voluntarily after Cuban assurances that he would not be jailed, A French diplomat in Havana said.

According to a MIAMI HERALD interview with Bofill's wife in 1983, Bofil was a member of the Cuban Communist Party until 1967 when he was arrested for membership of an Anti-Castro splinter group. She said he served seven and a half years in jail.

A Western diplomatic source said Bofill was jailed in 1968 and released in 1974. He was detained again in 1980 and released in 1982. Since then he had periodically visited foreign journalists and western embassies, especially the French and Spanish. In December, 1983, Bofill was arrested after giving a lengthy interview to two French reporters who were expelled.

Diplomats in Havana said French President Francois Mitterrand has interceded on Bofill's behalf with Cuban President Fidel Castro.

Western diplomats believe the French Government will follow a course of quiet diplomacy to convince the Cuban Government to allow Bofill to leave.

They said the incident could dampen the effects of Castro's decision, after an appeal from [words indistinct].

Ambassador Returns; No Comment

PA311545 Paris AFP in Spanish 1417 GMT 31 Aug 86

[Text] Havana, 31 Aug (AFP) -- French Ambassador to Cuba Jean-Luis Marfaing cut short his vacation and returned to Havana on Saturday night.

When asked this morning by AFP, the ambassadsor did not make any comments on the fact that Cuban intellectual dissident Ricardo Bofill Pages, 52, has been at the embassy since Wednesday.

According to observers, Marfaing's return confirms two things: Negotiations are being conducted with the Cuban Government and Paris considers the situation serious.

Both France and Cuba have observed total official silence for 4 days concerning the reasons and possible demands by Bofill, who is not authorized to contact the press.

Only two of his close associates stated he wishes to call attention to the human rights situation in his country and try to obtain authorization for him, and possibly other persons, to leave Cuba.

President Fidel Castro is in Harare, Zimbabwe, to attend the summit of the Nonaligned Movement.

CYC CALLS FOR STRONGER REGIONAL COOPERATION

FL011714 Bridgetown CANA in English 2106 GMT 30 Aug 86

[Text] Roseau, Dominica, Aug 30, CANA -- The Fourth Caribbean Youth Conference (CYC) has ended here with a call for the strengthening of regional cooperation and unity. Fifty young politicians from 25 moderate parties of 16 regional countries attended the one week meeting, centered around the theme, united action for the preservation of Caribbean peace and democracy.

One of a number of resolutions passed by the delegates called on the Caribbean Community (Caricom) to support the recent call by the president of the Caribbean Development Bank (CDB) William Demas urging that more positive steps be taken towards regional integration. The CYC considered Demas' call important and timely, and called on Caricom to strengthen the existing regional institutions, and embark upon initiatives to strengthen and promote unity and cooperation in the Caribbean.

The host country's prime minister, Eugenia Charles, commenting to reporters on the significance of the CYC meeting, said yesterday:

"I believe that the conferences are perhaps the best thing for getting the Caribbean together. We can sit down and talk about trade a million times, but it's young people meeting like that, exchanging ideas, understanding their differences, and getting to know to live the differences that is going to help us all together."

The CYC stressed the need for peace and security in the Caribbean, where individual countries have limitless resources. The conference noted that not all regional countries are committed to the Regional Security System (RSS) and called on the heads of all Carribbean governments to commit themselves to the system. The RSS is an arrangement between independent countries of the Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States (OECS) and Barbados for cooperation in coast guard and specified military activity.

Another resolution passed by the CYC meeting urged members of Caricom to support the idea of a Caricom Human Rights treaty.

The meeting saw the drug problem in the region as being dangerous to health, contributing to crime, detrimental to the regions present-day generation, and a threat to peace and democracy in the region. In three separate resolutions on the question of drugs, the conference urged regional governments to adopt anti-drug trafficking measures, while respecting individual rights to basic justice and human rights, to increase the penalty on those caught in the act of drug trafficking, and to take firm action towards educating the youth on the dangers of drugs, while making adequate provision for the rehabilitation of those affected by the use of drugs. The CYC called for the implemetation of drug legislation, and the enforcement of tighter security to combat the problem. The young politicians want their governments to cooperate with each other and the United States in the war on illegal drugs, while respecting the sovereignty of each other states.

Other resolutions passed ask for improvements in the level of modern technology in the region's economic and educational system, and cooperation by regional governments to ease the problem of illegal immigration in the Caribbean, through cooperation by governments in the repatriation of their nationals.

The conference urged lending agencies, including the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank, to soften the terms and conditions of loans so as to ease the economic burden these conditions impose on developing countries within the region. The CYC also called for greater efforts towards the eradication of apartheid in South Africa.

HAITI

PIERRE CLAIMS EXTRADITION 'DEATH SENTENCE'

FL292258 Bridgetown CANA in English 2156 GMT 29 Aug 86

[Text] Brasilia, Aug 29 (CANA-REUTER) -- Former Port-au-Prince Chief of Police Colonel Albert Pierre today told a Brazilian supreme court judge his extradition to Haiti would be like sentencing him to death.

Pierre, 51, police chief under former president-for-life Jean Claude "Baby Doc" Duvalier, denied charges of torture and murder contained in an extradition request by Haiti's interim government. If I am sent back home I will not be given a chance to defend myself, he said. My extradition to Haiti is the same as a death sentence.

Pierre, elegantly dressed in a blue suit, was interrogated for the first time by the supreme court since his arrival in Brazil on February 23. Speaking through an interpreter, he said: My functions as a military and police chief between 1981 and 1985 had no connection with the so-called Tonton Macoute, a paramilitary police created during the rule of Jean Claude's father Francois. I am no chief, much less a member of the Tonton Macoute. I am not the murderer or torturer the new government of Haiti is trying to portray me as in the eyes of the Brazilian justice and world opinion, Pierre said.

The Haitian government formalized its request for Pierre's extradition in June. He came to Brazil with his wife and fellow officer Gener Cotin after Duvalier fled the country on February 7 after a wave of civilian protest. In March he was taken under preventive custody while his country's government prepared a formal extradition request. The Haitian government charged Pierre with the murder and torture of two members of the military arrested by the Port-au-Prince police in 1982 and of a couple arrested for alleged subversive acts.

He explained that the two military men and the couple were taken in for questioning in April 1982 suspected of taking part in a conspiracy against the government. They were all released unhurt shortly after, Pierre said. It was only recently, when Haiti requested my extradition, that I learned that the military men had died and that the couple was tortured, he added. He said his relationship with Duvalier had deteriorated well before the dictator was overthrown and that he was removed from his functions on December 30 of last year. He said he received death threats and was living in reclusion since January until the day he sought political asylum at the Brazilian embassy on February 10, disguised as a woman, "or else I could have been lynched by my enemies."

When a Haitian jury sentenced former security chief Luc Desyr to death last month, a spokeswoman for the Brazilian Justice Ministry said Pierre would not be extradited if there were any chance he could receive a similar penalty. Brazil's extradition policy does not allow for people to face in the requesting country any sentence which does not exist under the Braizilian criminal law. There is no death penalty or life imprisonment in Brazil. The harshest sentence set by Brazilian law is 30 years in jail. My enemies are now in the government. They have requested by extradition to kill me, Pierre said. A decision on the extradition request is likely to be taken in September, an attorney present at the interrogation said.

SENATE REJECTS RESUMPTION OF UK TRADE TIES

HK040426 Hong Kong AFP in English 0421 GMT 4 Sep 86

[Text] Buenos Aires, Sept 4 (AFP) -- Argentina's Senate urged the government Wednesday night not to resume trade links with Britain, broken off with diplomatic relations in the wake of the war the two countries fought in 1982 over the Falkland Islands (Malvinas).

It approved a plea against trading directly with Britain which was introduced by a senator from the ruling Radical Party and backed overwhelmingly by the Justice Party, Argentina's second biggest party.

All trade between the two countries since the war has been conducted through third parties. But Britain, while refusing to discuss the sovereignty of the islands, which Argentina claims, has said it is ready to resume direct economic ties.

Buenos Aires has so far rejected such ties unless there are talks on "all the problems" between the two countries over the Falklands.

MINISTER SOURROUILLE ADDRESSES ECONOMIC ISSUES

PY301859 Buenos Aires Domestic Service in Spanish 0002 GMT 30 Aug 86

[Speech to the nation delivered by Economy Minister Juan Sourrouille on 29 August from the Economy Ministry in Buenos Aires -- recorded]

[Excerpts] Good evening. I am addressing you tonight to discuss something that concerns all of us: The recent increase in the inflation rate.

The last consumer price index for the month of July recorded -- as you all know -- an increase of 6.8 percent. And, everything leads us to believe that the August consumer price index will be even higher. This situation has caused understandable concern among the people, because after many years they are beginning to appreciate the benefits of economic stability.

This increase in the cost of living is bad news for you and also for us. You may even wonder if we are on the verge of experiencing a new inflationary escalade. I am certain that very few people would be happy about that. Through long and bitter experience, we have learned that inflation implies a deterioration of the well-being of all, encourages unproductive speculation, and impedes us from overcoming stagnation or achieving economic growth.

The fact that the Argentine people are not indifferent to rising inflation is a postive political sign. It means we Argentines do not want to return to being a frustrated country, as in the past. This must be justly praised. It is easier to find solutions when there is a willingness to overcome difficulties.

The Economy Ministry has been evaluating the situation calmly. This has always been our work method, because we are aware of our responsibility and of the technical resources available. We have avoided reckless actions and simple answers to complex problems -- such as that of inflation -- which encompasses many factors.

Today, I want to inform you of our evaluation so that together we may consider what has happened and define those measures that must be implemented to counter the current inflationary outbreak.

When we implemented the Austral Plan, we knew the inflation problem in Argentina was not caused by a single factor and that it had to be dealt with on several fronts. This led to the enforcement of the economic stabilization policy that, on the one hand, allowed us to achieve a sharp decrease in price increases and, on the other hand, to overcome the economic recession and to achieve a gradual recovery in production. In order to achieve these results, we mounted a two-pronged attack: one against inertial inflation and another against the imbalance of public finances and the monetary disorder that imbalance entails. [passage omitted]

With firm and clear ideas, the government is now engaged in another round of the foreign debt renegotiations. This is the first time we are going to negotiate without having arrears or pressure. This will permit us to study our requirements carefully and to justify our requests properly. We are no longer discussing an emergency program, but an integrated development plan.

The government has established three principles as the basis for negotiation. Argentina is now prepared to continue its efforts, but these must be shared by other interested parties. The growth of the economy is not negotiable, because it is a need and a right of the Argentine people and the only way out of the debt morass. Argentina will continue to discuss and explain the foreign debt issue at the political level and will continue to emphasize that the normalization of the external sector is linked to the implementation of more just and equitable financial and commercial policies by the creditor countries. The creditor governments will be asked for support through the multiannual refinancing of the matured debts with an official guarantee, and the granting of new credits for the financing of Argentine imports.

The commercial banks will be asked for a triple contribution to our efforts. First, a substantial reduction in the rates they charged above the cost of funds; second, the long-range refinancing of all the matured public foreign debt and government guaranteed foreign debt of the private sector; and third, new loans in accordance with the needs of growth and the reorganization of the productive structure. To do this, it will also be necessary to ask for the support of the World Bank and the IDB.

In all, the actions implemented since the enforcement of the Austral Plan have allowed us to control the performance of the public and external sectors. Of course, this does not mean we should not continue to work to change this short-term control for a more permanent control compatible with long-term equilibrium.

In the public sector, the recovery of the level of investments and the greater control of expenditures through the restructuring of salaries and employment, together with an improvement in the efficiency of companies, are still to be achieved. The privatization draft law, which is ready and will be signed by the president next week, is a measure aimed at redefining the role of the state. [passage omitted]

We must admit, however, that in the last few months the rate of monetary expansion has accelerated beyond the capacity of the monetary demand to absorb it. This occurred at a time when the mechanisms of rediscount and legal reserves proved to be ineffective to transfer funds from one sector to another. This also became a source of the quasi-fiscal deficit in the Central Bank accounts.

Since March, the monetary policy has become passive with regard to the increase in prices and salaries. Therefore, the present inflationary outbreak has not been influenced by the situation of public finances or of foreign accounts. In fact, the more important factors that affected the inflationary outbreak were the problems concerning food supply and the increase in prices and salaries brought on by the loosening of the freeze policy, the automatic adjustment of the exchange rate, and the implementation of a not-too-stringent monetary policy.

Based on this diagnosis, we can learn several things for future economic policy. As we have said before, the fiscal accounts must be tightened up as a necessary precondition, although an insufficient one, to halt inflation. Of course, we must firmly continue this practive in order to achieve a more permanent balance, but this will not be enough to halt the increase in prices.

In the second place, we must also improve the food supply. Price controls are insufficient to hold down the price of food and family-basket items and, therefore, we have to strengthen the supply side. The food supply today is considerably better than that of the same time last year because severely depressed prices of last year have improved considerably. Despite the fact that it has experienced many great difficulties, the Domestic Trade Secretariat has been able to implement an increasingly effective method of importing food so as to assure a continuous supply during critical months of the year. These emergency imports will be reinforced by providing incentives to local suppliers. In fact, our country should be an important exporter in view of its natural ability to produce food. [passage omitted]

Third, what we have learned from the experience of easing the price freeze is that in an economy poorly integrated with foreign markets, allowing the companies and the labor unions to set product prices and salaries tends to exert strong pressure over the stabilization policy. This is why it is necessary for the state to intervene and regulate prices and salaries, and to prevent excesses.

We will impose these regulations in order to encourage responsible behavior among the different sectors. This is why we have decided to respect the agreements signed in the last few weeks between the labor unions and companies.

Even though we are aware of the high cost of the recent biannual agreements and their adjustment clauses, we are willing to respect them for the sake of the common effort by all Argentines to overcome the current emergency.

It is then foreseeable that in the fourth quarter of the year, nominal monthly salary increases of 3 to 4 percent will be granted with variations in keeping with each particular agreement. Given our official commitment, we believe that it is necessary to insist that the different sectors must not fall back into the formal or informal practice of salaries indexation.

As was observed during 1984 and during the first half of 1985, salary indexation tended only to accelerate inflation, since the rest of the economic factors tended to level off rapidly. As a result, real salaries and production levels dropped. This is why, despite the problems that may appear, it is indispensable to comply with the existing salary agreements instead of correcting them through different adjustment formulas.

Regarding wholesale prices, we have decided to adopt an active policy, modifying the criteria we have followed during the first half of the year. During that time prices were treated passively, left to adjust themselves to the increases of consumer prices and costs. We have now decided that administered industrial prices will be allowed to increase by 3 percent in September and by smaller percentages during the 4th quarter of the year until the rate of increase reaches 2 percent in December.

Identical criteria will be applied to the public companies' tariffs, save for a few cases. Regarding the exchange rate, after a 3 percent adjustment, we will continue with our policy of implementing small and periodic increases in order to maintain our competitiveness on the international market.

Finally, the Central Bank has adopted measures to firmly control the money base. This will slow down the internally generated growth of money supply considerably. Considering the foreseen reduction of the inflation rate, we have decided to reduce regulated bank interest rates on deposits to 4.5 percent monthly and the bank lending interest rates to 6 percent per month. These regulated interest rates will be continually adjusted in keeping with changes within the free financial market. In the context of a restricted monetary expansion, free interest rates should decline as the economic agents gain confidence in the implementation of the announced policies.

These policies are generally aimed at gaining quick control over cost increases and the aggregate demand to give a new and firm impetus to the struggle we are conducting against inflation. The 6.8 percent increase in the consumer price index last July and the greater increases that will probably occur at the end of this month are a warning for everyone. The economic policy decisions we have made are aimed at defending the efforts made and consolidating stability and growth. Our goal is to gradually overcome the emergenices with anti-imflationary measures and at the same time give impetus to the new direction of the economic process.

I have pointed out in this speech that many of the current problems are the result of the poor integration of our economy with the world. Our main link abroad -- the agricultural sector -- is suffering the consequences of the commercial war unleashed in the northern hemisphere. The government has tried to support farmers and will continue to do so, but the government believes it is also necessary to change the nature of our closed economy, because this has negative effects on internal competitiveness and export capacity.

The measures recently implemented by the Foreign Industry and Trade Secretariat are aimed at that necessary change. The industrial exports drive recently approved is the beginning of a structural modernization reform for Argentine industry, and higher productivity, and effective integration with international markets. By stimulating the competitiveness of national production at international prices, we are making a significant contribution toward solving the inflation problem. [passage omitted]

RELATIONS WITH ARGENTINA STRAINED OVER GAS SALES

PY031727 La Paz La Red Panamericana in Spanish 1130 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Text] According to the latest issue of ACTUALIDAD BOLIVIANA CONFIDENTIAL, which is directed by Hugo Gonzalez Rioja, the traditionally good Bolivian-Argentine relations are about to break, and this would have a negative impact on our country.

This magazine notes the negotiations on the new price of Bolivian gas sold to Argentina must start in November, and that Argentina plans to lower the present price -- which is based on political reasoning -- from $3.70 per barrel to $2.20 per barrel. In view of this, Bolivia will lose about $100 million.

The situation has been brought about because the Bolivian Government authorities have not yet made a decision on the application of the present Argentina payment -- which totals $200 million --- for the purchase of Argentina merchandise and for Argentine projects in Bolivia. Thus far, Bolivia has received $130 million in cash.

The two countries reportedly are experiencing tense relations because the Argentine ambassador to Bolivia, Gaspar Tanoada, has departed Bolivia without previously holding talks with the government in view of the apathy shown by the Bolivian ministers in charge of the sector. It is taken for granted that the Argentine ambassador will return in view of the recent statement by the Bolivian finance minister, who reportedly said Bolivia will not open any letters of credit so as not to increase its foreign debt.

It the problem of Argentine exports is not solved, the Argentine Government will undertake legal proceedings to nullify the gas agreements.

NAVY CARRIES OUT OWN NUCLEAR RESEARCH PROGRAM

PY270316 Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 23 Aug 86 p 4

[Text] The Brazilian Armed Forces are carrying out a nuclear research program which parallels the government program, based on a 1975 agreement with the FRG. By 1994, the Brazilian Navy expects to test the prototype of a small nuclear reactor called "critical reactor" [reator critico], which will serve as a model for a "compact reactor" that will be the propelling unit of the first Brazilian nuclear submarine. This submarine is expected to be built by the second half of the 1990's.

Part of the machinery to build and operate this test reactor is being designed in the Nuclear Engineering Institute [IEN], linked to the National Commission for Nuclear Energy [NEN], and located on the campus of the Rio de Janeiro Federal University [UFR] on Fundao Island, north of Rio de Janeiro. The IEN is cooperating with the so-called "instrumentation stage" of the project. The hull of the first Brazilian nuclear submarine is being studied by the Navy and the Nuclebras heavy equipment corporation, [NUCLEP], a Nuclebras subsidiary in charge of the design and building of the heavy components of the Brazilian nuclear reactors.

The Brazilian Aeronautics Ministry is also studying the possibility of building a more sophisticated reactor known as a "fast breeder" [in English] or a "regenerator reactor" [reator regenerador], which continues working after consuming its initial fuel. The Aeronautics Ministry projects are being developed at the Advanced Studies Institute [IEAV] of the Aerospace Technology Center [CTA] in Sao Jose dos Campos [97 km northwest of Sao Paulo]. The Navy projects are being developed at the Institute for Nuclear and Energy Reserach [IPEN], also linked to the CNEN, and at the IEN.

Both the Navy and Aeronautics Ministers are carrying out research to enrich uranium--that is, to separate uranium isotopes, U-235 and U-238, (number of protons ad neutrons of the atomic nucleus) to produce plutonium--which is a necessary element for nuclear fission. The Navy and the Aeronautics Ministers concentrated on the uranium-enrichment process through the use of laser beams, which "excite" and modify the original structure of natural uranium. A nuclear engineer, who served on the commission created by President Sarney to re-evaluate the Brazilian nuclear program, became familiar with the uranium-enrichment research carried out at the IEAV by the Brazilian Air Force [FAB].

FOLHA DE SAO PAULO also learned that the FAB is working on plans for a linear accelerator of particles [acelerador linear de particulas] to establish measures for nuclear parameters. For at least 5 years, all this research has been headed by Brigadier General Hugo de Oliveira Piva, former IEAV director. Meanwhile, the nuclear research of the Army Technological Center [CETEX], is considerably behind schedule.

The test reactor developed by the Navy is the result of 4 years of research which began after a team from the Navy Research Center (formerly the Navy Research Institute, which works on Governador Island in Rio De Janeiro) went to work at the Nuclear Research Institute. The project has already been approved by the CNEN, and the security of all the works to develop the propelling system of the first Brazilian nuclear submarine is bring supervised by the Naval Intelligence Center [Cenimar], headquartered in Brasilia.

The reactor -- which is actually a prototype -- must be tested on land in 8 years. It will serve as a model for the so-called "compact reactor," the size of which will depend on the size of the nuclear submarine. Initial calculations estimate that the submarine will be 70 meters long and will deplace 2,500 tons of water at surface and 2,700 tons underwater. It will be a small-sized nuclear submarine, comparable to the smallest in its category built in France.

It is thought that the "compact reactor" will be aided by diesel motors or gas turbines, like the system used by the same sort of vessels in the French and Soviet Navies. The so-called conventional motors give the nuclear submarine's crew a greater degree of safety, mainly during submersion and if there is a problem with the reactor.

The Navy intends to design its nuclear submarine based on the building experience of a conventional German submarine: the IKL-209-1400. The first of these ships is being built in the FRG, and its construction is being followed by a group of Brazilian Naval engineers. Three other units will be produced in the Rio de Janeiro Navy shipyard.

FOLHA DE SAO PAULO found out the Brazilian Navy is not satisfied with the German IKL construction because it is not respecting the construction technology of the IKL-209-1400, to the extent expected by the former government Naval authorities, who signed the contract with the Germans. This observation was raised to the FRG Defense Minister Manfred Worner, (an airplane pilot) who visited Rio de Janeiro, Brasilia, and Sao Paulo about 3 months ago, but no positive results were obtained. Worner maintained that his government could not intervene in a contract between Brazil and a private German company.

The IKL-209-1400 was chosen after the Navy examined with great interest the Italian submarine "Nazario Sauro," which is heavier than the German model. Besides, the Italians refused to transfer their vessel's building technology to the extent the Brazilians desired.

The Brazilian nuclear submarine will carry completely conventional and reduced weaponry: only six torpedo tubes (instead of the usual eight on a conventional submarine). Its speed will reach between 25 and 30 knots, according to the same initial calculations.

The building of a nuclear submarine will lead Brazil to other types of research. For example, the type of steel to be used in the IKL-209-1400 will be HY-80 steel (a special type of steel for the hull designed to resist great pressure underwater). Certainly, Brazil will be ready to begin construction on a nuclear submarine by the end of the next decade.

The nuclear researchers of the Brazilian Armed Forces together with the scientific institutions constitute a nuclear program parallel to the one defined 11 years ago when Brazil and the FRG signed the so-called nuclear agreement. A FAB colonel who works in this field and who was consulted by FOLHA DE SAO PAULO, preferred to call the program the "national nuclear program."

The commission created last September by President Sarney to re-evaluate the Brazilian nuclear program, did not bother to investigate whether or not the Armed Forces could be researching nuclear technology to apply to its war machines. What is more, the Brazilian Society of Physics does not believe the Navy nor Aeronautics ministries may already possess qualified teams of experts to design sophisticated reactors, such as the "fast breeder" type.

FOLHA DE SAO PAULO also found out that CTA experts are researching on the use of thorium, which is a mineral found widely in Brazil and India, as fuel for a future nuclear reactor.

POLICE BUILDUP, OPPOSITION SUPPORT BEFORE STRIKE

PY021725 Paris AFP in Spanish 1229 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Text] Santiago, 2 Sep (AFP) -- Two days before the national stoppage called by political sectors opposed to the government of General Augusto Pinochet, a strong police and military vigilance can be observed on the main streets and strategic places of Santiago.

Graffiti and pamphlets call on Chileans to join demonstrations scheduled for next Thursday -- 4 September -- by the many unions and students grouped within the National Civic Assembly [ANC] whose leaders were released from jail 2 weeks ago.

The opposition leaders were arrested by order of the military government for their responsibility in a stoppage on 2 and 3 July, which caused the deaths of eight persons.

ANC President Juan Luis Gonzalez explained that the stoppage on Thursday will mark aday of meditation. He said that according to the call, each organization will adopt its own decisions for that day, and added that the spirit of peace, which has characterized the real democratic behavior, will prevail.

The stoppage was initially proposed by the leftist MDP "(Popular Democratic Movement] which represents the proscribed Communist Party, a socialist sector, and the MIR [Movement of the Revolutionary Left], with support from the clandestine movement FPMR [Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front] which promotes all forms of struggle.

On Friday, 29 August, the Chrestina Democratic Party -- the main force opposed to the government of Gen Pinochet -- joined the call for a stoppage and invited its members to participate in a national stoppage as part of the peaceful actions to demand the reestablishment of democracy.

Carabineros Director General Rodolfo Stange, who is also a member of the Goverment Junta, has warned the police will take necessary measures to safeguard public order and the tranquility of the citizens. He added: We will take the necessary precautions to prevent violations of citizens' rights by the mistaken intentions of some hotheaded people.

On Thursday, 28 August, the Organization of Women for Life -- which includes different women's movements -- also joined the national stoppage and proposed that a day of decontamination be celebrated on that day throughout Chile.

In Chile, 4 September had been the day when the people traditionally elected the president of the Republic every 6 years until Gen Pinochet overthrew the socialist regime of the late President Salvador Allende.

The national day of stoppage proposed by the opposition will be held almost 1 month after the government announced the discovery of a large arsenal with more than 50 tons of weapons with an estimated value of about $100 million.

According to the government report, the weapons were brought ashore by Cuban and Soviet fishing boats and were earmarked for subversive groups that promote armed struggle against the military regime.

The situation has disclosed some doubts about the authenticity of the discovery.

The national opposition stoppage will precede the great rally of adherence and support for Gen Pinochet that will be held on Tuesday, 9 September, at the monument to the fatherland, in downtown Santiago, to commemorate the military regime's 13 years in power. This rally is being publicized with full-page advertisements in the country's newspapers and on Chilean television and radio stations.

In this regard, ANC President Juan Luis Gonzalez announced that the ANC will hold a public rally on 25 September in the same place and under the same conditions granted to the followers of Gen Pinochet. He said that this decision has been adopted because the conditions set forth in the Chile Demands document have not been met, and because the process of democratic recovery cannot be delayed. He said the rally will be held in the same place to compare the support of those who want democracy and those who prefer the current regime. Gonzalez added that he had no doubt that the authorization for this rally will be granted.

PDC Denies Supporting Stoppage

PY032241 Paris AFP in Spanish 2012 GMT 3 Sep 86

[Text] Santiago, 3 Sep (AFP) -- The Christian Democratic Party [PDC], the main opposition party against the government of General Augusto Pinochet, today denied that it supports the 4 September national stoppage called by leftist forces.

In an official statement, the PDC leaders said the leaflets which were attributed to the PDC and appeared recently in Santiago urging the people to join the general stoppage are false. Those leaflets were not released by the PDC, the statement says.

The new PDC statement seems to reflect a change regarding the position adopted on 29 August, when the PDC national council called on all opposition groups to join the 4 September demonstrations by discontinuing their regular activities.

The national stoppage was called by the leftist groups which make up the Popular Democratic Movement (MDP). Yet this call was not endorsed by the National Civic Assembly, which plans to hold a drive for democracy on 4 September.

Leaflets Encourage Protest

PY031538 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0305 GMT 3 Sep 86

[Text] The Christian Democratic Party [PDC] today reported it has received information that "the government and the extreme left are reportedly preparing acts of violence to justify their respective strategies."

The PDC has issued this warning just as leaflets are being distributed in Santiago calling upon Chileans to participate in acts of protest and disobedience on 4 September. On that day Chileans will commemorate the day on which, every 6 years, they used to vote to elect the president of the republic, a situation that changed in 1973 with the military coup that brought General Augusto Pinochet to power.

The leaflets urge Chileans not to send their children to school, not to carry out any banking activities, but to demonstrate on the streets at 1200, and to return to their homes at 1400 on that day.

In their public statement, the Christian Democrats say that a climate "of fear and violence has paralyzed the country, while the overwhelming majority of the Chileans are against violence."

Assessing the situation in the country the day before the announced Day For Democracy on 4 September, the Chilean PDC condemns what it calls the violence "of the government" and of the "extreme left." It states: "The regime maintains its abusive legislation, increases its aggressive attitude and its attacks on political parties, individuals, and even the church. This violence has caused many deaths, and the murderers remain unpunished."

FPMR INTERRUPTS RADIO BROADCAST, READS STATEMENT

[Text] Santiago, 3 Sep (AFPO) -- Unknown individuals tonight interrupted the broadcast of Radio Carrera in Santiago for 55 seconds and broadcast a proclamation against General Augusto Pinochet's regime. The incident took place just a few hours before a nationwide strike called by the opposition.

The persons in question claimed to belong to the clandestine Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front (FPMR) and urged the people to join tomorrow's drive, according to Radio Carrera personnel who were unable to prevent the proclamation from being aired.

A vehicle which at a given time parked near the transmitter of the radio station and with a powerful transmitter and a long-range antenna interrupted Radio Carrera's normal programming. The proclamation which ended with the national anthem was aired for 55 seconds until the technicians of the radio station managed to control the situation.

The left-wing FPMR is advocating rebellion against General Pinochet's military government and has claimed credit for other proclamations that have been aired by interrupting the broadcasts of other stations.

140 STUDENTS ARRESTED IN SANTIAGO, VALPARAISO

[Text] Santiago, 3 Sep (AFP) -- Approximately 140 university students were arrested today by Carabineros during antigovernment demonstrations staged in Santiago and Valparaiso a few hours before the beginning of a national stoppage called by the opposition to General Augusto Pinochet's military government.

According to student sources, the most serious incidents occurred at the Playa Ancha University in Valparaiso, 140 km west of Santiago, where 90 youths were arrested by policemen after violent clashes.

Using tear gas, truncheons, and water cannons, the police dispersed the students, who retaliated by throwing stones and other objects.

Another group of students occupied the Van Buren Hospital but left when police forces arrived. No one was arrested.

Students from the Catholic University of Valparaiso said six fellow students were detained when they were erecting barricades, painting graffiti on walls, and detouring traffic. Carabineros dispersed the demonstration with water cannons and tear gas.

Policemen also entered the Metropolitan University and arrested 38 students after hurling many tear gas canisters at them, according to the students. Andrea Palma, chairwoman of the student council, said the police stormed the university when the students were putting on a cultural event inside the school. Later, we staged a march around the area, but we were attacked by the police, Palma said.

According to AFP correspondents, the students erected barricades, made fires, and blocked traffic on one of the main avenues of the Chilean capital.

Six students were also arrested at the Northern Medical School of the University of Chile as they shouted antigovernment slogans.

Carabineros Director Rodolfo Stange, a member of the Government Junta, has warned that the Chilean Police will take every measure needed to safeguard public order and tranquillity during the stoppage. Stange added: We will be prepared to protect the rights of citizens who may be affected by the mistaken intentions of some misguided people.

SOCIAL-DEMOCRAT PROCLAIMS PRESIDENTIAL PLANS

PY031931 Paris AFP in Spanish 1410 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Text] La Paz, 2 Sep (AFP) -- Chilean Social Democratic Party [PSD] leader Mario Osses Quiroz, formerly an adviser to President Salvador Allende -- in comments to AFP today in La Paz -- announced his candidacy for the Chilean presidency.

Osses, who lived in exile for several years in Brazil and now is in Bolivia, said he will officially launch his candidacy as soon as the Chilean people manage to resume the democratic process interrupted by the 1973 coup staged by General Augusto Pinochet.

He pointed out that the political sectors supporting him are economic and ideologically independent of the great world powers. He also said his candidacy represents a move toward a common agreement in search of positive action.

Osses described Christian Democratic leader Gabriel Valdez' position of reportedly agreeing that another general could succeed Pinochet with the pretext that the country needs a transition as unacceptable, because it would consent to the continuation of the military regime.

ARMY LAUNCHES MASSIVE ANTIGUERRILLA OFFENSIVE

PA290221 Hamburg DPA in Spanish 2257 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Text] Bogota, 28 Aug (DPA) -- Yesterday, the Army launched the most impressive military offensive of the last few years. About 10,000 men are participating, in order to repel guerrilla actions all over the country, but mainly in Cauca, Valle, and Norte de Santander Departments, where 103 people have died in the last few days, among whom were subversive elements, police, and military men.

Furthermore, Army Commander in Chief General Oscar Botero admitted today that logical way to stop the present violence in the country would be a "military-political solution." The antiguerrilla campaign was agreed upon after a series of meetings of the military high command, the military intelligence board, the special operations command, and the logistical support section of the National Defense Ministry, in which the guerrilla upsurge was discussed in depth.

The main military concern is the reactiveation of subversion in the southeastern Caula Department, where the greast block of guerrilla groups are, including the pro-Indian commando "Quintin Lame," the M-19, the Army of National Lberation, the Popular Liberation Army, the "Free Fatherland" movement, the Revolutionary Workers Party, and the "Ricardo Franco Front."

On Tuesday, Army Commander in Chief Gen Oscar Botero met with the Army chiefs to come up with a military strategy in Cauca and Valle Departments, where it was decided that the operation would be backed by troops transported by air and war commandos (paratroopers assault units, assault groups, etc.)

A spokesman for the Armed Forces told the DPA German press agency today that in the future it is possible that the Army will send heads of administrative departments to open war zones in order to give support to the brigade commanders and the divisions that operate throughout the country.

Military strategy calls for blockading the different roads of Cauca, Valle, and Huila Departments to prevent the guerrillas from resupplying people and war equipment in an effort to counter the military offensive. "Red zones" were designed, which forbid private aircroft from overflying military objectives lower than 2,000 feet, as gound units are being supported at present by air-transported commandos from the Tolemaida and Apiay military bases.

PARAMILITARY GROUP BLAMED FOR UP SENATOR'S DEATH

PA030447 Paris AFP in Spanish 031 GMT 3 Sep 86

[Text] Bogota, 2 Sep (AFP) -- A self-styled paramilitary group "The Stings" [Los Aguijones] was held responsible for the murder of Communist Senator Pedro Nel Jimenez, of the Patriotic Union [UP], which took place yesterday in Villavicencio, 120 km southeast of Bogota.

The senator's father said tonight that his son had been threatened 20 days ago by a clandestine organization called "The Stings," which opeates in southeastern Meta Province, because he was prepared to denounce several people for mismanaging huge amounts of public funds.

Humberto Oviedo, the victim's delegate in the legislative body, corroborated the remarks by the father of Jimenez. He said that the group was of a paramilitary nature. Oviedo said that The Stings killed Jimenez because he was defending several political prisoners and knew the names of people linked to mismanagement of government funds.

Moreover, UP deputies, who blame paramilitary groups for crimes against 14 of its members, summoned the ministers of government and justice and the attorney general to appear before the Chamber of Representatives on 16 September. The debate will center on the activities by these groups and the so-called dirty war which the attorney general has insistently denounced.

[Text] Bucaramanga -- A strange group, the self-styled Red Berts, today claimed responsibility for the murder of Leonardo Posada, Patriotic Unity [UP] representative. Posada was killed in Barrancabermeja. In a telephone call to this radio station's office in Bucaramanga, the group also threatened these UP political leaders in Santander: Hernan Motta, delegate to the chamber of representatives; Carlos Rodriguez Geli, deputy; Agustin Figueroa, municipal councilman, and union leader Rodrigo Cordoba. They were also given an 8-day deadline to leave Bucaramanga and Santander.

Authorities report they have never before heard of this group.

Judges To Investigate

PA022303 Bogota Emisoras Caracol Network in Spanish 1215 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Report by Carlos Ruiz]

[Text] Patriotic Union [UP] leaders and the government will agree today on the creation of a special jury of civilian judges that will investigate the killing of UP party members.

Justice Minister Eduardo Suescun Monroy will meet with former candidate and UP coordinator Jaime Pardo Leal, with President Barco's approval, to agree on terms of reference for the special judges. Mr Pardo Leal said that all human and material state resources will be made available for clearing up the murders of the UP leaders.

According to Suesun Monroy, President Barco ratified the decisions adopted at the last session of the National Security Council directed at fully clarifying the facts, and offered all he could for the protection of the political activities of the UP.

The government will give full support, aid, and guarantees to the special criminal instruction judgers who will assume the investigations to find and punish, in an exemplary manner, those responsible, said Minister Cepeda Ulloa.

The UP leaders, in addition to requesting the special judicial tribunal, reiterated that they will need safe-conduct passes for their leaders to carry arms for their personal protection.

The political leaders said that they found President Barco in a very receptive mood, which will permit them to trust that he will adopt concrete measures to put an end to the criminal escalation against the UP.

FARC and the UP said that they will not be carried away by those who want them to respond with violence and promised to keep the truce with the government, although they started preparing for a national civic strike -- of a peaceful nature, according to them -- to protest the violence.

FARC and UP leaders maintain that the crimes against their political spokesmen are part of a campaign that seeks a bloodbath in the country. UP President Braulio Herrara said that these acts seek a desperate FARC reaction. Herrara said we are not going to give up the peace flag, but it is necessary that Colombians mobilize themselves, facing the country's enemies peacefully.

FARC ideologist Jacobo Arenas said from La Uribe camp that that organization had no reason to break the truce, and warned that now it was necessary for Colombians who want peace to act decisively to detain those who want to whip up a great carnage in the country. Arenas described as bandits, small murderes, and provocateurs the killers of the two UP parliamentarians.

Cayetardo Leal and Gilberto Vieira, who are part of UP'S leadership, said that they will also continue the political struggle as they are not afraid that their enemies will carry out their sinister plans against them.

According to Suescun Monroy, President Barco thanked the UP leaders for their commitments to political, economic, and social changes, as well as for their reconciliation efforts that the new administration is going to put into effect.

FARC LEADER PRAISES NEW DEFENSE MINISTER

PA311308 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0245 GMT 31 Aug 86

[Text] Bucaramanga (Colombia), 30 Aug (EFE) -- Ricardo Medina, alias "Camilo," commander of the 20th FARC Front, has described the new defense minister, General Rafael Samudio Molina, by saying that "a substantial" and positive "change" has taken place in that ministry.

At a news conference held in the mountains of Santander Department, in the northeast, "Camilo" praised the new minister, a former Army general commander. "A new stage" is now opening "because the defense minister's personal attributes and military background indicate that things will be different," "Camilo" told a group of newsmen.

The guerrilla leader was pleased that Samudio Molina met with the leaders of the Patriotic Union (UP), FARC'S political party, which in the last elections won several seats in the national congress as well as in a number of departmental assemblies and municipal councils.

According to the commander of the 20th FARC Front, "the peace process begun during Belisario Betancur's previous administration will be consolidated" with the new defense minister.

He also criticized the performance of the previous defense minister, former General Miguel Vega Uribe. "Vega Uribe never agreed with Betancur's peace policies," the rebel chief said.

At the same clandestine meeting with the press, "Camilo" called for the support of "all my countrymen so that the blood of peasant guerrilla members and peasant military men does not continue being shed in our homeland."

In conclusion, he asked the organizations that comprise the National Guerrila Coordinating Board (CNG) "to cease their war effort and join the efforts to achieve peace."

The CNG is a rebel alliance comprised among others by the M-19, the Popular Liberation Army (EPL), the Army of National Liberation (ELN), the Indian Quintin Lame Group, and other organizations currently fighting in various parts the country.

FERNANDEZ 'SAD' ABOUT REPORTS ON STROESSNER

PY031725 Asuncion Cerro Cora Sistema Nacional Television in Spanish 1600 GMT 3 Sep 86

[Report on President Alfredo Stroessner's official morning activities at Government House on 3 September by Government House correspondent Miguel Angel Rodriguez from the Channel 9 studios -- live]

[Text] Good afternoon. President Alfredo Stroessner this morning met for a few minutes with a delegation of ROC businessmen visiting our country. The delegation, which is led by Augustine C.T. Wu, director general of the ROC's Economy Ministry, also included Captain General Cheng Wang, ROC ambassador to Paraguay.

The delegation's spokesman gave President Stroessner a personal present from ROC President Chiang Ching-kuo and a present from the delegation with affection and sympathy for the president, who outlined the most important aspects of the long friendship existing between the two countries that is based on a fluid relationship.

The president also granted audiences to Ambassador Juan Felix Morales; Engineer Enzo Debernardi, president of ANDE [National Power Administration] and Paraguayan Director General of the Itaipu Binational Enterprise; General Alcibiades Britez Borges, chief of police; and Mr Emilio Forestieri.

During the morning, Anibal Fernandez, the president's information and culture under secretary, told our newscast that he was very sad about the spiteful and absurd report by a certain sector of the international media that disseminated a report originating in Miami on an alleged illness and even the death of President Stroessner. Fernandez added that it is not worthwhile to deny such spiteful information.

This is all we have to report today from Government House.

PLR Head Meets With Stroessner

PY032356 Asuncion ULTIMA HORA in Spanish 3 Sep 86 p 11

[Text] "I first want to say that the meeting with the nation's president was held at the request of the Radical Liberal Party (PLR), which participates in Congress and city councils. Out of concern for the future of the country, I talked with the president and I think that we had an excellent conversation, since we both are Paraguayans, nationalists, and want progress for the country. Of course, I will report this conversation to my party's political committee, which will later issue a communique on this important meeting for the country's present and future."

This statement was made this morning by the head of the PLR, Emilio Forestieri, after a meeting he held with General Alfredo Stroessner. Although Forestieri did not want to reveal details of the meeting, most likely they talked about the return of Domingo Laino.

As for any proposal that the PLR had presented to the government, Forestieri said: "I did not make any proposal. The party availed itself of a constitutional provision. We came to make a petition to the president in our capacity as head of a party that participated in the functions of government, in the legislative branch, and on the city councils where the party holds elected positions. We believe politics must be conducted through dialogue and dissent among civilized people. We believe that since 1967, the PLR has worked patriotically to build a more just society through a democratic process. This political process began with the Constituent Assembly in 1967, and we have been committed to the country's future since then."

When asked about the existence of any difficulty affecting Liberalism, Forestieri interrupted to say: "We will issue a communique later to give explanations. It has to be understood that dialogue will be the way to conduct the country's affairs as civilized people, who love their country, peace and democracy. I have nothing else to say. I will say what I have to say after I talk with the political committee of the PLR, which I will convene tonight. Then, a communique will be released."

[No PLR leader has met with Stroessner since 1976 when he and then president of the PLR, Carlos Alberto Gonzalez, met.]

ARCHBISHOP REVEALS ANTICHURCH CAMPAIGN

PY302239 Paris AFP in Spanish 2313 GMT 29 Aug 86

[Text] Asuncion, 29 Aug (AFP) -- Asuncion Archbishop Ismael Rolon today reasserted the legitimacy of the church's position in promoting and defending the truth, justice, and human rights in Paraguay -- in view of campaign -- sponsored by high government circles, to discredit him.

In a message addressed to the religious community, Msgr Rolon, who is also president of the Paraguayan Episcopal Conference [CEP], pointed out the persistent attacks and charges made against the bishops and priests who were called enemies of the government. In reply to the lies against the church, Msgr Ismael Rolon reiterated that the church leaders carry out their activities truthfully and honestly.

He argued that the church is not meddling in politics, when denouncing human rights violations, and he based his opinions on Pope John Paul II's statements.

Msgr Rolon recommended that all Catholics quote the statements of the Pope to explain and justify the church's intervention in the human problems of individuals, institutions, and peoples. At their roots, these problems are really problems of morales, justice, and truth, things which affect eternal salvation, and that the church must defend and promote throughout the world.

FISHING AGREEMENT WITH USSR EXTENDED BY 3 YEARS

PY031658 Lima Panamericana Telvision Network in Spanish 0315 GMT 3 Sep 86

[Text] Minister of Fisheries Ajvier Labarthe Correa has reported that the fishing agreement between Peru and the Soviet Union will be extended for another 3-year period. The minister explained that the previous agreement with the USSR will expire this coming Thursday, 4 September.

[Begin Labarthe recording] I sincerely want to say that despite all criticism, this is a very special agreement, because Peru does not (?lose) anything, and the Soviets must fish outside the 200-mile limit. That is to say, they are fully complying with international law, and they are legally authorized to fish without need of any agreement. They could have reached an agreement with any other country for repairs and supply of their ships. Thus, we have nothing to lose from this agreement.

Of course, if fishing activities are carried out very near the 200-mile limit -- and if these activities reach important levels -- then the situation would be different. For this reason, we are now demanding full details, because if fishing activities exceed certain levels they could endanger the maritime species. If this were the case, we would have to sever the agreement. But there are no grounds for any severance yet. We will receive information and everything will be well established as to where they will be fishing. Now -- from the moment they enter the port of Callao until the time they leave port -- if they put down their net to catch some fish, we cannot say that [words indistinct] [end recording].

POLICE RAID LIMA SHANTYTOWNS ARREST 300

[Text] Lima, 29 Aug (AFP) -- Peruvian authorities reported today in Lima that 300 people were arrested in an operation by the forces of order in the Huaycan and Horacio Zevallos shantytowns, 17 km southeast of Lima, to dismantle terrorist cells allegedly promoting subversive escalation.

According to police sources, the raid was ordered because of the appearance of many subversive pamphlets that called on the people of the area -- about 5,000 -- to join the Guerrilla People's Army, and praised the armed struggle against the regime. The police raid was carried out yesterday and 300 people were arrested because they either lacked identification or were suspected of being members of terrorist cells.

Meanwhile, a guerrilla column dynamited the Nuevo Dorado mine in Santiago de Chuco, La Libertad Province, causing serious damage. The police reported that subversive groups reappeared in this province 4 days ago killing seven persons, among them a mother and her three children. Fifty antisubversive policemen were sent yesterday from Cusco to the high regions of Canas Province, where subversive groups that incite peasants to join the armed struggle have appeared, according to Cusco Prefect Julio Jara.

Peruvian Cardinal Juan Landazuri said yesterday the state of emergency in Lima and 23 provinces throughout the country should be lifted. He said there must be freedom during the campaign for the next municipal elections scheduled for November.

SEPULVEDA INTERVIEWED ON FOREIGN POLICY

PA021951 Mexico City XEW Television Network in Spanish 1619 GMT 1 Sep 86

[Interview given by Foreign Secretary Bernardo Sepulveda at the Congress in Mexico City; reporter not identified -- live]

[Text] [Reporter] Mr Foreign Secretary, how would you characterize our foreign policy at this time?

[Sepulveda] In my view, this past year has been especially rich in international activities. There was the Ixtapa meeting in August which gathered together six heads of state and government. They issued a very clear and precise statement in favor of peace and disarmament. There were also the meetings that President De la Madrid held with President Reagan in January in Mexicali and in August in Washington. Very favorable results were also obtained from those meetings. Overall, not only this year's events but those throughout the past 4 years of government represent a reaffirmation of the our sovereign, independent, and autonomous foreign policy.

[Reporter] Regarding the Ixtapa meeting, did it bring about some concrete results?

[Sepulveda] Well, I think that there are important results which concern the so-called moratorium on nuclear tests. On one hand, the Soviet Government announced that it will extend its nuclear test moratorium, and on the other, the U.S. Congress has adopted a resolution imposing limits on nuclear tests. We believe this is a significant advance, an effort in the right direction by the Group of Six.

[Reporter] Turning to another topic, would you discuss the Contadora situation? Many things are being said about Contadora.

[Sepulveda] Well, Contadora has been an extraordinary effort to bring peace and security to Central America. I would stress the essential political work which the Contadora Group has conducted, and the way it was able to present to the five Central American countries a draft treaty on peace and security to bring a system of cooperation to the Central American region. The fundamental responsibility now lies with the Central American government themselves; in other words, they are the ones that must decide what type of region they want, whether they want a region with peace and security, or if they want to be involved in a conflict that will have very grave consequences for them and for the countries near the region.

[Reporter] Sir, did relations with the United States suffer following the case of the man, the alleged customs agent, who, as you know, was arrrested after being caught with weapons in his car -- which apparently had false license plates -- and who was being aided by some wanted criminals? Has this harmed our relations? On Friday, THE WASHINTON POST carried an item on this stating that certain things are not clear.

[Sepulveda] We must learn to establish a definition as to what a political relationship is -- like the one practiced by President De la Madrid in his ties with the United States, with the U.S. Government, and with President Reagan, as exemplified in the meeting the two held on 13 August. Not only does President De la Madrid possess unquestionable political and diplomatic competence, but a genuine capacity for political interlocution with the U.S. Government. Traditionally, we Mexicans have skillfully, intelligently, and imaginatively demonstrated that we have real competence to establish a political dialogue with the United States.

There is an aspect that deals with police matters. Unfortunately, incidents arise and there are times when these incidents are condemnable. Because these are circumstantial and accidental matters, they can tarnish the overall, political relationship we have with the U.S. Government. This relationship should be based on a system of cooperation and mutual respect.

[Reporter] Will the understanding in U.S. - Mexico relations continue?

[Sepulveda] The political understanding and the capacity for political dialogue will continue.

FINANCE SECRETARY COMMENTS ON FOREIGN DEBT

FL012353 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 2032 GMT 1 Sep 86

[Excerpts] Mexico City, 1 Sep (NOTIMEX) -- Finance and Public Credit Secretary Gustavo Petricioli today rejected the possibility that Mexico would declare a foreign debt moratorium, and stressed that a program of restructuring and efficiency in production is needed, because we cannot have a country with a spendthrift population.

In an interview at the Palace of the Legislature where the President made his report, Petricioli said that a moratorium is not under consideration as an adequate measure, inasmuch as it will not remove the debt and would be an obstacle in obtaining additional resources. he said that with the credits being received from abroad, the country can grow, because that foreign currency will not be used to pay out but to continue on the road to recovery. [passage omitted]

Petricioli mentioned that in 1987 the economic growth that had been anticipated will be attained, a growth which stopped because of the earthquakes and oil crisis. Mexico will have to make an effort and reorganize to be able to once again use its full capabilities. [passage omitted]

Petricioli denied the existence of pressures on the part of the IMF with respect to Mexico's economic policy. He said the government's program had been submitted to the consideration of international organizations and had been approved, but there was no pressure. They could have approved it or rejected it, but it was approved. [passage omitted]

ISRAEL DENIES REDUCTION OF OIL SALES

FL290215 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 2310 GMT 28 Aug 86

[Excerpts] Mexico City, 28 Aug (NOTIMEX) -- Israel will continue purchasing 60,000 barrels a day of Mexican oil at least until January 1987 at which time the 1985 bilateral agreement will be reviewed.

Pemex and the Israeli embassy in Mexico City denied any possibility of reducing the purchase-sale of oil. Pemex spokesmen confirmed that there is a 60,000 barrel-a-day export agreement with Israel and added it is Mexico's second [largest] client. [passage omitted]

For his part, Israel (Mey Amit), embassy spokesman, said he has not received any notice from Jerusalem about reduced oil purchases. He said the two countries are interested in increasing reciprocal imports and exports and the purchase-sale of oil will remain unchanged, at least until the agreement is reviewed.

PRESIDENT DELVALLE ADDRESSES LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

PA021550 Panama City Domestic Service in Spanish 1800 GMT 1 Sep 86

[Speech by President Eric Arturo Delvalle opening current session of Legislative Assembly; at Justo Arosemena Legislative Palace in Panama City -- live]

[Text] Honorable Legislator Ovidio Diaz, president of the Legislative Assembly; Honorable Magistrate Marisol Reyes de Vasquez, chief justice of the Supreme Court, and other members of the Supreme Court; Honorable Magistrate Yolanda Pulice de Rodriguez, president of the Electoral Tribunal, and other members of the Electoral Tribunal; your excellencies, Messrs ministers of state and deputy ministers; honorable legislators; Your Reverend Excellency Msgr Jose Sebastian Laboa, papal nuncio and dean of the diplomatic corps accredited in Panama; your excellencies, Messrs ambassadors; Messrs directors of international organizations accredited before our government; Your Excellency Eng Francisco Rodriguez, comptroller general of the republic; Honorable Olmedo Sanjur, attorney general; Colonel Bernardo Barrera [G-2 of the Defense Forces General Staff] and members of the General Staff of the Defense Forces; Messrs directors of decentralized institutions; Your Reverend Excellency Msgr Marcos Gregorio McGrath, archbishop of Panama; Messrs representatives of the political parties; special guests; ladies and gentlemen, fellow countrymen:

I am very pleased to address this honorable Legislative Assembly on the beginning of a new period of sessions to report to you on the most relevant actions we have carried out since I gave my report before this august chamber on 1 March and on the problems and tasks we have ahead of us and which we must face with energy and responsibility. At that time, the republic was facing, with grave concern, serious economic, social, and political problems.

Later, events having international implications unexpectedly took place that complicated the government's actions in the search for solutions. Fortunately, united and with the strength of our convictions, we carefully analyzed the obstacles and overcame them with prudence, speed, and firmness.

In the first place, I want to stress the evident harmonious cooperation that has prevailed between the executive and legislative branches, as established by the Constitution, for the passage of several laws that will contribute to the country's development. These include the Judicial Code, the Law of Incentives for the Manufacturing Industry, the Law Promoting Agricultural Activity, the law that promotes employment and productivity, and the law establishing new incentives for the construction industry. These laws which I signed were approved by this legislature with a deep sense of patriotism and responsibility.

Second, in the economic area, we faced with courage and determination the fiscal crisis that existed, among other reasons, as a result of the effects of the national and international recession; and we soon achieved positive results.

I must state with great satisfaction that the duly balanced general state budget which you approved is being implemented with rectitude and efficiency.

In view of an improvement in the economic situation, current state revenues have slightly surpassed the estimates. This has permitted us to opportunely meet our international financial commitments. We are also making an effort to liquidate our internal commitments as soon as possible.

In the face of the reality we must confront, we soon plan to begin talks on renegotiating our foreign debt unitl 1990 under the most favorable terms for the nation. I am aware that it is essential to find formulas to increase the public investment program so that a greater number of social needs can be resolved, our infrastructure improved, and adequate solutions to the many demands of our growing population can be found.

Within the same field of the economic problems, we have established some order in public administration with programs to rationalize expenses, increase productivity, and liquidate some state enterprises that were too onerous a burden for taxpayers.

If there is something that has characterized my government, jointly with you honorable legislators, it is the energetic, sensible, responsible, and purely nationalist attitude it has maintained when carrying out essential actions to bring about fiscal reorganization and an adequate financing of our public debt.

There are some who try to confuse the citizens with false assertions that we are acting as a result of the impositions of international credit organizations. I will never accept any measures that harm the country's interests. I will never yield to the internal pressures of those who want to place themselves above the best interests of the homeland. I will never, hear this well, I will never permit the sale of such enterprises as the IRHE [Institute of Hydraulic Resources and Electrification], INTEL [National Institute of Telecommunications], the Lottery, and the IDAAN [National Water and Sanitation Institute]. [applause] I will never permit the sale of such enterprises. They provide public utility and social benefit services to the community. I will never tolerate the sullying, in any sense, of the dignity of the nation.

Although the government institutions have worked, with a high sense of duty under our guidance to achieve greater efficiency and to provide the best possible service to which all citizens have a right, we have just signed a decree ordering the planning and implementation of a general plan to modernize and simplify public administration. It will establish a program of guidelines, objectives, and actions for the country's development. We are aware that this decision means introducing a series of administrative, legal, and organizational innovations directly aimed at making the economy stronger and more dynamic.

I take this opportunity to issue a call to the public employees to think about their responsibility as servants of the community and about the dignity, honesty, and diligence that they should maintain in doing their job. It is time that the public identifies the public employee as an ally in the solution of its needs and that the state employee recognize that a citizen is a person whom he is proud to serve. We admit there is still much to do, but generally we should feel pleased because awareness is being created about the need for improvement. [applause]

One of the state institutions under the executive branch that I must mention especially is the Defense Forces -- particularly their commander in chief, who has been the target of groundless attacks by some minority sectors that have found echoes and complicity in foreign groups that have traditionally been enemies of our homeland. We have emphatically stated and we reiterate at this time our rejection of that anitnational campaign and we concurrently reaffirm our full confidence in the Defense Forces and request that they continue their patriotic mission of becoming more professional and preparing to defend our territorial integrity, our democratic system, our sovereignty, our Canal, and the life, honor, and property of all our compatriots. [applause]

That defamatory campaign found its answer and was confronted with the truth when it became evident that its real objective was to attack the Torrijos-Carter treaties and question our ability to operate the Canal efficiently. [applause] Of course we can run it; of course we can do it. The people recently showed their massive and definite support for our stand during a historic rally that was both great and enthusiastic. That was the people's definite answer to the attempts to weaken our capabilities to act as a free and sovereign country. [applause]

Although the recent past and current moments are important -- and that is why I have referred to the most significant things that we have jointly carried out to date -- what we do tomorrow will have special historic significance because it will represent the heritage that we bequeath to future generations. That responsibility with the future commits us toward exerting the greatest efforts and redoubling our determination to serve jointly the nation's high interests. [applause]

Our flag flies atop the hill of [Panamanian poet] Amelia Denis de Icaza, our Ancon hill, as a vivid reminder of the generations-long effort we are going to continue with special patriotic spirit so that the letter and spirit of the Torrijos-Carter treaties will be totally fulfilled.

The republic has an inexorable right in the year 2000, and all the people will demand their faithful fulfillment. No one and nothing will prevent us from achieving the destiny that, because of the designs of nature, is ours. [applause]

The task that requires our immediate attention and energetic and resolute action is the utilization, in the most advisable manner, of the areas and installations that have reverted and that gradually will continue reverting to our country. For this purpose, in the next few days, I will issue the appropriate measures to appoint a group of distinguished citizens to plan and implement the following measures:

1. They will draft a law creating an agency that will deal with everything concerning the plan for land use of the Canal area and the hydrographic basin. The law will fill the existing legal vacuums so we can use beneficially, in a regulated manner, the areas and installations that have been or will be incorporated into the national jurisdiction.

2. They will study and implement the strategy to achieve the modification or repeal of the opprobricus Law 96-70. [applause]

The executive branch will opportunely send this honorable Legislative Assembly for its consideration bills on these important topics as well as others that in our view, are fundamental for the country's economic, social, and cultural development.

With the same energy, we must continue to prepare, in the best possible way, to guarantee to all the countries of the world the normal and efficient operation of our canal.

That will constitute the most emphatic refutation of those who use against us the lie that we are incapable of taking care of that great work of engineering and of operating it with the same or better efficiency that it is operating now. In view of this responsibility to international shipping, we must face this challenge, acting with faith and devotion to fulfill our mission.

In the economic field, we must redouble our efforts to successfully continue the country's economic reactivation, cornerstone of all the programs we have to carry out to effectively open the way to the nation's integral development.

My government will continue its efforts to offer all facilities and necessary mechanisms to achieve a sustained economic growth in the country which will permit us to fulfill our obligations and at the same time to make public investments to imporve the standard of living of all Panamanians. [applause]

An important part of the instruments needed to firmly promote the growth of our economy is the establishment and development of the port center which will bring about an inflow of wealth from our trade relations with the rest of the world.

I plan to give the highest priority to that project, the realization of which is essential for the nation.

We must also strengthen our banking center and expand its financial scope with the creation of an international stock exchange. We must take utmost advantage of the rapid exchange of international finances, something that has incalculable possiblities due to the progress in computer science. We must offer local and foreign investors and businessmen and all the financial transactions that can be carried out in a large-scale banking center as the one we already have.

This week we will present for the consideration of this honorable legislature a bill that regulates and modernizes the activity of the country's financial enterprises.

To protect the seriousness of our banking community, I have issued instructions for the drafting of a law which, without affecting the basic principles of social, political, and economic coexistence in our community and maintaining the stability of the financial center, will remove the cancer of drugs from our borders.

I am dutybound to make known to my fellow countrymen that the Social Security Fund -- one of the most respected and revered insitutuions because of its role as protector of its members -- is experiencing a slow but continuous decapitalization, according to the actuarial analyses that have been carried out for several years. This is worsened by the loss of the resources from the second portion of the 13th-month bonus which represents the sum of 40 million balboas a year. One must also state that this situation is not due to the fact that the government pays the Social Security Fund the employer's share of the public sector's contribution with state bonds. They constitute only part of the institution's reserves and those bonds produce, in cash, interest that is higher than that which it could obtain in the stock market. In this regard, I also want to state that the government has totally settled the payments it had pending with the Social Security Fund in both interest and capital.

The Social Security Fund's situation cannot be exclusively blamed on the collective housing program, although we admit that it has meant a loss for the institution.

Despite those unfavorable circumstances, in a difficult act but one filled with great justice, the pensions of the insured were increased to partially compensate for the increase in the cost of living and to make more pleasant and bearable the life of the senior citizens.

I must state with equal sincerity that in light of what I previously mentioned it is essential that we jointly adopt the corrective measures to guarantee the economic solvency of the Social Security Fund so it can continue to fulfill its obligations with regard to retirees, widows' pensions, the disabled, minors who are beneficiaries, employment disabilities, and the programs of medicine, maternity, and illnesses.

Although it is true we have made significant progress in the social field, we have yet to adequately resolve the housing shortage. Without wanting to delve into its main causes, I have decided to carry out a massive program of construction of low-income housing, a problem the private sector has been unable to totally resolve.

As president, I have the aspiration that every Panamanian will have clean, comfortable, and decent housing. I plan to immediately begin a war against the subhuman living conditions, and I will begin by building the housing facilities that are necessary to once and for all demolish all of the condemned houses in Panama City and Colon which are a disgraceful monument that brings us shame. [applause]

To resolve that problem the state will spare none of its resources, including its patrimony, such as the lands of the nation on which to build the homes clamored for by thousands of humble Panamanians.

Now, I wish to refer to our determination to strengthen Panama's international presence, in keeping with the authentic image of our country and its vocation as an independent and sovereign nation, ready to strive for harmony and peace, and to maintain the relations of friendship, so long as these are based on mutual respect. To this effect, I want to acknowledge that this honorable chamber has contributed positively to the consideration and approval of important international agreements that strengthen cooperation and fraternity with many friendly nations.

Today marks the 25th anniversary of the founding of the Nonaligned Movement, of which Panama is an active member. I avail myself of the majesty of this tribunal to extend a special greeting of sympathy and solidarity to all the member-countries of this group, which contributed so much to the success of the cause of revindication of our sovereignty, which culminated with the signing of the Torrijos-Carter treaties and thereby the elimination of the colonial enclave which existed in our country. [applause]

I want to advise the honorable legislators that in the eighth Nonaligned Summit which opens today in Zimbabwe, Vice President Esquivel will offer an exposition on the nation's demands in view of our nonconformity and disagreement with the unilateral interpretations and violations of the new Panama Canal Treaties, with the assurance that that very important forum, which will be attened by state leaders of 100 countries, will generate extraordinary support for our efforts to have the United States rectify such actions and immediately undertake the revision of law 96-70 to eliminate its contradictions with those treaties and its conditions of injustice toward Panama.

I reiterate our steadfast position to continue to make efforts at all appropriate forums to demand the correct and faithful execution of the Torrijos-Carter Treaties. This profound and broadly shared feeling of all the Panamanians was shown recently. With this same strength, determination, energy, and patriotism, I will personally voice our people's stand before the United Nations, the highest internatonal tribunal. [applause]

It is necessary to maintain and strengthen -- at all costs -- the democratization of the country, a process that has been sponsored by the Defense Forces. This process began with the amendments to the national Constitution that were made with the participation of representatives from various political sectors.

A democratic system of government is, for historical reasons and firm conviction, the political government system preferred by Panamanians. We, both rulers and the governed people, must continue striving with all efforts necessary to consolidate the system, regardless of our political differences.

However, as we do this, we must not confuse democracy with weakness, or liberty with libertinism. If democracy entails political and civil liberty, weakness entails disorder and abuse to the detriment of the essence of democracy.

If liberty is a situation of law that is restricted only by what is ordered in a legally established juridical disposition, then libertinism is a disavowal of that order and the predominance of anarchy and privilege over the respect that should prevail for the benefit of all.

Justo Arosemena, whose good memory shelters this Legislative Assembly, said: In politics, liberty is the security one has to exercise those powers against all excessive restrictions. Therefore, liberty and security do not entail any antagonisms. These ideas complement each other.

We reiterate our commitment to improve and uphold this democracy that can only survive if all powers and institutions of the state, as well as all citizens, understand and enjoy the liberties that democracy has to offer but, at the same time, observe and respect the restrictions democracy establishes to protect the sacred rights of others.

I will always insist on the advantages of dialogue and agreements, on the civic value of constructive criticism and an opposition that is loyal to the fatherland, on a respect for the opinion of others, but also on accepting the decision of the majority after a broad, frank, and free debate.

Today, I am pleased to announce that the efforts we have made so far in various fields have not been in vain, as those who place their personal ambitions over the well-being of the Republic and its citizens have tried to show.

Most of the economic indexes show that there is a true and significant improvement in the first 6 months of 1986 as compared to the first 6 months of the previous year. The increase during the first 6 months of 1986 of Canal tolls, of port activities, of the Colon Free Zone trade, of exports in general, of fiscal revenue, bank deposits, and local credits that have been granted, as well as the increase in the gross national product and a decrease in the inflation rate, are clear and irrefutable evidence that we are again undergoing a process of growth and reactivation, following a period of stagnation.

If all Panamanians become aware and make use of the opportunities that come up instead of continuing on the futile path of nonconformity, this process of growth and reactivation will become more dynamic and, consequently, entail more benefits for the citizens.

Honorable legislators, we must be very much aware of the fact that the responsibility to contribute to the reconstruction of the Republic does not belong only to just a few citizens. This is a task that concerns all of us. Those of us who are governing and those who are the governed ones, workers and entrepeneurs, farmers and cattle ranchers, industrialists and businessmen, are all strongly united by a superior will to once again place the country along the path of prosperity and well-being that it deserves.

Those who shy away from that responsibility and those who only do it half way are not aware of the damage they are doing to the nation. If they are aware, they are completely ignorant of the virtues of noble men, above and beyond petty politics and personal ambitions.

The country does not belong exclusively to any sector, but to all of us who live here. It belongs to those of us who are governing and those who, in a responsible manner, make use of the democratic right to criticize us. It belongs to the foreign nationals who live with us and to the temporary visitors who come to our beaches to share with us the beauty, atmosphere of peace, and installations of these beaches. Above all, it belongs to the Panamanian who dearly loves his fatherland and seeks to preserve a free and peaceful society, where rights are respected and duties are fulfilled in a serious manner.

The concept of the Panamanian fatherland must be greater than the extension of its territory or the perimeter of its borders. We have a special dimension as a nation due to our privileged geographic position that makes us the crossroads of the world.

Let us make of our land what is expected from it: a bastion of peace, progress, and freedom for the benefit of the Panamanians and an example to all nations of the universe. Thank you. [applause]

Pastora Denies Arrest

[Text] San Jose, 3 Sep (ACAN-EFE) -- Eden Pastora, the former anti-Sandinist leader, is not under arrest but is at home with his family. Security Minister Comments

PA031914 Paris AFP in Spanish 1814 GMT 3 Sep 86

[Excerpts] San Jose, 3 Sep (AFP) -- Today, Hernan Garron, Costa Rican public security minister, described the false report on Eden Pastora's arrest in the area of Barra del Colorado, on the country's Atlantic coast, as a "tremendous error" by his subordinates.

The former Nicaraguan guerrilla leader said he regretted the Costa Rican Government had been "caught unawares" by such a report. Pastora said that he did not understand how Security Minister Hernan Garron "had been deceived" by a report that at present has no explanation.

Garron apologized to the press and to Pastora personally, for "having disseminated the false report" about Pastora's arrest, and admitted that he did not have a logical explanation for the incident.

Minister Garron promised to make a detailed investigation of the case. He ordered the immediate "arrest" of Commander Alvarado, the chief of the civilian guard post in Barra del Colorado. According to Garron, Alvarado reported Pastora's arrest to the high command simply because he had arrested a group of eight men, among whom was someone "who physically resembled" the former guerilla leader. NICARAGUAN MINISTER REQUESTS REFUGEE FACILITIES

PA031700 San Jose Radio Rejoj in Spanish 1200 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Text] The Sandinist government is requesting facilities for the return of refugees. The Sandinist Government of Nicaragua, through Deputy Foreign Minister Jose Leon Talavera, has requested that facilities be given to those refugees wishing to return to their country. The deputy foregin minister visited the country this past weekend.

Deputy Foreign Minister Carlos Rivera stated that his Nicaraguan counterpart had expressed concern at the vigilance at the border region in view of the $100 million in aid that will be given by the U.S. Government to the rebel groups. However, the Costa Rican official noted that the views of his Sandinist colleague were informal and that no document to that effect has been presented.

Deputy Foreign Minister Carlos Rivera said that he told Minister Leon Talavera, in response to the latter's request that facilities be given to refugees, that all refugees are free to return to their country whenever they want. Although attention to the refugees represents a serious problem for the country, nobody is held against their wish in the refugee centers. However, if they do not want to leave national territory, they will not be forced to do so, Minister Rivera explained.

The Costa Rican Foreign Ministry explained that the request voiced by the Sandinist deputy foreign minister was heeded, despite the fact that his visit was private and personal.

Costa Rica will maintain its position regarding the suit in The Hague. Regarding the suit filed by the Sandinist government against our country at the International Court of Justice at The Hague, Deputy Foreign Minister Carlos Rivera Bianchini said that he explained the justification that he considered the Nicaraguan Government had to present. To that effect, Deputy Foreign Minister Jose Leon Talavera was told that Costa Rica will maintain its steadfast position to defend our country from the charges made against it.

Rivera Bianchini also believes that the initiative of the Sandinist deputy foreign minister, requesting the audience that he had last Friday, was directed at breaking the ice that has surrounded the relations between the two countries.

FMLN-FDR SAYS NO AGREEMENT ON PLACE FOR MEETING

PA030401 San Salvador Radio Cadena YSKL in Spanish 1730 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Report by Oscar Venancio Remirez]

[Text] The rebel fronts stated today that there is still no definite agreement as to the place where the second round of private talks prior to the third dialogue for peace will be held. They said, however, that an agreement was reached as to the exact date for the meeting.

In a communique sent to the YSKL news center, they said that in Mexico they had agreed to hold the second preparatory meeting in the first half of September. By common agreement, however, they decided to keep the exact date a secret.

They added that no definite agreement was reached about the place where the second preparatory meeting would be held. The FMLN-FDR demanded that the meeting be held in San Salvador. However, in view of the government's refusal, they studied the possibility of holding the talks outside the country, but both parties would have to check with the government of those countries first.

3. [as heard] It was agreed in Mexico that, after reaching a definite agreement as to the place, the parties, as well as the mediator, would keep it a secret in order to contribute to the right climate for the second preparatory meeting.

They said that on Wednesday, 3 September, in Panama City they will deliver to Msgr Rivera y Damas, upon his return from Colombia, their proposed site of the second preparatory meeting. In addition they reiterated willingness to hold the second preparatory meeting on the date agreed and said they are certain that an agreement will be reached in the next few days on the site of the second preparatory meeting.

HONDURAS

TIEMPO SAYS NATION OPPOSES CONTRA CAUSE

PA281637 San Pedro Sula TIEMPO in Spanish 27 Aug 86 p 6

[Editorial: "A Firm Military Attitude and Public Opinion"]

[Text] After Congress approved the $100 million in military support for the "contras" -- who are settled mainly in Honduras and secondly in Costa Rica -- high-ranking U.S. officials visited Tegucigalpa to meet with several Honduran Government officials to discuss the matter.

We know that the allocation of the $100 million approved by Congress means very little to the United States -- and that, on the other hand, the available money will quadruple or quintuple that sum, which will be handled by the CIA. The main thing is that the Reagan administration succeeded in legitimizing its interventionist, aggressive policy in Central America when it obtained the support of Democrats and Republicans in the House of Representatives and Senate.

Under those circumstances, the first problem faced by the Reagan administration -- particularly by Elliot Abrams, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs and "strong man" for Central America, who is now responsible for leading the war against Nicaragua -- is the presentation of effective results, because now Congress is no longer presenting any opposition, or excuses; it gave all, and a little more, of what was asked of it.

In the effort to attain the planned goals -- the overthrow of the Sandinist regime -- there is a generalized opinion about the "contra" movement: Despite the large financial support grante -- the beginning of which undoubtedly can be predicted, and whose end can never be foretold -- except for the moral, political, material, and human damage that it will inevitably produce and of which we already have memories.

Similarly, the Honduran people's position regarding the "contra" movement is perfectly clear. We say that the same thing is being felt inside the Honduran Armed Forces, which were deeply shocked by the attack on Assistant Deputy Rodolfo Zelaya, alias (Noche Clara): an absolute, total, and definitive rejection of the "contra" presence in our country.

So, when Messrs Elliott Abrams; Armitage, a military planning specialist as well as assistant secretary of defense; Nestor Sanchez, a deputy assistant secretary at the Defense Department; and William Walker, an assistant of Assistant Secretary Abrams, all visit the Honduran capital, and then Walker returns and the representatives of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force ("contras") -- Calero, Robelo, and Cruz -- also visit Tegucigalpa, no one doubts what this means or how important these developments are.

However, all those events are taking place in an atmosphere that is increasingly clear regarding the national attitude about Honduras' participation in a war escalation against Nicaragua.

In the last few days, General Humberto Regalado Hernandez, the chief of the Honduran Armed Forces, has been insisting that Honduras is determined to forbid the use of its territory for the military training of "contras" or for "contra" supply activities.

Regalado Hernandez said, as has the Salvadoran Government, that Honduras will not accept "green berets" training the "contra" army in this country. This firm stance, if true, will be determined by the attitude of our people and the internal situation of the Honduran Armed Forces.

HUMAN RIGHTS COMMITTEE COMMUNIQUE ON 'DEATH SQUAD'

PA040013 Tegucigalpa Voz de Honduras Network in Spanish 1130 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Communique issued by Honduran Human Rights Committee CODEH in Tegucigalpa on 1 Sep]

[Text] CODEH considers it an obligation to make this report based on the following events and circumstances:

1. Precedents: Since his position as FUSEP (Public Security Forces) commander and then as Honduran Armed Forces commander in chief, former General Gustavo Alvarez Martinez organized under his direct command the special investigation services or Battalion 350, then under the command of Police Captain Alexander Hernandez. Later, another military man took charge when Alexander Hernandez was promoted to police major by the National Congress in December 1982 and was named military attache to the Honduran Embassy in Argentina, despite our report on his responsibility for missing people and the murders of peoples' leaders. He remained there until the government of Raul Alfonsin declared him persona non grata at the end of 1984, at which time he was named deputy director of the National Police Academy, ANAPOO. The special Armed Forces commission that investigated the disappearances and other human rights violations did not find anyone among its ranks guilty, as per the report submitted to former President Dr Roberto Suazo Cordova. Honduran justice declared several officers accused of murder, disappearances, tortures, and other violations innocent in a trial that we have found to be full of irregularities and procedural errors.

Now it appears that Alexander Hernandez handed over (Eduardo Lanche) and Feliz Martinez to the Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries, who later killed them. This is what (Linda Brocker) reports in her recent reportage "The History of a Contra."

Since May police and other military officials and civilian authorities have conducted a campaign to report on the uncontrolled increase in crime. Soon after that an announcement appeared on a death squad that was formed to execute repeat criminals. This squad killed at least five of those criminals, who had previously been in DIN [Department of National Investigation] cells. A lot has been said regarding subversive criminals to get the Honduran people to accept their execution, presenting them as the result of alleged political differences, as happened with the murder of Cristobal Paz Alfaro.

2. Recently we received a list of those sentenced to death, despite the constitutional right to life, in defense of national sovereignty, territorial authority, respect for human rights, and the right of the Honduran people to self-determination and peace. They are: Lautama Fonseca, Pedro Brizuela, Longino Becerra, Virgilio Carias, Albertino Reina, Carlos Roberto Reina, Adela Acosta, Victor Meza, Juan Almendares Bonilla, Cristobal Flores, Modesto Rueda Faska, Ada Joaquina Rueda Faska, Isaura Rueda Faska, Carlos Orbin Montoya, two students from the Secondary Student Federation [FESE], and a student from Francisco Morazan High School. As their deaths will be the making of the death squads, we hereby call the attention of the president, of the presidents of the National Congress and the Supreme Court of Justice, and the military High Command, calling for them to guarantee the lives of all the Hondurans mentioned on the list, holding them responsible from this moment on any attack against them.

CODEH also calls for the Honduran people's good sense and condemnation of murders committed and to be committed by any means they can and demands the punishment of those guilty.

Let us fight for peace, human rights, and justice.

[Signed] Ramon Custodio Lopez, president of CODEH

DEFENSE MINISTRY REPORTS CONTRA CASUALTIES

PA031710 Managua Sistema Sandinista Television Network in Spanish 0200 GMT 2 Sep 86

UNO CHARGES SANDINIST USE OF CHEMICAL WEAPONS

PA030335 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 2218 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Text] San Jose, 2 Sep (ACAN-EFE) -- The Nicaraguan Opposition Unity [UNO] today reported that it had inflicted 42 casualties on the EPS during August in the southern region of Nicaragua. According to a "war bulletin" issued by the "contras" who are fighting in the southern area of that neighbor country, the clashes, led by Fernando ("El Negro") Chamorro, took place in Zelaya and Chontales Departments.

The bulletin, released in San Jose, states that UNO forces suffered seven casualties during the clashes. It did not specify the number of dead and wounded within the EPS or its own ranks. According to the report, during the clashes the anti-Sandinists also "recovered" six Soviet made "AK-47" rifles, ammunition, boots, three fragmentation grenades, and military blankets.

The UNO, financed by the United States, also charged that the Sandinist forces used chemical weapons, which have been banned by international conventions, in areas of Nueva Guinea and Chontales. The use of chemical weapons resulted in blindness and loss of hair for a civilian and a combatant.

CASTRO ADDRESSES NONALIGNED SUMMIT IN ZIMBABWE

FL031456 Havana Television Service in Spanish 0100 GMT 3 Sep 86

[Speech by President Fidel Castro at plenary session of Eighth Nonaligned Summit in Harare, Zimbabwe, on 2 September -- recorded]

[Text] Comrade Mugabe: My speech is not too long, but unfortunately I have not been able to cut it back as you had so wisely asked everybody to do. [laughter in audience] Thus, I have nothing to do but to remember to do that at the next summit, and ask all others to please excuse me. [applause]

Esteemed Chairman Robert Mugabe, distinguished chiefs of state or government, Messrs members of delegations, distinguished guests: Just 7 years ago, when we held our summit in Havana, we had the honor of greeting you as a full member of the Nonaligned Movement, the heroic liberation movement of Zimbabwe, which had not yet attained independence. Today, the eighth summit of Harare, being held in the youngest sovereign state in Africa, advanced trench of the continent in the struggle against racism and apartheid, is a symbol of the strength of our movement and the unstopable march of the peoples toward independence.

When Zimbabwe was elected as the movement's forum for the eighth summit, we also elected the person who would guide the movement during this new period of time, the national hero who led the struggle of his people for liberation, Robert Mugabe. Allow me, esteemed Comrade Mugabe, in the name of Cuba, to associate myself with the atmosphere of respect and sympathy that this meeting affords us all. We are sure that under your sober and experienced direction, the nonaligned countries movement will adopt very important decisions in this summit and will make firm progress toward the future.

At this time I also wish to honor the memory of a great lady who is no longer among us, the unforgettable Indira Gandhi. She led us with wisdom and dignity during the major part of India's mandate. Her atrocious assassination moved us all. We will always remember her with profound respect and gratitude. In paying tribute to her, I must stress what the serene and intelligent leadership of India's Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi has meant to the movement. He knew how to guarantee the movement's independence and maintain our unity during difficult times. Under his sound leadership, we have advanced with success toward this summit.

Our world is facing two mortal and unprecedented dilemmas, peace or total self-destruction, a just international economic order or the most frightening destiny for the immense majority of the peoples on earth, who are represented in this forum, even if there were peace. The Third World countries will have to share the worst of the two dilemmas. We can be swept away from the face of earth in a war for which we will have the least responsibility and in which we will not have any participation. We could be crushed by hunger and poverty for the sake of a world economic order which was not created by us, and which emerged and developed in spite of us and against us.

Many years ago I said at the United Nations: Let the philosophy of looting end and the philosophy of war will cease. The conquering and colonization carried out in past centuries at the expense of the peoples of America, Africa, and Asia by a handful of European superpowers which violated, killed, assassinated in mass, uprooted from their lands millions of persons to enslave them, extracted all the gold and silver possible from the bowels of our soil, and processed innumerable tons of sugar, coffee, cacao, tea, cotton, and other wealth from the sweat of the slaves for the enjoyment of colonial societies were inspired in that philosophy of looting, plundering, and exploitation of other peoples. In that manner emerged capitalism, dripping blood from every pore, and later on imperialism and neocolonialism emerged. This does not have to be studied in any book on Marxism because it has been written with indelible prints on the flesh of all our peoples. What is underdevelopment if not a direct result of that historic plundering? From the philosophy of looting, from the old system of distribution, and the new attempts to distribute the world among imperialist superpowers resulted two world wars which cost humankind rivers of blood. On that same philosophy imperialism today inspires itself by unleashing the greatest arms race ever recorded by history.

The developed capitalist powers are not satisfied with our loss of natural resources, primary resources, markets, and inexpensive handiwork. They sell their products at a higher price each time and pay miserable prices for our products. They do not reject the practice of systematic stripping [despojo] of our economies. They are not satisfied with the existance of new forms of production and distribution of social riches which are not their old and rotten capitalism. Finally, they are not satisfied with the true national independence of the old colonies and the peoples' liberation movement. In essence, therein lies the cause of the enormous accumulation of nuclear arsenals, strategic rockets, long-range bombers, gigantic aircraft carriers, battleships, submarines, rapid-strike forces, and imperialist military bases everywhere. Therein lies the cause of the excessive enthusiasm for using weapons in space, and one day man will not be able to see the scars without his vision being shadowed by the idea of the deadly arsenal of nuclear weapons, lasers, particle beams [haces de particulas], and similar artifacts revolving all around him. No country will feel secure. Those weapons in the sky have no purpose other than to take possession of the goods of man on earth.

Also because of this, they categorically deny recognizing the rights of the sea elaboratored and agreed upon by the majority of the international community. They want all the ocean waters for themselves and all the minerals within reach of their sophisticated technologies.

No one should find it unusual to call a spade a spade. If the United States attains military supremacy in the world, to which it outrageously aspires, everyone here knows that their oil, iron, cooper, chrome, bauxite, rubber, lead, zinc, and other natural resources and raw materials would again be divided among the capitalist superpowers to satisfy their insatiable desire for consumption, while we would not have a single weapon with which to defend ourselves. This did occur at the beginning of the oil crisis simply because a new correlation of forces developed in the world when socialism emerged and more than 100 countries freed themselves from the colonialist yoke.

Cuba, member of the Nonaligned Movement and one of its founders, is proud of its condition as a socialist country. Essentially, socialism is foreign to war [el socialismo por esencia es ajeno a la guerra] and to the exploitation of the sweat and natural resources of other peoples. Socialism does not need foreign investments, or bases abroad, or military bases beyond its borders, or distribution of the world. It does not need to produce arms to step up the economy and enrich monopolies. It knows perfectly well that resources can be and should be invested in factories, hospitals, schools, housing, centers of recreation and culture, and other more noble projects.

The heaviest burden imposed by imperialism on socialism is arms expenditures. Our country, just a few miles from the United States, knows this perfectly well. In this supreme and decisive hour for all peoples, it is imperialism, and not socialism, which refuses to end nuclear arms tests and which rejects the only coherent, logical, and acceptable policy for humankind. Ceasing the arms race, prohibiting chemical arms and other means of mass destruction, significantly reducing the number of conventional weapons, and initiating a program for the total elimination of nuclear arms in the shortest time possible are the most heartfelt aspirations of not only the men building socialism, but of all responsible and sensible persons on earth.

The nightmare burdening the entire human race should cease. It is not possible to talk about security for anybody in a world whose extermination is a real possibility any time of day or night. If humankind should play any role in the events determining its own existence, then it, through the international community and including the peoples of the imperialist countries themselves, will make these objectives prevail.

Peace is one of our movement's most sacred duties. No one is exempt from such an obligation. In the recent meeting held in Mexico by a group of six eminent international personalities, they said the struggle for peace is a task not only of the great superpowers, but of all nations in the world. Humanity could and should be able to impose peace. The Nonaligned Movement, with its immense prestige and political might, could and should make a decisive contribution in that direction.

The other moral dilemma overwhelming us -- the economic problem -- is also threatening our survival but, in this case, all the Third World countries are almost exclusive victims. That is why we not only need peace, but also the resources used in war and for the destruction of man should be invested in the economic and social development of the world, first of all, in countries historically looted, yesterday's colonies, today's new colonies. However, military expenses which surpassed $650 billion at the time of the 1983 New Delhi summit in 1985 amounted to the fabulous amount of $850 billion, despite the fact that today's nuclear arsenal is equal to nearly 16 billion tons of TNT. After World War II, in almost 40 years, $17 trillion has been spent on military expenditures. This amount is many times greater than would have been required to bring all the Third World countries together out of underdevelopment.

Today there would be no hungry people, no undernourished, no illiterates, no sick people, no unemployed, of the hundreds and thousands of millions of persons on our planet. Today our countries would not have a gigantic foreign debt of almost $1 trillion which, even though overwhelmingly high, represents only 5.8 percent of postwar arms expenditures.

As I said after the sixth summit before the United Nations, one noise made by weapons, threatening language, and arrogance in the international scene should end. Enough is enough concerning the illusion that world problems can be solved with nuclear arms. Bombs might kill the hungry, the sick, the ignorant, but they cannot end hunger, diseases, ignorance. They cannot end the just rebelliousness of the peoples; and, in the holocaust, the rich will also die. They are the ones who can be hurt the most in this world.

There can be no development if there is no peace, and there can be no peace if there is no development for the immense majority of the peoples on the earth. However, the reality is that we are being exploited increasingly more mercilessly. What we import from the developed capitalist world, whether a truck, a tractor, a locomotive, an industrial component, a factory, medicine, medical equipment, a small spare part, whatever, is increasingly costly. What we export is paid for at lower and lower prices. Excluding oil, the privilege of a very few countries which also have difficulties today, we have to deliver three times, four, and even six times more sugar, tea, coffee, cacao, henequen, copra, iron, bauxite, copper, et cetera for the same product we were importing 30 years ago.

Today there is more unequal trade, protectionism, dumping [word rendered in English], unfair competition, control of the markets by the transnationals, higher interest rates, capital flight toward the great U.S. and European financial centers, and more manipulation of international finances by the imperialist superpowers than ever before in history. The price we pay as neocolonies is much higher than even the one we were paying when we were colonies. I do not want to burden you with statistics, but I ask that you allow me to cite some of then to illustrate this tragic situation:

The foreign debt, which in 1977 amounted to $373 billion, in 1985, only 8 years later, amounted to nearly three times that figure, $950 billion. Between 1981 and 1985, the Third World countries paid more than $300 billion in interest and $526 billion for total debt service. In 1985 Africa spent 30 percent of its export income on debt servicing, and Latin America spent 44 percent. Between 1980 and 1985, the Third World countries lost $104 billion because of the terms of unfavorable trade, and $120 billion because of excesses in interest rates.

The drop in prices of basic products forced those countries, in 1985, to deliver 25 percent more goods than what was supplied in 1980 to obtain the same amount of imports. In 1979, 40.2 percent of the international financial flow was directed toward the Third World countries, but in 1985 they only received 10.3 percent. The United States, the richest and most developed country in the world, which in 1980 received 6.1 percent of that flow, in 1985, received 24.2 percent. The amounts lost because of capital flight, chronic inflation, high interest rates offered by U.S. banks, and lack of stability in the countries are incalculable. The money for the colossal U.S. rearmament, "star wars," the gigantic budgetary deficits, enormous trade imbalances, the aggressive policies, and other stupidities had to come from somewhere.

The IMF, the financial gendarme of imperialism, categorically demands Third World countries to terminate fiscal deficits and trade imbalances, reduce education and health expenditures, eliminate state investments, depreciate the currency, raise prices of consumer goods and services, suspend restrictions to free importation, in other words to burden the people, already impoverished and weakened, with the weight of the debt and crisis. However, in Washington, just a few blocks from the IMF headquarters, is the White House, the residence of the U.S. Government, which has provoked one most fabulous fiscal and commercial deficits in the history of the world.

The IMF has never sent a single expert there to demand the end of the fiscal deficit, trade imbalance, protectionism, dumping, high interest rates, manipulation of the dollar, and other infamous and fateful practices for world economy. The IMF does not send experts to countries of the European Economic Community which flood the world with subsidized agricultural products in unfair competition with Third World countries with a selfishness that borders on insanity.

The United States is rearming with the world's money, and the IMF remains silent. The United States lives and spends far more than its own production at the expense of the world economy, and the IMF remains silent. That is the economic order that has been imposed on us.

With the aid of mathematics, we have examined all variants that have been suggested to solve the debt problem, with current interest rates or lower interest rates, with new credits or without new credits, with payment limits tied to exports or without limits, with moratorium or without moratorium, and even in the case of a supposed sustained development at a fast pace, practically a utopia. The result of all examinations is that the debt, like an enormous and monstrous cancer whose malignant cells multiply at an accelerated rate, tends to reproduce and grow infinitely.

We decided to estimate how much time a man would need to count the Latin American foreign debt at the rate of a dollar per second. The result was more than 12,000 years. Today there is a fashionable and worrisome disease called acquired immunodeficiency syndrome. Well, the Third World foreign debt is the AIDS of the world economy.

Based on mathematic calculations and sober reflections on the problem, we reached the conclusion that the Third World countries' foreign debt is unpayable and uncollectible. It constitutes, for those countries, a political, economic, and moral impossibility. Our countries are not debtors but creditors. Capitalism and its development was financed with the blood, sweat, and wealth of the colonies in Asia, Africa, and Latin America. With the trade imbalance, they have stolen much more from us than the total amount of the debt. Protectionism and dumping are blocking our exports and bankrupting our peoples. A large part of the money lent to us fled back to the Western financial centers without providing any type of progress for our peoples.

The high interest rates multiply our already burdensome load. The debt must be erased. The governments of creditor countries should make themselves responsible for the debt with their own banks, and there would be no need for new taxes or sacrifices for the depositers or contributors of those countries. Less than 15 percent annually of the present military expenditures suffices to retire, in a not very long time, that debt. The world economy could only come out of the crisis with the abolition of the debt and the New International Economic Order, which has already been approved by the United Nations but never implemented.

By annually raising by hundreds of thousands of millions of dollars the purchasing power of the Third World, international trade would multiply, the industries of the developed capitalist countries themselves would be in full production, and would help them to mitigate their worse tragedy, chronic and growing unemployment. To demonstrate that the resources are there, suffice it to say that in 1986 the developed capitalist countries will save no less than $120 billion with the reduction of oil prices.

That amount would be sufficient to service the Third World countries' foreign debt this year. The less than one-third of one annual expenditures wasted in the military sphere would be sufficient to abolish the debt and face up to the cost of the New International Economic Order. For that reason, peace, disarmament, elimination of the foreign debt, and the New International Economic Order are inseparable.

If the statesmen of developed capitalist countries are incapable of seeing this, they would be acknowledging the anachronism, selfishness, and all the irrationality contained in their won economic and social system as well as their total incompetence in contributing to the solution of the problems of today's world.

We cannot sit back and do nothing. We must demand solutions, because we have the right to survive the dangers threatening us, and to live with dignity and peace. Jose Marti, the Cuban national hero, said something which could become this meeting's slogan: Rights are seized, they are not asked for; they are snatched, they are not begged for.

We represent the immense majority of humankind and should not beg for our right to life. We must be capable of snatching them.

Distinguished chiefs of state and government: The young states and national liberation movements attend these summits with the hope that their just causes will be defended. Very few times have so many expectations been brought to the attention of our meeting. From our continent have come representatives of El Salvador's FMLN, Guatemala's National Revolutionary Union, the courageous and militant people of President Allende. In El Salvador there have been more than 50,000 dead, victims of a ferocious repression. Guatemala, a country where there have been no cases of political prisoners, has reported 80,000 disappeared during the military regimes that followed the overthrow of the Arbenz government by the CIA in 1954. In Chile there have been thousands of murdered persons, disappeared, a people brutally repressed but willing to triumph over fascism. In Grenada, a country invaded to crush a revolution that had already liquidated itself; in Puerto Rico, a piece of Latin America colonized and occupied; in Paraguay, a fascist dictatorship which has already lasted more than 30 years.

Those are some examples of the fruit of U.S. meddling in our mistreated continent. In Latin America, wherever a genocide and corrupt government emerges, was the presence and support of the United States. Wherever there is a social reform, wherever the peoples want to be truly free, hostility, blockade, and aggression by the United States are always present.

Cuba, where a piece of its soil is still occupied by the United States and where it has endured thus far more than 25 years of brutal economic blockade, is an exceptional witness to this reality. Nicaragua, however, is the most recent and eloquent example of this brutal policy of the empire. It suffered almost 50 years of Somozist tyranny, a fruit of yankee military intervention. They had one closest and fullest support of the United States. The new Nicaragua, a fruit of its children's heroism, is enduring a dirty and blodfaced war of aggression. Its economy has been blockaded, its ports are mined. Thousands of mercenaries in the service of a foreign superpower invade its soil from Honduras, which has been transformed into a sanctuary for the counterrevolution, a foreign military base, and the U.S. Government's stepping-stone for attacking a brother nation. The dirty U.S. war has cost Nicaragua tens of thousands of lives and billions of dollars.

Latin America's efforts to attain peace in Central America through the Contadora group have dashed against the U.S. aim of mercilessly destroying the Sandinist revolution and liquidating the liberation movement in Central America. Openly and shamelessly as a slap in the face of the peoples of Latin America and the rest of the world, the U.S. Government recently adopted a budget of $100 million to continue its bloody adventure against Nicaragua, tramping on the verdict of the Hague international tribunal which categorically condemned such U.S. actions. But everything will be useless; there will never be a force capable of crushing the indomitable spirit and heroism of the Nicaraguan people, even if the tragic lesson of Vietnam has to be repeated there.

Nicaragua has offered its hospitable and heroic soil as the seat of the ninth summit. Supporting it would be a gesture of solidarity. Today Nicaragua is not only a symbol of the struggle for independence of a Central American country, it is also a symbol of the struggle for independence of the peoples of an entire continent, a symbol of the right of any Third World country to own its own destiny.

The British occupation of the Malvinas, territory of the Republic of Argentina, constitutes an affront to the American peoples. Latin American blood was shed there in a struggle against a NATO superpower which, as expected, had the support of the United States. Let no one be confused over the Malvinas: No nation has emerged there, as is the case of Guyana and Belize. There is no community there that longs for independence or autonomy. A handful of British people live there, people who feel British and who want to continue being British. It is a colonial enclave, a foreign possession, an occupied territory that must be returned to Argentina.

The Peruvian people have been victims of arbitrary IMF measures and are worthy of our most determined support. Panama expects our continuing support so that the Canal agreements are respected. Bolivia demands and deserves support in its just aspiration to an exit to the sea through territory that used to belong to it.

The Latin American peoples, in their yearning for freedom, in their just causes, expect the support and solidarity of the Nonaligned Movement.

In the Middle East and North Africa, Cuba has supported, is supporting, and will always support the just cause of the Arab peoples, victims of the imperialist and Zionist aggression. It firmly supports the OET [no further expansion] and makes the noble cause of the Palestinian people and their right to independence to their own motherland and national state. Ignorance of their rights cannot go on forever and peace will never be achieved in the Middle East so long as such monstruous injustices still remain.

We should support the sovereignty, unity, and peace of the courageous Lebanese people, Cyprus' integrity, and the selfless and admirable struggle of the Western Sahara people for their unquestionable and undeniable right to national independence. It is difficult to explain why the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic has not yet been incorporated into our movement. This country's people are fighting against the most modern weapons being supplied by Yankee imperialism to the foreigners occupying its territory.

The Arab nation of Libya recently was subject to a Nazi-type, treacherous and criminal lashing of ice people by the United States. We have witnessed how the U.S. Government is capable of using its most sophisticated arms to attempt to assassinate a chief of state and all his family. Our movment should energetically condemn such terrorist and infamous practices.

The war between Iraq and Iran, two member states of our movement, should never have begun. Unfortunately, all efforts aimed at finding a solution to this difficult and complex conflict have been futile. We should not stop our effort to attain peace there because of it, however, but should repair as much as possible the damage and wounds caused by that fraticidal conflict.

We wish to express our determined support for an all-out effort to find a politically negotiated solution to the problem of Afghanistan, based on the strictest respect for the country's sovereignty. Likewise, we support with all our strength the DPRK in its just and sacred struggle for the peaceful reunification of the country, artifically divided and partly occupied by the United States. We have said very clearly that the next Olympic Games should be shared by North and South Korea. Should it not be done this way, our country will not participate in that event, irresponsibly conceived to accredit one of the most repressive and discredited regimes in the world, totally ignoring the DPRK. Solidarity with that brother country in such legitimate aspiration should be made known.

Likewise, we join the just demand for an Indian Ocean free of foreign naval bases and nuclear arms.

I have left for the end of my speech, the issue of southern Africa.

We find ourselves here, not too many miles away from the sinister system of apartheid. On the other side of the border with Zimbabwe, toward the south, more than 25 million persons, the immense majority of the country's population, live deprived of the most essential conditions of human beings. From there comes news every day of atrocious murders perpetrated against the people.

More than 4 decades since the defeat of fascism and its racist theories, at a cost of the lives of more than 40 million persons, and on the threshold of the 21st century, a state is segregating its citizens and bases, its policies on racial discrimation. Added to that, racism is one most ferocious economic exploitation of the oppressed, discriminated against, and segregated masses. Apartheid is the direct result of the colonial system, of the brutal form with which the African peoples were forcefully deprived of their lands and natural resources, and their children enslaved and sold around the world.

Apartheid has been able to remain in power only because of the support given to it by the United States and NATO countries, which see in South Africa' a strategic ally, a source of raw materials, a market for their investments and juicy profits of the transnationals at the cost of the sweat and blood of millions of Africans. The U.S. Administration categorically refuses to accept economic sanctions against South Africa and systematically vetoes all agreements of the UN Security Council which would affect the Pretoria regime, while it increasingly blockades with greater rage small progressive or revolutionary countries such as Cuba, Nicaragua, Vietnam, Libya, and the DPRK.

Stimulated by the support offered by the U.S. Government's constructive engagement policy, South Africa not only challenges the entire world with continuing and hardening apartheid, but also maintains the occupation of Namibia and checks the independence of that colonized country in open disrespect for all UN resolutions and agreements. South Africa is organizing mercenary bands to destabilize the United States [as heard] and is carrying out surprise and treacherous attacks against Lesotho, Botswana, Zimbabwe, Zambia, and Angola. By continuously supporting subversive groups, South Africa has not complied with the Komati agreement it has with Mozambique.

The United States is using these subversive, destabilizing plans and introducing in Africa the ill-fated methods practiced in Latin America by openly and shamelessly aiding the UNITA [National Union for the Total Independence of Angola] bands in Angola. UNITA has a long history of cooperation with colonialists and imperialists. it was created by the Portuguese political police during the Angolan war of independence to sabotage the patriotic forces. South Africa tried to destroy Angolan independence and dismember the country in 1975 with UNITA cooperation. During the past 10 years, South Africa has used UNITA as an instrument in its dirty war against Angola.

When we were children, they told us in school that two things -- as well as a third -- were equal. Upon hoisting the same flag used by the UNITA bands and giving them common support, the U.S. and South African Governments express their similarity in ideas and proposals and they are on an equal level. What differences can there be between the Washington and Pretoria policies?

The U.S. Government considers the Palestinians -- evicted from the lands they occupied for thousands of years -- the admirable Saharan combatants, the brave ANC [African National Congress] fighters, the SWAPO [South-West African People's Organization] patriots, and the heroic Salvadoran and Chilean revolutionaries to be terrorists worthy of extermination. However, the UNITA bandits have destroyed entire villages of defenseless civilians without distinguishing among women, men, and children.

The mercenary Somozist bands, who serve a foreign power, are rogues who oppose any kind of peoples' and progressive process, but the imperialist government considers them to be distinguished patriots and strugglers for independence, worthy of U.S. aid. Is this or is this not facism? Is this or is this not racism? Is this or is this not cyncism?

Our solidarity with the African liberation movement and its heroic confrontations with imperialism, apartheid, and racism is not soley verbal. In the struggles against Portuguese colonialism, Cuban revolutionaries fought together with Amilcar Cabral and Agostinho Neto in Guinea-Bissau and Angola. Some of them gave their lives to that noble cause. When South Africa invaded Angola in 1975, occupying more than half of its territory, and despite the fact that an ocean separates Cuba from Angola, Cuban internationalist combatants along with their heroic Angolan brothers struggled against racist troops and drove them more than 800 km to the Namibian border, demonstrating to the world that South African soldiers, like Hitler's, are far from invincible. Despite the enormous effort this implies for our small country, a contingent exceeding tens of thousands of Cuban internationalist combatants have kept guard for 10 years along with the glorious Angolan Armed Forces to prevent the 1975 event from being repeated.

Our cooperation with Africa is not just military. More than 15,000 African youth study in our country without cost to them. Thousands of Cuban doctors, teachers, technicians, and workers give their services freely in this continent. More than 250,000 of our compatriots have completed missions in Africa as combatants or civilian collaborators.

This expression of solidarity, which is totally disinterested, disturbs the dreams of the Yankee imperialists and South African racists. They cannot conceive that countries that were conquered, colonized, and enslaved yesterday could today give such cooperation and raise a powerful barrier against aggression. The Yankee imperialists as well as the South African racists are doing everything possible so that Cuban Internationalist troops are withdrawn from Angola, making this a requirement for Namibian independence.

The Cuban and Angolan Governments have responded in joint agreement: Apply UN Resolution 435 on Namibia; cease the threats of aggression against Angola; cease the dirty war and support of the mercenary bands and the gradual and progressive withdrawal of 20,000 Cuban combatants who hold strategic lines in southern Angola will follow. The rest of the Cuban military personnel will be withdrawn only when the sovereign Governments of Angola and Cuba decide it is convenient and unconditional.

The real key to the matter is that, so long as apartheid exists in South Africa, so long as that country is governed by a racist and fascist government, there will be no security for Angola or any other country in southern Africa, and Namibia's independence will be nothing but a fiction. That is why I can state categorically that the presence of Cuban troops in Angola is based on principles; it is not motivated by any type of Cuba's national interest or prestige. When apartheid ceases to exist, when the fascist and racist regime of South Africa ceases to exist, no country will feel threatened.

Namibia will immediately be independent. Then there will be no need for a single Cuban soldier and the immediate and total withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola will take place. Of course, Angola, whose sovereignty we respect and will always respect with absolute loyalty, can decide at any time if it needs our military personnel there. What I have expressed is simply our decision to maintain the troops in Angola so long as apartheid exists in South Africa. [applause]

I am sure that our summit, as an essential part of its contribution to the struggle for peace, development, justice, and our world's security, will give all its endorsement and immense political and moral support to the oppressed peoples of South Africa and Namibia, and its decisive contribution to the final battle against apartheid will be recorded by history. This monstrous regime cannot be reformed; it must be destroyed. Today it finds itself in insurmountable crisis. To the African National Congress and its selfless combatants and men and women of the heroic stock of Nelson and Winnie Mandela belong the glory of having inspired the unyielding struggle of the South African people and having demonstrated before the world that today, like yesterday, like tomorrow, and like always nothing will stop the march of history and no force in the world will be capable of chaining indefinitely human dignity and freedom. [applause] Thank you.

PRESIDENT SAYS OLYMPICS REQUIRES BOTH KOREAS

FL040032 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 2333 GMT 3 Sep 86

[Text] Harare, 3 Sep (ASIN-NOTIMEX) -- Cuban President Fidel Castro has said that his country will attend the upcoming Olympic Games only if they are shared by North and South Korea.

The Cuban leader noted that the olympics should be shared inasmuch as that event was irresponsibly organized to please one of the most repressive and unpopular regimes in the world. Castro added that the decision was made by completely ignoring the People's Democratic Republic of Korea and said solidarity with that country in its legitimate efforts should be made evident.

HAVANA COMMENTARY BACKS MANAGUA AS SUMMIT SITE

PA031310 Havana International Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 1 Sep 86

["Our America" commentary read by Norberto Hernandez]

[Text] The signs of solidarity and support Nicaragua has been receiving through its president, Daniel Ortega, who toured several African nations prior to his arrival in Zimbabwe, make one think of the possible failure of U.S. maneuvers to prevent Managua from becoming the site of the Ninth Nonaligned Summit.

Argentina and Peru, both members and possible candidates for hosting the 1989 meeting, have publicly stated that they will not block the Nicaraguan request because they feel Managua's nomination would greatly contribute to a political relief of the Central American crisis.

Nicaragua became a full member of the Nonaligned Movement in 1979, only a few months after the revolutionary triumph and during the Sixth Summit, which was held in Havana.

Nicaragua's presence in the movement gave renewed force to Latin American representation. Nicaragua's presence represented a people who had just been freed from a prolonged pro-North American tyranny and who had profound patriotic convictions as well as an excellent record in the service of the revolutionary cause. All this was in addition to a firm anti-imperialist and anticolonialist spirit, as well as love for peace and respect for the nonintervention principle.

The open U.S. aggression against Nicaragua, the growing U.S. presence in Central America, and Reagan's demented determination to put an end to the Sandinist process before he ends his second term have seriously complicated the problems of the region.

Central America is now one of the most critical and explosive areas on the planet and the Nonaligned Movement has ascertained this with particular concern.

In July 1983, at an emergency meeting, the Nonaligned Movement's Coordinating Bureau rejected both U.S. support for the armed counterrevolutionaries who have bases in Honduras and Costa Rica and Washington's efforts to foil the Contadora negotiations. In addition, the constant U.S. military exercises in Honduran territory were also condemned.

A year later, in March, the Nonaligned Movement condemned Washington's mining of Nicaraguan ports and the increasingly open White House sabotage of peace negotiations in the area. Last year, the Central American crisis was a reason for concern by more than 100 nonaligned nations. They were also concerned abut the intensification of U.S. maneuvers against the Contadora peace negotiations. Such maneuvers prompted the thwarting of efforts to sign a regional document, which was eventually only accepted by Managua, as a praiseworthy sign of its goodwill.

A declaration was approved in New Delhi from 16 to 19 April 1986, according to which the Nonaligned Movement clearly criticized the aggressive actions of the United States against the integrity and independence of Nicaragua.

In July, the Movement demanded that the United States abide by the ruling of the International Court of Justice which called for an end to U.S. aggressiveness against Nicaragua.

These actions show the constant concern of the Nonaligned Movement over a very explosive crisis. To allow Nicaragua to host the ninth summit would materialize the support given to the Sandinist revolution and would seriously contribute to finding political solutions in a region that many identify as a powder keg.

GRENADA

FORMER NNP MEMBER TO WORK WITH OPPOSITION

FL031846 Bridgetown CANA in English 1554 GMT 3 Sep 86

[Text] St Georges, Grenada, Sept. 3 CANA -- Phinsley St Louis, who quit the ruling New National Party (NNP) two weeks ago, has promised to work with other members of the opposition to evolve a common position on parliamentary issues.

St Louis, who served as deputy speaker of the House until his resignation, rejected charges from the NNP that he resigned because of dissatisfaction with his role in the party and government. ... I have never shown any desire of any ill-feeling as I have not been in a ministry, [said] St Louis, reacting to claims by NNP General Secretary Keith Mitchell that he quit because he disapproved of the level of esteem he enjoyed in the party.

St Louis said he would like to give up the position of Deputy Speaker to defend the democratic system more fully...from the floor of the House. But he said he would be careful in aligning himself with any other political party, even though he described his relations with other opposition members of the parliament as good.

I would hold discussions with them and, together, I hope we would be able to work to structure something so that when we go to parliament, we would be able to see things alike, St Louis added.

JAMAICA

MANLEY CHALLENGES SEAGA TO GENERAL ELECTIONS

FL021612 Bridgetown in English 1502 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Text] Kingston, Jamaica, Sept 2, CANA -- Opposition political leader Michael Manley has challenged Prime Minister Edward Seaga to test his government's popularity in a geneal election followng Seaga's attempt to downplay his party's defeat in July's municipal vote.

Seaga claimed that the ruling Jamaica Labour Party (JLP) lost recent municipal elections here only because thousands of JLP supporters declined to vote. Manley said in a statement that Seaga's assumption could be tested only by democratic elections. That test cannot be ignored because of assumptions, the People's National Party (PNP) leader said. It can only be passed or failed through a national examination by the people in the form of general elections.

In the local government elections, the PNP won 12 of the 13 municipal authorities, gaining 57 per cent of the popular vote on a 64 per cent voter-turn-out. But addressing a seminor here Friday of the Caribbean Democrat Union of which he is chairman, Seaga argued that the PNP's victory was not as significant as it appeared. The CDR is a grouping of rightist parties in the region.

According to Seaga, JLP supporters had stayed away from the polls to send the party a signal. Seaga said that in the July 29 vote the PNP hardly gained on the 350,000 votes it received in 1980 when the JLP was swept to power. The JLP total of 271,000 votes was well down on the 502,000 it gained in 1980. The 230,000 voters who this time did not cast their ballots for the JLP were sending their government a signal, said Seaga, who has recently relaxed unpopular austere economic policies. Communications is a two-way street, he said. In the process of dialogue, the people must be able to send their government a message and the government must respond. Seaga said he had asked his parliamentarians and party workers to do a survey of all constituencies and polling divisions to find out exactly why there was a low vote for the JLP. Seaga's claim that the PNP went all out in the election while his party did not put out much effort has also raised eyebrows here.

Analysts point out that Seaga and senior ministers, like top PNP officials, tramped the country during the campaign, bringing the atmosphere of a general election rather than a local government affair. They also pointed out that both parties spent heavily in media advertisement. Manley, in his statement, said he could understand Seaga making excuses for the defeat. If Mr Seaga's respect for democracy is not merely lip service, he must therefore obey the clear demand of the people and resign, Manley said.

SEAGA DEFIES IMF STRATEGIES FOR DEVELOPMENT

FL292354 Bridgetown CANA in English 2322 GMT 29 Aug 86

[Text] Kingston, Jamaica, Aug 29, CANA -- Prime Minister Edward Seaga today said Jamaica had deliberately run up its U.S. 70 million dollar payment arrears to the International Monetary Fund (IMF) as part of negotiating strategy for a new three-year agreement with the fund. Seaga, declaring that the fund had not had a single success story for its programmes, said that Jamaica has no intention of being added to the tombstone of IMF failures.

The prime minister's remarks to Life underwriters was the government's first response to news out of Washington this week of serious problems between the IMF and Jamaica over the arrears dating back to April. This week, opposition leader Michael Manley called for the resignation of the government.

Fund and U.S. multilateral agency officials were also concerned with Seaga's abandonment of his May budget of economic austerity measures. His move was in defense of a mission from the IMF, World Bank, and U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) invited by Seaga to take a fresh look at the economy. Seaga was hoping that the mission would have agreed with the government's plan for expansion instead of the IMF's adjustments of tight demand management.

By its action, the Jamaica Government had in effect thrown out the U.S. 115 million dollar agreement signed in July last year with U.S. 73 million dollars still undrawn, bankers said. This held implications for Jamaica's relations with international creditors and plans to reschedule some of its U.S. 3.2 billion dollar foreign debt.

The prime minister said Jamaican officials had established that the missions report was riddled with errors of calculation and errors of assumptions. The end result is that today our discussions with the three agencies are based on a three-year programme prepared and submitted to them by the Government of Jamaica, and I go to Washington next week to conclude these discussions which have been going over the past several weeks, Seaga said. Let it be noted, he added, that the substantial accumulation of payment arrears built up the with IMF is a deliberate part of our strategy with the IMF.

Seaga said a single point separated the IMF and nis government from reaching an agreement. Without being specific, he said it was a point, however, on which he would not compromise. ...(It is a point on) which the IMF cannot on any basis justify and therefore the government needs to be equalled though in maintaining our position. This I intend to be, the prime minister said. The difference is believed to revolve around Fund demands for a further devaluation of the local dollar and for more cuts in public sector jobs.

Over the past three years, Seaga has chopped over 10,000 public sector jobs and the Jamaica dollar has moved from a rate of J1.78 dollars to J5.50 dollars for one U.S. dollar. The government has been arguing that the economy needed no more radical adjustments, and Seaga pointed to government economic reports for the first half of this year to show the economy was ready for growth. The stock market was booming, inflation was on the decline, he said. The central bank has reported that for the first half of the year the economy recorded a balance of payments surplus of U.S. 117 million dollars compared with a deficit of U.S. 148.8 million in the first six months of 1985.

This performance reflects a turnaround of U.S. 160 million dollars in our balance of payments and an improvement in the net international reserves of U.S. 126.7 million dollars over the corresponding period last year, Seaga said. But there has also been a fall in export earnings in the first half of the year, a decline in the industrial index of output and the fact that the improved balance of payments owed much to a decline in oil prices and also a compression of overall imports.

I am not attempting to suggest that the performance of all relevant sectors of the economy was as yet at a satisfactory level..., he said. But the fact that this performance provides adequate testimony to the efficacy of the combination of monetary, fiscal, and exchange rate policies which have been employed in bringing the economy to the point at which it stands today.

On the evidence, Seaga argued, the economy was not on a path of growth, not austerity and the IMF is not going to be allowed to change that. He added: The IMF has a consistent list of failures to its credit. It has never had a single case of success, much because it does not know when to shift its strategies from the negative to the positive, as in this case.

Jamaica has no intention of being added to the tombstone of IMF failures.

TURKS AND CAICOS

CANA REPORTS ADVISORY PANEL APPOINTED

FL031853 Bridgetown CANA in English 1651 GMT 3 Sept 86

[Text] Grand Turk, Turks and Caicos, Sept 3, CANA -- Opposition leader Clement Howell is among a four-member panel of advisers to Governor Christopher Turner appointed here in the wake of the assumption of direct rule by Britain.

Other members of the panel are Ariel Missick, a former government minister, Carlos Swan, a lawyer, and another former minister Emmanuel Missick.

The panel has very little power and their advice could be easily overruled by the governor.

Britain dismissed the colony's government in July charging malpractice and unconstitutional behaviour.

OFFICIALS REPORT INCREASE IN INVESTMENTS

FL032239 Bridgetown CANA in English 1946 GMT 3 Sep 86

[Excerpts] Grand Turk, Turks and Caicos Islands, Sept 3, CANA -- Turks and Caicos officials today reported an upsurge in investor interest in the British dependency, a month after the collapse of Chief Minister Nathaniel Francis government amid corruption charges.

Investors are getting the message that now is the best time to come over and the proposals are simply flowing, said Nigel Adams, staff officer at the governor's office.

In the past month, the interim administration headed by Governor Christopher Turner has signed agreements for a number of projects, including construction of a U.S. 10 million dollar Sheraton hotel, expected to start in October, a 25 million dollar marina and shipyard, and another 115 room hotel project. [passage omitted]

Meanwhile, politicians from Francis' former ruling Progressive National Party (PNP) and PDM have closed ranks and are demanding reactivation of the scrapped ministerial system of government.

The legislative council, lawmaking body for the colony, recently had its first sitting since the collapse of the government and officials cited in the report took part in the proceedings. Francis called for the report to be rediscussed. He also said the British Government had made an outrageous attack on his integrity and had taken downright advantage.

Skippings, the deputy PDM leader, said legal proceedings in the form of a court trial would have to be instituted for him to be banned from office. Government officials said a clarification of this issue is expected shortly, as well as the composition of the constitution review commission. [passage omitted]

ALFONSIN: NATION 'DEFENDS' NONALIGNED MEETING

PY042251 Buenos Aires TELAM in Spanish 0012 GMT 4 Sep 86

[Text] Buenos Aires, 3 Sep (TELAM) -- President Raul Alfonsin said today that during his stay in Zimbabwe, Argentina established its position and showed its concern on topics of particular interest, such as the Malvinas and Antarctic issues. Argentina also strongly defended the founding principles of the Nonaligned Movement.

This is what the president said tonight, shortly after his return to Ezeiza Airport from the Eighth summit meeting of the Nonaligned Movement. He added: The trip was tiring but everything went very well.

I think we have made our position known, he continued, we concerned ourselves with topics that particularly interest Argentina, obviously the Malvinas and Antarctic issues. We have established our position and once again expressed ourselves strongly in defense of the founding principles of nonalignment.

Asked if he believed Argentine efforts to help the Nonaligned Movement would succeed, Alfonsin answered: It is the Argentine position that is a movement of nonaligned countries, so if we accept its original basic institutions, we have to believe this.

About his meetings with heads of state of other countries during his stay in Harare, Alfonsin said: We discussed the general topics of the meeting, everything was important.

The ceremony of resuming the presidential powers that Alfonsin had delegated to Vice-President Victor Martinez before leaving on 31 August, took place at 2030 GMT in the VIP room at the airport.

Dispute With Peru

PY041921 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1517 GMT 4 Sep 86

[Text] Harare, 4 Sep (EFE) -- Peru and Argentine last night confronted each other in a committee, headed by Peru, which wrote the draft economic resolution of the Eighth Nonaligned Summit. Sources close to the Argentine delegation have expressed their "profound displeasure" over the economic committee's approval of an amendment proposed by the PLO.

The approved amendment opposes "any effort to give the occupying power, Israel, the status of member of any regional economic commission under the United Nations.

According to sources close to the Argentine Delegation, the amendment was approved by "mechanisms used by the presidency" of the committee which is headed by Peru. The same sources indicated that the amendment "contradicts the UN Charter."

The Peruvian president of the committee, Oswaldo Rivero, however, said that the amendment was submitted when the main Argentina delegate left the room and that the other member said nothing when the president asked if there was any opposition.

Rivero said he was very pleased with the work of the economic committee which this morning finished the final text of the resolution. Rivero also indicated that the committee was quick in discussing the issue thanks "to a work method that did work," in that it did not allow "diplomacy of paragraphs, only diplomacy of concept."

TV CHANNEL REPORTS ARREST OF CREW IN CHILE

PY050159 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0120 GMT 5 Sep 86

[Text] Buenos Aires, 4 Sep (EFE) -- The Argentina TV network ATC [Argentina Televisora Color] of Buenos Aires, tonight reported that "its news team was arrested in Santiago while covering the development of the Drive for Democracy."

During its newscast, "Hora 21" -- the TV network -- reported that "journalist Gjillermo Canepa, cameraman Mario Fazio, and assistant Jose Perez were first attacked this afternoon by repressive forces which are deployed along Santiago streets, and then arrested."

According to the report: "After an incident in downtown Santiago, the members of the ATC team went to the Pudahuel Airport in order to send to Buenos Aires the video recordings of today's incidents so they could be broadcast during this evening's newscast."

The newscast "Hora 21" indicated: "None of the airlines wanted to take the responsibility of taking the news material out of Santiago. But finally, our colleagues managed to get in touch with Eastern airlines, whose personnel accepted the video recordings."

The newscast announcer said: "Just as the members of our team were talking with an Eastern pilot, they were arrested by police plainclothesmen who also seized their videotapes, cameras, and lighting system." The announcer added: "Cameraman Mario Fazio managed to outwit the severe police surveillance and get in touch with us by phone to report what happened at the airport."

The program "Hora 21" held "the Chilean Government responsible for the physical well-being of Fazio, Canepa, and Perez," and asked the Chilean ambassador in Buenos Aires "to be kind enough to negotiate the immediate release of the Argentine journalists in the Chilean capital."

Anchorman Denies 'Arrest'

PY050254 Buenos Aires TELAM in Spanish 0224 GMT 5 Sep 86

[Text] Buenos Aires, 4 Sep (TELAM) -- Anchorman Carlos Campolongo, of the newscast Hora 21 -- broadcast by ATC [Argentina Televisora Color] -- has explained the reports from Chile on the alleged arrest of three ATC journalists were confusing. He said that first we were told they were under arrest and then that they had just been detained.

Speaking by telephone with TELAM, Campolongo said that at the Pudahuel Airport, when the three journalists -- Guillermo Canepa, Mario Fazio and Jose Perez -- were trying to arrange for someone to carry the material they had filmed to Argentina, they were approached by police. Campolongo said the Chilean policemen confiscated four 20-minute video cassettes and only journalist Guillermo Canepa was detained. He added that the cameraman Mario Fazio managed to avoid police surveillance and went to the Argentin Embassy while the third journalist, Jose Perez, also escaped.

Campolongo explained that after Fazio got in touch with the embassy, the problem was resolved and embassy officials accompanied Fazio to the hotel where he met with his two colleagues and they called up ATC to explain the situation. Campolongo reiterated that the initial confusing information indicated that the three journalists had been arrested. Later it was clarified that only Canepa had been momentarily detained. Campolongo went on to say that the alleged arrest of the journalists had been reported to the Argentine Foreign Ministry but since the incident was clarified the Ministry did not take any action.

During the first part of Hora 21 tonight, Campolongo reported the arrest. But in his telephone conversation with Canepa later, Canepa said he had just been detained. During the later conversation Canepa said he and his colleagues were safe and sound and the video cassettes had been confiscated by the Chilean Armed Forces, which promised to return them tomorrow at 0900 local time.

GENERAL RIOS ERENU DENIES UNEASINESS IN ARMY

PY041519 Buenos Aires NOTICIAS ARGENTINAS in Spanish 1810 GMT 3 Sep 86

[Text] Rosario, 3 Sep (NA) -- Army Chief of Staff General Hector Rios Erenu today reaffirmed there is no uneasiness in the Army, but that there "is concern" over the nation's troubles. He stated that he does not share General Gorleri's reasons for requesting retirement.

Rios Erenu made these statements after swearing in General Ernesto Alais as commander of the II Army Corps.

Before traveling to Rosario, General Rios Erenu had said in Buenos Aires that General Gorleri's statements, "reflected his conscience and beliefs, which I do not share. But nontheless, I appreciate his loyalty and the sincerity of his judgment." Gorleri retired after expressing his disagreement with the handling of the trials of military personnel involved in human rights violations committed during the antisubversive struggle. "General Gorleri's statements reflect his feelings and honesty. His judgment will benefit the Army and the country," Rios Erenu stated.

When asked if there was restlessness among Army personnel, General Rios Erenu said: "We are experiencing the same problems as the rest of the country. We are suffering from the same general circumstances prevailing in the country. As well as with the aggravating circumstances of the antisubversive struggle and the Malvinas war being placed on our shoulders." "Anyway, all of this does not mean that there is restlessness. It means that there is concern. But, we are alert and we will help find the solution that the country really needs," he added.

Rios Erenu described the meeting he held the night before with Defense Minister Horacio Jaunarena as, "a routine meeting we usually hold every Tuesday and during which we specifically discuss subjects related to the situation of the Armed Forces."

Rios Erenu ruled out "any retirements or any reliefs," adding that General Gorleri's case "has nothing to do with the rest of the Army, in which everything is normal."

Commenting on the recent salary increase granted to military personnel, he said: "It was a salary adjustment we have been claiming for a long time."

Rios Erenu reiterated in Rosario that the word uneasiness does not exist in the Army, and stressed: "we are living through a phase of change in which the country is trying to overcome the negative consequences of the past: the political instability and the economic decadence."

He added: "As participants of the last military process, we have the responsibility of making the greatest contribution and sacrifice to reach our much desired objective of consolidating the institutional system and to overcome all the troubles inherited from the past which in some way or another hinder our national reconciliation and future." He pointed out: "Once the past is forgotten, we cannot be impeded from moving faster through the transition period."

General Alais was sworn in as commander of the II Army Corps in a strictly military ceremony that was held at 1100 in the parade ground of the 121st Communications Batallion in the presence of Santa Fe Governor Jose Maria Vernet. The usual formalities of the handing in of the commander's distinctive banner, reviewing the troops, and a final parade were performed during the ceremony.

General Rios Erenu demanded the troops obey the new II Army Corps commander and ended his speech with the words "subordination and courage," to which the soldiers replied, "to defend the country."

After the ceremony, the military authorities and the civilian and political representatives who attended met in the officers' dining hall for a snack.

BEDREGAL: TALKS WITH MINERS 'VERY POSITIVE'

PY050214 La Paz La Red Panamericana in Spanish 0000 GMT 5 Sep 86

[Text] Foreign Minister Guillermo Bedregal has stated that the talks being held with the Trade Union Federation of Bolivian Mineworkers [FSTMB] are very positive. In this regard, Bedregal expressed hope that the problems of the Bolivian mineworkers will be overcome in a few hours.

Asked about the 1,000 mineworkers who are holding a hunger strike in the various state-owned mining districts, the foreign minister said he hopes the talks will help end this measure.

Bedregal reasserted that the government is willing to make the appropriate reviews of the supreme decree establishing the reactivation of Comibol [Mining Corporation of Bolivia].

In conclusion, he stated that the government seeks to save Comibol, not liquidate it, but that the people must understand that the international tin crisis is contributing to the collapse of Comibol and of Bolivian mining.

Lechin Scores Paz, Vows Return

[Text] Paris, 2 Sep (AFP) -- During an interview with AFP in Paris, Bolivian Labor Confederation [COB] leader Juan Lechin Oquendo today said: I can give assurances that despite the difficult situation in Bolivia, the people will again win with the leadership of the glorious Trade Union Federation of Bolivian Mineworkers [FSTMB] and the COB.

Lechin learned of the state of seige in Lima before beginning a European tour, along with COB International Relations Secretary Victor Lopez, at the invitation of the ILO. Lechin, who has already visited Brussels, is now in Paris where he has met with French trade union and political leaders. He will go to the FRG and then to Geneva, where he will hold special meetings with ILO and human rights commission officials. He will also go to Rome, Madrid, Canada, Mexico, and Venezuela.

Lechin harshly criticized the attitude of the Bolivian Government, its refusal to hold talks with representatives of the workers, and the authoritarian character of President Victor Paz Estenssoro, whom he called an irreconcilable enemy of the workers. He added that the crisis will weaken the country, increase its dependency on U.S. imperialism, and worsen the people's famine, which has reached unbearable levels.

The government currently does not have the people's support. The government is being supported by the Congress, which does not supervise its actions; the judicial branch, which follows the dictates of the interior minister; and the repressive forces, Lechin said.

Concerning the tax law, he said: A few weeks ago we held a popular consultation. Despite the fact that we lacked resources, that it was a work day, and that the government tried to sabotage us, 1.4 million people voted. But in the election between Paz Estenssoro and former President Hugo Banzer only 900,000 people voted.

He stressed that Decree No 21060 -- which was enforced by the government thanks to its pact with dictator Banzer -- is completely unconstitutional and violates social laws.

From an economic viewpoint, Lechin said, the crisis dramatically affects all sectors. In the factory sector, dozens of factories have been closed and employment fell from 47,000 workers to 17,000, and it could diminish even further. Wages have been frozen at subhuman levels, and prices are not regulated. He added that the agricultural and livestock sector has also been seriously affected. Unemployment rates have reached levels that were not reached in the 1929 crisis. I dare to predict that the people will not pay the taxes levied by the government because the people will have to choose between paying taxes and giving a glass of milk to their children.

Lechin said: Paz Estenssoro's government has refused to hold talks with us, to listen to our emergency plan to reactivate the economy, a plan that was drawn up by the best experts of the COB and is completely viable. Paz is now calling for morality. However, he does not respect the Constitution and does not demand the same morality from his own ministers. Lechin was referring to the illegal exploitation of gold and silver mines 20 years ago by Planning Minister Gonzalo Sanchez de Losada, and to the $300 million owed to the state by the two transnational companies, which are exploiting the gas and petroleum in Bolivia.

Regarding the struggle against drug trafficking, Lechin said that the people responsible for this are well-known but are not being sought or jailed by the authorities. He demanded the departure of the U.S. troops who arrived in Bolivia to combat drug trafficking because their presence is an attack on the national sovereignty and humiliation of the people and the Bolivian Armed Forces. According to Lechin, the Bolivian Armed Forces by themselves are able to effectively combat drug trafficking.

In conclusion, Lechin stated he will return to Bolivia, perhaps clandestinely. It will not be the first time I have done so, he added. If the state of seige continues I will do my utmost to return to the country with Lopez to participate in the struggle of the workers and the Bolivian people to defend their rights, Lechin stated.

Hunger Strike; More Banishments

PY050424 La Paz La Red Panamericana in Spanish 0000 GMT 5 Sep 86

[Text] More than 700 mineworkers are holding a hunger strike. If repression continues, the talks may fail, FSTMB [Trade Union Federation of Bolivian Mineworkers] leader Simon Reyes said yesterday. He reported the arrest of six delegates who left the mining districts to attend meetings with the government. In the meantime, the human rights commission has reported that over the past few hours six trade union, university, and peasant leaders were banished.

At the present time, there are 64 people banished to inhospitable areas in northeastern Bolivia: 36 in San Joaquin and 28 in Puerto Rico.

Amid the insecurity prevailing among rank-and-file workers and the political parties and trade unions, the Bolivian Catholic Church continues its efforts to pacify the country, asking the government to provide a prompt solution to the problems of the mineworkers because of the shortage of staples, unpaid wages, massive dismissals, etc.

Defense Minister Luis Fernando Valle has accused the Catholic Church of being involved in a subversive plot by the extreme left to overthrow the government of Victor Paz Estenssoro. A similar charge was leveled by the government in Congress against Nicaraguan and Cuban clergymen, who reportedly clandestinely entered Bolivia. The Bolivian Episcopal Conference has sent a letter to the defense minister, asking him to supply evidence that Catholic priests are involved in subversive activities.

Msgr Luis Saenz stated today that we do not accept the comment that the church is subversive. We cannot be involved in political actions, much less in subversive actions because the pastoral agents only supplied humanitarian assistance to our brothers, the mineworkers, to the men who were hungry.

MIR FACTION CHANGES TO 'FREE BOLIVIA MOVEMENT'

PY042238 La Paz La Red Panamericana in Spanish 1700 GMT 4 Sep 86

[Excerpt] In a special ceremony this morning at the Legislative Palace, the MIR (Movement of the Revolutionary Left) faction known as Free Bolivia [MIR Bolivia Libre] changed its name. The ceremony was held in the presence of congressmen, reporters, and militants of that political organization.

As of today, this party is called Free Bolivia Movement [Movimiento Bolivia Libre]. The change is a political decision related to the situation in the country over the past few years.

Explaining this decision, Deputy Alfonso Perrufino stated this name was chosen because when this party was divided by the serious political errors committed by the MIR National Board during the UDP [Democratic and Popular Unity] regime, the objectives of the two factions changed radically.

Continuing with the old name harms the young and dynamic politicians who are supporting Antonio Aranibar in the Free Bolivia Movement, and so the name change has become imperative. [passage omitted]

MINISTERS COMMENT ON ANTIDRUG ACCORD WITH U.S.

PY041607 Brasilia Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 3 Sep 86

[Text] Brazil and the United States will increase their cooperation to fight the trafficking in and production of drugs. They will now take care of the prevention and rehabilitation of drug addicts.

[Begin relay from the Brazilian Foreign Ministry by reporter Carmencita (Corte)] A new arrangement was signed in Brasilia today by Brazilian Foreign Minister Abreu Sodre and the U.S ambassador to Brazil.

The International Organizations Department of the Brazilian Foreign Ministry and the U.S. State Department International Narcotics Matters section will be responsible for implementing the agreement.

The budget for this joint task has still not been defined, but Minister Abreu Sodre stressed that whatever is necessary will be spent.

[Begin Abreu Sodre recording] This great evil has no boundaries. Therefore, we will reach agreements with other countries in order to obtain the most positive results possible.

This is not just a problem of a single country. It is a problem of nearly all the countries of the world. [end recording]

U.S. Ambassador Harry Shlaudeman said that the agreement marks a new phase in the increased cooperation between two countries with the same objective: to reduce drug consumption.

Justice Minister Brossard also participated in the signing ceremony.

[Begin Brossard recording] The agreement signed here today represents more progress in the fight against the drugs and narcotics problem at their different levels. [end recording]

This new cooperation agreement will remain in force for an unlimited time, and once a year the two countries will meet to evaluate the work that is being conducted in fighting drug trafficking and consumption. [end relay]

Meanwhile, Foreign Minister Abreu Sodre today guaranteed that U.S. troops will not participate in the fight against drug trafficking in Brazil as they are in Bolivia. He said that Brazil has sufficient Armed Forces and capacity to fight drug trafficking.

He admitted, however, that the agreement signed with the United States today will give greater freedom of movement for the U.S. agents who operate in Brazil with the Brazilian Federal Police.

NAVY MINISTER DENIES ABILITY TO BUILD ATOMIC BOMB

PY050207 Brasilia Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 4 Sep 86

[Text] Navy Minister Henrique Saboya reasserted today in Rio de Janeiro that there is no definite plan for the production of enriched uranium to be used as fuel for the propulsion of submarines built in Brazil.

The minister stated that studies on nuclear energy being developed by the Navy with the cooperation of scientists at the University of Sao Paulo are aimed at a future project. He added that the fact that a nuclear-propelled submarine is to be built does not mean that Brazil already has the technology to build an atomic bomb.

DEBT RENEGOTIATION STRATEGY BEING PLANNED

PY041615 Rio de Janeiro Rede Globo Television in Portuguese 0210 GMT 4 Sep 86

[Text] A new strategy for the renegotiation of the Brazilian foreign debt is being studied, and Brazil will probably ask for new loans from international banks.

Finance Minister Dilson Funaro today met with Citibank President John Reed. After the meeting, Central Bank President Fernao Bracher stated that Brazil will renegotiate its foreign debt, which totals $105 billion, right after the IMF meeting at the end of this month, and it will seek new loans on the international financial market.

Late in the afternoon, John Reed, president of Brazil's largest creditor bank, paid a visit to President Sarney at Planalto Palace.

The visit was pleasant and cordial. The Citibank president did not talk with President Sarney about the $105 billion that Brazil owes. Instead, he chose to praise the Cruzado Plan and to guarantee that it will not be difficult for Brazil to find new loans aboard. He also referred to the reduction of the prime rate charged on loans.

'DRIVE FOR DEMOCRACY' INJURIES, ARRESTS REPORTED

[Text] Santiago, 4 Sep (AFP) -- According to police sources, 5 persons were injured and approximately 100 were arrested today in the initial hours of a new protest drive against General Augusto Pinochet's government. There were also clashes between demonstrators and police or military units, barricades and raids in Santiago suburbs, and bomb explosions.

Military patrols this afternoon moved into the workers neighborhood of Lo Hermida in southern Santiago. Together with Carabineros, these military patrols conducted raids and other operations to clear barricades and curb any possible outbreak of violence, according to AFP correspondents.

Military deployment was also heavy in the neighborhood La Victoria, where a soldier was shot under unclear circumstances. Somewhat earlier, a Carabinero was seriously burned in the neighborhood La Castrina when a bomb left by retreating demonstrators near a barricade blew up.

In Nunoz, a demonstrator had his right hand blown off by an explosive device, according to eyewitnesses. Two persons were shot in Vina del Mar, 140 km west of Santiago when a naval patrol fired at an armed commando group trying to rob a bus full of passengers.

Most of the persons arrested were demonstrators who were participating in street rallies in Santiago, in the main plaza, along Bernardo O'Higgins Avenue, or near Catholic University, where the police used powerful water hoses and asphyxiating gas. The demonstrators were shouting in unison: It will fall...it will fall, obviously referring to the military regime. You can feel it, you can feel it, Allende is here, shouted others, recalling socialist president Salvador Allende, who was overthrown by the military in September 1973.

There were also disturbances in Valparaiso, 140 km west of Santiago -- where some 30 persons were arrested -- in Valdivia, and in Punta Arenas, 2,500 km south of Santiago.

However, the government has stated that national activities were not upset by the nationwide strike called by the left-wing groups led by the Popular Democratic Movement (MDP). The strike was not joined by the labor unions that belong to the National Civic Assembly (ANC), or the moderate parties of the Democratic Alliance, who on 2 and 3 July organized, together with the left, a national strike during which 8 persons died and 600 persons were arrested.

Unlike the left-wing opposition, the ANC instructed its rank and file to stage peaceful demonstrations within the framework of a Drive for Democracy, to mark the day on which through 1970, Chileans voted every 6 years to elect a new president.

Despite the street demonstrations, public services and utilities, industries, airports, hospitals, railroads, and the large stage-owned copper mines -- which are the main source of income for Chile -- continued working. However, urban transportation declined markedly early this afternoon and stores in this capital began to close.

Correa: Stoppage 'Positive'

PY050120 Santiago Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 4 Sep 86

[Text] German Correa, leader of the unconstitutional Marxist Popular Democratic Movement [MDP] has irrationally described as positive today's acts of violence.

Although today's attempt to subvert public order left a toll of one dead, several seriously wounded, and many detainees, Correa described it as positive. However, he did recognize that today's violent stoppage lacked the rallying power of previous stoppages and that the mobilization was completely normal.

Israeli Diplomat Escapes Injury

The incident took place in Jeronimo de Alderete Street in eastern Santiago during a protest drive against General Augusto Pinochet's government. According to official figures, one person died, several were injured and more than 220 were arrested in the course of the drive. The government news agency ORBE reported that the bomb -- which went off near the car of the Israeli diplomat -- was thrown by an unknown person who escaped.

Subversive Weapons in Law School

PY050306 Santiago Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 4 Sep 86

[Text] Carabineros personnel today found a large quantity of subversive literature, Molotov cocktails, and chemicals inside the University of Chile Law School after a demonstration staged by the students.

The incidents, which began this morning when students blocked streets and threw Molotov Cocktails at pedestrians, slowed down in the afternoon. In the face of this vandalism, university officials requested police personnel enter the university to arrest the promoters of the incidents. The students escaped through side doors and no one was arrested.

Police experts found a large quantity of subversive literature inside the school as well as tire bursters, incendiary bombs, and chemicals.

Naval Patrol Kills Subversive

PY042323 Paris AFP in Spanish 2239 GMT 4 Sep 86

[Text] Vina del Mar, 4 Sep (AFP) -- An official communique reported this evening that a man was shot to death in Vina del Mar by a naval patrol during the protest drive organized by groups opposed to General Augusto Pinochet's government.

Alberto Vega Lopez, 21, was shot in the chest while trying with two armed accomplices to rob a bus full of passengers.

The official communique stated that another subversive was shot and wounded during the incident, while the third member of the commando group managed to flee from the patrol.

Carabineros Seriously Wounded

PY050412 Paris AFP in Spanish 0344 GMT 5 Sep 86

[Text] Santiago, 4 Sep (AFP) -- A Carabineros policeman was seriously wounded tonight by unidentified individuals who shot him while he was guarding the residence of a Catholic Church official. A group of individuals riding in a car attacked the policeman as he was guarding the residence of the Solidarity Vicariate secretary, Enrique Palet, in the wealthy Providencia neighborhood.

Another policeman, Ruben Nunez Godoy, was seriously wounded this morning by shrapnel from a bomb that exploded near one of the barricades in La Castrina neighborhood.

Two Carabineros and a boy were wounded when a group of demonstrators attacked a patrol car traveling through La Bandera, a working-class neighborhood. Corporal Moises Droguett was seriously wounded in the leg and thigh, and Luis Pastene Carrillo, 11, was hit in the arms and chest. The boy's life is in danger, according to a report from the police.

The authorities arrived after the guerrillas had fled.

EPL Denies Involvement

PA050243 Bogota Television Service in Spanish 1730 GMT 4 Sep 86

[Text] Representatives of the EPL [Popular Liberation Army] -- the organization which, according to some reports, claimed responsibility for the attacks against the Patriotic Union, UP, -- have denied that this guerrilla group has anything to do with the murders.

[Begin recording] [Correspondent] Some newspapers have reported that the EPL, through a call to a radio station, claimed responsibility for the murders of the UP leaders.

[Unidentified person] We flatly deny any EPL involvement in the crimes against UP leaders. It is worthwhile noting that the (?PLA [Pedro Leon Arboleda Urban Guerrilla Group]) was formed in 1978. The only relationship between the two groups was in their use of one of our leaders, who was killed in action in Cali in 1974. [as heard].

[Correspondent] Do you mean to say that the EPL had nothing to do with those murders?

[Unidentified person] Absolutely. The Army has frequently employed a strategy of public misinformation. [end recording]

EDITORIAL SCORES RELEASE OF U.S. EMBASSY REPORT

PY041458 Asuncion EL DIARIO in Spanish 3 Sep 86 p 12

[Editorial: "The U.S. Embassy Report"]

[Text] Our newspaper recently referred to an extensive and controversial report whose origin was found to be the U.S. Embassy in Paraguay. This report, which basically deals with economic and financial issues, seems to contain preliminary conclusions U.S. Embassy experts have drawn from their analysis of the Paraguayan economy.

Our readers, however, may have noticed that the report was not restricted to the general picture of the Paraguayan economic situation, but that it dangerously ventures into some sort of futurology, making some predictions that cannot but cause concern, worry, disgust, and even irritation and discontent, depending on the various angles from which it is analyzed, or on the circles in which it is scrutinized. In this regard, just to note one aspect of the report, it is interesting to see that, concluding their analysis of monetary and financial matters, the presumed Yankee experts affirm, for instance, that our foreign reserves are dwindling to the point that the country might be forced to cease payments. In addition, the report tackles other topics through a dark loo king glass, topics regarding agricultural and industrial production, unemployment, salaries, inflation, the foreign-exchange and payments policy, int;ernational monetary reserves, the foreign debt, commercial activities, exports and imports, and so forth.

We will not argue the right of the U.S. Embassy to make its own evaluation of our country's economic, social, political, and financial situations in order to report its experts' conclusions to its government. But, it seems to us that allowing this report to be issued publicly with such fanfare is too much. It is risky, it is frankly unfriendly to a certain degree, and it is contrary to the elementary rules of diplomacy. This report should have been treated as an internal document of confidential character for the restricted use of the embassy and its government, not how it has been handled this time. It seems that the report, handled the way it was, is meant to criticize the actions of our government, before which the embassy represents the U.S. Government. More care should be exercized in handling documents of this nature, precisely to keep it from creating a situation that could be easily branded as unnecessary interference in the country's internal affairs, and more importantly, to prevent such reports becoming a bone of internal contention in a country like ours, where this material can promptly be used to fuel passions.

Ambassador Taylor appeared on television to explain publicly that the report was not intended to influence the Paraguayan Government, but to inform the U.S. government and U.S. businessmen. Nevertheless, the release of this report has actually caused a lot of surprise in many circles, because this not only does a disservice to cooperation and good relations between Paraguay and the United States, but works against them.

It seems opportune that the aforementioned considerations be taken into account so that this carelessness is not repeated.

GOVERNMENT FIRES, REPLACES CIVIL GUARD CHIEF

PY021618 Paris AFP in Spanish 1449 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Text] Lima, 2 Sep (AFP) -- It has been officially reported here that the Peruvian Government today fired Lieutenant General Carlos Barreto Bretoneche, superior director of the Civil Guard, because he publicly expressed disagreement with the unification of the police forces that was undertaken by Interior Minister Abel Salinas.

According to a Ministry resolution released today in Lima, Barreto was immediately placed on the retired list. He was replaced by General Alberto Bernedo Moscoso.

When the Day of the Civil Guard was celebrated on 30 August, Barreto asked the government during a public ceremony to allow members of the police forces to participate in the unification process, and he criticized the fact that the people who are participating in the process have nothing to do with the police forces.

MINISTER DISCUSSES RETURN OF U.S. OIL FIRM

PY050138 Paris AFP in Spanish 1950 GMT 4 Sep 86

[Text] Lima, 4 Sep (AFP) -- Energy and Mines Minister Wilfredo Huayta has told the Senate that the Peruvian Government is willing to accept the resumption of negotiations with the U.S. Belco Petroleum Company, whose operations in the country were cancelled in December, and to discuss the possibility of the company returning to exploit Peruvian offshore deposits. In his fifth proposal on questions concerning the signing of petroleum agreements, Huayta said that there is no ban against the Belco petroleum consortium. If Belco representatives raise the possiblility of operating in the country again they might even negotiate a concession next to that of Petromar [a subsidiary of the state-owned PetroPeru enterprise operating off the coast of northern Peru], he said.

Huayta also reported the existence of an alarmist campaign, especially abroad, that seeks to discourage investment in the country's petroleum activities. Denying that Peru intends to expropriate or confiscate holdings of foreign companies, Huayta said that no U.S. company has been banned and that it is untrue that assets worth $400 million have been expropriated from Belco, whose contract was not renewed because the company disagreed with the terms.

CHANGES PROPOSED TO FISHING PACT WITH SOVIETS

[Text] Lima, 3 Sep (EFE) -- The fishing agreement between Peru and the USSR expires tomorrow. It is regarded by some sectors as harmful to Peru and is the subject of controversy that has reached the Congress.

Senator Felipe Osterling, from the conservative Popular Christian Party [PPC], last night proposed to the Senate that the Peruvian-Soviet fishing agreement be denounced in order to introduce the necessary changes to safeguard the country's interests. Otherwise, said Osterling, it could be interpreted that the Senate wants the agreement extended until 1990 without changes.

Senator Osterling said that the USSR benefits from a yearly catch of 6 million tons of fish worth $1.8 billion. He stated that the Soviets have established a base in El Callao where they could dock from 250 to 300 ships, and that nearly 30,000 Soviet sailors arrived in Peru in 1984. The Senator said the Soviets' catch in no way benefits Peru, and it may have unpredictable consequences for the fish biomass in Peruvian waters.

Discussion of his proposal was postponed by the ruling APRA [American Popular Revolutionary Alliance] and the United Left blocs.

During the discussion, an incident occurred between Osterling and pro-Moscow communist Senator Jorge del Prado, who said that Osterling's position might be part of an offensive against the USSR in Peru. Del Prado charged the ultrarightists with attempting to create an atmosphere aimed at terminating the fishing agreement.

COMMISSION TO DEFEND HUMAN RIGHTS IN CUBA FORMED

PY031111 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0257 GMT 2 Sep 86

[Text] Montevideo, 1 Sep (EFE) -- The Cuban dissident writer Rafael Valladares today presided over a meeting here, during which was created the Uruguayan Commission for Human Rights in Cuba, a branch of Amnesty International.

Valladares, who is visiting Montevideo for the second time in the last 6 months, addressed the meeting at which the movement was created, to report the existence in Cuba of "more than 14,000 political prisoners, and a systematic persecution of all religious ideologies."

The Cuban writer pointed out that the world "severely condemns the rightist regimes, but says little on what is occurring in Cuba," and emphasized his rejection of "any kind of violation of human rights, no matter who is responsible."

FPMR LEADER TORRES INTERVIEWED ON CHILEAN SITUATION

PY302153 Paris in Spanish 1847 GMT 30 Aug 86

[Text] Montevideo, 30 Aug (AFP) -- Roberto Torres, leader of the Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front [FPMR], stated here that justified violence in Chile is the ultimate alternative to defend the people from General Augusto Pinochet's regime, and the recent kidnapping of a colonel in Santiago was really a call to the military sector that is now repressing the people.

In an interview granted to AFP, Torres, who said he was the FPMR representative abroad, stated that the Chilean dictatorship is facing a process of total isolation, besieged by the opposition that has gathered around the National Civic Assembly. Torres, who said that he left Chile clandestinely 6 days ago and is now in Montevideo making a tour through Europe and Latin America, termed absolutely false the reports that link the FPMR with the subversive arsenals discovered this week by the Chilean security services.

President Pinochet stated on Thursday, 28 August, that those weapons were earmarked to create a civil war, and that they weighed more than 50 tons and were worth approximately $10 million. The arsenals that were supposedly discovered are in line with the government's current need for false arguments like this, because to smuggle hundreds of tons of weapons through one single point ridicules the regime more than those who allegedly introduced them, Torres stated.

According to the FPMR leader, these arguments seek to put pressure on the Armed Forces where there are signs of uneasiness, especially after the defection of some members to the FPMR.

Torres contended that the FPMR maintains direct relations with the military in the different branches of the Armed Forces, and that these relations have awakened a certain level of affection toward the FPMR. He said that dozens of military officers on active duty, enlisted personnel, and carabineros have been recruited by the rebel group, and have joined those who after the coup d'etat were purged from the Armed Forces.

Torres said that the recent kidnapping of the colonel, chief of protocol of the Santiago garrison, represents a call directed at the military sector that is today repressing the people, because within the Armed Forces there are patriotic military officers who have agreed to put an end to dictatorship.

Torres said that dictatorship with or without Pinochet is equally detrimental to the possibilities of achieving real democracy, and warned that the Chilean president is a danger not only internally but for all Latin America. The FPMR leader denied that his group is a guerrilla movement and rejected the possibility that it is operating like an armed branch of the Chilean Communist Party or of any other party.

He said that the FPMR includes communists, socialists, ecologists, Christians, and the independent, and added: "We are organized in all regions of the country. We do not represent an alternative to any political party of the opposition that may be acting in Chile, and our idea is not that of a guerrilla group or of a group of enlightened messiahs who seek power," Torres stated. He added: We are not against, but are skeptical about a negotiated solution.

Referring to the criticism made by Gabriel Valdez, Christian Democratic Party representative, to the alternative of violence proposed by the FPMR, Torres said that this does not undermine dialogue among opposition groups, but that the exclusive positions are damaging the sectors confronting Pinochet.

Torres, who held meetings in Montevideo with leaders of the Uruguayan left, stated that the armed movement has representatives in France, Italy, Belgium, Denmark, The Netherlands, England, the FRG, and Spain. In Latin America, it has representatives in Venezuela, Mexico, Panama, Costa Rica, Colombia, and Uruguay.

Torres left over the weekend for Mexico to continue the tour that includes the FRG, Great Britain, and Belgium.

PAN, PSUM DEMAND EXPULSION OF DEA, CIA, FBI

PA050159 Mexico City EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 29 Aug 86 p 11

[Article by Manuel Ponce]

[Excerpts] The PSUM [Unified Socialist Party of Mexico] and the PAN [National Action Party] have demanded the expulsion of DEA, FBI, and CIA agents, as well as other secret policemen operating in our country under diplomatic protection. In addition, they noted that the Mexican Government must explain the extent of the activities of diplomatic representatives accredited by the embassies and consulates in our country.

They noted that the case of DEA agent Victor Cortez demonstrates that a large number of police agencies and organizations are operating in our country protected by diplomatic immunity, and this violates the Mexican Constitution.

In view of this, they demanded that the Chamber of Deputies appoint a multiparty commission to investigate this situation to avoid further violation of our laws.

Gonzalo Altamirano Dimas, PAN deputy and spokesman, as well as Cuauhtemoc Sandoval, a member of the PSUM Central Committee and the party's International Department, said that worst of all the Mexican Government is aware of this situation, and nothing is being done to prevent it.

Interviewed by EL UNIVERSAL, they said this situation is inadmissable and above all that the pertinent authorities are not exercising any control over it.

They also noted that the response of the Mexican Foreign Secretariat to the protest note sent by the U.S. State Department is a tacit acknowledgement of the action of various police organizations in our country. [passage omitted]

Sandoval expressed the need for the Mexican Government to enforce what was stated by the Foreign Secretariat: That the embassies and consulates in Mexico abide by our laws, and the government prevent diplomatic representatives from carrying out secret police duties.

PAN Deputy Altamirano Dimas agreed with Sandoval and stressed that these agents' actions are illegal and demanded that the authorities put an end to this as soon as possible [passage omitted]

Altamirano Dimas said that the Mexican people must be informed about any secret agreements on police cooperation and added that the case of Victor Cortez as well as the murder of Enrique Camarena are clear proof that the Mexican Government exercises no control over the activities of these organizations.

SECTORS DOUBT REBEL TALKS WILL BE HELD

PA042225 San Salvador LA PRENSA GRAFICA in Spanish 4 Sep 86 p 2

[Text] The third round of talks in Sesori, San Miguel Department between the government and the FMLN-FDR has entered a phase of doubt.

Msgr Arturo Rivera y Damas said last Sunday that a meeting will be held in San Jose, Costa Rica on 15 September, prior to the third round of talks scheduled to take place on 19 September in Sesori. The prelate's announcement was taken very seriously by authorities and the national and international press. Representatives of various sectors of the media traveled to Sesori to get acquainted with the town and plan their trip on the day of the dialogue.

However, last Monday the FMLN-FDR through its spokesmen denied that a date and place had been set for the meeting announced in the Costa Rican capital by Msgr Rivera y Damas. The spokesmen said that in due time the place and hour of the preliminary meeting will be announced and that no one has been authorized to make statements to this effect.

Distrust

Within private, professional, and political circles there are doubts regarding the third round of talks due to growing rumors of doubt and false alarms regarding confrontations, etc. In international press circles, doubt can be detected in the reports and information given due to FMLN-FDR statements broadcast on a clandestine radio station.

ARMY REPORT CLAIMS REBELS DRIVEN FROM SESORI

PA050153 San Salvador EL MUNDO in Spanish 3 Sep 86 p 1

[Text] San Miguel, 3 Sep -- Col Miguel Antonio Mendez, commander of the 3d Infantry Brigade stationed in this city, confirmed yesterday afternoon that heavy clashes have been taking place 5 km from Sesori and that as the result of their professionalism and logistics the Armed Forces had succeeded in forcing the FMLN guerrillas to withdraw to a distance of 10 km from this city.

He also said that, as we reported yesterday, 3d Brigade and Arce Battalion elements have been fighting in this area. The latter unit is under the direct command of Col Mauricio Estaben. Col Mendez further said that, despite the torrential downpours in the country's east, the Army has continued its combings to keep the rebels away from the Sesori area. He added that yesterday some rebel columns began to fall back toward San Gerardo, San Luis de la Reina, and Nuevo Eden de San Juan, while others moved in the direction of Cacaguatique Hill and Torola, where elements of Military Detachment No 4 stationed in San Francisco Gotera in Morazan Department remain ready to confront them.

Col Mendez said he expected the situation in the Sesori area to return to normal today. The Armed Forces fully control the Sesori area. Meanwhile, members of an intergovernmental committee are working intensely in preparation for the third round of talks. The meeting is scheduled for 19 September.

The commander of the 3d Brigade said that work is continuing as usual in Sesori and that the restoration of communications and other services is near completion.

It has also been reported that rains were heavy throughout the eastern area last night and that rivers are considerably swollen. However, no flooding has been reported.

REPORT ON MSGR RIVERA Y DAMAS' MEETING WITH REBELS

PA050216 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 2313 GMT 4 Sep 86

[Text] Panama City, 4 Sep (ACAN-EFE) -- According to rebel sources, Salvadoran guerrillas discussed with the archbishop of San Salvador the efforts to release a colonel who is in rebel hands. The rebels also delivered a proposal for a private meeting with the government.

Salvador Samayoa and Jose Mario Lopez met with Msgr Arturo Rivera y Damas in this capital yesterday in a very private meeting and they disclosed details of the meeting to ACAN-EFE today.

Colonel Napoleon Avalos, director of El Salvador's Civil Aeronautics Office, was captured by rebel forces on 26 October 1985 when he was going to a farm he owns in Cuscatlan Department, in El Salvador's central region.

In July, the guerrillas stated they were willing to release the military officer in exchange for political and union leaders who were in jail and for this reason, they asked human rights organizations to draw up a list of these prisoners.

According to Samayoa, the list was made up of 940 people, but in the end it was reduced to 23. In view of this, yesterday, the guerrillas asked Rivera for the criteria used to set the list at this number. The rebels insisted that, contrary to previous cases, the FMLN is not proposing the exchange of an officer for "companeros" being held by the Army, but by prisoners without any rebel ties.

Samayoa and Lopez said that another topic studied with Rivera y Damas was the rebel refusal to hold a private meeting with the government in Costa Rica to prepare the third round of the peace talks, scheduled for 19 September in Sesori, in eastern El Salvador. The archbishop of San Salvador stated on Sunday that this private meeting was to be held in Costa Rica, in the first half of September, but the guerrillas stressed that rebel fronts were not consulted about the location and for this reason they ruled it out because they felt it was a "burned out" option.

In their meeting with Rivera, the FMLN representatives presented other alternatives to the private meeting and gave the government 72 hours to respond. However, the leaders did not disclose the countries they would be willing to go to to hold the meeting prior to that in Sesori. "We cannot disclose it until an agreement has been reached," Samayoa said.

In this private meeting, the two sides must make decisions about the agenda, security measures, and the presence of observers at the Sesori meeting. In addition, the guerrilla leaders said that they gave Rivera their protest over the militarization of Sesori by Army troops.

"We cannot permit that the meeting be held under those conditions," Samayoa stated.

The FLMN members view the conflictive Sesori sector as disputed territory and feel that the Sesori meeting depends on an agreement on the security arrangements.

GROUP CLAIMS ARMY KIDNAPPING CONTRA OPPONENTS

PA041912 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1750 GMT 4 Sep 86

[Text] The Honduran Army is participating in the secret kidnapping of Honduran citizens who voice their opposition to the presence of Somozist counterrevolutionaries in Honduras. This was charged by the Honduran Committee of Social Organizations [Comite Hondurena de Organizations Sociales] which includes labor and peasant factions, among others.

The representatives of the committee blamed the kidnappings on Battalion 316, which was especially created to repress the opposition and which is directly under the chief of the General Staff of the Honduran Armed Forces commanded by General Humberto Regalado Hernandez.

Gladys Lanza, president of the Honduran Committee of Social Organization, has charged that the rightist officers of the Honduran Army already have their blacklist of people who will become their victims, something that presages an increase of the repression in Honduras.

SANDINISTS REPORTEDLY 'KIDNAP' PLI LEADER

PA050310 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 0207 GMT 5 Sep 86

[Text] Managua, 4 Sep (ACAN-EFE) -- A leader of the opposition Independent Liberal Party [PLI] was arrested by the Sandinist police and taken to an undisclosed location, the PLI reported today.

The detainee is Bayardo Guzman Martinez, the third national vice president of the PLI, the second force in the parliamentary opposition. Top PLI leader Virgilio Godoy said that "seven state security agents violently kidnapped Guzman from his own home (in the eastern city of Masaya), and took him to an unknown location."

Guzman Martinez's detention took place yesterday morning, the source said.

The incident "constitutes a gross reprisal against the PLI because of the efforts it has been making along with other parties in favor of the national dialogue," Godoy said. The liberal leader pointed out that approximately 100 PLI members and intermediate leaders "are being held at various prisons" throughout the country.

Godoy insisted that these incidents demonstrate "the governing party's lack of political willingness to seek peaceful solutions for the acute crisis affecting Nicaragua."

Godoy demanded the "immediate release" of the PLI leader, and an "end to the persecution of PLI members, whose only crime is civil disagreement with the policies and conduct of the FSLN and its government."

"We do not know where Guzman Martinez is, or what he is accused of. The case is very mysterious," the PLI national president told ACAN-EFE.

OPPOSITION LEADERS VIEW REJECTION OF PROPOSALS

PA021717 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1930 GMT 1 Sep 86

[Text] In a press conference, the secretary generals of five opposition parties have reported that acting President Dr Sergio Ramirez Mercado and Parliament President Commander Carlos Nunez Tellez have rejected a document drafted by the secretary generals.

According to the opposition leaders, the document stresses the need for a national dialogue involving all political forces in the country, including a suspension of constitutional debates while preparations are made for a round of dialogue involving the five parties -- that is, a temporary suspension until national consensus agreements are reached.

The proposal of the five parties -- the Democratic Conservative Party of Nicaragua [PCDN], Independent Liberal Party [PLI], Nicaraguan Socialist Party [PSN], Communist Party of Nicaragua [PCDEN], and Popular Social Christian Party -- states that constitutional debates can be resumed on 3 November, because according to the agenda presented, that date would mark the resolution of differences between the parties and the FSLN.

As is known, the FSLN has said on various occasions that the only valid interlocutors are parties represented in the National Assembly, because although other parties hold legal status, they lost their political leverage [espacio] when the decided to abstain from participating in the elections.

President Daniel Ortega reaffirmed this position on 27 June when the U.S. Congress approved financing for the counterrevolution. He said that the only dialogue that will be allowed in this country is the one being carried out within the parliamentary debates.

According to the secretaries of the signatory parties -- Dr Virgilio Godoy of the PLI, Dr Gustavo Tablada of the PSN, Eli Altamirao of the PCDEN, Mauricio Diaz of the PPSC, and Dr Cordova Rivas of the PCDN -- they have not yet defined the strategy to be followed if the FSLN and the government do not consider the proposal presented by them. They pointed out that reaction to that step would be one that each political force will assume in keeping with the guidelines of each party.

However, they acknowledged that the most recent PSN congress, the top partisan organization, decided to participate in constitutional debates. The PPSC said that it is studying the possibility of definitely withdrawing from constitutional debates.

Meanwhile, the FSLN, through National Assembly President Commander Carlos Nunez Tellez, affirmed that the Nicaraguan people will have a constitution by the end of this year with or without the participation of other political parties, because the FSLN bears the greatest responsibility as the ruling party.

You will now hear part of the proposal presented by the five opposition parties to the government of the Republic and the parliament president:

[Begin unidentified spokesman recording] To obtain credibility and prestige, we believe it is appropriate to review the following:

A. Discussion and approval of the political constitution must be a profoundly democratic process involving participation of all political parties, absence of press censorship, access to state media by all constituent parties in equal terms, and guarantees of full freedom to act and participate in political mobilizations.

B. The constitution to be drafted must be in keeping with national consensus agreements that must be reached to achieve peace, overcome the crisis, and save the fatherland.

The principles mentioned in point A are conditions inherent in any constituent process and (?those in point B) are a demand in keeping with the difficult situation facing Nicaragua.

However, our constitution is an orphan of such conditions and demands. That is why we felt the need to make these suggestions. [end recording]

PSC SUPPORTS DIALOGUE WITH GOVERNMENT

PA041333 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 2218 GMT 3 Sep 86

[Excerpts] Managua, 3 Sep (ACAN-EFE) -- The opposition Social Christian Party [PSC] today joined the call of five political parties represented in congress to hold a national dialogue with the ruling Sandinist Front.

Julio Ramon Garcia Vilchez, vice president of the PSC, told ACAN-EFE that a "dialogue" among all the country's political forces would help "resolve the national crisis." Garcia Vilchez explained that the call for a "national dialogue" made 5 days ago by five of the seven parties represented in congress coincides with the "Proposal of Managua" made by his party on 7 August. [passage omitted]

The leader of the PSC, which is not represented in congress and did not participate in the 1984 elections, said that the "Proposal of Managua" called for "national dialogue" on 14 September, which was ignored by the government.

In this document the PSC proposed to the FSLN a dialogue with the church, political parties, labor unions, and private enterprise. [passage omitted]

Garcia Vilchez said that his party "is always calling for national unity to find a solution to the crisis that is encumbering this Central American country." [passage omitted]

PLI PRESIDENT DENIES MEMBERSHIP IN UNO

PA040429 Panama City ACAN in Spanish 0205 GMT 3 Sep 86

[Excerpts] Managua, 2 Sep (ACAN-EFE) -- Nicargua's opposition Independent Liberal Party [PLI] today denied that it belongs to the anti-Sandinist Nicaraguan Opposition Unity (UNO).

PLI President Virgilio Godoy accused the Sandinists of publishing a UNO document in which the PLI's acronym appears in a local newspaper, in an attempt to "weaken" the five opposition parties' demand to "suspend" the constitutional debates.

Godoy denied that his organization signed the UNO document published today in the progovernment EL NUEVO DIARIO.

Huge Mejia Briceno, president of the National Assembly of Political Parties, had the anti-Sandinist forces' document published in the morning paper; the document also appeared in Costa Rica's LA NACION on 19 July 1986.

The document is signed by the Revolutionary Armed Forces (FAR) The Democratic Revolutionary Alliance (ARDE), and the Nicaraguan Democratic Force (FDN), and the acronyms of the PLI, Social Christian Party, Social Democratic Party, Nicaraguan Conservative Party, and Higher Council of Private Enterprise, COSEP, also appear.

Godoy explained to ACAN-EFE that the governing party "had the document published to pressure" the PLI which signed, along with four other parliamentary parties, a document demanding a "national dialogue."

The PLI president categorically denied that his party belongs to the UNO, a rebel alliance abroad, and he accused the Sandinists of "manipulating" information and "maneuvering" against the opposition. [passage omitted]

REPORT HITS HONDURAN SUPPORT FOR CONTRAS

PA042221 Havana International Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 3 Sep 86

["What the Press Has To Say" feature]

[Text] One of the most serious problems affecting Central America is undoubtedly the protection offered by the Honduran Government, with the close cooperation of the Pentagon and the CIA, to Nicaraguan counterrevolutionary groups, whose camps are headquartered [as heard] in Honduras.

An article by newswoman Marina Menendez published in the Cuban newspaper JUVENTUD REBELDE, unravels the apparent contradictions in statements made by the highest-ranking officials of the Tegucigalpa government, which is trying to pretend that it does not support former Somozist bandits.

If there were any doubt about the logistical support received by the counterrevolution through the Honduran Government, the visit by William Walker, U.S. deputy assistant secretary for Central America, dispels any such doubt. Marina Menendez adds that it also shows that Tegucigalpa yields to any pressure, especially when the pressure is accompanied by several million dollars.

The JUVENTUD REBELDE newswoman states that some politicians and observers thought that the purpose of Walker's visit was to fill the vacancy left by the departure of John Arthur Ferch, the U.S. Ambassador to Honduras who was fired. However, the presence of the Yankee envoy, even though it is surrounded by absolute silence, is meant to begin exerting pressure on Honduran President Azcona Hoyo to permit the training of the anti-Sandinists.

Newswoman Marina Menendez asks herself: Is it really necessary to try so hard to convince the Honduran president to allow the $100 million recently approved by the Yankee Congress to reach the Nicaraguan mercenaries? The commentator believes that only a few more will suffice to make Azcona bow down and join the flock of sheep gathered by the United States.

JUVENTUD REBELDE reports comments about the U.S. bases, mercenary camps, and other installations in that Central American country constituting a direct threat to Nicaragua are nothing new. That country is facing constant aggression from Washington and its obedient ally.

According to analyst Marina Menendez, President Azcona does not require a lengthy treatment to convince him. The following statement is enough to suggest how far the Tegucigalpa ruler can go: He once said, when one is poor, one cannot be dignified.

The article published by the Cuban paper clarifies what is actually taking place in Honduras: a dirty internal struggle to determine who will reap the benefits of the $100 million that will be handed to counterrevolution.

Recently, Rodolfo Zelaya, a well-known supplier to the mercenaries, whose residence was raided by the authorities, told the press that this action was carried out by intelligence chief Colonel Roberto Nunez Montes, who nurses an ambition to control the sale of supplies to former Somozists.

It is very difficult to believe the statements made by General Humberto Regalado.

In a recent subtle speech, he said that his government will not allow aid to the conterrevolutionaries to pass through its territory; he also said that it will not allow the entrance of military instructors into the country to train them.

Of course, the analyst says, Regalado's statement clashed diametrically with the truth. Observers who are much closer to the truth pointed out that President Azcona is tolerating the presence of the counterrevolutionaries, but does not authorize their actions. This catches our attention because the head of state will not be able to keep walking the tightrope for much longer.

BARBADOS

GOVERNMENT DECIDES TO REDUCE SUGAR PRODUCTION

FL031844 Bridgetown CANA in English 1355 GMT 2 Sep 86

[By Sandra Baptiste]

[Excerpts] Bridgetown, Barbados, Sept 2, CANA -- The Barbados government has made a firm decision to maintain its sugar industry, but the acreage under cultivation will be reduced, Agriculture Minister Warwick Franklin said today. I want it to be absolutely clear that Barbados is not going out of sugar, Franklyn told a news conference. He said the acreage under cane cultivation will be reduced from 32,000 to 25,000 and the production of non-sugar crops will be accelerated.

All we are doing in Barbados is rationalising and setting realistic goals for our sugar industry that would allow us to release some land together with the lands lying fallow for a leap forward in the diversification programme, the agriculture minister said. He said the ministry will be promoting and providing credit for the production of three categories of crops -- those which bring in foreign exchange, the main crops which constitute import substitution, and others for agro-industry.

Franklyn said in a move to reorient farmers away from the centuries-old sugar industry and ensure reasonable levels of production, a system of contractual farming and licensing of certain produce is being formalised.

Only last weekend St Vincent and the Grenadines Prime Minister James Mitchell said sugar production was uneconomical and suggested that Barbados make a firm decision on the future of its industry, which employs around 3,000 Barbadians. [passage omitted]

DOMINICA

DLP CONVENTION ON CENTRAL AMERICA, S. AFRICA

FL031851 Bridgetown CANA in English 1604 GMT 3 Sep 86

[Text] Roseau, Dominica, Sept 3, CANA -- A string of resolutions dealing with subjects as varied as peace in Central America and the performance of opposition senators in parliament here, were approved by the convention of the Dominica Labour Party (DLP) held here at the weekend.

Details of the resolutions, published here today, also called on the party to draft a code of conduct for its leaders, and urged the creation of a commission to devise [words indistinct] eliminating unemployment.

On Central America, the DLP expressed support for the Contadora peace process in which influential Latin American countries are working to find a peaceful solution to conflicts of the isthmus. The DLP called for an end to military manoeuvres in the region, and urged that the Caribbean be considered a zone of peace.

Another resolution called for the establishment of mechanisms that would allow DLP senators performances to be reviewed annually. If their performance is found to be unsatisfactory, the resolution urged that they be removed and others appointed in their place.

The DLP also affirmed its commitment to the liberation of South Africa from white minority rule, and urged the government to declare its unconditional support for immediate and comprehensive sanctions against Pretoria.

GRENADA

GRENADA'S ACCUSED LAYNE SAYS U.S. BEHIND TRIAL

FL020055 Bridgetown CANA in English 2241 GMT 1 Sep 86

[Excerpts] St Georges, Grenada, Sep 1, CANA -- Accused Ewart Layne, continuing his defence in the Maurice Bishop murder trial, today called the trial a fraud and denounced the presiding judge and some prosecution witnesses. This is a kangaroo trial and nothing else but that, the former army lieutenant-colonel and leftwing political activist told acting Chief Justice Denis Gyron. He accused the judge of sending body signals to the 12-member jury, and said some witnesses had prostituted themselves by telling lies under oath. [passage omitted]

Layne today repeated a charge made by most of the defendants that the United States was behind the trial because it wanted the remaining leaders of Grenada's Marxist revolution killed. [passage omitted] Continuing his attack on the United States, Layne said Washington saw the remaining Grenadian revolutionaries as representing a threat to what he said were the neo-colonial policies which it wants to implement in Grenada.

Criticising Chief Justice Byron for his handling of the proceedings, he said: You talk about dirty work, you do too much already. Court tricks, court craft...all that take place in this trial. He criticised the jury selection process, and alleged members were chosen by an opponent. This trial was rigged long before we came into this court on March 12, Layne said.

Layne, who began his defense last Friday, has accepted responsibility for the deaths of Bishop and the others because it was he who sent troops to Fort Rupert after Bishop had gone there with hundreds of civilians, after being freed from house arrest. He said the massacre at the fort was an immense tragedy for all Grenadians including himself because outstanding comrades had lost their lives. [passage omitted]

HAITI

DUVALIER REQUEST FOR RECONCILIATION DENIED

FL041559 Bridgetown CANA in English 1531 GMT 4 Sep 86

[Excerpt] Port-au-Prince, Sept 4, CANA-REUTER -- A published request for reconciliation with deposed Haitian president for life Jean-Claude Baby Doc Duvalier sparked an angry refusal today from the Caribbean nation's justice minister.

It is not everyone that agrees to be bought, said Justice Minister Francois Latortue, responding to a letter attributed to Duvalier which was published in the New York newspaper HAITI OBSERVATEUR. Latortue said no reconciliation was possible.

The letter was addressed to Lieutenant General Henri Namphy, the president of the new ruling National Council of Government (CNG). Since our disagreement will one day disappear, as always happens in history, why not hasten that moment, for the greater good of all? Duvalier telexed Namphy in a letter published three weeks ago.

The newspaper said Duvalier had hinted elsewhere he would consider negotiating for reconciliation by restituting part of a fortune based on the figure of 300 million dollars. Latortue said the CNG never received any proposal from Duvalier, adding that extradition of Duvalier for crimes against the people is not possible at present. The revolution is too close, and his return would create too much excitement, when what we want above all is peace. Haiti may try to extradite Duvalier after elections in November 1987, Latortue said. [passage omitted]

TRINIDAD-TOBAGO

MARITIME TRAINING AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH CANADA

FL1042149 Bridgetown CANA in English 2124 GMT 4 Sep 86

[Text] Port of Spain, Trinidad, Sept 4, CANA -- Trinidad and Tobago and Canada today signed an agreement under which Trinidadians will receive increased maritime training in Canada. The memorandum of understanding will put into effect the second phase of Canada's Maritime Training Assistance Programme (CMTAP) aimed at helping Caribbean countries improve the management of their exclusive economic zones.

Legislation giving Trinidad and Tobago jurisdiction over a 200-mile exclusive economic zone is now before parliament. Trinidad and Tobago's EEZ would overlap those of a number of neighbouring countries, making bilateral agreements with them necessary before jurisdiction is exercised.

The four-year programme will include formal training in Canada and within the Caribbean region in areas related to protection of fisheries, pollution control, search and rescue operations and regulation of marine traffic.

Canada and Barbados signed a similar agreement in Bridgetown last week.

FL042128 Paramaribo International Service in English 1730 GMT 4 Sep 86

[Text] During a meeting last night in the center of the 25th of February Movement, Commander Bouterse said the military authorities have analysed the latest actions carried out by the Brunswijk group and have concluded that it is loosing ground. Yesterday morning the Brunswijk gang was engaged in a 4-hour battle with soldiers of the national army and a military post at Albina along the border with French Guiana. Bouterse made it clear that where the Brunswijk gang is operating suggests that those who are supporting him have now withdrawn their support.

The Suriname army commander [word indistinct] Brunswijk was caught in a plan orchestrated by others without even realizing that he was being used. According to Bouterse, Brunswijk was forced to launch the attacks yesterday because of the expiration of two [word indistinct] of a memorandum he gave to the government to which the latter did not react. Obviously, he did not benefit from the ultimatum, said Bouterse.
